

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

244 P.—247 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
244 P. 94

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1926, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 244, Nos. 1-6; Vol. 245, Nos.
1-4; Vol. 246, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 247, Nos. 1-5.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 244-247 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Adams; People v., App.	244	106
Adams; People v., App.	244	114
Adams; People v., Sup.	245	821
Adelstein v. Greenberg, App.	247	520
Alexander; People v., App.	246	147
Alfonso; People v., App.	246	818
Allen v. Cryer, App.	247	252
Allman v. Rich, App.	245	439
American Bar Quartz Mining Co.; Burner v., App.	246	74
American Bar Quartz Mining Co.; Burner v., App.	246	77
Anderson v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., App.	247	507
Anderson v. Southern California Edison Co., App.	246	559
Angelopoulos v. Bottorff, App.	245	447
Anglo-American Land Co.; Heine v., App.	244	955
Anthony, Inc.; Curran v., App.	247	236
Anthony, Inc.; Ray Wong v., Sup.	247	894
Apex Engineering Co. v. North American Oil Consolidated, App.	245	766
Arkell; De Motte v., App.	247	254
Aspegren & Co. v. Sherwood Swan & Co., Sup.	246	1040
Associated Almond Growers of Paso Robles; Work v., App.	245	790
Associated Oil Co. of California; Saltzen v., Sup.	244	338
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.; Mappin v., Sup.	247	911
A. U. Pinkham Co.; C. O. Bashaw Co. v., App.	246	1064
Austin v. Bullion, App.	246	151
Backs; Orange County v., App.	247	519
Baird's Estate, In re, Sup.	246	324
Baker; California Prune & Apricot Growers v., App.	246	1081
Ballard; California Highway Commission v., App.	247	527
Barber v. Palo Verde Mut. Water Co., Sup.	246	1044
Barnard; Butler-Veitch v., App.	247	597
Bashaw Co. v. A. U. Pinkham Co., App.	246	1064
Beal v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	247	922
Beckwith; McElwee v., Sup.	244	1084
Beekhuis v. Palen, App.	245	795
Bell v. McDermoth, Sup.	246	805
Belling; Williams v., App.	245	455
Benson v. Olender, App.	246	345
Berkeley Hillside Properties Co. v. Kelly, App.	247	600
Bernardini; California Credit & Collection Corporation v., App.	246	824
Bittleston Law & Collection Agency; McCargar v., App.	244	110
Black v. Black, App.	246	90
Blankenhorn-Hunter-Dulin Co. v. Thayer, Sup.	247	1088
Blumenthal & Co.; Grissim v., App.	245	768
Board of Directors of Veterans' Home of California; Chittim v., App.	246	157
Board of Directors of Veterans' Home of California; McOmie v., App.	246	155
Board of Trustees of Barnes City; Smith v., Sup.	245	173

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Board of Trustees of City of South San Francisco; Ratto v., App.	245	1112
Bogue v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	245	173
Boos; Hellmuth v., App.	245	789
Borchers; People v., Sup.	247	1084
Borland; Nevada-California Power Co. v., App.	245	209
Bottorff; Angelopoulos v., App.	245	447
Branch; People v., App.	246	811
Brennan v. Weissbaum, App.	245	1104
Brichetto v. Raney, App.	245	235
Bryant; People v., App.	246	815
Bullion; Austin v., App.	246	151
Bunnell; Taylor v., App.	247	240
Burke's Estate, In re, Sup.	244	340
Burner v. American Bar Quartz Mining Co., App.	246	74
Burner v. American Bar Quartz Mining Co., App.	246	77
Burrow; Howard v., App.	245	808
Burwell v. Moore, App.	247	1114
Butler v. Robinson, App.	244	162
Butler-Veitch v. Barnard, App.	247	597
Butterworth; Town of St. Helena v., Sup.	244	357
Byington; Ogden v., Sup.	244	332
California Car Co.; Goldman v., App.	245	810
California Credit & Collection Corporation v. Bernardini, App.	246	824
California Credit & Collection Corporation v. Carpenter, App.	246	126
California Credit & Collection Corporation v. Goodin, App.	246	121
California Credit & Collection Corporation v. Randall, App.	244	958
California Highway Commission v. Ballard, App.	247	527
California Protective Corporation; People v., App.	244	1089
California Prune & Apricot Growers v. Baker, App.	246	1081
Campion v. Downey, App.	245	1098
Canyun; People v., App.	247	593
Carlson v. Lantz, Sup.	245	197
Carmichael; People v., Sup.	246	62
Carp v. Superior Court in and for Humboldt County, App.	245	459
Carpenter; California Credit & Collection Corporation v., App.	246	126
Carton Corporation v. Superior Court in and for Alameda County, App.	244	932
Case; People v., App.	246	1083
Cate, In re, App.	247	231
Chaboya; Harrison v., Sup.	245	1087
Chittin v. Board of Directors of Veterans' Home of California, App.	246	157
Christenson v. Cudahy Packing Co., Sup.	247	207
Christian Church of Vacaville v. Crystal, App.	247	605
City and County of San Francisco; Spreckels v., App.	244	919
City of Alameda v. City of Oakland, Sup.	246	69
City of Los Angeles; Bogue v., Sup.	245	173
City of Los Angeles; O. T. Johnson Corporation v., Sup.	245	164
City of Marysville v. Poole, App.	245	248
City of Oakland; City of Alameda v., Sup.	246	69
City of Oakland v. Industrial Accident Commission of State of California, Sup.	244	353
City of San Diego; Luce v., Sup.	245	196
City of San Diego; Mahoney v., Sup.	245	189
City of Santa Barbara; Storke v., App.	244	158
City of Stockton v. Vote, App.	244	609
Clark; Interstate Realty & Improvement Co. v., App.	247	244
Clark; People v., Sup.	245	1112

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Clothier; Wallace v., App.	247	260
Clune; Detwiler v., App.	247	264
C. O. Bashaw Co. v. A. U. Pinkham Co., App.	246	1064
Cohen, Ex parte, Sup.	244	359
Collins, Ex parte, Sup.	245	1089
Colt Co. v. Freitas, App.	244	916
Commonwealth Acceptance Corporation v. Jordan, Sup.	246	796
Connors; People v., App.	246	1072
Coombs v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	245	445
Coombs; Salberg v., App.	246	1087
Coppuck v. Huff, App.	245	441
Cordosco; People v., App.	246	461
Cosper; People v., App.	245	466
Craig v. Dinwiddie, App.	247	516
Crider; People v., App.	244	113
Crocker v. Crocker, App.	245	438
Crocker Nat. Bank v. Knight, App.	245	454
Cruikshank, In re, App.	247	231
Cryer, In re, App.	247	252
Cryer; Allen v., App.	247	252
Crystal; Christian Church of Vacaville v., App.	247	605
Cudahy Packing Co.; Christenson v., Sup.	247	207
Culp; Gragg v., Sup.	246	43
Cunial v. Justice's Court of City of Berkeley, Alameda County, App.	246	340
Cunningham; People v., App.	245	450
Cupp; People v., App.	246	1085
Curran v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., App.	247	236
Dallas; General Motors Acceptance Corporation v., Sup.	245	184
Dal Porte, Ex parte, Sup.	244	355
Dauberman v. Grant, Sup.	246	319
Davie; Doody v., App.	246	339
Davis; Goldberg v., App.	244	952
Davis; Wixom v., Sup.	246	1041
Davis & McMillan v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	246	1046
Dean v. Shingle, Sup.	246	1049
De Bock; Johnston v., Sup.	244	330
Deckert; People v., App.	246	157
Demick; Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v., App.	247	261
De Motte v. Arkell, App.	247	254
Detwiler v. Clune, two cases, App.	247	264
De Vaughn; Payne v., App.	246	1069
Devlin v. O'Reilly, Sup.	247	577
Devlin's Estate, In re, Sup.	247	577
Dinwiddie; Craig v., App.	247	516
Dodd v. Tebbetts, Sup.	244	1081
Doody v. Davie, App.	246	339
Downey; Campion v., App.	245	1098
Dryden; People v., App.	245	436
Dugan v. Phillips, App.	246	566
Dugat; People v., App.	246	344
Dunne; Sullivan v., Sup.	244	343
Dusis v. Karnezis, App.	244	632
Dutton Dredge Co. v. Goss, App.	247	594
Dyer; Yates v., App.	244	950
Earle C. Anthony, Inc.; Curran v., App.	247	236
Earle C. Anthony, Inc.; Ray Wong v., Sup.	247	894

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Egan; People v., App.	246	337
E. Gottschalk & Co.; Nielsen v., App.	246	1086
Elba Land Co.; Michaelian v., App.	245	476
Elk Grove Union High School; Hasman v., App.	245	464
Elliott v. Van Delinder, App.	247	523
Emanuel; Palmer v., App.	247	609
Emanuel; Palmer v., App.	247	611
Emerzian; R. Krasnow & Sons v., App.	247	536
Emmanuel v. Sichofsky, Sup.	247	205
Ephraim; People v., App.	245	769
Evans; Newberry v., App.	245	227
Ewald; Waller v., Sup.	245	1089
Fair Oaks Bank v. Johnson, Sup.	244	335
Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Marr, Sup.	245	178
Farren v. Willard, App.	245	206
Fatrous; People v., App.	246	342
Federoff; Pedrow v., App.	247	212
Fetterman; Stevens v., App.	246	102
Finnell; Wilkins v., App.	245	799
Firpo v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	246	165
First Nat. Bank v. Reed, Sup.	244	368
Fitzpatrick; People v., App.	247	601
Fitzsimmons v. Weissbein, Sup.	244	325
Fleming; Mitchell v., App.	246	152
Floyd; People v., App.	247	917
Folcey; People v., App.	247	916
Franceschi v. Nardi, App.	246	130
Frank Meline Co. v. Kleinberger, App.	246	136
Fred W. Hauger Motors Co.; Rapp v., App.	246	1067
Freitas; J. B. Colt Co. v., App.	244	916
Frost v. Hanscome, Sup.	246	53
Fuhr; People v., Sup.	246	1116
Gartenlaub v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco, Sup.	244	348
Gartenlaub's Estate, In re, Sup.	244	348
G. C. Hall & Son; May Hosiery Mills v., App.	246	332
General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation, Limited, of Perth, Scotland, v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	246	570
General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Dallas, Sup.	245	184
German Pub. Co. v. Scheidt, App.	246	88
Gestri; Porter v., App.	247	247
Giminiani; People v., App.	244	625
Glafkidas; Soules v., Sup.	247	910
Godeau v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	244	625
Goldberg v. Davis, App.	244	952
Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Demick, App.	247	261
Golden Gate Ferry Co.; Kearney Inv. Co. v., Sup.	246	322
Goldman v. California Car Co., App.	245	810
Goodin; California Credit & Collection Corporation v., App.	246	121
Goss; Dutton Dredge Co. v., App.	247	594
Gottschalk & Co.; Nielsen v., App.	246	1086
Grace; People v., App.	247	585
Gragg v. Culp, Sup.	246	43
Grant; Dauberman v., Sup.	246	319
Gray v. Perlis, App.	245	221
Grecian v. Jackson, App.	244	608
Greenberg; Adelstein v., App.	247	520

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Gripton; Schmitt v., App.	247	505
Grissim v. Blumenthal & Co., App.	245	768
Guy; Langenberg v., App.	247	621
Hall v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, App.	245	813
Hall v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, Sup.	245	814
Hall & Son; May Hosiery Mills v., App.	246	332
Hanhart v. Madera County, App.	245	444
Hanscome; Frost v., Sup.	246	53
Harbinson v. Mallon, App.	245	223
Harman v. Harman, Sup.	247	194
Harrison v. Chaboya, Sup.	245	1087
Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co.; Anderson v., App.	247	507
Hasman v. Elk Grove Union High School, App.	245	464
Hatfield; People v., App.	246	95
Hauger Motors Co.; Rapp v., App.	246	1067
Hauret v. Pedelaborde, App.	246	134
Hecker; Weber v., App.	245	776
Heine v. Anglo-American Land Co., App.	244	955
Heine v. Wright, App.	244	955
Hellmuth v. Boos, App.	245	789
Hennessey v. Robinett, Sup.	246	1043
Henningsen; McVey v., Sup.	247	1082
Henningsen's Estate, In re, Sup.	247	1082
Heslin v. Lapham, App.	246	150
H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency; McCargar v., App.	244	110
Highway Farming Co.; Nakagawa v., App.	245	435
Highway Farming Co.; Tanaka v., App.	245	434
Hill, In re, App.	247	591
Himovitz v. Justice's Court of Sixth Tp., Kern County, App.	246	82
Hitchcock Military Academy v. Myers, App.	245	219
Hoeft v. Hotchkiss, App.	245	458
Honey Lake Valley Irr. Dist.; People v., App.	246	819
Horschman v. Kizirian, App.	246	81
Hotchkiss; Hoeft v., App.	245	458
Howard v. Burrow, App.	245	808
Howe v. Key System Transit Co., four cases, Sup.	246	39
Huff; Connuck v., App.	245	441
Hull's Estate, In re, App.	247	1093
Hunt v. Lawton, App.	245	803
Hunt; Los Angeles County v., Sup.	247	897
Hutchinson Lumber Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	246	118
Hyer v. Inter-Insurance Exchange of Automobile Club of Southern Califor- nia, App.	246	1055
Industrial Accident Commission; Davis & McMillan v., Sup.	246	1046
Industrial Accident Commission; General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation, Limited, of Perth, Scotland, v., App.	246	570
Industrial Accident Commission; Johnson v., Sup.	244	321
Industrial Accident Commission; Los Angeles County v., App.	245	796
Industrial Accident Commission; Makins v., Sup.	247	202
Industrial Accident Commission; Saleneek v., App.	247	526
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Coombs v., App.	245	445
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Godeau v., App.	244	625
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Hutchinson Lumber Co. v., App.	246	118
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Landsrath v., App.	247	227

CASES REPORTED

	P.
Vol.	Page
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Pacific Employers' Ins. Co. v., App.	246 825
Industrial Accident Commission of State of California; City of Oakland v., Sup.	244 353
Inter-Insurance Exchange of Automobile Club of Southern California; Hyer v., App.	246 1055
Interstate Realty & Improvement Co. v. Clark, App.	247 244
Jackson; Grecian v., App.	244 608
Jacoby v. Wolff, Sup.	247 195
Jaquith v. Justice Court in and for Brawley Tp., Imperial County, App.	247 224
J. B. Colt Co. v. Freitas, App.	244 916
Jenkins v. Reardon, App.	246 817
Jenkins v. Zimmerman, App.	246 563
Jensen v. Larsen, App.	247 211
Jensen; People v., App.	244 1086
Johnson; Fair Oaks Bank v., Sup.	244 335
Johnson v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	244 321
Johnson v. Superior Court of California, in and for Fresno County, App.	247 249
Johnson v. Tyrrell, App.	246 140
Johnson Corporation v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	245 164
Johnson's Estate, In re, Sup.	245 1089
Johnston v. De Bock, Sup.	244 330
Jones; People v., App.	244 101
Jordan; Commonwealth Acceptance Corporation v., Sup.	246 796
Jordan; Land Development Co. v., Sup.	245 187
Jordan; Westlake Park Inv. Co. v., Sup.	246 807
Justice Court in and for Brawley Tp., Imperial County; Jaquith v., App.	247 224
Justice's Court of City of Berkeley, Alameda County; Cunial v., App.	246 340
Justice's Court of Sixth Tp., Kern County; Himovitz v., App.	246 82
Kammerer v. Marino, App.	245 432
Karnezis; Dusis v., App.	244 632
Kearney Inv. Co. v. Golden Gate Ferry Co., Sup.	246 322
Keene; Mertens v., App.	247 543
Kelly; Berkeley Hillside Properties Co. v., App.	247 600
Keppel; Multer v., App.	245 218
Key System Transit Co.; Howe v., Sup.	246 39
King; People v., App.	246 822
Kirkpatrick; People v., App.	246 84
Kizirian; Horschman v., App.	246 81
Klienberger; Frank Meline Co. v., App.	246 136
Knight; Crocker Nat. Bank v., App.	245 454
Knight's Estate, In re, App.	245 454
Krasnow & Sons v. Emerzian, App.	247 536
Lamanuzzi; People v., App.	246 557
La Motte, In re, App.	247 524
Land Development Co. v. Jordan, Sup.	245 187
Landsrath v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	247 227
Langenberg v. Guy, App.	247 621
Lantz; Carlson v., Sup.	245 197
Lapham; Heslin v., App.	246 150
Larsen; Jensen v., App.	247 211
Lawrence; Weldon v., App.	245 451
Lawton; Hunt v., App.	245 803
Learned; Morrow v., App.	245 442
Lemm v. Rutherford, App.	245 225
Le Sage; Ohio Electric Car Co. v., Sup.	247 190

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Lewis v. Shaw, App.	246	86
Lindsley v. Superior Court of California in and for Humboldt County, App.	245	212
Linthicum; Wentz v., App.	245	205
Long v. Ulmer Machinery Co., App.	246	113
Los Angeles County v. Hunt, Sup.	247	897
Los Angeles County v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	245	796
Luce v. City of San Diego, three cases, Sup.	245	196
McCargar v. H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency, App.	244	110
McCloskey; People v., App.	244	930
McDermoth; Bell v., Sup.	246	805
McDermott, Ex parte, App.	246	89
McElwee v. Beckwith, Sup.	244	1084
MacGowan; San Francisco Credit Clearing House v., App.	246	347
McKelvey, In re, App.	247	1114
McOmie v. Board of Directors of Veterans' Home of California, App.	246	155
McVey v. Henningsen, Sup.	247	1082
Madera County; Hanhart v., App.	245	444
Mahoney v. City of San Diego, Sup.	245	189
Makings, Ex parte, App.	247	923
Makins v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	247	202
Malachowski v. Varro, App.	244	936
Mallon; Harbinson v., App.	245	223
Mappin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., Sup.	247	911
Marino; Kammerer v., App.	245	432
Marr; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v., Sup.	245	178
Marr v. Southern California Gas Co., Sup.	245	178
Martensen; People v., App.	245	1101
Mason's Estate, In re, App.	244	629
May Hosiery Mills v. G. C. Hall & Son, App.	246	332
Meline Co. v. Kleinberger, App.	246	136
Menne; Newman v., App.	244	951
Mertens v. Keene, App.	247	543
Metzger v. Vestal, App.	244	942
Michaelian v. Elba Land Co., App.	245	476
Miles v. Miles, App.	246	143
Milligan; People v., App.	247	580
Mitchell v. Fleming, App.	246	152
Mitchell v. Superior Court of California in and for Fresno County, App.	245	1109
Moore; Burwell v., App.	247	1114
Morales; People v., App.	247	221
Morris v. Standard Oil Co., App.	247	583
Morrow v. Learned, App.	245	442
Mullaly; People v., App.	245	811
Multer v. Keppel, App.	245	218
Myers; Hitchcock Military Academy v., App.	245	219
Myers; People v., App.	245	1106
Nakagawa v. Highway Farming Co., App.	245	435
Nardi; Franceschi v., App.	246	130
Neale; Tomlin v., App.	245	800
Nevada-California Power Co. v. Borland, App.	245	209
Newberry v. Evans, App.	245	227
Newbert; Van Camp Sea Food Co. v., App.	244	946
New Blue Point Mining Co. v. Weissbein, Sup.	244	325
Newman v. Menne, App.	244	951
Nichols v. Sunderland, App.	247	614
Nielsen v. E. Gottschalk & Co., App.	246	1086

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Nielson; Simpson v., App.	246	342
Nisbet, In re, App.	246	120
North American Oil Consolidated; Apex Engineering Co. v., App.	245	766
Nowak; People v., App.	244	634
Ogden v. Byington, Sup.	244	332
Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage, Sup.	247	190
Olender; Benson v., App.	246	345
Orange County v. Backs, App.	247	519
O'Reilly; Devlin v., Sup.	247	577
Oswald, Ex parte, App.	244	940
O. T. Johnson Corporation v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	245	164
Pacific Employers' Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	246	825
Palen; Beekhuis v., App.	245	795
Palmer v. Emanuel, App.	247	609
Palmer v. Emanuel, App.	247	611
Palmer v. Shasta County, App.	245	777
Palo Verde Irr. Dist. v. Seeley, Sup.	245	1092
Palo Verde Mut. Water Co.; Barber v., Sup.	246	1044
Parkman v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	246	334
Patchett v. Webber, Sup.	245	422
Payne v. De Vaughn, App.	246	1069
Payne; Todd v., App.	246	816
Pedelaborde; Hauret v., App.	246	134
Pedrow v. Federoff, App.	247	212
People v. Adams, App.	244	106
People v. Adams, App.	244	114
People v. Adams, Sup.	245	821
People v. Alexander, App.	246	147
People v. Alfonso, App.	246	818
People v. Borchers, Sup.	247	1084
People v. Branch, App.	246	811
People v. Bryant, App.	246	815
People v. California Protective Corporation, App.	244	1089
People v. Canyun, App.	247	593
People v. Carmichael, Sup.	246	62
People v. Case, App.	246	1083
People v. Clark, Sup.	245	1112
People v. Connors, App.	246	1072
People v. Cordosco, App.	246	461
People v. Cosper, App.	245	466
People v. Crider, App.	244	113
People v. Cunningham, App.	245	450
People v. Cupp, App.	246	1085
People v. Deckert, App.	246	157
People v. Dryden, App.	245	436
People v. Dugat, App.	246	344
People v. Egan, App.	246	337
People v. Ephraim, App.	245	769
People v. Fatrious, App.	246	342
People v. Fitzpatrick, App.	247	601
People v. Floyd, App.	247	917
People v. Folcey, App.	247	916
People v. Fuhr, Sup.	246	1116
People v. Giminiani, App.	244	625
People v. Grace, App.	247	585

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Hatfield, App.	246	95
People v. Honey Lake Valley Irr. Dist., App.	246	819
People v. Jensen, App.	244	1086
People v. Jones, App.	244	101
People v. King, App.	246	822
People v. Kirkpatrick, App.	246	84
People v. Lamanuzzi, App.	246	557
People v. McCloskey, App.	244	930
People v. Martensen, App.	245	1101
People v. Milligan, App.	247	580
People v. Morales, App.	247	221
People v. Mullaly, App.	245	811
People v. Myers, App.	245	1106
People v. Nowak, App.	244	634
People v. Peppa, App.	244	627
People v. Rodway, App.	247	532
People v. Rodway, App.	247	535
People v. Roganovich, App.	246	132
People v. Russell, App.	246	110
People v. Schafer, Sup.	247	576
People v. Selby, Sup.	245	426
People v. Selby, App.	245	792
People v. Shope, App.	245	998
People v. Sica, App.	245	461
People v. Sloper, Sup.	244	362
People v. Sloper, Sup.	246	802
People v. Trinidad, Sup.	247	907
People v. Walker, App.	244	94
People v. Wallington, App.	246	815
People v. Wardwell, App.	246	97
People v. Watts, Sup.	247	884
People v. Whitholt, App.	247	245
People v. Wilson, App.	245	781
People's Trust & Savings Bank; Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v., App.	244	934
Peppa; People v., App.	244	627
Perlis; Gray v., App.	245	221
Phillips; Dugan v., App.	246	566
Pinkham Co.; C. O. Bashaw Co. v., App.	246	1064
Poole; City of Marysville v., App.	245	248
Porter v. Gestri, App.	247	247
Privett; Wallace v., Sup.	247	906
Quinn v. Reilly, Sup.	245	1091
Rabe v. Western Union Tel. Co., Sup.	244	1077
Randall; California Credit & Collection Corporation v., App.	244	958
Raney; Brichetto v., App.	245	235
Rapp v. Fred W. Hauger Motors Co., App.	246	1067
Ratto v. Board of Trustees of City of South San Francisco, App.	245	1112
Ray Wong v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., Sup.	247	894
Reardon; Jenkins v., App.	246	817
Reed; First Nat. Bank v., Sup.	244	368
Reilly; Quinn v., Sup.	245	1091
Rezos v. Zahm & Nagel Co., App.	246	564
R. G. Whitlock Co.; Shapiro v., App.	246	344
Rich; Allman v., App.	245	439
Riley; Sevier v., Sup.	244	323
R. Krasnow & Sons v. Emerzian, App.	247	536

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Robinet; Hennessey v., Sup.	246	1043
Robinson; Butler v., App.	244	162
Rocca v. Tuolumne County Electric Power & Light Co., App.	245	468
Rodway; People v., App.	247	532
Rodway; People v., App.	247	535
Roganovich; People v., App.	246	132
Russell; People v., App.	246	110
Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. People's Trust & Savings Bank, App.	244	934
Rutherford; Lemm v., App.	245	225
Salberg v. Coombs, App.	246	1087
Saleneek v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	247	526
Saltzen v. Associated Oil Co. of California, two cases, Sup.	244	338
San Francisco Credit Clearing House v. MacGowan, App.	246	347
Schafer; People v., Sup.	247	576
Scheidt; German Pub. Co. v., App.	246	88
Schmitt v. Gripton, App.	247	505
Scranton v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	245	1102
Seeley; Palo Verde Irr. Dist. v., Sup.	245	1092
Selby; People v., Sup.	245	426
Selby; People v., App.	245	792
Serimian; Stone v., Sup.	246	45
Sevier v. Riley, Sup.	244	323
Shapiro v. R. G. Whitlock Co., App.	246	344
Shasta County; Palmer v., App.	245	777
Shaw; Lewis v., App.	246	86
Shaw's Estate, In re, Sup.	246	48
Sherwood Swan & Co.; Aspegren & Co. v., Sup.	246	1040
Shingle; Dean v., Sup.	246	1049
Shope; People v., App.	245	998
Sica; People v., App.	245	461
Sichofsky; Emmanuel v., Sup.	247	205
Silveira v. Smith, Sup.	246	58
Simpson v. Nielson, App.	246	342
Skaggs v. Taylor, App.	247	218
Sloper; People v., Sup.	244	362
Sloper; People v., Sup.	246	802
Smith v. Board of Trustees of Barnes City, Sup.	245	173
Smith; Silveira v., Sup.	246	58
Smith; Welton v., App.	246	163
Soules v. Glafkidas, Sup.	247	910
Southern California Edison Co.; Anderson v., App.	246	559
Southern California Gas Co.; Marr v., Sup.	245	178
Southern Pac. Co.; Scranton v., App.	245	1102
Spencer's Estate, In re, Sup.	245	176
Spreckels v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	244	919
Standard Oil Co.; Morris v., App.	247	583
Steuer's Estate, In re, App.	247	211
Stevens, In re, App.	247	231
Stevens v. Fetterman, App.	246	102
Stone v. Serimian, Sup.	246	45
Storke v. City of Santa Barbara, App.	244	158
Sullivan, In re, Sup.	244	347
Sullivan v. Dunne, Sup.	244	343
Sunderland; Nichols v., App.	247	614
Superior Court in and for Alameda County; Carton v., App.	244	932
Superior Court in and for Humboldt County; Carp v., App.	245	459

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Superior Court in and for Imperial County; Hall v., App.	245	813
Superior Court in and for Imperial County; Hall v., Sup.	245	814
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Parkman v., App.	246	334
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Woodard v., App.	244	953
Superior Court of California, in and for Fresno County; Johnson v., App.	247	249
Superior Court of California in and for Fresno County; Mitchell v., App.	245	1109
Superior Court of California in and for Humboldt County; Lindsley v., App.	245	212
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Firpo v., App.	246	165
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Beal v., App.	247	922
Sutter-Butte Canal Co.; Truman v., App.	244	923
Tanaka v. Highway Farming Co., App.	245	434
Taylor v. Bunnell, App.	247	240
Taylor; Skaggs v., App.	247	218
Tebbetts; Dodd v., Sup.	244	1081
Thayer; Blankenhorn-Hunter-Dulin Co. v., Sup.	247	1088
Thomson's Estate, In re, App.	244	156
Title Insurance & Trust Co.; Tymms v., App.	247	1091
Todd v. Payne, App.	246	816
Tomlin v. Neale, App.	245	800
Town of St. Helena v. Butterworth, Sup.	244	357
Trinidad; People v., Sup.	247	907
Truman v. Sutter-Butte Canal Co., App.	244	923
Tuolumne County Electric Power & Light Co.; Rocca v., App.	245	468
Tymms v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., App.	247	1091
Tymm's Estate, In re, App.	247	1091
Tyrrell; Johnson v., App.	246	140
Ulmer Machinery Co.; Long v., App.	246	113
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco; Gartenlaub v., Sup.	244	348
Van Camp Sea Food Co. v. Newbert, App.	244	946
Van Delinder; Elliott v., App.	247	523
Varro; Malachowski v., App.	244	936
Vestal; Metzger v., App.	244	942
Vote; City of Stockton v., App.	244	609
Walker; People v., App.	244	94
Wallace v. Clothier, App.	247	260
Wallace v. Privett, Sup.	247	906
Waller v. Ewald, Sup.	245	1089
Wallington; People v., App.	246	815
Wardwell; People v., App.	246	97
Watson's Estate, In re, App.	246	1087
Watts; People v., Sup.	247	884
Webber; Patchett v., Sup.	245	422
Weber v. Hecker, App.	245	776
Weber's Estate, In re, App.	245	776
Weissbaum; Brennan v., App.	245	1104
Weissbein; Fitzsimmons v., Sup.	244	325
Weissbein; New Blue Point Mining Co. v., Sup.	244	325
Weldon v. Lawrence, App.	245	451
Welton v. Smith, App.	246	163
Wentz v. Linthicum, App.	245	205
Western Union Tel. Co.; Rabe v., Sup.	244	1077
Westlake Park Inv. Co. v. Jordan, Sup.	246	807
Whitholt; People v., App.	247	245
Whitlock Co.; Shapiro v., App.	246	344
Wilkins v. Finnell, App.	245	799

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Willard; Farren v., App.	245	206
Williams v. Belling, App.	245	455
Wilson; People v., App.	245	781
Witt's Estate, In re, Sup.	245	197
Wixom v. Davis, Sup.	246	1041
Wolff; Jacoby v., Sup.	247	195
Woodard v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	244	953
Work v. Associated Almond Growers of Paso Robles, App.	245	790
Wright; Heine v., App.	244	955
Yates v. Dyer, App.	244	950
Zahm & Nagel Co.; Rezos v., App.	246	564
Zimmerman; Jenkins v., App.	246	563

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

244 PACIFIC REPORTER

76 Cal. App. 192

PEOPLE v. WALKER. (Cr. 1275.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 12, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1926.)

1. Criminal law ⚖574—Statute as to dismissal of prosecution on failure to find indictment or file information or bring defendant to trial within time prescribed held statutory construction of constitutional guaranty of speedy trial (Pen. Code, § 1382; Const. art. 1, § 13).

Pen. Code, § 1382, as to dismissal of prosecution on failure to find indictment or file information within 30 days after defendant is committed to answer, or on failure to bring defendant to trial within 60 days after finding of indictment, is a statutory construction of Const. art. 1, § 13, guaranteeing defendant in criminal prosecution speedy trial, so far as to indicate what is a reasonable time within which to take steps referred to by statute.

2. Criminal law ⚖576(3)—Remittitur issued from District Court of Appeal 60 days after pronouncement of judgment and retrial, set 37 days thereafter, held not to deprive defendant of constitutional right to speedy trial (Supreme Court rule 34; Const. art. 6, § 4; Const. art. 1, § 13; Pen. Code, § 1382).

Where remittitur was issued from District Court of Appeal 60 days after pronouncement of judgment reversing a conviction, in accordance with Supreme Court rule 34, providing that remittitur shall not issue until 30 days after judgment of District Court of Appeal becomes final therein, which, under Const. art. 6, § 4, is 30 days after pronouncement of judgment, and retrial was set 37 days after issuance of remittitur, defendant thereby received the full measure of the guaranty of speedy trial, under Const. art. 1, § 13, as defined by Pen. Code, § 1382, if latter statute is applicable to a second trial after judgment of reversal.

3. Courts $\S$ 85(1)—Supreme Court held to have power to make rules of practice having force of positive law as between parties (Const. art. 6, § 3).

Supreme Court, under its power to make and adopt rules for itself and District Court of Appeal, granted by Const. art. 6, § 3, has authority to make rules of practice, with force of positive law, so far as rights of parties are concerned, provided rules do not conflict with lawful legislative acts.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1192—Supreme Court rule, providing that remittitur shall not issue until 30 days after judgment of District Court of Appeal becomes final therein, held valid (Supreme Court rule 34).

Supreme Court rule 34, providing that when judgment of District Court of Appeal becomes final therein remittitur shall not be issued until 30 days thereafter, is a valid rule, having all sanction of positive law.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 1191—Judgment of District Court of Appeal becomes final 30 days after "pronounced" therein, but does not conclude rights of parties until 60 days after pronouncement (Const. art. 6, § 4).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, judgment of District Court of Appeal is "pronounced" when court directs entry of judgment, and after 30 days it becomes final in that court, but does not conclude rights of parties until 60 days after pronouncement, in view of Supreme Court's power to review judgment within 30 days after it becomes final in District Court of Appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Pronounce.]

6. Criminal law $\S$ 1192—Supreme Court rule, providing that remittitur shall not issue until 30 days after judgment of District Court of Appeal becomes final therein, held not in conflict with Code providing for remittitur immediately after judgment of appellate court is "given" (Supreme Court rule 34; Const. art. 6, § 4; Pen. Code, § 1264).

Supreme Court rule 34, providing that remittitur shall not issue until 30 days after judgment of District Court of Appeal becomes final therein in accordance with Const. art. 6, § 4, under which judgment of District Court of Appeal does not conclude rights of parties until 60 days after pronouncement, is not in conflict with Pen. Code, § 1264, providing that judgment of appellate court when given must forthwith be remitted to trial court, since word "given" refers to judgment when conclusive on rights of parties, and not when pronounced.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Given.]

7. Criminal law $\S$ 1180—Determination of District Court of Appeal that information is sufficient against demurrer is conclusive on second appeal.

Determination of District Court of Appeal that information was sufficient as against de-murrer is conclusive when same question is again presented on appeal from retrial, though additional points are for first time raised in support of demurrer.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 1180—Doctrine of law of case applies to every point presented by record necessarily involved in prior decision.

Doctrine of law of case applies, not only to points which court actually considered, but to every point presented by record which was necessarily involved in prior decision.

9. False pretenses $\S$ 38—Proof of only one of several false pretenses charged, if a material inducement to part with property, sustains conviction.

Where information charges several false pretenses, conviction may be sustained by proof of only one of such pretenses, if material in inducing complaining witness to part with money or property.

10. False pretenses $\S$ 7(5), 49(3)—Representation that defendant, selling interest in business, had enough patients to fill an 11-room house held one of fact, and sufficiently proved by evidence.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses in sale of "divine healing" business, representation that defendant had patients sufficient to fill an 11-room house was one of fact, and was sufficiently proved by evidence to have been made and to have been false.

11. Criminal law $\S$ 1159(2)—Sufficiency of testimony may not be tested, on appeal, by weight which court might have given it, if a juror.

Sufficiency of evidence to prove false pretenses may not be tested, on appeal, by weight which members of appellate court might have given evidence, had they been sitting as trial jurors; it being the province of trial jury to weigh and consider testimony and reject all or part as false.

12. False pretenses $\S$ 49(1)—Testimony by complaining witness that he paid money on representation that he could make large profits held not to show him solely influenced by such representation, where other representations led defendant to expect large profits.

Testimony by complaining witness, in prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, that he paid defendant for one-half interest in "divine healing" business on representation that defendant could make him a large profit, does not show that complaining witness was influenced solely by such representation, where defendant's representation as to number and character of patients she then had was material in leading witness to believe he would make large profits.

13. False pretenses $\S$ 7(5)—Representation as to monthly profit to be realized from interest in business held not indictable.

Representation that purchaser of interest in "divine healing" business could and would realize $1,000 per month or more profit is not indictable however false it may be.

14. False pretenses — 7(5).

Representation to be indictable must be of past event or existing fact, and not of future event, whether in form of promise or opinion.

15. False pretenses — 52—Instruction that conviction for false pretenses may be had on only one of several false pretenses charged is proper, but not where one of false pretenses alleged is insufficient.

Generally, where information charges several false pretenses, it is proper to instruct jury that conviction may be had on only one of them, if a material inducement to parting with property, but not where one of false pretenses charged is but an expression of an opinion of a future possibility.

16. Criminal law — 144(16) — Instructing conviction might be had on any one of false pretenses charged, where one pretense was insufficient, held harmless, where no evidence supported insufficient pretense; jury being presumed not to base verdict on such pretense.

Where one of several false pretenses charged in information was insufficient for conviction, error in instruction that conviction might be returned, if jury believed any one of pretenses charged, was harmless, where defendant admitted that there was not a scintilla of evidence to support the insufficient pretense, and therefore it could not be made the basis of verdict, as jurors are presumed to possess ordinary intelligence and have regard for sanctity of their oath.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Vivian Walker was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and she appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 231 P. 572.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant was charged with the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. She was convicted of the charge, and now appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

On August 3, 1922, at the city of San Diego, defendant, who claimed to be a "divine healer," sold to the complaining witnesses G. W. Elgin and Mary E. Elgin, husband and wife, a half interest in the "divine healing business" then being conducted by defendant at San Diego. The parties entered into a written contract, whereby it was agreed that the profits of the business should be divided equally between defendant, as the party of the first part, and the Elgins, as the parties of the second part. At the same time G. W. Elgin paid defendant the sum of $1,500 for the one-half interest so purchased by him and his wife. It is charged in the information that the payment of this sum was induced by seven false pretenses, alleged to have been made by defendant to the Elgins. These pretenses, as set out in the information, are as follows: (1) That defendant was then and there a "divine healer"; (2) that she then and there had patients, suffering from confining illnesses, maladies, and diseases, sufficient to more than fill an 11-room sanitarium or house; (3) that she then and there was seeking to lease a sanitarium or house sufficient to accommodate that number of patients; (4) that she then and there had a patient with whom she had an agreement to pay her the sum of $1,500 for treatments; (5) that she then and there had another patient with whom she had an agreement to pay her the sum of $2,000 for treatments; (6) that she then and there had sufficient patients and business to bring in an income in excess of $1,000 per month; and (7) that if the Elgins would purchase from her a one-half interest in the divine healing business the former "could and would realize therefrom an income of $1,000 per month or more."

This is the second appeal taken by defendant. The first appeal (231 P. 572) resulted in a reversal of the judgment for errors committed in the admission of certain evidence educed by the prosecution. Our judgment on the first appeal was pronounced by us on October 30, 1924. Immediately upon the expiration of 60 days thereafter, i. e., on December 30, 1924, the remittitur was issued by the clerk of this court and was filed on the next day in the court below. On January 22, 1925, the case was called in the superior court for retrial. Thereupon defendant objected to the cause being set for trial, and moved to dismiss the prosecution on the ground "that more than 60 days had expired since the time when," so it was claimed, "the remittitur should have been filed." The motion was denied. Thereupon the cause was set for trial on February 5, 1925, which was but 37 days after the issuance of the remittitur. The trial was commenced on that date and was concluded on February 10, 1925.

Appellant's first point is that the court erred in denying her motion to dismiss the prosecution. She contends that there was unreasonable delay between the pronouncement of our judgment on the first appeal and the date for which the cause was set for retrial; the time between those two dates being 97 days. The claim is entirely lacking in merit. Had the point not been pressed with such fervent zeal and with such evident good faith, we should have contented ourselves, in meeting it, with a mere reference to Noel v. Smith, 2 Cal. App. 158, 83 P. 167, and People v. District Court of Appeal, 193 Cal. 19, 222 P. 353. The earnestness with which the point is urged prompts us to point out its fallacy with some degree of particularity.

[1] The defendant in a criminal prosecution is guaranteed a speedy trial alike by the Constitution and by statute. By section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution every accused person is guaranteed "the right to a speedy and public trial." The statute, in order to prescribe with definiteness what should constitute a reasonable time, under the constitutional mandate, for the taking of certain steps in the prosecution of a criminal action, declares that, unless good cause be shown to the contrary, a prosecution must be dismissed against a defendant when an indictment has not been found or an information has not been filed against him within 30 days after he was committed to answer, or when he "is not brought to trial within sixty days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information," and the trial has not been postponed on his application. Pen. Code, § 1382. This statutory provision is a construction of the constitutional mandate so far as to indicate what is a reasonable time within which the steps specifically referred to in the statute should be taken in order that the constitutional guaranty may be kept. In re Begerow, 133 Cal. 349, 65 P. 828, 56 L. R. A. 513, 85 Am. St. Rep. 178; Id., 136 Cal. 293, 68 P. 773, 56 L. R. A. 528.

It is manifest that nothing in section 1382 warranted a dismissal of the prosecution against appellant, even if we were to concede, which we do not, that the issuance of the remittitur was unreasonably delayed. Whether section 1382 can have any possible application after there has been a judgment of reversal and a second trial has been ordered is a question respecting which there possibly may be some room for doubt under the language of some of the decisions of our Supreme Court. In the Matter of Begerow, supra, the court says that, regarded as a provision to enforce the constitutional guaranty, the effect of this Code section must be held to be:

"That an unexcused delay of sixty days, at any time, to try a defendant will entitle him to have the prosecution dismissed." 133 Cal. 355, 65 P. 830.

On the other hand, in People v. Lundin, 120 Cal. 308, 52 P. 807, it was definitely stated and specifically held that—

"This provision of the statute does not apply to cases where a defendant has appealed to this court and had his case sent back for a second trial."

To the same effect is People v. Giesea, 63 Cal. 345. See, also, Ex parte Newell, 188 Cal. 508, 206 P. 61.

However, if it should be assumed, for the purpose of this decision only, that the statute should be so interpreted as to entitle the accused to a dismissal of the prosecution in all cases where the superior court, having acquired jurisdiction to order a trial, fails to set the cause for trial for more than 60 days after it became vested with jurisdiction to do so, still the fact remains that here appellant was brought to trial within less than 60 days after the superior court had acquired jurisdiction to try her a second time. In other words, if the requirement of section 1382 that a nonconsenting defendant must be brought to trial "within sixty days after the finding of the indictments or filing of the information" may be construed as applying to the case of one who has successfully appealed from a judgment of conviction, so as to entitle such a person to be brought to trial a second time within 60 days after the remittitur has come down, appellant still would fail to bring herself within even that latitudinous construction of the statute.

[2] If, now, we turn to the Constitution and consider its broad and comprehensive pledge of a speedy trial, we shall find nothing there to justify appellant's claim. The language of the organic law is most general. It simply declares that in criminal prosecutions the party accused "shall have the right to a speedy * * * trial." We think appellant received the full measure of this constitutional guaranty. The fallacy of her position lies in her erroneous assumption that the remittitur should have issued out of this court immediately upon the pronouncement of our judgment of reversal.

By the constitutional guaranty of a "speedy trial," says the court, in Nixon v. State, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 497, 41 Am. Dec. 601, is intended:

"A trial conducted according to fixed rules, regulations, and proceedings of law, free from vexatious, capricious, and oppressive delays, manufactured by the ministers of justice."

Appellant's second trial was had according to, and within the time contemplated by, fixed rules and lawful regulations.

The remittitur issued out of this court on the former appeal without any vexatious or oppressive delay, and within the time prescribed by a rule promulgated by the Supreme Court for the government of this court, viz. rule XXXIV, which reads:

"When a judgment of a District Court of Appeal becomes final therein, the remittitur shall not be issued until after the lapse of 30 days thereafter, unless otherwise ordered."

[3] The Constitution expressly declares that the Supreme Court shall have power "to make and adopt rules, not inconsistent with law," for the government of itself and of the District Courts of Appeal. Section 4, art. 6. By virtue of the power thus conferred, the Supreme Court has authority to make rules of practice which have the force of positive law, so far as the rights of parties are concerned, provided such rules do not conflict with any lawful act of the Legislature. Brooks v. Union Trust, etc., Co., 146 Cal. 138, 79 P. 843.

[4, 5] Rule XXXIV is a valid rule, having all the sanction of positive law. It is provided by section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution:

That "judgments of the District Courts of Appeal shall become final therein upon the expiration of 30 days after the same shall have been pronounced."

Also:

That the Supreme Court shall have power "to order any cause pending before a District Court of Appeal to be heard and determined by the Supreme Court."

And:

That such order "may be made before judgment has been pronounced by a District Court of Appeal, or within 30 days after such judgment shall have become final therein." (Italics ours.)

The judgment of a District Court of Appeal is "pronounced" by it when it directs the entry of judgment, which ordinarily is at the time when its opinion is filed. Upon the expiration of 30 days after the judgment has been so pronounced by the District Court of Appeal the judgment becomes "final therein"; i. e., it then, and not before, becomes final in that court. But it does not then become a "final judgment," in the sense that it is conclusive of the rights of the parties. The effect of the constitutional provision that the judgment of a District Court of Appeal shall become final "therein" upon the expiration of 30 days after it shall have been "pronounced" by that court is to take from that court any further power to set aside or modify its judgment; but under the preceding sentence of section 6 of article 6, the Supreme Court, at any time within 30 days after the judgment shall have become final in the District Court of Appeal, may still order the cause to be heard and determined by it. From this it follows that the judgment of a District Court of Appeal does not become final, in the sense that it is conclusive of the rights of the parties, until the expiration of 60 days after it shall have been pronounced by that court. It was for the purpose of carrying these provisions of the Constitution into effect, and to afford litigants an opportunity to obtain a judgment of the Supreme Court after decision by a District Court of Appeal, that rule XXXIV was adopted. These views are but restatements of what was said in Noel v. Smith, supra, and People v. District Court of Appeal, supra.

It follows from what we have said that rule XXXIV is a valid rule, and that the remittitur issued out of this court within due time, unless there be some valid statutory enactment with which the rule is in conflict.

[6] Appellant claims that the rule conflicts with section 1264 of the Penal Code. That section reads:

"When the judgment of the appellate court is given, it must be entered in the minutes, and a certified copy of the entry, with a copy of the opinion of the court attached thereto, forthwith remitted to the clerk of the court from which the appeal was taken." (Italics ours.)

It is earnestly urged by appellant that under this statutory enactment it was the duty of the clerk of this court to issue the remittitur immediately upon the pronouncement of our judgment of reversal on October 30, 1924. The contention is based upon the erroneous assumption that a judgment is "given" when it is pronounced. As the word is used in section 1264, the judgment of the appellate court is "given" when, and only when, it becomes conclusive upon the right of the parties. In Young v. Wright, 52 Cal. 410, the court says:

"A judgment is duly 'rendered' when it is duly pronounced and ordered to be entered. [Citing authorities.] But a judgment duly 'made or given' is a complete judgment, properly entered in the judgment book, so that it may be pleaded in bar of another action."

As we already have shown, our judgment on the first appeal did not become conclusive of the rights of the parties, and therefore was not "given," in the sense in which that word is used in section 1264, until the expiration of 30 days after it became final in this court, or 60 days after its pronouncement by us; in other words, it was not "given" until December 29, 1924, the day before that on which the remittitur was issued. Any other construction of section 1264 would throw it out of harmony with those provisions of the Constitution, found in section 4 of article 6, which we have quoted supra. It follows from the foregoing that the remittitur was issued in due time, and that appellant was not deprived of her constitutional privilege of a "speedy trial."

[7] It next is contended that the court below erred in overruling appellant's demurrer to the information. This ruling was made prior to the former appeal, and was presented to this court on that appeal as error entitling appellant to a reversal. We, at that time, decided the question adversely to appellant. It therefore has now become the settled law of the case that the information is sufficient as against the demurrer interposed thereto, and we are concluded by our former decision from any further review of the questions presented by the demurrer. It is immaterial that appellant now advances additional points in support of her demurrer. Every point which might have been advanced by her against the ruling of the lower court on the demurrer was necessarily involved when that ruling was presented to us on the former appeal as a ground for reversal.

[8] It is well established that the doctrine of the law of the case applies not only to the points which the court actually considered, but to every point presented by the record and which was necessarily involved in the prior decision. Thompson v. Louisville Banking Co., 55 S. W. 1080, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 1611. Accordingly, it is held that where the sufficiency of a pleading, challenged by demurrer, is determined on one appeal, the determination is conclusive when the same question again is presented in any subsequent stage of the cause, although the specific reasons subsequently urged in support of the demurrer were not presented on the former appeal. McCowen v. Pew, 18 Cal. App. 302, 312 et seq., 123 P. 191; Thompson v. Louisville Banking Co., supra; Ohio Valley Trust Co. v. Wernke, 179 Ind. 49, 99 N. E. 734; 4 C. J. 1108. This is the rule in civil cases; and there is no reason in the nature of things why it should not be equally applicable to criminal causes. See People v. Bennett, 5 Cal. Unrep. 824, 50 P. 703; People v. Thompson, 115 Cal. 160, 46 P. 912; and People v. Hatch, 163 Cal. 372, 125 P. 907, where the applicability of the doctrine of the law of the case to criminal causes was assumed by the court as a matter of course.

[9, 10] It is urged with much earnestness that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. Where, as here, the information charges several false pretenses, a conviction may be had, and will be sustained, by proof of only one of such pretenses, provided it be established to the satisfaction of the jury that the particular pretense which is so proved was material in inducing the complaining witness to part with his money or property. 12 Cal. Jur. 469, 470. At least one of the pretenses charged in the information was sufficiently proved; namely, the representation to the effect that appellant "had patients, suffering from confining illnesses, maladies, and diseases, sufficient to more than fill an 11-room sanitarium or house." The gist of this representation is not the size of the house, nor the particular location or character of any specific house, but the possession by appellant of patients to the number and of the character mentioned in the representation. Speaking of this pretense, we said on the former appeal that it "was one of fact," and that by it appellant meant "to convey the idea that she had at least 11 patients of the character referred to in the representation, or, if not that, it surely conveyed the idea, considering that the alleged patients were said to be suffering from confining illnesses, maladies, and diseases, that appellant was engaged in the conduct of a business of some magnitude, and it was to that extent a material representation."

The making of this pretense was proved by the testimony of two witnesses. Mrs. Elgin testified that on August 3, 1922, prior to the payment of the money, in the presence of herself and of her husband, appellant said that she had patients "enough to fill any sized house; that they would come and fill every room that we could get"; that she had enough "to fill a 14-room house," and "that they were sick; that they were bedridden, some of them were." "Q. Did Mrs. Walker, before you signed the contract [the contract by which the Elgins purchased a half interest in appellant's devine healing business], tell you that she had patients in a number, no matter what the number may be, but in a number which would actually more than fill an 11-room house? A. Yes, sir." Mr. Elgin testified that before he paid the money appellant told him and his wife, each in the presence of the other, that she "had patients enough to fill any sized house she could get in San Diego"; that she "had lots of patients that she could put into a hospital if she had the room"; and that "there was no question but what she could make us lots of money." He further testified that before he paid the money he, his wife, and appellant looked at a 14-room house in San Diego; that upon this occasion he asked appellant if she could get enough patients to fill that 14-room house, and that appellant replied, "There will be no question about that. I have got them all promised; enough to fill it." He also testified that upon this occasion appellant said they could turn the large billiard room in the 14-room house into a ward and "put in several beds." It is a fair inference from these statements of appellant, made by her to Mr. and Mrs. Elgin before the money was paid, that she intended to convey the idea, and that she did convey the idea to each of the complaining witnesses; that she had at that time enough patients, of the character described in the charge, to more than fill an 11-room house—even a 14-room house. The falsity of this representation and its fraudulent character may well be inferred from all the evidence, considered in its entirety.

[11] Our attention is called to what are claimed to be inconsistencies or disparities in the testimony of each of the complaining witnesses. The sufficiency of this testimony may not be tested on appeal by the weight which the members of this court might have given it, had they been sitting as jurors on the trial of the case. It is the province of the jurors to weigh and consider such testimony. They may reject all of it as false, or they may determine to accept as true one or the other of such contradictory asseverations. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 200, 48 P. 75; People v. Mooney, 177 Cal. 650, 171 P. 690; 8 Cal. Jur. 587.

[12] On cross-examination, Mr. Elgin testified that his reason for paying the money to appellant was her statement to him that she could make him "a large profit out of the investment." Wherefore it is argued that he was influenced solely by the representation that he could make "a large profit," and not by appellant's representation as to the number of patients which she claimed to have had. This conclusion obviously is non sequitur. Undoubtedly the making of profit was the ultimate reason prompting Elgin to part with his money; but appellant's representation as to the number and character of patients she then had was a material factor in leading him to believe that he would make large profits if he accepted appellant's offer to take him and his wife into partnership.

[13] One other point remains to be considered. The fourth and fifth false pretenses alleged in the information were conceded by appellant on the former appeal to be representations of fact and not mere statements of opinion. The first, second, third, and sixth alleged false pretenses were held by us on that appeal to be indictable representations of past or present facts. The seventh and last pretense set forth in the information, the one to the effect that if the Elgins would purchase from appellant a half interest in the divine healing business they (the Elgins) "could and would realize therefrom an income of $1,000 per month or more," is not mentioned in the opinion which we handed down on that appeal. This pretense clearly is not an indictable representation, however false it may have been. The amount of profit which could or would subsequently be realized by the Elgins from the business, if they should conclude to purchase a half interest therein, necessarily was a matter of opinion, relating to something which possibly might happen in the future.

[14] It is well settled that to be indictable the representation must be of a past event or of an existing fact. No representation of a future event, whether in the form of a promise or of an opinion, can be a criminal pretense. People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 14, 4 P. 773, 56 Am. Rep. 73; People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173, 19 P. 270; People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 33 P. 630; People v. Green, 22 Cal. App. 45, 48, 133 P. 334; 11 R. C. L. p. 831; note to Barton v. People, 25 Am. St. Rep. 379.

[15] Notwithstanding the seventh false pretense charged in the information was but the expression of an opinion, based upon expectation and hope, and therefore not a sufficient basis for a conviction thereon, the court instructed the jurors to the effect that they might convict appellant if they believed that "any one" of the pretenses set out in the information was proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Considered as an abstract proposition of law, it may be said, generally speaking, that where an information charges several false pretenses it is proper to instruct the jury that a conviction may be had on only one of them, if it was material in inducing the prosecuting witness to part with his money. People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521. But, obviously, such an instruction should not be given where, as here, one of the false pretenses charged in the information is but the expression of an opinion having reference to an expected future possibility.

[16] In the course of his argument in support of his contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, appellant's counsel makes the point that, because the jurors were instructed that a conviction might be had upon "any one" of the pretenses set forth in the instruction, it necessarily follows that "the verdict is an uncertainty" and that the uncertainty "nullifies" the verdict. The reason assigned for this contention is that it cannot possibly be known whether the verdict was or was not based upon the seventh alleged false pretense. The argument is, in effect, but an indirect way of saying that the giving of the instruction, under the circumstances of this case, was error. We think it was error to give the instruction. But the vital question is, Was it harmful error? We do not think the instruction could possibly have injured appellant. She admits that there was not a scintilla of evidence tending to support the charge that she made the seventh alleged false pretense. In the brief filed on her behalf her counsel says:

"As to the sixth specification [the sixth alleged false pretense] * * * the record is entirely silent as to anything tending to support the charge. The same may be said of specification No. 7 to the effect that the defendant falsely represented that if the Elgins would purchase a half interest from the defendant they would realize therefrom an income of $1,000, or more."

Jurors must be presumed to possess at least ordinary intelligence and to have an honest regard for the sanctity of their oaths. If, therefore, it be a fact, as appellant concedes it to be, that no evidence was educed which tends to support the seventh alleged false pretense, then that representation could not possibly have been made the basis of the verdict of any one of the jurors. For this reason we think that the error in giving the instruction was harmless and not ground for reversal.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

76 Cal. App. 144

PEOPLE v. JONES. (Cr. 1258; Cr. 2887.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 4, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1926.)

1. Rape $\hookrightarrow$ 52(1).

Testimony of 15 year old prosecutrix, who was accused's stepdaughter, held to warrant conviction for rape.

2. Rape $\hookrightarrow$ 54(1).

Accused may be convicted of rape on uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix.

3. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 742(1).

Credibility of witnesses, prosecutrix, and accused in rape prosecution held for jury.

4. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 371(9)—Evidence as to previous lascivious conduct and intercourse by accused with prosecutrix held properly admitted.

In prosecution for rape of accused's 15 year old stepdaughter, testimony by prosecutrix as to previous lascivious conduct by accused toward her, and as to alleged act of sexual intercourse in preceding year, held properly admitted, even if such act was merely one of numerous indecent familiarities to which she had previously testified.

5. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 270(1).

Cross-examination of prosecution in rape case may not extend indefinitely into incompetent and collateral matters

6. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1170½(2)—In prosecution for statutory rape, permitting prosecution to attempt to impeach prosecutrix's mother by questions as to quarrel with prosecutrix held not error, where testimony was excluded.

In prosecution for rape of accused's 15 year old stepdaughter, held, that it was not error to permit prosecution to attempt to impeach prosecutrix's mother by questions concerning her alleged quarrel with prosecutrix, because of refusal to drop charge, where mother positively denied any such conversation, and prosecutrix's testimony relating thereto was excluded.

7. Rape $\hookrightarrow$ 59(12)—Refusal to charge that, as respects prosecutrix's credibility, law required her to make complaint at first opportunity to one in whom she had confidence held not error.

Where, in prosecution for rape on accused's 15 year old stepdaughter, prosecutrix testified that her previous complaints of accused's conduct were ignored by her mother, refusal to charge that, as respects credibility of prosecutrix, law required her to make complaint at first opportunity to one in whom she had confidence, and that it would be presumed that an innocent woman would complain at earliest practical moment, held not error.

8. Rape $\hookrightarrow$ 52(3)—That prosecutrix under 16 made no outcry held immaterial on issue whether rape occurred.

That prosecutrix under 16 made no outcry, but concealed alleged offense from others, is immaterial, if jury is satisfied on sufficient evidence of accused's guilt of rape as charged.

9. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 889—Requiring jury in rape case to amend verdict to state place of imprisonment held not error (Pen. Code, §§ 264, 1097, inapplicable).

Where jury in rape case were provided with forms of verdict, it was not error to require them to amend verdict of guilty by stating place of imprisonment, as required by Pen. Code, § 264, and, as they had been instructed to do; section 1097 not being applicable.

10. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 829(1).

Refusal to give accused's requested instruction as to matters fully covered by instructions given is not error.

11. Indictment and information $\hookrightarrow$ 176 — Instruction that date of alleged rape charged in information was immaterial, and that date need not be specifically proved, held not erroneous.

Instruction in rape prosecution that date alleged in information on which offense charged was alleged to have occurred was immaterial, and that any date on or about such date prior to filing information was sufficient, and that date need not be specifically proved, held not erroneous.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

12. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1170(4)—Rape $\hookrightarrow$ 38(2)—Refusal to permit cross-examination of 15 year old prosecutrix as to consent and resistance to show circumstances of rape, held error, but was not prejudicial, in view of her practical admission that no force or threats were used.

In prosecution for rape on accused's 15 year old stepdaughter, court should have permitted accused to cross-examine prosecutrix respecting her consent and resistance to show circumstances of offense, and its exclusion because prosecutrix was under statutory age was error, but was not prejudicial, in view of prosecutrix's practical admission that no force or threats were used.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

William J. Jones was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas C. Whitlock, of Banning, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant in this case was charged by information with having committed rape upon a girl 15 years old, at Banning, in Riverside county, whom the evidence disclosed to have been his own stepdaughter. A jury found him guilty, a motion for new trial was presented and overruled, and he appeals from the judgment and ruling upon said motion.

One of the principal grounds of this appeal consists of a description in minute detail of lascivious practices of appellant against the person of the prosecutrix, a mere child, testified to by her and supported by other evidence, as having commenced at Wardner, Idaho, when she was but 10 years of age, continuing thence to Portland, Or., and terminating in statutory rape at Banning, from all of which it is argued that the verdict of the jury was a result of passion and prejudice. It is but natural that jurors, as well as appellant, should be struck with the heinous character of such an offense, when it has been shown that his corrupt approaches toward one with whose protection he was charged had extended over a period of some 5 years, but we fail to find anything in the record to justify the assumption that the jury in any way deviated from a dispassionate, fair, and deliberate consideration of the case.

[1] It appeared by the testimony of the prosecutrix that she lived with her parents and a younger sister in the state of Idaho, where her father died when she was about 7 years of age; that at or about that time the defendant became acquainted with her family; that when she was about 10 years old her mother removed to Oregon with the two daughters; and that the defendant followed them. The mother of the prosecutrix conducted a small boarding house, and appellant took meals with her, and in Oregon resided in the same house at least a portion of the time. In the late fall or winter of 1922 Jones went to Banning, Cal., where he bought a restaurant, and, in response to his entreaties, the mother and two daughters joined him there on April 9, 1923, whereupon appellant and the woman immediately intermarried. He and his wife continued the restaurant business, and were assisted by the prosecutrix before and after school hours, and all three would return home together at night.

The prosecutrix testified that during the time that they lived in Idaho the defendant commenced to show undue affection toward her; that he would fondle her, kiss her, raise her garments, and resort to indecent familiarities with her person; that he continued to assert his passionate advances toward her in Oregon, and in the restaurant and elsewhere at Banning, "whenever he could get a chance." She also testified that during all this period of time, if she attempted to remonstrate with appellant, he would tell her that there was "nothing wrong in it," and to "keep quiet"; that upon one occasion, when she threatened to inform the officers, appellant "replied that if I did he would knock my head off," and that at that time "he was getting a drink, and he took the water and threw it all at me." She swore that she spoke to her mother of appellant's indecent attentions, but that her mother ignored her; that she ventured on several occasions to "hint" about it, but that her mother "turned her down completely," and conducted herself as though nothing had happened.

The direct testimony of the prosecutrix was that on or about the 5th of May, 1924, at 6:30 or 7 o'clock in the evening she returned home from her duties at the restaurant with her mother and stepfather, and at once undressed and went to bed; that she lay there studying her lessons, and her mother sat in an adjoining room talking with a Mrs. Samuels, the wife of a deputy sheriff, who occupied a part of the same house. It was admitted that appellant's bedroom and that of the prosecutrix each communicated with a common bathroom, which latter room had a door on either side; and the prosecutrix testified that shortly after she had retired she heard the defendant enter his room; that he passed through the bathroom into her room and sat down on her bed; that she consulted him about a problem which she was studying, but that he asked her to lay it down; that he did not know anything about it; and, to use her language, "then he threw the covers back, and just picked up my gown, and just got under the covers with me, and had sexual intercourse with me."

[2] Counsel for appellant have quite fully and accurately stated the facts as they appear in the record, but, rather than concurring in their assertion that the complainant's story was inherently so improbable and devoid of corroboration that the jury could not have voted for conviction except through bias and prejudice, we are impelled to the conclusion that an acquittal would have constituted a serious miscarriage of justice. It is true that no eyewitness corroborated the prosecutrix' statement as to the specific act with which appellant was charged, but ocular proof of the truth or falsity of testimony as to secret acts occurring between two persons of opposite sexes is seldom, if ever, available.

"It is well settled that one may be convicted of rape upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, if the jury believes her story. People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 6 P. 691, 56 Am. Rep. 126; People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 56 P. 56; People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 P. 404; People v. Preston, 19 Cal. App. 675, 127 P. 660; People v. Bernon, 29 Cal. App. 424, 155 P. 1021; People v. Akey, 163 Cal. 54, 124 P. 718." People v. Sylvis (Cal. App.) 237 P. 802.

[3] And, in view of the vast difference in the ages of the parties here concerned, the apparent domination by one over the other, the nature of the relation, admonitions of the stepfather that, if complainant told, he would "knock her head off," and the persistent disregard of her mother of reported acts which tended to contribute to her delinquency, it is not surprising that the testimony of a third person was unobtainable. The prosecutrix was as effectively sworn to secrecy as suggestion and threats could render the most truthful witness of her years until finally her advancing age and wisdom prevailed upon her to rebel. She told the court and jury that the crime was committed as charged in the information, and the defendant unqualifiedly denied each of her incriminating statements. As to the latter's guilt a conflict then arose, and it lay within the exclusive province of the jury to determine from the testimony and from other evidence—such as the appearance and demeanor of the witnesses, the fact that the prosecutrix withstood searching cross-examination and recross-examination, without faltering or contradiction as to essentials, that her mother's testimony was conflicting in itself, and was noticeably partial to the defendant, and that the latter departed from home following the alleged offense, and was located and arrested at San Diego—as to the credibility of each witness. This they did, and it is not for an appellate court to say as a matter of law from the sordid state of mind and conduct exhibited by the defendant that the jury could not fairly have decided that he was guilty. Citation for such a conclusion is unnecessary.

[4] It is next contended that the trial court erred in permitting the complainant to testify as to alleged other lascivious conduct of the defendant toward her during preceding years, and to an alleged act of "intercourse" which she said occurred in the year 1923. It is argued that such evidence was so "palpably false," and so prejudicial, that its admission was allowed in contravention of established rules of evidence, and that the judgment must for that reason be reversed.

The argument for appellant is in part predicated upon a question of the district attorney which, at most, was indefinite. The prosecutrix was asked: "Q. During the time that you were in Banning, Cal., that is from April 9, 1923, to on or about May 5, 1924, did an act of intercourse occur between you and Mr. Jones at any time prior to, on or about, May 5, 1924?" After objection by the defendant's counsel that no proper foundation had been laid, that the question was incompetent, improper, and immaterial, inadmissible until the parties should be shown to have lived in continuous and uninterrupted illicit relationship, that no time had been fixed, and that it did not appear whether the alleged act was near or remote, which objection was overruled, the witness answered, "Yes sir." It is insisted that the objection was well taken, and that at all events there was no proof either by the answer or by other evidence in the record that a previous act of sexual intercourse was committed. But whether the act to which she testified was that of the most serious character contemplated by the statute, or merely one of a series of indecent familiarities to which the complainant had already testified, as having continued for about five years, is of small consequence. The evidence was clearly admissible, whether the witness intended by her answer to infer one or the other. As was said in People v. Koller, 142 Cal. 621, 76 P. 500:

"It is now the settled rule in this state that evidence of prior acts of incestuous intercourse are admissible. People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, [75 P. 166]. And while we recognize that there is a conflict in the authorities as to the admissibility of evidence of subsequent acts, we are of the opinion that the better rule, and the one sanctioned by the weight of authority, is, that acts of improper familiarity, or illicit intimacy, or relations between the parties, subsequent as well as prior to the act charged in the information relied on by the prosecution for a conviction, are admissible as corroborative evidence, where they tend to show a continuous, illicit relationship. They are never admissible as independent substantive offenses, upon any of which a conviction can be had, and evidence of them is only admissible after the prosecution has selected some particular act of a date certain, and has elected to rely on proof of such act for a conviction of the defendant, and has introduced evidence tending to support the selection."

In People v. Wademan, 38 Cal. App. 116, 175 P. 791, the same question arose wherein it was said:

"In view of the question taken by the learned trial judge was that it being conceded that prior and subsequent acts of sexual intercourse were admissible as showing an adulterous disposition, any lascivious or other acts of familiarity tending to awaken or promote sexual desires were alike admissible. Logically, this seems to be sound reasoning."

To the same effect are People v. Johnson, 51 Cal. App. 464, 197 P. 135; People v. Slaughter, 33 Cal. App. 365, 165 P. 44; People v. Elgar, 36 Cal. App. 114, 171 P. 697; People v. McDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256.

The complainant had previously testified in detail to the commission of the act charged in the information, as we have heretofore related, and it is therefore obvious that the evidence here complained of was properly admitted.

[5] Another contention of appellant is that the cross-examination of the prosecutrix was erroneously restricted, and that he was not allowed that wide latitude of interrogation compatible with our technical rules of evidence to which a defendant is entitled in cases of this nature. People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 49 P. 186, and other authorities are cited which hold that he should be given such latitude, but none of them go to the extent of holding that the cross-examination in a statutory rape case may extend indefinitely into the field of incompetent, immaterial or collateral matters. Counsel for appellant subjected the prosecutrix to a most searching cross-examination upon all questions relating to her past life, including her education, her work, and family conditions, as related by her direct testimony and that of other witnesses. Counsel questioned her as to whether she worked at the cannery with or without her mother's consent, and as to where her mother was then working, whereupon the question was asked her:

"Q. (by Mr. Whitlock): I will ask you a question, and I will apologize for asking it, but my duties as counsel compel me to. I will ask you if the act that you complained of was committed by your consent, or was it committed by force and against your will?"

Objection of the district attorney upon the ground that the question was improper under the law was sustained, and the following question was asked:

"Q. (by Mr. Whitlock): I will ask you this question: Did you, at the time of the act complained of, protest in a mad voice against it?"

Objection was also sustained to this latter question, whereupon appellant's counsel and the court made the following statements:

"Mr. Whitlock: As I understand the law, your honor, we are given the privilege of showing the circumstances under which the act complained of took place, inasmuch as the law, as I understand it, says that is the only defense open to us.

"The Court: In law, she need not have cried out. She need not have consented; and, if she did consent, the law says it was still unlawful."

Nothing further appears to have been said upon the subject, and the cross-examination immediately turned to another subject. The ruling of the trial court was clearly proper under the statutes and the decisions of this state. In People v. Roach, 129 Cal. 33, 61 P. 574, it was held that, in a case of this character, "neither the element of force nor the question of consent has any application. The prosecutrix could not consent, and the law resists for her. People v. Verdegren, 106 Cal. 211 [39 P. 607, 46 Am. St. Rep. 234]. We must judge of the defendant's intent by his conduct, and not by that of his victim." To the same effect are People v. Martinez, 59 Cal. App. 121, 210 P. 61; People v. Pribnow, 61 Cal. App. 252, 214 P. 475.

It is here contended that, inasmuch as complainant's mother and another person were in an adjoining room, an outcry could easily have been heard by them, and that the questions were asked for the purpose of impeachment. From what we have already observed it is apparent that the prosecutrix was so dominated by the defendant and treated by her mother with complete abandon that she knew that any complaint she might make would be both hazardous and futile. At all events, upon the record before us we cannot say that the rulings were erroneous.

[6] Again it is insisted that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecution to impeach the witness Elizabeth Jones, complainant's mother, upon a collateral matter. The questions of the district attorney to said witness concerning an alleged quarrel between herself and the prosecutrix wherein it had been testified that the mother attempted to persuade her daughter to drop the charges against the defendant were all answered in the negative; the witness positively stating that no such conversation occurred. When the prosecutrix was asked what the conversation was, objection was interposed, and it was sustained. No objection appears to have been made to any other of the questions propounded to either witness in regard to this subject, and the point is therefore without merit.

[7] It is further contended that the trial court erred in refusing to charge the jury that, in determining the credibility of the prosecutrix, they might consider the law as requiring that she make complaint as closely upon the occurrence as to be practically the first opportunity available to tell one in whom she had confidence, and that it would be presumed that an innocent woman would complain at the earliest practicable moment. It is well to note, in addition to what we have already said concerning the relations between the complainant and her mother, in whom counsel would infer that she had confidence, that the following testimony was given by her during redirect examination:

"Q. On how many occasions could you say that you tried to talk to your mother? A. There was numerous times, but I could not tell you how many times there were, but she never seemed to think anything about it, nor tried to get what I was hinting at at all."

[8] Complaint having repeatedly been made that the court below erred in failing to assume, or to ask the jury to assume, that the prosecutrix entertained an abiding faith and confidence in her mother, we are constrained to remark that, from all the facts presented, appellant and his wife were devoid of any proper sense of responsibility to their ward, and that it would be presuming upon the intelligence of the court and jury to expect them to believe the mother entitled to confidence. Furthermore, the requested instruction was the antithesis of the law of the case.

"The fact that she, a female under sixteen years of age, made no outcry but concealed from others knowledge of the act was not material to the inquiry, provided the jury upon sufficient evidence was satisfied that he was guilty of the act as charged." People v. Martinez, 59 Cal. App. 121, 210 P. 61.

The rule was also announced in People v. Jacobs, 16 Cal. App. 478, 117 P. 615; People v. Fraysier, 36 Cal. App. 579, 172 P. 1126.

[9] The jury were fully instructed upon all the elements of the offense charged, and that they should find the defendant guilty of rape, as charged in the information, guilty of assault with intent to commit rape, guilty of simple assault, or not guilty. A form of verdict applicable to each such possible finding was furnished them, and they returned their verdict upon the form first mentioned, in the following language:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find the defendant, Wm. J. Jones guilty, as charged in the information, with a recommendation for mercy."

The court thereupon reminded them that they had been instructed that in such a case they should, in the event of conviction, state in their verdict whether the punishment should be confinement in the penitentiary, or in the county jail, as provided by section 264 of the Penal Code. It was said by the trial court:

"The court is not sure or clear just what you mean by the term 'mercy.'" "And I will ask you to go back to your jury room and see if you have any other, or, if you change your verdict, to come within the instruction as rendered. You do not need to do that, but I am now reading the law to you; and I do not direct you to do it, but I think it well to have you go back and consider."

The forelady replied that she thought their verdict had automatically taken care of the question of punishment. The jury again retired, shortly returning into court with the same or a similar verdict, bearing the insertion, "State's prison punishment," and adding to the statement "with a recommendation for mercy," "meaning leniency."

It is contended that the first verdict indicated an intention that the punishment should consist of a county jail sentence only, and that since section 1097 of the Penal Code provides that, where there is a reasonable doubt as to the degree of guilt, a defendant can be convicted of the lowest degree only. Appellant quotes from People v. Pratt, 67 Cal. App. 606, 228 P. 47, wherein was involved only the question of the applicability of an amended statute to an offense committed prior to the amendment, and it was contended that the jury should have been instructed in accordance with the latter. It was there said:

"When forms of verdict are submitted to the jury they should be comprehensive enough to cover every phase of the law under the evidence, and should include any kind of verdict that the jury would be warranted in returning after its deliberation, and this is especially so where a statute requires that a verdict of 'guilty' shall assess the degree of the crime and the place of imprisonment. If, therefore, the defendant was entitled to the benefit of the amendment it is clearly apparent that his substantial rights have been affected."

It was said, however, that no error had been committed, and the judgment was affirmed. If the cited case is at all pertinent here, what was said as to the form of verdict is merely dictum as to the question presented by this appellant, but in the instant case the jury were furnished with each form of verdict, and were fully instructed that they should also state the place of confinement therein. They recommended leniency in each of their verdicts, but entirely ignored the instructions of the court as to place of punishment in the first, and did not alter it in this respect in the second, but added thereto "state's prison punishment." The court did not, by requiring them to complete their verdict in any manner, indicate a preference in this respect, if, indeed, it entertained an opinion in the matter. Had the jury decided at the outset that confinement in the county jail should be inflicted, it would have been a natural thing for them to have added "county jail punishment" instead of the amendment which they actually made of their own volition, and with a full understanding of the law. It is not contended that the jury inadvertently designated one place, intending the other, nor do we desire to be understood to hold that such contention would be tenable, but it lay with them to fix the place of confinement, and we cannot say as a matter of law, nor do we think it the fact, that they were influenced by the requirement that they complete the verdict to insert a penalty which was entirely contrary to their best judgment upon the evidence. In People v. Jenkins, 56 Cal. 4, it was held to be the duty of a trial court to require amendments of verdicts so that they meet the statutory mandates.

Other alleged errors are assigned, but they consist of points so well settled as to demand slight, if any, discussion. They relate to the giving or refusal of requested instructions. The defendant requested an instruction to the effect that, in determining the credibility of the prosecutrix, they should consider that the law required her to make complaint at the first opportunity after the occurrence. This is not the law. People v. Gonzales, 6 Cal. App. 255, 91 P. 1013, is cited by appellant, but it was there said that, in order that evidence of complaint be admitted, it should follow so closely upon the event as to be practically the first opportunity. It is therefore not authority for the point advanced, and other cases cited are of no avail here. From what we have already said it is apparent that the prosecutrix did complain to her mother at various times, but, whether near or remote to the occurrence, she received no consolation.

[10] It is argued that a requested instruction should have been given to the effect that the jury should keep in mind the fact that a charge of this nature is particularly difficult to disprove, though easily made, and that they should be satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the case was completely made out before they could render a verdict of conviction. We think other instructions fully covered the subjects here mentioned, and, though not couched in the same language, were sufficient. Under such circumstances error is not assignable. People v. Pacheco, 70 Cal. 473, 11 P. 761.

[11] Finally, it is contended that the court erred in instructing the jury that the date alleged in the information upon which the offense charged was alleged to have been committed was immaterial; that any date on or about the 5th day of May, 1924, prior to filing the information was sufficient, and that the date need not be specifically proven. Such instruction was not erroneous. People v. Britt, 62 Cal. App. 674, 217 P. 767; People v. Sheffield, 9 Cal. App. 130, 98 P. 67; People v. Dinsmore, 102 Cal. 381, 36 P. 661.

No error appearing, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court after decision and judgment in the district court of appeal is denied.

[12] As a matter of law, however, we would be constrained to hold as error the ruling of the trial court sustaining objections to the cross-examination of the prosecutrix as to whether she consented to the act of sexual intercourse or whether it was committed by fear or force and against her will. We can well understand that, if she had claimed the act was committed by force, how her claim might have laid the foundation, not only for impeachment as to the manner in which the act was accomplished, but also under certain circumstances it might have laid the foundation for impeachment as to whether the crime was committed at all. However, we have examined the record, and feel certain that the court's ruling did not carry with it any prejudicial effect, for the reason that the prosecutrix practically admitted throughout her examination that no force or threats were employed by the defendant, and no serious contention to the contrary was made. This being so, the defendant was left in as favorable light so far as this issue is concerned as it was possible for him to be placed. As an abstract question of law, however, we cannot approve of the court's ruling in sustaining the objections to the questions asked as to whether she resisted the defendant's acts, for the reason that the evidence sought to be elicited tended to disclose the circumstances of the crime, and it could not properly be excluded on the theory that the prosecutrix, being under the statutory age, all inquiry as to the circumstances of the crime was therefore cut off. This evidence was not offered as a justification or excuse for the commission of the offense, but was offered as constituting a part of the crime charged. We therefore disapprove of that part of the opinion which seems to sus-tain the trial court's ruling, but hold that it produced no prejudicial result so far as the conviction was concerned.

PEOPLE v. ADAMS. (Cr. 868.)

76 Cal. App. 178

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 11, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1926.)

1. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 277(2)—Cross-examination of accused to bring out bad character is not proper, where accused has not attempted to prove his good character.

Where accused makes no effort to prove his good character in respect to traits involved in charge, cross-examination to prove bad character is improper, even if evidence produced related to traits involved in charge.

2. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 369(1).

Guilt cannot be established by proof of general bad character, other crimes, or wrongful acts not relevant to that charged.

3. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 344(1).

Witness may not be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except that it may be shown by examination of witness or record of judgment showing conviction of felony in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2051.

4. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 337(4).

Cross-examination of one accused of rape, as to having used assumed name while in reformatory and prison, held error.

5. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 337(4).

Cross-examination of one accused of rape to show that he had engaged in boxing contests held improper.

6. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 277(2).

In prosecution for rape, cross-examination as to accused's commitment to reform school and return thereto for incorrigibility held error.

7. Rape $\hookrightarrow$ 51(1).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction of rape.

8. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1186(4)—Cross-examination of one accused of rape as to commitment to reform school and return for incorrigibility and use of assumed name, and whether he engaged in boxing contests, held reversible (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where testimony of prosecutrix and accused as to commission of alleged rape were in direct conflict, erroneous cross-examination of accused showing his commitment to reform school and return for incorrigibility and his use of assumed name, and fact that he had participated in boxing contests, held to require reversal, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 4½, and fact that accused was properly impeached by proof of commission of a felony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Thomas Hudson Adams was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

A. L. Wessels, of Ukiah, and Lewis D. Mooney, of Ft. Bragg, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, alleged to have been committed September 22, 1924, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction and the order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

The prosecutrix was born April 6, 1914. In the following November her mother married a man who is not the father of the child. The issue of the marriage is a daughter, born in May, 1915. On the 29th day of February, 1924, the superior court of Sonoma county granted the wife an interlocutory decree of divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. She was given the custody of the daughter of the parties during the school months of the year, the father to have her custody during school vacations. Of course, the mother had the natural right to the custody of the prosecutrix. The mother was employed as a teacher in one of the public schools of Sonoma county, and after the entry of the interlocutory decree she and her younger daughter resided on a farm adjoining that of her husband. The mother endeavored to induce the prosecutrix to live with her, but the prosecutrix refused, and during the months of "March, April, May, and the better part of June," 1924, she lived with her stepfather on his farm. The probation officer then took her to the detention home at Santa Rosa, where she and her sister remained for several weeks. It appears from the evidence that the prosecutrix had more affection for her stepfather than for her mother. The mother was employed as teacher of the public school at Irmulco, Mendocino county, for the term commencing in September, 1924. The prosecutrix objected to going with her mother to Irmulco, and, in the language of the mother's testimony, the stepfather "said I could take" the younger girl, "but should not take" the prosecutrix, "and he held onto" her "hand and resisted my taking them. * * * She held back too and cried, and I finally just picked her up and carried her out to the car and she was kicking the whole time."

The mother and the girls lived together at Irmulco in a house provided for them by the school district. In the early part of August the mother and the defendant met for the first time, and about three weeks later they agreed to marry as soon as she was granted a final decree of divorce. The defendant visited the mother frequently, and their engagement was discussed with the children, who were requested by the mother to call him "Daddy." The younger girl complied with this request, but the prosecutrix testified that she did not, that she never liked the defendant and frequently asked her mother not to marry him, but to go back to the stepfather. September 21st the mother went to Ukiah to attend a three-day session of the county teachers' institute, commencing on the 22d. She left the two girls in her home at Irmulco in charge of defendant, no other persons being with them. During the mother's absence the girls and the defendant slept together in the same bed, the latter sleeping in the middle. The prosecutrix testified that while the three of them were in bed together the defendant had sexual intercourse with her twice during the night of September 22d and once during the night of the 23d; that she tried to get away from him, but that he held her so that she could not; that she did not make any noise or outcry and did not know whether her sister was awake or not; that the defendant did not ask her not to tell what he had done and that she had said nothing about the matter to any person until the latter part of December, 1924. The defendant admitted that he slept with the girls, but denied that he committed the act charged. The children at no time made any complaint to the mother of any improper conduct on the part of the defendant during her absence, and he continued to visit her and to associate with the children as he had been accustomed to do. During the mother's absence at institute, the prosecutrix wrote the stepfather that her mother had agreed to marry the defendant.

On the 26th day of December the mother took the children to Willits and gave them into the custody of the stepfather, who took them to Santa Rosa. The prosecutrix testified that a few days later she told her stepfather that the defendant had committed the alleged offense; that she had not previously told any person of the offense; that she "was not going to tell anybody"; that she did not tell her mother because "I was afraid she would whip me." On the 31st day of December the prosecutrix was examined by a physician and surgeon of 10 years' experience, a graduate of Cooper Medical College. This physician testified that she made a careful examination of the sexual organs of the prosecutrix and found that the hymen "had been ruptured decidedly. * * * The hymen itself was entirely gone. Only the remnants of the hymen remained. * * * It was not done within a few days." The children were thereafter taken to Ukiah and placed in the county hospital, under the charge of the officers thereof, where they were kept until the time of the trial. While the children were at the county hospital, at the request of the mother and of counsel for the defendant, the county physician of Mendocino county, a graduate of Cooper Medical College, who had been engaged in practice continuously since the year 1896, examined the sexual organs of the prosecutrix. He testified: "I found the hymen intact. It hadn't been ruptured. I examined her very carefully." A nurse at the county hospital, basing her statement upon an acquaintance of two months while the girl was at the hospital, testified that the reputation of the prosecutrix for truth and veracity was bad.

It was the theory of the defense, as announced at the trial, that both the stepfather and the prosecutrix were desirous of preventing the contemplated marriage of the mother and the defendant; that the stepfather exercised an undue influence over the girl, and that, when she informed him that the defendant had slept with the children during the mother's absence, the stepfather induced the prosecutrix to say and testify falsely that the defendant committed the alleged crime. The prosecutrix testified on cross-examination in part as follows:

"Q. Is it not a fact that the only thing you told him (the stepfather) was that your mamma had left you children with Mr. Adams, and that Mr. Adams had slept with you children, is that not right? A. That's the way * * * (my sister) told him, but I told him a little more.

"Q. What did you tell him? A. I told him he put me on top of him and put his finger in me.

"Q. That's all you told him? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. What did you do then? A. Well, my aunt took me for a walk and I told her about it. * * *

"Q. How long did you stay down there after you told him that? A. A month or three weeks.

"Q. Did you ever—when you found this out, did you ever write and tell your mamma about it? A. No.

"Q. You were writing to mamma all of the time while you were in Santa Rosa? A. Yes.

"Q. And never wrote and told her anything about this? A. No. * * *

"Q. * * * He (the stepfather) told you what to say when you got on the witness stand, didn't he? A. No. * * *

"Q. * * * (He) has been out to the county hospital on a number of occasions since you have been out there? A. Yes.

"Q. And you have sat on his lap most of the time? A. Yes.

"Q. And you liked him pretty well? A. Yes.

"Q. And you were sitting on his lap out here in the district attorney's office yesterday? A. Yes.

"Q. And he was kissing you and hugging you out there? A. Yes.

"Q. You have been pretty good friends? A. Yes.

"Q. And you know that he is not your father? A. Yes.

"Q. But you always do what he says, what he tells you to do? A. Yes.

"Q. Always been a good little girl that way? A. Yes.

"Q. And you were pretty mad because your mamma was going to marry Mr. Adams? A. No.

"Q. Why did you not write to * * * (your stepfather) and tell him about that? A. I wanted him to know it.

"Q. * * * Did you ever tell your mamma about this? A. No.

"Q. You have seen your mamma a number of times since this matter came up? A. Yes.

"Q. Why didn't you tell her about it? A. Well, because I was told not to talk about it.

"Q. Who told you that? A. Mr. Hurley.

* * *

"Q. Now, did anybody else except the district attorney tell you not to talk to your mamma about these things? A. I don't think so. * * *

"Q. You have seen your mamma several times since being at the county farm, haven't you? A. Yes.

"Q. And never told her anything about this? A. She talked to me about it, but I didn't say anything."

The foregoing outline of the evidence is not intended, of course, as an intimation that any witness testified falsely or that the weight of the evidence is on the one side or the other, but to show that the errors herein-after considered have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The defendant was 33 years of age at the time of the alleged offense. He had been convicted of the crime of forgery in the state of Washington and, as punishment therefor, had there served a term of three years in the state prison. He testified that his occupation was that of woodsman and he was engaged in that occupation during the year 1924 and up to the time of his arrest in January, 1925. His occupation was not otherwise shown. He was cross-examined in part as follows:

"Q. How old are you? A. Thirty-three.

"Q. And where were you born? A. Modesto, Cal.

"Q. What year? A. 1892—the 11th day of January.

"Q. Where were you during the year 1905?

"Mr. Wessels: Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"The Court: This is cross-examination. Objection overruled. Go ahead.

"A. In 1905 I was in the State Industrial School at Whittier, Cal.

"Q. Reform school?

"Mr. Wessels: The only ground for impeachment the district attorney can ask here is whether he has been convicted of a felony. * * * I therefore object to the question as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and no foundation laid, and ask that the answer be stricken.

"Mr. Hurley: It is not for the purpose of impeachment at all.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"Mr. Hurley: At the Whittier Industrial School in California? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many periods of time did you spend at the Whittier Reform School?

"Mr. Wessels: Same objection—incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"The Court: Same ruling.

"Mr. Hurley: You got out of there once and went back again as an incorrigible, didn't you?

"Mr. Wessels: Same objection.

"The Court: Same ruling.

"A. Yes.

"Mr. Hurley: You say your name is Thomas Hudson Adams? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you ever use any other name?

"Mr. Wessels: Oject; incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Hurley: You state in your direct examination that your occupation is that of a woodsman? A. Yes.

"Q. Have you followed other occupations, businesses, or, professions besides the one you have given here? A. Not outside of the reform school and the penitentiary in Washington.

"Q. Ever prize fight any? A. I have boxed some.

"Q. Did you ever fight any before the public?

"Mr. Wessels: Object as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. It is no discredit to a man to be a prize fighter and does not go to the credibility of the witness.

"Mr. Hurley: He testified as to his occupation.

"The Court: Go ahead. Objection overruled.

"A. I have boxed some in smokers.

"Mr. Hurley: My question is whether you have boxed before the public? A. Yes, sir."

[1-3] No reason appears for the introduction of the foregoing evidence except to prove the defendant's general bad character or to impeach him as a witness. The defendant made no attempt to prove that he was of good character in respect to the traits involved in the charge, and therefore it was not allowable for the prosecution to prove his bad character, even if the evidence produced had related to such traits; it having no tendency to show the relations between the defendant and the prosecutrix. People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 340, 83 P. 43. It is well settled that the guilt of a defendant on trial for an alleged crime cannot be established by proof of general bad character or of other crimes or wrongful acts which have no relevancy to the crime charged, nor may a witness be impeached "by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except that it may be shown by the examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment, that he had been convicted of a felony." Code Civ. Proc. § 2051. This statutory rule is so clear and certain that it is deemed unnecessary to cite any of the numerous cases holding that the statute means precisely what is stated therein.

[4-6] Relative to the use by defendant of an assumed name and to the fact that he had engaged in boxing contests, the language of the Supreme Court in People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 381, 136 P. 291, 302 (Ann. Cas. 1915B, 881), where similar errors were under consideration is particularly applicable. It is there said:

"There was no dispute whatever as to the true name of defendant, and obviously the sole purpose of seeking such proof was to reflect discreditably on the defendant by showing that he went under an assumed name, a thing, as said by this court, 'not conducive to a good character for defendant.' People v. Arlington, 123 Cal. 357, 55 P. 1003. * * * People look at things differently, and we would indeed be ignorant as to existing conditions if we did not know that some people do not look with favor upon a man who engages in what they consider 'prize fighting,' even though the same be by amateurs as distinguished from professionals, and under the auspices of a club. * * * Obviously learned counsel for the prosecution did not think it would improve the standing of defendant with the jury to be known as a participant in such contests."

In People v. Frank (Cal. App.) 236 P. 189, it was held to be prejudicial error to admit proof that the defendant had used an assumed name. See, also, People v. Williams (Cal. App.) 236 P. 355; People v. Mohr, 157 Cal. 732, 109 P. 476; People v. Denby, 108 Cal. 54, 40 P. 1051; People v. Waller, 64 Cal. App. 390, 222 P. 171. It was clearly error to admit proof of the defendant's commitment to the reform school and of his return thereto for incorrigibility. In People v. Wyett, 49 Cal. App. 289, 193 P. 153, the defendant was charged with the infamous crime against nature. Evidence was admitted relating to the commission of a similar offense by the defendant against a person other than the prosecuting witness. It was held that the error of admitting such evidence required a reversal of the judgment, and that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution had no application to the case.

[7, 8] The testimony of the prosecutrix and that of the defendant as to the commission of the alleged crime are in direct conflict. There is no other direct evidence upon the question. Defendant's credibility as a witness, therefore, was of the highest importance to him. He was properly impeached by proof that he had committed a felony. Notwithstanding such proof, however, the jury might have believed him as a witness. But when, in addition thereto, it was shown that he had been committed to the reform school when 13 years old, that he was later returned thereto because he was incorrigible, that he had used an assumed name, and that he was a prize fighter, it is probable that the jury concluded that he had become so hardened and confirmed in wrongdoing as to be wholly unworthy of belief and so devoid of moral character that he would not hesitate to commit the atrocious crime with which he is charged. If it be said that such proof ought to be permitted in a case of this character, it is a sufficient answer that the law forbids it.

The evidence is sufficient to support the judgment. It is perfectly clear, however, that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution was not intended to mean that the mere fact that the evidence may support the judgment is a sufficient reason in all cases for refusing to set it aside. To give the section that meaning would often lead to gross miscarriages of justice, as where evidence vital to the case of a party is rejected or evidence vitally damaging to his case is erroneously admitted, or where the court erroneously instructs or refuses to instruct the jury as to the law applicable to an essential issue. The courts have not attempted to frame a definition of "miscarriage of justice" which can be applied to the varying circumstances of the many cases where the constitutional provision is invoked, and obviously it would be impossible to do so. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 555, 147 P. 238. The quotations which follow, however, taken from cases in which the question has arisen, are elucidating:

"The central or all-important purpose of said constitutional provision is, obviously, to legally justify the courts in refusing to interfere with or disturb verdicts of guilty in criminal cases in the trial of which error has been committed and in which the evidence amply supports such verdicts, when such interferences may justly be withheld consistently with a just and proper regard for the substantial rights of persons tried for public offenses." People v. Tomskey, 20 Cal. App. 672, 683, 130 P. 184, 189.

"We do not understand that the amendment in question was designed to repeal or abrogate the guaranties accorded persons accused of crime by other parts of the same constitution or to overthrow all statutory rules of procedure and evidence in criminal cases. When we speak of administering 'justice' in criminal cases, * * * we mean something more than merely ascertaining whether an accused is or is not guilty. It is an essential part of justice that the question of guilt or innocence shall be determined by an orderly legal procedure, in which the substantial rights belonging to defendants shall be respected." People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 65, 130 P. 1042, 1046.

"The phrase, 'miscarriage of justice,' does not simply mean that a guilty man has escaped, or that an innocent man has been convicted. It is equally applicable to cases where the acquittal or the conviction has resulted from some form of trial in which the essential rights of the people or of the defendant were disregarded or denied." People v. Wilson, 23 Cal. App. 513, 524, 138 P. 971, 975.

"We are unable to determine whether the defendants would or would not have been convicted by the jury had this erroneously admitted testimony been withdrawn from their consideration. This being so, we do not feel that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution can be given application to uphold the judgment." People v. MacPhee, 26 Cal. App. 218, 226, 146 P. 522, 525.

"It is readily conceivable that the exclusion of respondent's statements * * * might have been directly responsible for the verdict. This being so, we are of the opinion that the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 150, 223 P. 451, 454.

"We cannot even, after a careful review of the evidence, say that the jury, under proper instructions, would probably have reached a conclusion in favor of the plaintiffs. Under these circumstances, we would not be justified * * * in disregarding the error." Langford v. San Diego Elec. Ry., 174 Cal. 729, 734, 164 P. 398, 400.

"Nor is it a matter for consideration * * * that another jury upon a new trial might upon such conflicting evidence and proper instructions render a verdict of guilty." People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 548, 561, 209 P. 560, 566.

See, also, Webster v. Orr, 174 Cal. 426, 428, 163 P. 361; People v. Degnen (Cal. App.) 234 P. 129, 142; People v. Walker (Cal. App.) 231 P. 572, 582; People v. Irby, 67 Cal. App. 520, 530, 227 P. 920; People v. Avila, 50 Cal. App. 228, 231, 194 P. 768; People v. Columbus, 49 Cal. App. 761, 763, 194 P. 288; People v. Clark, 28 Cal. App. 670, 674, 153 P. 719.

Appellant contends that the court refused to select and appoint a physician to examine the prosecutrix. Defendant requested such selection and appointment prior to the time that the county physician testified, but the record shows that the request was withdrawn before such testimony was given. Had the request been renewed after the irreconcilable testimony of the two physicians had been given, it is probable that the court, in the interest of justice, and with the mother's consent, would have selected a physician to make the examination. The other grounds urged for a reversal are without merit.

The judgment and the order are reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

75 Cal. App. 770

MCCARGAR v. H. G. BITTLESTON LAW & COLLECTION AGENCY et al.
(Civ. 5309.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 24, 1925.)

1. Pleading ☞35—In suit to annul judgment, that part of pleading which was not ground for relief should be considered surplusage on demurrer.

Where complaint in suit to annul judgment attempted to set out two causes of action, fraud and void assignment of claim on which defendant had sued, first of which was ground for relief, court should treat second as surplusage in considering general demurrer.

2. Justices of the peace ☞122(2)—Creditor who agreed not to take further proceedings in pending action in justice court without notice to debtor bound thereby, though debtor breached agreement.

Where creditor agreed that no further proceeding in pending action in justice court would be taken without notice in writing, and debtor agreed to pay debt in installments, breach of agreement by debtor did not give creditor right to take judgment without notice.

3. Contracts ☞75(1)—Agreement to accept payment in installments and not prosecute pending action held supported by consideration.

Creditor's oral agreement to accept debt in installments, and to take no further proceedings in pending action without notice, held supported by consideration, where debtor changed his position for the worse by making payments on debt, relying on agreement.

4. Justices of the peace §128(3)—Debtor's allegation of payment, made since action brought, held sufficient to show judgment of justice thereon was wrong.

In suit to annul justice court judgment, allegation that $15 had been paid on debt since action thereon was brought held sufficient allegation that judgment was wrong, and that result would be different in another trial.

5. Justices of the peace §128(2)—Appeal from judgment held not necessary before bringing suit to annul it, but motion must be made to set it aside (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 974, 975).

Judgment debtor was not required to appeal from judgment of justice court under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 974, 975, before bringing suit to annul it, though he must have made motion to set it aside, under section 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Suit by C. W. McCargar against H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

J. W. Hocker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. G. Bittleston, of Los Angeles, and Edward Judson Brown, of Oakland, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is a suit in equity to annul a judgment obtained by H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency, a corporation, defendant herein, against C. W. McCargar, plaintiff herein, in the justice's court of Los Angeles township, Los Angeles county, for the payment of the sum of $62.02 principal and $5 costs, upon the ground that said judgment was obtained through extrinsic fraud, and upon the further ground that the assignment of the claim upon which the action was brought was void as being against public policy. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court with leave to amend. Plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment of dismissal of the action followed. Plaintiff appeals.

It is alleged in the complaint that the appellant, McCargar, "became indebted to one R. G. Muhleman, * * * and on the 13th day of October, 1922, owed said R. G. Muhleman the sum of $62.02 as a balance on an account for goods, wares, and merchandise"; that on said last-mentioned date the respondent corporation, as assignee of the Muhleman claim, commenced an action against appellant in said justice's court to collect the amount due on said claim, and that summons in said action was served on appellant on February 21, 1923, whereupon it is alleged an agreement was entered into between Bittleston, the manager of respondent corporation, and appellant "to the effect that, upon the payment of the sum of five dollars per month, commencing on said 21st day of February, 1923, and continuing monthly thereafter until the sum of $62.02 had been paid on said account of R. G. Muhleman, said suit then pending in said justice court would be dismissed at the costs of the plaintiff, and that, pending said payments, this defendant need not make answer or in any wise plead in said action in said justice court, until further notice, in writing. * * *" The complaint then alleges that, relying on said agreement, appellant made three payments of $5 each on February 23, 1923, April 3, 1923, and April 25, 1923, respectively; that, notwithstanding said agreement, the respondent corporation, on May 28, 1923, without notice to appellant, caused judgment to be entered in said justice's court action against appellant for the full amount sued for, to wit, the sum of $62.02 principal and $5 costs; that appellant, on June 2, 1923, received notice by mail of the entry of said judgment, and on June 4, 1923, served respondent corporation with notice of motion to set aside and vacate said judgment, and offered in writing to carry out said installment payments upon the setting aside of said judgment, but that respondent corporation opposed the granting of said motion, and the same was denied. The complaint also contains allegations to the effect that appellant "is informed, and has good reason to believe," that the respondent corporation obtained an assignment of said claim under a champertous and barratrous agreement, and it is alleged that therefore the judgment obtained in pursuance thereof was "unjust and inequitable, and unlawful, and should be vacated and set aside." It furthermore appears that, although the statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 974 and 975) gave appellant 30 days after notice of rendition of judgment, or until July 3, 1923, within which to appeal to the superior court upon questions of law from said justice's court judgment, under which appeal the superior court would have had jurisdiction to review all orders affecting the judgment appealed from, and to "set aside, or confirm, or modify any or all of the proceedings subsequent to and dependent upon such judgment," and, "if necessary or proper, order a new trial" (Code Civ. Proc. § 980; Wells v. Torrance, 119 Cal. 437, 51 P. 626), appellant failed to take such appeal. Instead of pursuing that remedy, he brought this suit on June 14, 1923.

[1] Although said complaint is in one count, there is an obvious attempt made to set forth two distinct causes of action without separately stating them: First, a cause of action to annul said judgment upon the ground of extrinsic fraud; and, secondly, a cause of action to nullify the judgment upon matters intrinsic to the record, namely, an alleged void assignment of the claim upon which the justice's court action was based. The substance of the first cause of action, if sufficiently pleaded, would serve as legal grounds for relief in equity, but the facts alleged in the second cause of action, in our opinion, cannot be the basis of such relief. The demurrer was upon general grounds, however, and, consequently, the charges of champerty and barratry should be treated as surplusage and consideration given to the first cause of action only.

[2] The particular reason for holding the complaint insufficient for want of facts does not appear, but respondents endeavor to support the order sustaining the demurrer upon four separate grounds, the first of which is that it affirmatively appears from the complaint that appellant breached the agreement to pay $5 a month on said indebtedness, and, consequently, the respondents were entitled to cause a default judgment to be entered against him. The complaint further alleges, however, that part of said agreement was that no further proceeding would be taken in said justice's court action without written notice being given to appellant, which notice, the complaint alleges, respondents failed to give. Apparently it was only in contemplation of such breach by appellant that notice was required to be given at all. Therefore, assuming that appellant did breach said agreement, he nevertheless was entitled to written notice before further court action could be legally taken against him, and it was the failure to give such notice which constitutes the alleged fraud.

[3] Secondly, the contention is made that said oral agreement was not supported by a valid consideration, and, therefore, the promise of respondents to accept installment payments was mere nudum pactum, citing in support of this point the case of Heim v. Butin, 109 Cal. 500, 42 P. 138, 50 Am. St. Rep. 54. In that case defendant agreed that he would not enter a deficiency judgment against the plaintiff in a foreclosure suit, and the court said:

"The defendant had a clear and undoubted right to such a deficiency judgment, and the plaintiffs neither gave nor agreed to give or confer any benefit in consideration of its release, nor did they agree to suffer any prejudice or forego any advantage. The promise of the defendant was, therefore, mere nudum pactum. But plaintiffs say they relied upon it, and acted upon it, and therefore the defendant is estopped from alleging or relying upon a want of consideration. This would be so if it appeared that their position was changed for the worse in consequence of their reliance on defendant's promise, but nothing to that effect is alleged."

In the instant case appellant alleges that, relying upon the agreement, he paid about one-fourth of the amount due on the indebtedness, and that, notwithstanding such payment, respondents caused a default judgment to be entered against him for the sum of $62.02, which was the full amount sued for. Appellant's reliance upon said agreement did, therefore, change his position for the worse to the extent of depriving him of the benefit of the credit for the amount of money paid in pursuance of said agreement. For that reason his situation does not fall within the operation of the rule stated in Heim v. Butin, supra.

[4] The third point urged by respondents is that the complaint fails to allege facts showing that the judgment entered in the justice's court is wrong, or that the result would be different if a trial were had upon the merits. Painter v. Painter, 133 Cal. 129, 65 P. 311; Peterson v. Weissbein Bros. & Co., 65 Cal. 42, 2 P. 730; Collins v. Scott, 100 Cal. 446, 34 P. 1085; Reed v. Bank of Ukiah, 148 Cal. 96, 82 P. 845. This proposition is based upon appellant's admission that at the time of the commencement of the justice's court action he owed the sum of $62.02, for which amount the judgment was afterwards entered. In making this contention, respondents seem to lose sight of the fact that the appellant alleges payment of $15 between the time of the commencement of the action and the entry of judgment, for which amount, if his allegation of payment be true, he would doubtless be given credit in the rendition of a judgment upon trial. It does appear, therefore, that, if a trial were had upon the merits, a different judgment would be rendered.

[5] The concluding contention urged by respondents is that appellant may not invoke jurisdiction in equity because he failed to prosecute an appeal from the judgment rendered in the justice's court, citing Heller v. Dyerville Mfg. Co., 116 Cal. 127, 47 P. 1016. The effect of the rule stated in that case is merely that, where it lies within the power of the court which rendered the judgment to set aside said judgment under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, a motion to accomplish that purpose must be made by the aggrieved party before he is entitled to invoke jurisdiction in equity. But neither in that case nor any other, so far as our attention has been called, is it held that the aggrieved party must go beyond the presentation of such motion, and obtain a final determination of the matter on appeal before he may proceed in equity. The complaint here shows that appellant did present a motion to set aside said judgment, and said motion was denied. It would therefore seem that he was required to go no further before resorting to equity. Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 556, 87 P. 19.

Respondents having failed to point out wherein said complaint is insufficient as against attack by general demurrer, the judgment appealed from must be reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to the superior court to overrule the demurrer. It is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 101

PEOPLE v. CRIDER. (Cr. 1257.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1925.)

1. Escape ⇨9—Information held sufficient to charge offense of escaping from state prison, though failing to charge that defendant was "committed" to prison (Pen. Code, § 106).

Information alleging that, while undergoing sentence in a state prison under and by virtue of a judgment of superior court, defendant feloniously escaped from such prison, held sufficient under Pen. Code, § 106, though not charging that defendant was "committed" to such prison.

2. Escape ⇨10—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for escaping from state prison (Pen. Code, § 106).

Evidence showing that defendant escaped while at work outside of a state prison under surveillance of prison guards held sufficient to sustain conviction though charged under Pen. Code, § 106, with having escaped from the prison.

3. Escape ⇨10—Proof in support of allegations of information that judgment of conviction had never been vacated, set aside, or reversed, but was still in force and effect, held unnecessary.

Proof in support of allegations of information that judgment of conviction had never been set aside or reversed, but was still in force and effect, held unnecessary in prosecution for escaping from state prison, where certified copy of judgment of conviction was offered in evidence supplemented by proof that defendant at time he escaped was undergoing sentence of imprisonment by virtue of such judgment.

4. Escape ⇨1—Prisoner held guilty of escaping from prison, though he may have conceived intention to escape while away from prison (Pen. Code, § 106).

Prisoner leaving prison camp held guilty of crime of escaping from prison under Pen. Code, § 106, though he may have conceived intention to escape after being away from prison.

5. Criminal law ⇨1208(9).

Judgment that defendant be punished by confinement in a certain state prison for term of indeterminate sentence held not subject to objection because of difference in penalties fixed by sections 105 and 106, Pen. Code.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Colvin Crider was convicted of escaping from a state prison, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Chas. A. Wetmore, Jr., Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction of the crime of escaping from a state prison. The information charges in substance that while undergoing a sentence of twelve years' imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin, under and by virtue of a judgment of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of San Diego, rendered July 28, 1922, said defendant did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously escape from said state prison.

Section 105 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

"Every prisoner confined in a state prison, for a term less than for life, who escapes therefrom, is punishable by imprisonment in a state prison for a term of not less than one year; said second term of imprisonment to commence from the time he would otherwise have been discharged from said prison."

Section 106 of the same Code, which was later enacted, also provides:

"Every prisoner committed to a state prison for a term less than for life, who escapes or attempts to escape while being conveyed to or from or while confined within such prison or while at work outside such prison under the surveillance of prison guards is guilty of a felony and on conviction thereof the term of imprisonment therefor shall commence from the time such convict would otherwise have been discharged from said prison."

The undisputed evidence in the case shows that the defendant, after his commitment to said state prison was, at his request and in accordance with the rules of said prison, sent to a prison camp in Mariposa county maintained by the board of state prison directors under the surveillance of prison guards. The defendant arrived at said prison camp about February 14, 1924, and escaped therefrom on March 30, 1924. Subsequently, and on August 17, 1924, he was taken into custody at Tucson, Ariz., and returned to said state prison.

[1] It is first contended by the defendant that the information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense in that it fails to charge that the defendant was "committed" to a state prison. From the statement of the substance of the information already made it is apparent that the point is without merit. While the information fails to allege specifically that the defendant was "committed" to said prison, it does allege that while undergoing a sentence of twelve years' imprisonment in the California state prison at San Quentin, Cal., under and by virtue of a judgment of the superior court of San Diego county, he did feloniously escape from said state prison. We think this allegation sufficient to meet the requirement of the statute.

[2] Defendant further contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction for the reason that while he was charged with having escaped from a state prison the evidence shows that he escaped while at work outside such prison under the surveillance of the prison guards. In the case of Bradford v. Glenn, 188 Cal. 350, 205 P. 449, the Supreme Court had occasion to pass upon a like point in connection with the application of section 787 of the Penal Code, and it was there said:

"We are of the opinion that a person serving a sentence of imprisonment in a state prison is, in contemplation of law, a prisoner therein, as well when at work outside under the surveillance of prison guards as when confined within its walls, so that if he escapes when outside he escapes from a prison, within the meaning of section 787."

In view of the language used in that decision, we conclude that there was no variance between the allegations of the information and the proof, and that the jury was properly instructed upon that subject.

[3] The information contained allegations to the effect that said judgment of conviction of the superior court of San Diego county had never been vacated, set aside or reversed, but was still in full force and effect. The prosecution offered no proof in support of those allegations and defendant now contends that the evidence in that regard is insufficient to sustain a conviction. It is our opinion that those allegations were not essential to the charge, and that therefore proof in support of them was unnecessary. A certified copy of the judgment of conviction was offered in evidence, supplemented by proof that the defendant at the time he escaped was undergoing a sentence of imprisonment by virtue of said judgment, thereby establishing the fact that he was a prisoner in said state prison, at the time of the escape, which is all that the statute requires.

[4] Some mention is also made by the defendant that there is evidence to the effect that when he departed from said prison camp his intention was to return to the prison to obtain medical treatment, but that on the way back to the prison he changed his mind and made his escape, and he claims therefore it was not proved that he escaped from the prison camp. We think it would make no difference when he conceived the intent to escape, because, in contemplation of law, he was at all times a prisoner and under the surveillance of the prison guards.

[5] As to the question of the difference in penalties fixed by the two Code sections above quoted, the judgment of the court was that the defendant, having been duly convicted "of the crime of felony, to wit, escape from state prison," was ordered "punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California, at San Quentin, for the term of an indeterminate sentence as provided by law. * * *" If, hereafter, in fixing the term of imprisonment under the Indeterminate Sentence Law, the board of prison directors should impose an illegal term of imprisonment, the law affords the defendant ample remedy to correct any error which might thus be committed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 183

PEOPLE v. ADAMS. (Cr. 875.)

(District Court of Appeal. Third District, California. Jan. 11, 1926.)

1. Assault and battery ☞92.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of assault with deadly weapon.

2. Criminal law ☞1159(3).

Finding of jury upon conflicting evidence is binding on appellate court.

3. Criminal law ☞808.

Language of court in deciding case, though properly stating law, may not be language proper as instruction to jury.

4. Criminal law ☞763, 764(23)—In prosecution resulting in conviction of assault with deadly weapon, instruction on self-defense plea, that drawing of weapon is generally evidence to use it, held properly refused as instruction on facts.

In prosecution resulting in conviction of assault with deadly weapon, where accused pleaded self-defense, instruction that drawing of weapon is generally evidence of intention to use it held properly refused as being instruction upon facts.

5. Homicide ☞300(3).

Self-defense instruction in prosecution for assault with intent to murder, resulting in conviction of assault with deadly weapon, held proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Riley Adams was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. Harold McAlpine, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was charged with the offense of assault with intent to commit murder, and convicted of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, and appeals to this court from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict finding him guilty as stated.

[1, 2] The transcript shows that the defendant and the complaining witness were brothers; that on or about the 17th day of January, 1925, the defendant and his brother, after securing a supply of wine, repaired to the home of the brother of the defendant, and while there consumed a considerable quantity of the wine theretofore procured; that both the defendant and his brother became intoxicated; that while in such condition an altercation arose between them concerning former family differences; that the brother of the defendant, while seated upon a bed, used some opprobrious language toward the defendant, and, as claimed by the defendant, made threats against his life and reached for a gun; that the defendant seized a gun and hit his brother over the head, rendering him more or less unconscious, and causing the blood to stream from the wound inflicted by the blow; that thereafter, the defendant gathered up all the rifles in the house of his brother, of which there appear to have been several, took them outside of the house in which they had the altercation referred to, and threw the guns away; that defendant examined his brother to ascertain whether he had inflicted a fatal wound, took his departure, and on his way from his brother's residence stated to a witness that he and his brother had had a little trouble, "I hit him over the head, laid him out," and "what I hate about it is, my dog is over there, and I don't like to go back after him," and further, "he was lying on the bed, blood running out of his head, and, if I didn't kill him, I probably knocked some sense into him." Without going over the testimony in detail, it is enough to say that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict of the jury of assault with a deadly weapon. On the part of the defendant it is claimed that his act was in necessary self-defense, but the finding of the jury upon this question by the verdict of the jury upon the evidence which shows the character of the trouble between the brothers and the assault by the defendant is binding upon this court.

[3, 4] The principal objection urged by the appellant is the refusal of the trial court to give an instruction to the jury couched in the following language:

"I instruct you that the drawing of a weapon is generally evidence of an intention to use it. Though the drawing itself is evidence of the intent, yet that evidence may be rebutted when the act is accompanied with a declaration, or circumstances, showing no intention to use it. But when the party draws the weapon, although he does not directly point it at the other, but holds it in such a position as enables him to use it before the other party could defend himself, at the same time declaring his intention to use it against the other, the jury are fully warranted in finding that such was his intention."

In support of this proffered instruction the appellant cites the case of People v. McMakin, 8 Cal. 548, where it appears that this identical language is used in the opinion of the court in deciding the questions there presented. In that case, the assault consisted of drawing a revolver and holding it in such a position that it could be readily used, though, if discharged in the position in which it was held, the bullet would strike the ground before reaching the person assaulted. In considering the testimony in that case, the character of the assault, and the declarations made by the person charged with the assault, the court in its opinion used the language which was offered as a proposed instruction in this case. It will be observed, upon an examination of the case of People v. McMakin, supra, that the proposed instruction in this case was not given in that case, that the language used by the court in the McMakin Case was simply a statement of the reasons why the judgment should be upheld, and was not intended as a statement of the law proper to be given to a jury. The first sentence of the proposed instruction is objectionable, in that it practically would amount to an instruction upon the facts, and then, when it comes to dealing with the question of intent, while sufficiently clear to be understood by one conversant with legal principles, would be practically meaningless when addressed to a jury. It may be stated that generally, while the language used in an opinion of the court deciding a case may properly state the law applicable thereto, it, by no means, in all cases, constitutes language proper to be addressed to a jury in the form of an instruction. This, we think, is true of the language of the court used in deciding the McMakin Case.

[5] An examination of the transcript shows that the court properly instructed the jury on the law concerning self-defense, and, among other instructions, gave the following, which distinctly refers to the acts of the assaulted party as constituting justification for the defendant's acts and properly presented to the jury the question of self-defense. The instruction referred to is as follows:

"I instruct you that should you find from the evidence in this case that the person alleged to have been assaulted herein conducted himself in such a fashion just prior to the alleged assault of the defendant upon such person that the life of the said defendant was endangered by such conduct or that the defendant had such fear as a reasonable man might, under such circumstances, have had, that great bodily harm or death might result to him, and that the use of the deadly weapon was for such reason necessary, that you would also be warranted in finding, and should, under the law so find, that the use by the defendant of such deadly weapon was justified by him, and your verdict in such case should be one of 'not guilty' of the offense as charged in the information or of the offense of assault with a deadly weapon."

There being no other question tendered upon this appeal, it follows that the order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial and the judgment herein are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

=====

76 Cal. App. 162

In re THOMSON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 5416.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 5, 1926. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 909(4)—Probate court will be assumed to have properly denied motion to require allowance of claim against estate, where record showed no evidence supporting ground on which it was based.

Where creditor of deceased obtained default judgment after his death, appellate court will assume that probate court properly denied creditor's motion to require administratrix to allow claim thereon, based on ground that rejection was arbitrary, where record did not show any evidence in support of such ground.

2. Courts $\S$ 202(1).

Probate proceedings are special and must be strictly followed.

3. Executors and administrators $\S$ 238—Motion to require allowance of claim, not complying with statute held properly denied (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1498).

Motion to require allowance of claim against estate of deceased held properly denied, since such proceeding is not provided for in Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1498, which provides complete method of action where such claim is rejected.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; George E. Samuels, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of Edgar R. Thomson, sometimes known as Edgar R. Thompson, deceased. From an order denying the motion of Thomas B. Dozier, as administrator with the will annexed of Leonard Franklin Dozier, deceased, to require Gertrude McNeil, as administratrix of Edgar

R. Thomson, sometimes known as Edgar R. Thompson, deceased, to allow a claim against such estate, he appeals. Affirmed.

Dozier, Kimball & Dozier, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Archibald B. Tinning, of Martinez, and Stanley R. Sterne, of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The petitioner appeals from an order denying his motion to require the respondent, as administratrix of the estate of Edgar R. Thomson, to allow and pay petitioner's claim against said estate. The appeal is presented on two typewritten documents entitled, respectively, "Clerk's Transcript on Appeal" and "Reporter's Transcript." No bill of exceptions is found in the record, and the appellant has failed to print in his opening brief or at all the moving papers or any evidence taken at the hearing of the motion. The document entitled "Reporter's Transcript" consists entirely of statements of counsel and argument in favor of and against the motion.

From this discussion we learn that the petitioner commenced two certain actions for the foreclosure of separate mortgages and served the decedent, Thomson, with process as a defendant therein. On May 11, 1923, Thomson died, and on June 6, 1924, respondent herein was appointed administratrix of his estate. In January, 1925, without substituting administratrix or taking any other proceedings, and without having taken the default of decedent during his lifetime, the appellant herein caused the default of decedent to be entered in the foreclosure suits. He thereafter took judgment against the decedent in each suit, and then presented to the administratrix of this estate his claim for the deficiency, amounting to $7,094.22 and interest. This claim was rejected by the administratrix in due course. Thereupon this appellant commenced an action in the superior court upon the rejected claim, and, so far as we are informed, that action is still pending.

[1] The appellant's motion to require the administratrix to approve the claim was based upon the ground that the rejection was arbitrary. So far as appears from the record before us, no evidence was offered in support of the ground specified. On the record, therefore, we must assume that the probate court properly denied the motion.

[2, 3] Furthermore, we find no authority in the statutes for a motion of this nature. Probate proceedings are special, and must be strictly followed. Section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a complete method of action when a claim is rejected by the representative of an estate in probate, and no provision is made therein for a proceeding of this kind.

The only authority cited by appellant in justification of his motion is Estate of Page, 50 Cal. 40. The facts of that case are different from those of the case at bar. There a verdict had been returned against the decedent in his lifetime; while a motion for a new trial was pending, the defendant died. His executors were substituted, and their motion for a new trial was denied. Judgment was thereupon entered against the executors. That judgment came within the provisions of section 1504 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which read (enactment of 1872 in effect at the time of the decision):

The effect of "a judgment rendered against an executor * * * only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the executor or administrator and the probate judge."

In the case at bar, the judgments were not rendered against the administratrix but against the decedent after his death and without a substitution. It seems idle for appellant to argue that, because the decedent had not appeared in the foreclosure actions during his lifetime his default might have been taken and judgment might have been entered against him in his lifetime.

Appellant has not directed our attention to any statutory authority for the proceeding he has adopted, and the validity of the judgments which are in issue in the civil action which he has instituted against the administratrix is not, therefore, a proper matter for consideration on this appeal.

Order affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 40

STORKE v. CITY OF SANTA BARBARA et al. (Civ. 5317.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 29, 1925. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1926.)

1. Municipal corporations ⇨56—Cities organized under municipal affairs amendment to Constitution are entirely beyond interference of general laws (Const. art. 11, § 8, as amended in 1914).

Under Const. art. 11, § 8, as amended in 1914, relative to municipal charters, cities organized thereunder are entirely beyond the interference of general laws of state in regard to the administration of municipal affairs.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨79—Charter provisions relating to purely municipal affairs contravene general law (Const. art. 11, § 6).

Under Const. art. 11, § 6, charter provisions relating to purely municipal affairs contravene the general law pertaining to the same subject.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨79—Scheme of local taxation declared by municipality's charter is superior to general law (Const. art. 11, § 6).

Municipal taxation is a municipal affair, and, under Const. art. 11, § 6, a scheme of local taxation declared by municipality in charter is superior to the general law of the state on that subject.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨971(2)—Charter adopted under amendment to Constitution held not to require ordinance in order to authorize scientific appraisal of property by expert for taxation (St. 1917, p. 1824; Const. art. 11, § 8, as amended in 1914).

As Santa Barbara City Charter, adopted pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8, as amended in 1914, required a scientific appraisal of property every five years, ordinance authorizing such appraisal was unnecessary to render general laws inapplicable, and contract with expert was not invalid for lack of such ordinance.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨971(2)—Passage of ordinance not required by charter itself to carry out provisions for scientific appraisal of property for taxation (St. 1917, p. 1824).

Under Santa Barbara City Charter, held, that passage of ordinance was not required to carry out its provisions relative to the scientific appraisal of property for taxation; such provisions being self-executing, and the duty of fixing the terms of employment of an expert being an administrative one.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨990—Allowance of exorbitant sums for appraisal of taxable property constructive fraud, for which taxpayer has ample remedy.

Allowance by city council of an unconscionable sum as compensation of expert for making appraisal of property as required by city charter for purposes of taxation would amount to a constructive fraud against the city, for which ample remedy would lie at the instance of taxpayer.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨971(2)—Contract for employment of appraisal expert prepared by city attorney, signed pursuant to motion of council and approved at regular meeting, became contract of city.

Where contract for employment of expert to appraise taxable property was prepared by city attorney and signed pursuant to motion adopted by city council, and signed contract at regular meeting of council was approved and ratified by resolution, such contract became contract of the city.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨971(2)—Employment of expert appraiser held not to create new office or make appraiser assistant or deputy assessor requiring employment by ordinance.

Where charter of city provided for a scientific appraisal of property by a recognized expert every five years, the employment of such expert did not create a new office or make appraiser an assistant or deputy assessor so as to require employment to be by ordinance.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨1001—Verification of claims of tax appraiser and presentation to and approval by council not necessary under charter (St. 1917, p. 1824).

Verification of claims of tax expert employed to appraise property pursuant to Santa Barbara City Charter held not required to be verified or presented to or approved by the city council in view of charter, where claims were paid without suit.

10. Municipal corporations ⇨971(2)—Contract requiring tax appraiser to report work done each week held not to violate charter as to time when appraisal should be made (St. 1917, p. 1824).

Provisions of Santa Barbara City Charter that scientific appraisal for purposes of taxation should be made as of specified date was not violated by contract with appraisal expert, providing that appraiser should present report of all work done each week, and, while provisions of charter would be read into contract, fact that certain portions of appraisal may have been prematurely made and filed did not affect power of council to enter into the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by C. A. Storke against the City of Santa Barbara and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Bingham, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

W. P. Butcher, City Atty., of Santa Barbara, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This action was brought by plaintiff as a resident and taxpayer of the City of Santa Barbara to annul a certain contract purporting to have been entered into on behalf of said city with Norman E. McFadden, authorizing the latter to make "a scientific appraisal" of the real property within said city for the purposes of municipal assessment; also to require the said McFadden to repay to the city treasurer certain sums of money received by him as compensation for part of work performed pursuant to said contract, and to enjoin any further payment from being made thereunder. A demurrer to the complaint upon the grounds of insufficiency of facts, misjoinder of parties defendant, and uncertainty was sustained by the court with leave to amend, and, plaintiff having declined to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

The city of Santa Barbara was organized under a freeholders' charter, adopted and ratified, pursuant to the amendment of 1914 to section 8 of article 11 of the state Constitution. Stats. 1917, p. 1824. Said charter became effective on the first Monday in January, 1918, and under it the city was being governed when the transaction in question took place. The charter provides, among other things, that all powers of the city, except as otherwise provided in the charter, are vested in a council of five members. Charter, § 3. Every two years the council elects from its membership a presiding officer to be known as the mayor. Charter, § 9. Further provision is made for the appointment of a manager who shall be the administrative head of the municipal government and whose general and specific powers and duties are defined by said charter. Charter, § 37. An assessor is also appointed by the council. Subdivision (a), § 33. The charter declares a scheme of local taxation under the title, "Assessment of Taxes," which expressly or by similarity of provisions follows, in a general way, the procedure prescribed by the general law for the collection of county taxes. It departs, however, from the general law in some features, the most important of which is set forth in section 82 of said charter, reading as follows:

"In preparation for the first assessment of taxes after this charter takes effect, and at intervals of five years thereafter, the council shall, at or before its first meeting in February, provide for a scientific appraisal by a recognized expert, of all real property in the city, provided, that if such appraisal shall have been made before this charter takes effect, a new appraisal shall be required only at intervals of five years after such previous appraisal. This appraisal shall be made as if at 12 m. on the first Monday in March, and shall be used by the assessor as the basis for the assessment for that year, and he shall revise his valuation in each intervening year.

* * *

It is alleged in the complaint that—

At a meeting of the council, held on December 12, 1922, an oral motion was regularly adopted by the council instructing the city attorney "to prepare a contract to be executed by the city manager on behalf of the city with Norman E. McFadden as scientific appraiser as provided in section 82 of the charter, and that the compensation be fixed at the sum of $5,000 for the completed work, leaving the contracting party to bear all and every of his own expenses. That the contract provide for a bond on the part of Mr. McFadden in the sum of $5,000 for the faithful performance of his contract."

The minutes of that meeting also show the following entry:

"The council informally agreed that suggestion be made to the city attorney to incorporate in the contract provision that the $5,000 be paid in weekly payments in advance and in proportion to the amount of work performed, also that the necessary maps shall be provided by the city."

Following the adoption of said motion, a written contract was prepared, wherein the said Norman E. McFadden was named as party of the first part, and the city of Santa Barbara was named as the party of the second part, the terms of which contract, after reciting the substance of the charter provision requiring said appraisal to be made, provided:

"It is hereby agreed that the party of the first part, shall and does hereby promise to employ all the necessary assistance at his own cost and expense and make a scientific appraisal of all the real property of said city for the fiscal year of 1923-1924. That he will commence the execution of such work within ten (10) days from the date hereof, and prosecute the same faithfully and diligently from day to day until the whole thereof shall have been carefully completed, and a full and complete scientific report made thereof to the said party of the second part on or before the 15th day of March, 1923. That the party of the second part shall furnish all such maps as may be necessary for the proper prosecution of said work free of charge to the party of the first part. And in consideration of such work being completed within said time, said party of the second part promises to pay him, said party of the first part, five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars, in the following manner, to wit: At the end of each week the party of the first part shall present a full report on all such work done by him for that week to the city assessor of the party of the second part, and if such work shall be satisfactory to the said assessor, he, said assessor, shall thereupon accept the same, and when so accepted shall report the same to the manager of said city, who shall cause a warrant to be drawn upon the treasurer of said city in favor of the party of the first part for 90 per cent. of all the work so done up to that time in the ratio such work shall bear to the entire work to be so done, and when the entire work is completed a warrant shall be drawn on the treasurer for whatever sum may then remain due and unpaid to the party of the first part, it being understood, however, and expressly agreed that such work shall not be deemed complete until the same shall be presented to said council and by it accepted by an order spread upon its minutes."

On December 14, 1922, said contract was signed by the said McFadden and by the city manager for the city. Subsequently, and on December 21, 1922, said contract was placed before the council at a regular meeting thereof, and the following resolution was duly passed:

"Resolution No. 366 (new series). A resolution providing for and authorizing the appraisal by a recognized scientific expert of the real property in the city of Santa Barbara and confirming all acts of the council of said city relative to such matter. Whereas the council of the city of Santa Barbara did, on the 12th day of December, 1922, at a special adjourned meeting called for that purpose, provide for a scientific appraisal of all the real property within said city by a recognized expert, and did authorize the manager of said city to enter into a contract with Norman E. McFadden as such appraiser, and whereas said manager has executed with said Norman E. McFadden a contract by the terms of which he the said Norman E. McFadden is to make such appraisal as such expert, now, therefore, be it resolved by said council that all the acts done at said special adjourned meeting by said council relating to said matter of assessment be, and the same are hereby ratified and affirmed, and the said Norman E. McFadden is hereby employed as such appraiser for said purpose, and said contract is hereby approved, and the said Norman E. McFadden is hereby declared to be the legally appointed expert appraiser for said purpose, and is authorized to make such appraisal as is provided by and in conformity with section 82 of the charter of said city."

The complaint further alleges that on January 10, 1923, McFadden entered upon the discharge of his duties as such appraiser, and on January 16, 1923, having completed part of the appraisal, presented a claim against the city therefor in the sum of $288, which claim particularized the amount of work performed, was approved by "W. W. Smith" (whose official capacity does not appear from the record), and by two members of the finance committee of said council, after which it was "approved for payment" by the city manager. A warrant was then drawn by the auditor for payment of said claim, and the warrant was paid by the treasurer. Subsequently, and on February 13, 1923, McFadden completed another portion of said appraisal and presented a claim therefor in the sum of $1,008. Said claim was substantially in the same form as the first one and was likewise approved (except by "W. W. Smith"), allowed and paid. On March 8, 1923, this action was commenced, and no further payments were thereafter made.

[1-4] The principal question presented by this appeal is whether the transaction involving the execution of said McFadden contract is legal, in view of the fact that it was not grounded upon the passage of an ordinance. Appellant's contention that said transaction is a nullity is based, first, upon the theory that the city of Santa Babara, in the administration of its municipal affairs, is controlled by general laws until those general laws are contravened by municipal ordinances; that, inasmuch as the general law makes no provision for a scientific appraisal by an expert appraiser for the purposes of assessment, such general law controls until the legislative body of the city has enacted an ordinance to supersede it. This the city of Santa Barbara admittedly has not done. It will be found, however, that the cases cited by appellant on page 15 of his opening brief, in support of his claim as to the application of general laws, relate only to cities organized under the 1896 amendment to section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution. City of Long Beach v. Lisenby, 175 Cal. 575, p. 582, 166 P. 333. As to cities like Santa Barbara, which have been organized under, or which have by charter amendment brought themselves within the constitutional amendment of 1914, a different rule is held to prevail. That amendment, according to the cases hereinafter cited, declares an entirely new scheme for the granting of municipal charters, the effect of which places cities organized thereunder entirely beyond the interference of general laws in regard to the administration of municipal affairs. A clear and comprehensive statement of the scope of that amendment, and the effect of the decisions which have since been rendered construing it, is set forth in an opinion written by Mr. Justice St. Sure, in the case of Bank v. Bell, 62 Cal. App. 320, 217 P. 538 (18 Cal. Jur. 783). It is as follows:

"To recapitulate, it appears that, since the 'municipal affairs' amendments of 1914 to the Constitution, for such cities as have brought themselves within the condition of the amendments, the law is firmly established as follows: The powers of the cities are not derived from the Legislature, but from a freeholders' charter directly provided for by the Constitution. The city in its charter may make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters, and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to and controlled by the general laws. The powers of the city are all-embracing, restricted, and limited by the charter only and free from the interference of the state by general laws. The result is that the city has become independent of general laws upon municipal affairs. Upon such affairs a general law is of no force. If its charter gives it powers concerning them, it has those powers. If its charter is silent as to any such power, no general law can confer it. As to municipal affairs the charter, instead of being a grant of power, is, in effect, a limitation of powers. The city can exercise the power if the charter does not prohibit it."

The authorities upon which that statement of the law is founded are cited and briefly discussed in the opinion, among them being Civic Center Ass'n v. Railroad Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 P. 351; Cole v. City of Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 617, 182 P. 436; Morgan v. City of Los Angeles, 182 Cal. 301, 187 P. 1050; Matter of Nowak, 184 Cal. 701, 195 P. 402; Matter of Galusha, 184 Cal. 697, 195 P. 406; Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, 188 Cal. 307, 205 P. 125. See, also, 18 Cal. Jur. 784. It would therefore seem that appellant's theory of the application of general laws to municipal affairs of the city of Santa Barbara cannot be sustained. But, aside from that question, it has been the established rule in this state ever since the adoption of the constitutional amendment of 1896 to said section 6 of article 11 that a charter provision relating to a purely municipal affair contravenes the general law pertaining to the same subject; and it has been furthermore specifically held that the matter of municipal taxation is a municipal affair, and, accordingly, that a scheme of local taxation declared by a municipality is superior to the general law of the state on that subject. Keyes v. San Francisco, 177 Cal. 313, 173 P. 475; Ex parte Braun, 141 Cal. 204, 74 P. 780. The city of Santa Barbara has declared in its charter a scheme of local taxation, in the adoption of which part of the general law has been expressly incorporated. Charter, § 89. But it has departed from the procedure of the general law in requiring a scientific appraisal to be made of the real property within the city by a recognized expert, at intervals of every five years. It will therefore be seen that the charter itself, which emanates from the Constitution, has contravened the general law upon the subject of said appraisal, thereby making it unnecessary, in any event, for the legislative body of the city to take further action by ordinance to accomplish that purpose.

[5] The next question arising is whether, as appellant contends, the charter itself requires the passage of an ordinance in order to carry into effect the provisions of said section 82 relating to the matter of scientific appraisal. As to this point appellant relies on section 6 of the charter, which reads:

"Except as otherwise provided, by this charter or by the Constitution of the state, the council may, by ordinance, prescribe the manner in which any power of the city shall be exercised."

We are of the opinion that said section 6, reasonably construed, cannot be held to apply to the matter at issue, for the reason that said section 82 is obviously self-executing and by its own terms prescribes the manner in which the power of the city in that respect shall be exercised, namely, by providing that said scientific appraisal shall be made by a recognized expert. The duty of fixing the terms of the employment of such recognized expert is, we believe, an administrative one, which, like many other administrative duties, may be carried out by the legislative body without the aid of an ordinance. The question of what constitutes an administrative duty is dealt with in the case of Earl v. Bowen, 146 Cal. 754, 81 P. 133, and, upon the reasoning of that case generally and the conclusions reached therein, we think that the action of the council in the case before us, in proceeding by contract, may be properly sustained. Our conclusion that the passage of an ordinance is not essential is further supported, we think, by the reading of said section 82 in its entirety. The second paragraph thereof provides as follows:

"Whenever such expert appraisal is to be made, the council may, with the consent of the board of supervisors, provide by resolution for a joint appraisal * * * in which case the resolution shall authorize the payment by the city of not more than one-half of the total expense of such joint appraisal." (Italics ours.)

Apparently there can be no good reason assigned, at least none has been brought to our attention, why the framers of the charter should have intended to make a distinction between a joint and a sole appraisal, and allow a joint appraisal to be obtained pursuant to the adoption of a resolution, but require that a sole appraisal be obtained only by means of the passage of an ordinance. The possible result of the passage of such an ordinance should also be taken into consideration in determining whether it was intended by the charter framers that said charter provision should remain inoperative in the absence of the passage of an ordinance. In this regard the charter reveals that all ordinances passed by the city, excepting those specified in section 114 thereof—which excepted classes do not include an ordinance of the character of the one under discussion—are subject to referendum. Charter, §§ 111, 112, 113. If, therefore, as appellant contends, the passage of an ordinance be essential to effectuate the obtaining of such scientific appraisal, and such ordinance does not, as appellant further contends, become operative for a period of 30 days, the existence of dissatisfaction on the part of some of the electors over the question of the choice of the appraiser or in reference to the terms of his employment would allow a referendum to imperil and possibly defeat one of the mandatory requirements of the taxing system of the city. We are not prepared to say that such a situation was contemplated or intended. For the foregoing reasons we believe that the passage of an ordinance is not essential to the carrying into effect that portion of section 82 in question.

[6] Appellant asserts that if the council be allowed to proceed in this matter by contract it will open the door to abuse in that the council might allow exorbitant sums to be paid for the work of appraisal. Answering this proposition, it may be said that any attempt to fix the compensation for such work at an unconscionable sum would at least amount to a constructive fraud against the city, for which ample remedy would lie at the instance of a taxpayer. Fraud is not made one of the elements of this suit.

[7] In regard to the legality of the execution of the contract, the facts pleaded in the complaint show that the contract was prepared by the city attorney and signed pursuant to a motion adopted by the council to that effect. Later, the signed contract was laid before the council for consideration at a regular meeting thereof, and by resolution, duly passed on December 21, 1922, was approved and ratified. It thereby became the contract of the city. The matter of obtaining a scientific appraisal is, as already pointed out, one of the essential preliminaries to be followed in complying with the mandatory provisions of the taxation scheme of the city, and therefore relates directly to the matter of the tax levy. Under section 29 of said charter a resolution "relating to * * * the annual tax levy" becomes operative immediately.

[8] Appellant further contends that the employment of an expert appraiser, in effect, amounts to the creation of a new office, or divides the duties of the assessor or makes of the appraiser a deputy or assistant assessor, and that, consequently, under section 35 of the charter, his employment must be accomplished by ordinance. We find no merit in the point. His employment is authorized by the charter itself, and the duties he is required to perform are entirely independent of those of the assessor.

[9, 10] The further point is made that the contract is illegal in that it did not provide, in accordance with the charter provision to that effect, that the scientific appraisal should be made "as if at 12 m. on the first Monday in March." We think the terms of the contract do not violate the charter provision. The contract provides merely that at the end of each week said appraiser "shall present a full report of all such work done by him for that week to the city assessor" (italics ours), and, if such work be satisfactory and accepted, he shall, subject to approval of the city manager, be entitled to receive 90 per cent. of the compensation due for the work done up to that time. The requirement of the charter, that said appraisal shall be made "as if at 12 m. on the first Monday in March," must, of course, be read into and considered a part of the contract, but the fact that certain portions of said appraisal may have been prematurely made and filed does not affect the power of the council to enter into the contract. It relates merely to the performance of the contract. It is also alleged in the complaint that the McFadden claims were not verified and were not presented to or approved by the council. Appellant has not cited us to any charter provision or other law of the city requiring those things to be done, and in view of section 41 of said charter, which requires only that "all bills against the city must be approved by the heads of departments, and * * * countersigned by the manager, before presentation to the auditor," it would seem that verification of claims and presentation of them to the council are not necessary. Section 124 of said charter provides that "no suit shall be brought upon any claim for moneys or damages against the city until the demand for the same has been presented to the council and rejected in whole or in part"; but the McFadden claims were paid without suit.

It is our opinion that the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

78 Cal. App. 223

BUTLER v. ROBINSON. (Civ. 4534.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 15, 1926.)

1. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 106(5)—Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 323(1)—Motion to require plaintiff to set forth particulars of claim for services is not a demurrer, but is within statute as to bill of particulars, and judgment by default is proper after removal of motion for want of appearance (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 454, 585, subd. 1).

Defendant's motion to require plaintiff to set forth particulars of claim for services rendered defendant's testatrix is not equivalent to demurrer, but comes under Code Civ. Proc. § 454, providing for demand and delivery of particulars in suit upon an account; and hence, on removal of motion from calendar for want of appearance, clerk properly entered judgment by default under section 585, subd. 1, granting such power where there is no answer or demurrer.

2. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 192(2).

Objection to complaint, based on grounds of uncertainty, must be made by demurrer.

3. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 139.

Motion to set aside default and vacate judgment is addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

4. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 163—Failure to demand bill of particulars before motion therefor may be considered by trial court in passing on motion to vacate default (Code Civ. Proc. § 454).

Failure to first make demand on plaintiff for particulars of his claim, before moving to compel him to render a bill of particulars, under Code Civ. Proc. § 454, is a fact which trial court may consider in passing on motion to vacate default judgment.

5. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 85(4)—If motion to have plaintiff furnish details of claim is regarded as demand for bill of particulars, it does not extend time for answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 454).

If defendant's motion to require plaintiff to set forth details of claim for services rendered defendant's testatrix is regarded as a demand for bill of particulars under Code Civ. Proc. § 454, it does not have effect of extending time for answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Lauretta Butler against J. W. Robinson, as executor of the estate of Ida Thomas, deceased. From an order denying motion to vacate judgment entered by default, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James M. Robinson and James E. Fenton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff brought an action in the superior court of this state against the appellant as executor of the estate of Ida Thomas, deceased, in which it was alleged, among other things, that "during the lifetime of the deceased the plaintiff rendered personal service to her and furnished her with board, room to live in, and with divers and sundry articles of medicine, all of the reasonable value of $2,035.20," and "that during the lifetime of Ida Thomas, deceased, became indebted to the plaintiff for her care, room rent, and attention," in said sum. The complaint also contained an allegation that the deceased had promised to pay for the said board, room, and personal services. Thereafter the executor served and filed a motion:

"To require the plaintiff to set forth in her complaint the various dates when she claims that she rendered the personal service to the deceased during her lifetime, or that she furnish a bill of particulars of each and such items, or that she file an amended complaint, and attach to the complaint, by way of exhibit, a true copy of the claims which it is alleged therein she caused to be filed with the said executor, and that if more than one claim was filed with the executor, to furnish a true copy of each thereof, and to file in the clerk's office true copies of the said cause thereof as a part of the said complaint."

"2. To set forth in said complaint the facts of the promise on the part of the deceased to pay for her board and other personal service, which is mentioned in paragraph 3 of the complaint, and to state whether or not the said promise to pay was oral or in writing, and to give fully the terms thereof, and the date when made, and to whom made, so that this defendant may tender an issue with reference thereto, in his answer to the complaint."

The hearing of this motion was regularly placed on the calendar of the court for February 21, 1923. At that time the attorneys did not appear, and the motion was removed from the calendar. Thereafter the clerk, on request of the attorney for the plaintiff, entered a default upon which judgment was thereafter rendered as prayed for in the complaint. Soon after this the executor made a motion to vacate the judgment and set aside the default. This motion was based upon the files and records in the case, and affidavits setting forth the matters heretofore stated, and other facts. After oral argument of the motion it was denied, and from the order of denial this appeal is taken.

In support of the appeal it is urged that it was error for the trial court to enter an order of default and judgment thereon, and also that the refusal of the court to vacate the judgment was error.

[1, 2] In discussing the first proposition, it is said that the motion which we have quoted was "in the nature of a special demurrer," and that because of such an appearance by the executor the trial court lacked jurisdiction to proceed without notice to the executor's attorney. It is obvious that the motion above quoted is one under section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section merely provides for demand and delivery of particulars in a suit upon an account. Such a motion is not the equivalent of a demurrer. The authority of the clerk in entering the default is given in section 585, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This provision grants such authority to the clerk where no answer or demurrer has been filed within the time specified in the summons, or such further time as may have been granted. This motion is in no sense a demurrer. In view of the wording of the last paragraph, it might be argued that it should be construed as a motion to make more definite and certain, but any objection to the complaint based upon the ground of uncertainty must be made by demurrer. McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 84, 85, 55 P. 761.

[3, 4] In so far as the action of the lower court is concerned in denying the motion to set aside the default and vacate the judgment, that is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. Jones v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 236 P. 336; Eberhart v. Salazar (Cal. App.) 235 P. 86. Both points are decided in the case of Steineck v. Coleman (Cal. App.) 236 P. 962, in which a motion was made to relieve against a default for failure to answer where it appeared from an affidavit that the defendant had served on the plaintiff a demand for a bill of particulars, and believed that as a matter of law his time to answer was extended by reason of this demand. It was there held that the action of the trial court in denying the motion to set aside the default and vacate the judgment was not subject to review on appeal, and also that the serving of a demand for a bill of particulars did not itself extend the time for answering. There is nothing in the affidavits on file in the instant case which materially distinguishes it from the situation there shown to have existed. Aside from the above authority, it may be said that the defendant's first motion was not of such a character as to raise an issue of any kind; it merely asked for certain information for the benefit of the appellant in preparing his pleading. Section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides adequate means for supplying such information in cases of the character. The appellant did not even follow the provisions of this section, for he did not first make demand upon the plaintiff, but, so far as the record shows, without any such demand, moved the court for the remedy provided in the last sentence of section 454, which reads as follows:

"The court or judge thereof may order a further account when the one delivered is too general, or is defective in any particular."

[5] However, it is not necessary to decide whether failure to make demand before bringing the matter to the attention of the court upon motion would be a ground for denial of the motion. It is certainly a fact which the trial court had a right to consider in passing upon the motion to vacate. If the appellant's first motion is to be regarded as a demand under section 454, then, as we have said, the case of Steineck v. Coleman, supra, holds adversely to appellant's contention as to it having effected an extension of time in which to file an answer.

The trial court's action in denying the motion to vacate the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

198 Cal. 234

JOHNSON et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 11732.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1926. Rehearing Denied March 25, 1926.)

Master and servant — 347—Statute classifying member of partnership receiving wages as "employee," within Compensation Act, held valid (Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 6-31, 8(b), 69 [St. 1917, pp. 834-860] Const. art. 20, § 21).

St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (b) classing working member of partnership receiving wages irrespective of profits as an employee within Compensation Act, §§ 6-31 held proper classification and not unconstitutional in view of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 69, and Const. art. 20, § 21.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé.]

In Bank.

Certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Gerda E. Johnson and others, minors, by Gerda E. Johnson their guardian, ad litem, for compensation for the death of Axel Johnson, opposed by E. B. and A. L. Stone Company. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission refusing compensation the claimants bring certiorari. Order set aside.

Theo. M. Monell, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

H. C. Kelsey, of San Francisco, for respondent E. B. & A. L. Stone Co.

WASTE, C. J. Petitioners, who are the surviving wife and children of Axel Johnson, filed with the Industrial Accident Commission an application for the adjustment of a claim for workmen's compensation asserted to be due on account of the death of Johnson, alleged to have been caused during the course of his employment as a member of a copartnership consisting of the E. B. & A. L. Stone Company, one of the respondents herein, and said deceased. Claim for compensation was made under the definition of the term "employee" found in section 8 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 835), which provides that "a working member of a partnership receiving wages irrespective of profits from such partnership shall be deemed an employee within the meaning of this section." The respondent commission denied an award and dismissed the application, upon the ground that the quoted language was within the condemnation of previous decisions of this court holding other portions of the same section unconstitutional. This proceeding in certiorari was thereupon instituted to test the correctness of the commission's ruling.

There is no dispute as to the facts involved. It is admitted that the decedent, Johnson, was a working partner with the respondent stone company under a contract providing that Johnson was to furnish a towboat owned by him, and to operate a lighter of the respondent stone company, and to pump sand and gravel, which was to be sold, the proceeds, after deducting certain expenses provided for in the contract, to be equally divided between the stone company and Johnson. The contract further provided that Johnson was to receive a salary of $150 a month, which amount was one of the items of expenses allowed in the contract, which were to be equally divided. It is conceded that the injuries sustained, and proximately causing the death of the decedent, were sustained by him while acting as such partner. The sole question presented to this court is the constitutionality of that portion of section 8 (b), supra, which classes a working member of a partnership receiving wages, irrespective of profits, as an employee, and brings him within the scope of the application of the Compensation Act, which was not added to the statute until 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 835).

Our Workmen's Compensation Act, like those of most of the states, followed closely the English acts of Parliament upon the same subject-matter. The English courts have uniformly held against compensation being awarded working members of partnerships. On the authority of one of the leading English cases, Ellis v. Ellis Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 324, 7 W. C. C. 97, this court decided that the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, prior to the amendment of 1917, were not applicable when the person injured was in the position of both employer and employee, and held that one partner could not recover compensation from the partnership of which he was a member for injuries received while performing services for it. Cooper v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 171 P. 684, 177 Cal. 685, 689. The situation has, however, been materially changed by the amendment of 1917, which makes a working partner, receiving wages from the partnership, irrespective of profits, an "employee," within the definition of that term as used in sections 6 to 31 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Almost the precise question presented by this proceeding in review was considered in Gallie v. Detroit Auto Accessory Co., 195 N. W. 667, 224 Mich. 703. The court was there required to pass upon an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Law of Michigan (Pub. Acts 1921, No. 173), providing that members of partnerships receiving wages, irrespective of profits, came under the application of the act, which defined an "employee" to mean "every person in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied." The court said:

"It is somewhat anomalous to say that a partner may, as a member of a firm, be an employer and as such come within the compensation law, and then if he works for the firm for wages be also an employee within the meaning of the act; but the compensation law so provides, and is evidently based on the holdings that a partner may, by special agreement, be entitled to wages for services rendered the firm, even though such compensation must be worked out in an accounting between the partners."

To the same effect is Ohio Drilling Co. v. State Industrial Comm., 207 P. 314, 86 Okl. 139, 25 A. L. R. 367, where the court said:

"We think that the construction of the Workmen's Compensation Act, that member of a partnership who works for the partnership, and who while so engaged is injured, is not an employee within the meaning of the act, is an exceedingly narrow construction of the act, where the sole reason therefor is that stated in the British case, supra [Ellis v. Ellis Co., supra], that a member of the partnership cannot place himself in the position of being a workman employed when he is one of the persons giving employment. * * * We see no good reason why the members of a partnership cannot jointly or severally perform the work or labor incident to the success of the joint undertaking and at the same time draw wages from the earnings of the partnership."

Respondents have cited two cases in which the opposite [English] rule has been followed: McMillen v. Industrial Comm., 13 Ohio App. 310, and Le Clear v. Smith, 202 N. Y. S. 514, 207 App. Div. 71. These were both decisions of an intermediate appellate court and do not state what we believe must be the rule under our own statute.

It has frequently been held that partners, by express contract, may agree that one partner receive compensation for his service. Nevills v. Moore Mng. Co., 67 P. 1054, 135 Cal. 561, 564; 20 Cal. Jur. 735. That being so, no good reason appears to us why the Legislature may not classify a working member of a partnership as an employee within the meaning of the Compensation Act. Nor does it appear to us that in so doing it thereby attempts to enforce a liability on the part of any person not an employer to compensate persons who do not sustain to him the relation of an employee—something it cannot do. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp'n v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 203 P. 95, 187 Cal. 615, 617. Section 21 of article 20 of the Constitution vests the Legislature "with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution, to create, and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, by appropriate legislation, and in that behalf to create and enforce a liability on the part of any or all persons to compensate any or all of their workmen for injury or disability, and their dependents for death incurred or sustained by the said workmen in the course of their employment." The Workmen's Compensation Act, and every part and section thereof, when interpreted by the court, must be liberally construed, "with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment." Workmen's Compensation Act, § 69. This court cannot hold that a working member of a partnership, receiving wages irrespective of profits from such partnership, shall not be deemed an employee within the meaning and scope of the act without doing violence to both the Constitution and the provisions of the act itself.

The more recent decisions of this court, relied on by respondents, are not in point. Some general language used in Flickenger v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 184 P. 851, 181 Cal. 425, 19 A. L. R. 1150, lends apparent support to their contention; but the court was there dealing with the question whether or not the Legislature could enlarge the meaning of the term "employee" by restricting the definition of what constitutes an "independent contractor," so as to bring the latter within the application of the Compensation Act. The other decision, Employers' Liability, etc., Corp'n v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, merely held that the commission had no jurisdiction to entertain an application or to make an award of compensation to a member of a partnership, where such partner was not an employee of the firm at the time of his injury, but an equal member performing, without wages, his part of the work and business, and to receive and receiving his only reward therefor out of an equal division of the profits.

We conclude, therefore, that at the time the decedent, Johnson, received the injuries resulting in his death, he was subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Consequently the respondent Industrial Accident Commission had jurisdiction of the application for adjustment of compensation filed by the petitioners herein. Its order dismissing the claim of the applicants, the petitioners here, is set aside, and the case is remanded for further proceedings before the commission in keeping with the views herein announced.

We concur: SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; RICHARDS, J.

198 Cal. 170

SEVIER v. RILEY, State Controller.
(S. F. 11808.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1926.)

1. Judges $\S$ 22(2) — Constitutional amendment, providing Legislature fix judges' salaries, repeals conflicting provision, gives Legislature plenary control and statute pursuant thereto is valid; "prescribed"; citing Words and Phrases, Second Series, "Prescribe" (Pol. Code, $\S$ 738b; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 11, 17).

Amendment to Const. art. 6, $\S$ 11, providing Legislature shall "prescribe" compensation of justices and judges of all courts of record, repealed conflicting article 6, $\S$ 17, and gives plenary control to Legislature of time, amount, and manner of compensation, subject to retained constitutional provision relative to prompt decision of submitted causes; and Pol. Code, $\S$ 738b, pursuant thereto, is valid (citing Words and Phrases, Second Series, "Prescribe").

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 18—Rule against repeal by implication is inapplicable, where constitutional amendment plainly conflicts with earlier provision.

Rule that repeal by implication is not favored does not apply when constitutional amendment is plain, inclusive, and manifestly in conflict with earlier provision.

In Bank.

Petition by Denver Sevier for writ of mandate directed to Ray L. Riley, as Controller of the State of California, to draw warrants for his salary as Judge of the Superior Court of Humboldt County. Writ granted.

Denver Sevier, of Eureka, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Charles A. Wetmore, Jr., of Marysville, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner herein in his capacity as judge of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Humboldt, applies for a writ of mandate to be directed against the respondent, Ray L. Riley, as Controller of the State of California, to approve the claim of the petitioner for the sum of $208.33 and to draw his warrant upon the state treasurer therefor; said claim being for the sum to which the petitioner as said superior judge alleges himself to be entitled to have paid him by the state as the portion of his judicial salary for the month of August, 1925, by virtue of the adoption by the Legislature of 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 979) adding a new section to the Political Code, numbered 738b and reading as follows:

"The annual salaries of the judges of the superior court of the state of California in and for the counties of Humboldt, Mendocino and Siskiyou shall be five thousand dollars; of the county of Lake shall be four thousand dollars; one-half of which shall be paid by the state, and the other half thereof by the county for which the judge is elected or appointed."

The petitioner has also made a similar demand for said increase in salary for the months of September and October, 1925, and has been met with a similar refusal.

The foregoing section is alleged by petitioner to have become effective on July 24, 1925. Prior to its adoption the salary of said petitioner as such superior judge was $4,000 a year, payable monthly, one-half by the county of Humboldt and one-half by the state of California.

Section 17 of article 6 of the Constitution, dealing with the salaries of judges, as it originally stood, provided that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court and the judges of the superior courts should not be increased or diminished after their election nor during the term for which they were elected; that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court should be paid by the state and the salary of each of the judges of the superior courts should be paid one-half by the state and one-half by the county for which he was elected. The section specifically provided that the annual salary for the first term of the judges of the Supreme Court elected under the Constitution should be $6,000, and the annual salaries of the judges of the superior courts, until changed by the Legislature, should be $3,000 in all counties except certain enumerated counties in which the judges should receive an annual salary of $4,000.

In 1904 this section of the Constitution was amended to provide that the justices of the Supreme Court and of the District Courts of Appeal and the judges of the superior courts "shall severally, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services such compensation as is or shall be provided by law, which shall not be increased or diminished after their election, nor during the term for which they shall have been elected." Stat. and Amendments 1905, p. XXXVIII.

In 1906 this section was again amended. The section as then amended reiterated the provision in the former enactment that the justices of the Supreme Court and of the District Courts of Appeal and the judges of the superior courts "shall severally, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive for their services such compensation as is or shall be provided by law," but omitted the provision in regard to the increasing or diminishing of salaries during the terms of offices of the justices of the Supreme Court, the judges of the District Courts of Appeal, and the judges of the superior courts as a whole. Said amendment, however, made specific provisions that the salaries of the judges of the superior court in all counties having but one judge, and in all counties in which the terms of the judges of the superior court expired at the same time should not thereafter be increased or diminished after their election nor during the term for which they should have been elected. It also specifically provided that the annual salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court after January 1, 1907, should be $8,000 per annum, and that of the judges of the District Courts of Appeal should be $7,000. Stat. and Amendments 1907, p. XXIX.

By this section the Constitution itself specifically provided the salaries payable to the justices of the Supreme Court and the justices of the District Courts of Appeal, and left the fixing of the salaries of the judges of the superior courts to the Legislature, subject to the one limitation that the salaries of judges of the superior court in all counties having but one judge, and in all counties in which the terms of the judges expire at the same time, should not be increased or diminished after their election nor during the term for which they were elected.

In 1924 at the November election the people of the state amended certain sections of the Constitution. Section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution was among the sections thus amended. This amendment, in addition to authorizing the establishment of municipal courts and other inferior courts, provides that "The compensation of the justices or judges of all courts of record, shall be fixed and the payment thereof prescribed by the Legislature." St. 1925, p. XXIV. In the meantime, and while these constitutional changes up to and including that of the year 1906 were being effected, the state Legislature, responding to the demands of the more populous counties of California, due to their increase in population and corresponding increase in litigation, adopted various enactments increasing, and in some counties again and again increasing, the number of superior judges assigned to such regions, and in so doing provided for the expiration of the terms of these additional judicial officers at different times from that of those holding office under previous conditions of the law. The result of these changes in the statutes especially since 1906, has been that of enabling a goodly number of the counties of the state to be exempted from the constitutional inhibition against an increase in the salaries of their superior judges to become effective during their respective terms of office, by the simple expedient of adding one or more to the number of their superior judges with terms expiring at different times than those already provided. The result of these changes in the Constitution and statutes prior to and up to the year 1924 was this: That as to the Supreme and appellate justices the salaries of these, both as to the amount and payment thereof, were rigidly fixed by the terms of section 17 of article 6 of the Constitution; that as to superior judges the salaries of these were subject to fixation by the Legislature, limited by the provision in said section 17 of article 6 of the Constitution to the effect that in counties having but one superior judge or, if more, having the terms of these expiring at the same time, there could be no legislative increase in the salaries of these one or more judges which could become effective during their terms of office; while as to counties which had by legislative action effected an increase in the number of their judges so worded as to make the terms of their judgeships expire at different times, the constitutional inhibition was inapplicable, and that the increases in such salaries as the Legislature from time to time provided for in such counties became effective immediately. On the 4th day of November, 1924, the people of the state of California ratified the amendment to the state Constitution relating to the creation of municipal courts. By the terms of said amendment a radical change in the number and jurisdiction of the courts of record of the state of California was provided for. Municipal courts, which were to be courts of record and which were to possess and exercise a large measure of the jurisdiction which had theretofore been reposed exclusively in the state system of superior courts, were permitted to be established in counties, cities, and cities and counties of a designated population. The fixation of the salaries of the judges of these new courts of record having such original jurisdiction was to be wholly committed to the Legislature, and this may furnish an additional reason why the framers of said amendment to the Constitution placed therein the provision reading:

"The compensation of the justices or judges of all courts of record shall be fixed and the payment thereof prescribed by the Legislature."

[1, 2] There is no room for doubt as to the interpretation to be given to this clause in said amendment to the Constitution, since it makes manifest as clearly and tersely as words could do the intent of the framers thereof that the entire matter of the compensation of justices and judges of courts of record in this state, both as to the amount thereof and as to the time and manner of payment thereof should be transferred from the Constitution and reposed in the Legislature. This is made all the more manifest when we take note of the meaning of the word "prescribed" as employed therein. The term "prescribe" is defined by the lexicographers as meaning:

"To lay down beforehand as a rule of action; to ordain, appoint, define authoritatively." Century Dictionary.

"To lay down authoritatively as a guide, direction, or rule of action; to impose as a peremptory order; to dictate, appoint, direct, ordain." Webster's New International Dictionary.

In Words and Phrases it is stated:

"The word 'prescribed' has a well-defined legal meaning, denoting to lay down authoritatively as a guide, direction, or rule; * * * to dictate; to appoint; to direct; to give as a guide, direction or rule of action." Words and Phrases, Second Series, "Prescribe," p. 1154, and cases cited.

Among the cases cited in support of the foregoing definition is that of Merchants' Exchange v. Knott, 111 S. W. 565, 571, 212 Mo. 616, in which the meaning of the word is traced back through Kent and Sharswood to Blackstone, through which original sources we derive our best definition of civil or municipal law as being "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state." It is in the foregoing broad and general sense that we must assume this word to have been used by the framers of the clause in the constitutional amendment in question and as intending thereby to invest the state Legislature with the fullest measure of control, direction, ordination, and dictation over the matter of the amount and payment of judicial salaries in and for the courts of record of this state. The amendment in question contains but one limitation upon the completeness of this direction and control through its express retention in the Constitution of its former requirement having relation to the prompt decision of submitted causes. In all other respects the amendment is ample and inclusive. It is true that the same amendment does not expressly refer to section 17 of article 6 of the Constitution, which relates to the compensation of the justices of the Supreme and appellate courts and also of the judges of superior courts, and that whatever repeal of whatever portion of said section 17 is effectuated by said amendment to the Constitution is a repeal by implication. Granting the correctness of the rule that repeals by implication are not favored in law, such rule can have no application to situations wherein the language of the later amendment is plain, direct, and inclusive and is manifestly inconsistent and in conflict with the earlier provision of the amended instrument. It requires no argument to show that this amendment is so as to the compensation of the justices of the Supreme and appellate tribunals, and that to that extent at least section 17 of article 6 of the Constitution has been abrogated by said later amendment; and we are of the opinion that the same reasoning is to be applied to the remaining portion of said section having relation to the matter of the payment of salaries of certain superior court judges having terms expiring at the same time. The retention in the Constitution of the fragmentary portion of section 17 of article 6 of the Constitution last above referred to would be hostile to the spirit and intent of the amendment in so far as the latter was designed to commit the matter of judicial salaries in all these various courts of record to the flexible control of the Legislature rather than to the rigid limitations of the Constitution; especially in view of changing conditions arising from the rapid increase in population, and consequent litigation, going on as a matter of common knowledge in various portions of the state of California at the present time.

The foregoing considerations would seem to furnish ample reason for the conclusion that the framers of the recent amendment to the Constitution intended by the clause therein, above quoted, to commit the entire subject of the compensation of the justices and judges of all courts of record in this state, both as to the amount thereof and as to the time and manner of payment, to the Legislature and to abrogate whatever of the former provisions of the Constitution touching that subject were found to be inconsistent with the exercise of such plenary legislative control.

Let the writ issue directing the issuance of warrants upon the state treasurer for the payment of the claims of the applicant herein conformably to the terms of his petition.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.

198 Cal. 261

NEW BLUE POINT MINING CO. v. WEISSBEIN et al.

FITZSIMMONS v. SAME.

(Sac. 3622.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 29, 1926.)

1. Corporations $\S$ 432(4).

Seal is prima facie proof of execution by and authority of corporation, but may be overcome.

2. Corporations $\S$ 309(5)—Acquiescence of corporation for 12 years in handling of property under trust deed held to waive objection to validity of deed because of interest of directors.

Where no objections were made to validity of trust deed and trustees allowed to handle property thereunder for over 12 years, such acquiescence held to waive objections to its validity on ground that two of directors were creditors interested in execution of deed; there being no evidence that deed was procured by fraud or unfair dealing.

3. Acknowledgment $\S$ 20(1).

That one taking acknowledgment of trust deed of corporate property to secure creditors was himself preferred creditor held not to affect validity, notwithstanding St. 1880, p. 131.

4. Corporations —477(1).

Trust deed to corporate property to secure corporate debts held not void as in contravention of Civ. Code, § 857.

5. Corporations —481—Buying up claims of creditors of corporation, in order to procure consent of holders of two-thirds of claims to sale of property as provided in trust deed, held not fraudulent in itself.

Where trust deed of corporate property provided for sale by trustees on consent of two-thirds of creditors, buying up by prospective purchaser of sufficient claims to assure consent of two-thirds of creditors, and after purchase receiving amount of assignments as credits on purchase, held not in itself to amount to fraud.

6. Corporations —481—Failure of trustees to notify corporation of negotiations for sale of property under power in trust deed held not to show fraud, where deed did not require notice.

Where trust deed for benefit of creditors provided for sale of property under certain conditions, but did not require trustees to notify corporation of negotiations for sale, failure of such notice held not to show fraud.

7. Corporations —481—Finding that sale of property under trust deed was authorized by consent of requisite number of creditors held sustained under evidence.

Where trust deed of corporate property for benefit of creditors provided for its sale by trustees under certain conditions with written consent of holders of two-thirds of claims, finding that sale was authorized held sustained under evidence.

8. Trial —397(6).

Failure of trial court to find on certain issues held not objectionable, where affirmative findings contained by necessary implication negative finding on those issues.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Yuba County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Consolidated actions by the New Blue Point Mining Company against Jacob Weissbein and others, and by Edward P. Fitzsimmons against Jacob Weissbein and the New Blue Point Mining Company and others, in which defendant last named cross-complained. Judgment for defendants in first action, and plaintiff appeals, and judgment against defendant last named in second action and on its cross-complaint, and it appeals. Affirmed.

James F. Sheehan, Charles J. Heggerty, and Knight & Heggerty, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Bert Schlesinger, of San Francisco, and W. E. Wright, of Nevada City, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal by the New Blue Point Mining Company, a corporation, from the judgment of the superior court of Yuba county, made and entered in two actions which were consolidated by consent and tried together in one action by the trial court. In Case No. 4264 appellant appeared as plaintiff, and in case No. 4486 the appellant appeared as defendant and cross-complainant.

The facts of the case succinctly stated are these: On the 21st day of March, 1902, the New Blue Point Mining Company, the owner in fee of certain mining properties and rights in Yuba and Nevada counties, under its corporate seal executed a deed of trust, designating Joseph Weissbein and Jacob Weissbein as trustees, to secure the payment of an indebtedness due and owing certain creditors. The trust deed specified the uses and purposes of the trust to be: (1) The sale of the mining property for a sum not less than $100,000 within a period of five years, and if said property could not be sold for that sum within the designated time, then for such sum as the holders of two-thirds of the amount of the indebtedness against said corporation might agree upon in writing; (2) to pay to one Charles Kitts, a preferred creditor, the sum of $5,130, together with interest thereon; (3) to pay the remaining ten creditors of the mining company various sums, together with interest thereon, which, with the preferred claim of Kitts, aggregated $45,000; (4) to pay the taxes and all other expenses connected with the property; and (5) to repay to the corporation any balance remaining in the hands of the trustees after the payment of all claims and expenses, and to reconvey to the corporation the mining property in the event that said claims should be satisfied by the corporation. This trust deed was signed: "New Blue Point Mining Company, by P. Campbell, President, Edward Fitzsimmons, Secretary; A. McShane, by his Att'y in Fact, P. Campbell; P. Campbell; Edward P. Fitzsimmons and Albert Rigby." The seal of the corporation was affixed thereto.

There was attached to this trust deed a resolution which authorized the execution of the trust deed. It was passed at a special meeting regularly called of the directors and was unanimously passed by the directors present, P. Campbell, Edward Fitzsimmons, and Albert Rigby.

A ratification of stockholders was attached to the resolution, which ratification was signed by P. Campbell; A. McShane, by his attorney in fact, P. Campbell; Edward Fitzsimmons; and Albert Rigby. A McShane was the holder of 99,968 shares of stock and P. Campbell, Edward Fitzsimmons, and Albert Rigby were each holders of five shares. The acknowledgment of the ratification was taken before Charles Kitts, who, it will be remembered, was by the terms of the trust deed a preferred creditor.

Attached to the resolution also were releases of the creditors named in the trust deed of their claims in exchange for the security of the trust deed.

On the same day a deed of grant, bargain, and sale was made and executed to Joseph and Jacob Weissbein, conveying to them all of the real and personal property of the corporation, together with the right to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof. This deed contained the express provisions that the grantees should hold said property in trust for the uses and purposes specified in said trust deed of even date, which was specially referred to and made a part thereof. This grant deed was recorded in both Nevada and Yuba counties.

No sale of the property was made within the five years specified in said trust deed. In November, 1909, the Tarr Mining Company, which had entered into possession of the property under an option of purchase for $225,000, paid to the trustees on the purchase price $6,187.50. This amount was distributed by the trustees pro rata among the creditors; $18,000 was also advanced by the Tarr Mining Company to finance litigation which had arisen over the title to the water rights belonging to the property. And in 1911 $6,500 more was paid by the Tarr Mining Company to the trustees, which sum was distributed among the creditors. Prior to the last-named payment, an agreement was entered into on the 31st day of October, 1911, between the trustees, as parties of the first part, New Blue Point Mining Company, as party of the second part, and the Tarr Mining Company, as party of the third part, wherein it was agreed that the Tarr Mining Company should pay the $6,500 immediately and an extension of time for future payments should be made. This agreement also recited the purpose for which the $18,000 had been advanced by the Tarr Mining Company, the fact that the trust deed had been duly made and executed to the trustees, and that the New Blue Point Mining Company was indebted on that date to the creditors named in the trust deed in the sum of $60,458.75. This agreement was signed by the trustees, by the New Blue Point Mining Company, per Edward Fitzsimmons, secretary, with the seal of the corporation attached, and the Tarr Mining Company, by its president and secretary, and also by the creditors named in said trust deed or by their successors in interest.

The option to purchase was abandoned by the Tarr Mining Company. Thereafter the property remained idle for several years.

In February, 1917, an agreement was entered into between the trustees and Sidney B. Wood for the purchase of the property by Wood for the sum of $75,000. Under this agreement Wood was to go into possession and operate the mine and make payments upon the purchase price at certain specified dates. Subsequent to this agreement, the time of the first payment was extended in consideration of the payment by Wood of back taxes on the property amounting to approximately $1,300. Wood operated under his bond for a period of about two years. Receipts from the San Francisco mint show approximately $30,000 in ore was extracted from the mine. Wood testified that the cost of extraction approximated $80,000. In 1919 Wood informed Jacob Weissbein, the surviving trustee, that he could not continue under the agreement, but that he would purchase the property as agent for Warren Delano, a resident of New York, if he could get it for $20,000. Weissbein agreed to the sale of the property at this figure providing two-thirds of the creditors would consent to the sale as provided in the trust deed, and provided further that any litigation in which the property was involved should be taken care of by Wood.

Wood proceeded to buy up, as cotenant with one C. M. Schwerin, assignments of some of the claims of the creditors and presented to Weissbein a written consent to the sale of the property for $20,000 with the signature of himself and Schwerin thereon as assignees of certain claims. The claim of J. W. Relley was represented by the signature "John Mulroy, Att'y in Fact for Relley Heirs." Weissbein also joined in said written consent, signing, "Weissbein Bros. & Co., by Jacob Weissbein." These signatures to the consent represented two-thirds of the amount of the indebtedness against said corporation. Wood having entered into an agreement to indemnify Weissbein from all claims arising from litigation with respect to the property, the latter proceeded with the sale of the property to Warren Delano for $20,000. The deed, which was not introduced in evidence, was evidently executed to Bradley and Delano or to Bradley in trust for Delano. Subsequent to the sale of the property Jacob Weissbein donated to Wood his claim embodied in the trust deed. Later Wood procured assignments from certain of the Relley heirs, some of whom had been represented in the written consent.

Weissbein, in settling the account with Wood, gave the latter credit for the assignments which he held and permitted Wood to offset said assignments against the purchase price. Weissbein did not, therefore, receive $20,000 actual cash from Wood, but the balance remaining after deducting the amount of the claims which had been assigned to Wood, which balance was $7,093.59. At the time of the trial, Weissbein still retained in his possession $2,380.80 for payment to the Relley heirs when he should be furnished with satisfactory proof that they were the parties entitled thereto.

For the sake of clarity we shall not attempt to set out the various pleadings involved in this controversy. We shall, instead, set out simply and succinctly the allegations contained in the complaint and cross-complaint of the New Blue Point Mining Company relative to the transactions hereinabove detailed. The New Blue Point Mining Company in its pleadings alleged in effect that: (1) The trust deed of March 21, 1902, was null and void because (a) the directors Fitzsimmons and Rigby, who voted for the resolution authorizing said trust deed, were disqualified by interest from participating therein, being creditors named in said trust deed; (b) there was no consideration for the execution of the trust deed, the indebtedness therein set out being, in fact, the indebtedness of P. Campbell, and not the indebtedness of the New Blue Point Mining Company; and (c) the execution of the trust was not properly ratified by two-thirds of the holders of the capital stock of the corporation. (2) The trustees came into possession of certain moneys in trust for the corporation, being more particularly (a) the sum of $31,244.50 from the Tarr Mining Company, and (b), in conjunction with Wood, the rents, issues, and profits which were the output of the mine under the operation of Wood, and (3) the deed by which the sale to Warren Delano for $20,000 was consummated is null and void because (a) it was executed pursuant to a conspiracy between the trustees and Wood, Bradley and Delano to cheat and defraud the New Blue Point Mining Company out of its property, and (b) the written consent of two-thirds of the creditors was not secured as required by the trust deed.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law upon both actions were consolidated. Briefly summarized, the findings were to the effect: (1) That the New Blue Point Mining Company was not the owner in fee simple of the mining property at the commencement of the first action; (2) that the trust deed of March 21, 1902, was properly made and executed and delivered to the trustees named therein; that it was made for a valuable consideration and its making was ratified and confirmed by practically all of the stockholders of the company; (3) the trustees had rendered full accounts and statements to the creditors of all moneys received and expended by them, and that on October 31, 1911, the New Blue Point Mining Company and other persons interested had come to a mutual accounting concerning the moneys received and expended up to that time; and (4) that Bradley and Delano were purchasers in good faith and for value from the trustees. As conclusions of law the court held that: (1) By virtue of the grant, bargain, and sale deed from the New Blue Point Mining Company, title to the mining property had vested in the trustees; (2) by virtue of the deed from the trustees to the purchasers for $20,000, the purchasers became the owners in fee of said property; and (3) the New Blue Point Mining Company was not entitled to an accounting from the trustees, from Wood, or from Bradley and Delano, the purchasers.

The two main contentions in support of the appeal are: (1) That the findings are not supported by the evidence; and (2) certain findings upon issues raised by the cross-complaint were not made by the trial court.

A careful, considerate and conscientious review of the record satisfies us that the evidence supports the findings, the findings warrant the conclusions of law, and they in turn support the judgment.

[1, 2] At first blush, it would seem that the argument of appellant that the trust deed was void by reason of the fact that it was not properly executed, in that the resolution authorizing its execution was voted upon by two directors who, as creditors, were interested, had merit. It is the rule that if a director necessary to constitute a quorum is interested in the proceedings the corporate act is voidable. Although the seal is prima facie proof of the execution and authority of the corporation, in opposition to this proof is the resolution, which shows on its face that two of the directors were interested as creditors. The presumption of due execution raised by the corporate seal is, therefore, overcome.

[3] It is of no importance that Kitts who took the acknowledgment was a preferred creditor. It has been decided that the original rule enunciated in McShane v. Carter, 22 P. 178, 80 Cal. 310, to the effect that a ratification of a sale of corporate property must be in strict form as required by Statutes of 1880, p. 131, has been liberalized. Royal Con. Mining Co. v. Royal Consolidated Mines, 110 P. 123, 157 Cal. 737, 137 Am. St. Rep. 165.

However, we are of the opinion that although it must be said that objections interposed to the validity of the trust deed, if interposed within a reasonable time after the execution thereof would have compelled the conclusion that said trust deed was not valid, nevertheless by reason of the long acquiescence of the corporation in the conduct of the trustees acting under their presumed authority, the corporation is not now at liberty to interpose those technical objections. Standard Oil Co. v. Slye, 129 P. 589, 164 Cal. 435, 445; Main v. Casserly, 7 P. 426, 67 Cal. 128; Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 34 P. 527, 100 Cal. 71.

From March, 1902, until April 24, 1914, when a cross-complaint was filed in an action brought by the Giant Powder Company against Jacob Weissbein, which cross-complaint was dismissed for lack of prosecution, no objection was made by the corporation to the handling of the property by the trustees. The trustees were absolutely permitted to enter into an agreement with the Tarr Mining Company for the sale of the property for $225,000 and were permitted to give to Wood an option to purchase for $75,000 without a word of protest from the corporation although it was cognizant of both deals. The trustees were permitted to assume the burdens attendant upon the upkeep of the property with no word of protest from the corporation or offer to assume those burdens.

Moreover, the beneficiaries of the trust deed, who as creditors released all of their claims against the New Blue Point Mining Company, have suffered a distinct detriment from the fact that the corporation acquiesced for so long a time in the validity of the trust deed. Their claims are now barred, and it is impossible for the corporation, unless it be by paying their claims in full, to put them in as favorable a position as they were in at the time when, relying upon the validity of the trust deed, they released their claims. Irrespective of whether their claims were valid claims against the New Blue Point Mining Company or only against P. Campbell, they were entitled to have their claims adjudicated. Their rights were lost to them by the acquiescence of the corporation in the trust deed until the statute of limitations had run.

There is no evidence that the trust deed was procured by fraud or underhanded, unfair dealing. The participation of the directors is not set up to prevent the directors from gaining an advantage from their own wrong. The irregularity is set up for the purpose of destroying the entire effect of the instrument which will have the effect of cutting off the rights of third persons thereunder. By long silence and acquiescence the corporation has lost its right to avail itself of such objection.

It may also be noted in passing that the California cases, which hold that a director cannot legally form part of a quorum which acts upon a proposition in which he is personally interested, hold that the corporate act in which said director has participated is "voidable." They do not use the term "void," and it would seem, therefore, that some affirmative act of disaffirmance is necessary on the part of the corporation to take advantage of the irregularity.

[4] We are also of the opinion that the objection that the trust deed is void, as being in contravention of section 857 of the Civil Code, is without merit. Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 53 P. 813, 121 Cal. 379.

We are satisfied that the accountings by the trustees of the moneys received by them are correct. The two payments received on the purchase price of the property from the Tarr Mining Company were paid pro rata to the creditors. The $18,000 advanced by the Tarr Mining Company for the expenses of litigation was paid to the trustees with the express understanding that it was to be used for that purpose, and consequently did not belong to either the creditors or the corporation itself. Although it would seem that Wood should have furnished the surviving trustee with a statement of his receipts and disbursements, there is no evidence that more money was taken from the mine than was expended thereon. The mine receipts show that approximately $50,000 worth of ore was extracted. Necessarily, there must have been cost of extraction, and according to the testimony of Wood this cost amounted to $80,000. Doubtless the trial court, in making its findings relative to the accounting, considered as true this statement.

[5, 6] With reference to the validity of the deed from the trustees to Bradley and Delano, there is no evidence, aside from the actual facts of the admitted transactions, to show fraud. There is no evidence that Weissbein conspired with Wood to cheat and defraud the creditors, or that he aided and assisted Wood in any way in obtaining the consent of the holders of two-thirds of the claims against the corporation. If it be fraud for Wood to buy up some of the creditors' claims, procure the consent of holders of other claims sufficient to aggregate in the total two-thirds of the claims, and receive as credit on the purchase the amounts of his assignments, then it may be said that the sale was procured by fraud and the deed from the trustees to the purchasers void. The mere statement of the transaction does not, however, in our opinion, compel the conclusion of fraud. The inference, therefore, being legitimate that there was no fraud, the findings of the trial court must stand. The trustees were not required by the terms of the trust deed to notify the corporation of any negotiations looking to the sale of the property, and the fact that they did not do so cannot be said to show fraud on their part.

[7] It is true that, without the consent of the Relley heirs, the necessary consent of the holders of two-thirds of the claims was not secured. The procurement of their consent was a condition precedent to a valid sale of the property. The grant deed to the trustees specified that the trustees were to hold the property for the uses and purposes specified in the trust deed of even date. One of the purposes specified therein was to sell "with the written consent of the holders of two-thirds of the amount of the claims." The purchasers were put upon notice that the written consent of such holders was necessary to a valid sale. Apparently the necessary consent of two-thirds of the claims was procured. Although the consent of the Relley heirs was given by Mulroy, said heirs make no complaint that he was not authorized to give their consent. Moreover, subsequent to the consent by Mulroy, Wood secured sufficient assignments from the Relley heirs to total, in conjunction with the assignments already held by him, together with the consent of other claimants, two-thirds of the amount of the claims against the corporation. It is a fair inference from the subsequent giving of these assignments that the signing of the consent by John Mulroy was with the consent of the heirs who later gave assignments.

[8] The complaint of the appellant that the trial court failed to find upon certain issues raised by the cross-complaint is, we think, without substantial foundation. It may be noted that the findings of fact and the conclusions of law were consolidated. The affirmative findings of the trial court on certain issues by necessary implication carried with them a negative finding of the truth of facts alleged in opposition thereto. Fox v. Haarstick, 15 S. Ct. 457, 156 U. S. 674, 39 L. Ed. 576; Noble v. Beeman-Spaulling-Woodward Co., 131 P. 1006, 65 Or. 93, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162. For instance, the finding of the trial court to the effect that the purchase of the mining property by Bradley and Delano was in good faith and for value is in effect a finding that such sale was not consummated by a conspiracy between Weissbein, Wood, Bradley, and Delano to defraud the corporation of its property. Findings upon other issues were not necessary, for the reason that no material evidence is to be found in the record which would support the findings, if made.

Judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

198 Cal. 177

JOHNSTON v. DE BOCK et al. (Sac. 3644.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1926.)

1. Homestead ☞57(3).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that parties who filed declaration of homestead were not residing upon premises as required by Civ. Code, § 1237.

2. Homestead ☞57(3).

Court is not bound to accept as conclusive statements of parties who filed declaration of homestead that they intended to return to premises.

3. Appeal and error ☞1011(1)—Finding, on conflicting evidence, that parties who filed declaration of homestead were not residing on premises, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Finding, on conflicting evidence, that parties who filed declaration of homestead were not residing on premises, will not be disturbed on appeal, though there may be sufficient evidence on which court could have made contrary finding.

4. Ejectment ☞127—Judgment awarding value of use of premises on finding that plaintiffs had title and right of possession held proper, regardless of agreement between defendants and party from whom they purchased land to permit vendor to occupy premises free of charge (Code Civ. Proc. § 427).

Where plaintiff alleged title and right of possession under sheriff's deed and damages on account of being deprived of returns and profits, which allegations were denied by defendants, who affirmatively alleged ownership and possession, judgment awarding value of use of premises since execution of such deed on finding that allegations of complaint were true held proper, under Code Civ. Proc. § 427, regardless of agreement between defendants and party from whom they purchased land to permit vendor to occupy premises free of charge.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Catherine M. Johnston against Clara E. De Bock and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. E. McLaughlin, Henry & Bedeau, Jay L. Henry, and McLaughlin & McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

R. Platnauer, of Sacramento, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an action in ejectment and for the value of the use and possession of certain real property in the city of Sacramento. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appeal under the alternative method.

The appellants are husband and wife. The respondent was at one time the wife of Louis De Bock, a brother of the appellant August De Bock. In an action for damages for alienation of affections commenced and first tried in Placer county and tried the second time in the county of Sacramento, the respondent, on November 18, 1916, recovered a judgment against the appellants for $5,000 and costs. On appeal said judgment was affirmed. De Bock v. De Bock, 184 P. 890, 43 Cal. App. 283. Execution was issued, and on execution sale the respondent bid in said property and received a certificate of purchase. In due time she obtained a sheriff's deed dated March 19, 1918, which was duly recorded. The proceedings on execution and sale were regular in all respects, but it is claimed by the appellants that the sheriff's deed was insufficient to pass title, by reason of a homestead declaration made by appellant Clara E. De Bock, for the joint benefit of herself and her husband on the 20th day of September, 1915, and filed for record on the following day. The homestead declaration was sufficient in form and substance, but the respondent insists that at the time the declaration was made and filed, the appellants were not residing on the premises as required by the Homestead Law (section 1237, Civ. Code). The court found in favor of the respondent's contention, and the main question presented on this appeal is whether the evidence is sufficient to support the finding. The appellant Clara E. De Bock acquired title to the lot in question by a deed from her mother dated April 8, 1909. Thereafter, with the assistance of her mother, improvements were constructed thereon consisting of a lower flat of five rooms, known as No. 2411 P street and an upper flat of six rooms known as No. 2409 P street, in the city of Sacramento. The construction of the building was commenced in 1909 and completed in 1910. It was occupied for a short period by the appellants and then rented to a Mr. Greenblatt. Thereafter the appellants claim to have occupied the upper flat from time to time and at all times to have considered the same their place of residence.

The appellant August De Bock was a railroad conductor, operating on a division between Roseville, Cal., and Sparks, Nev. In 1913 and 1914 he and his wife rented and occupied a furnished cabin in Roseville. In July, 1914, they purchased a lot in Roseville on which they constructed a house. As soon as said house was completed, in 1915, they occupied and continued to occupy the same as their home until December, 1915, when they sold it to a Mr. Prouty. On August 3, 1911, the appellant August De Bock registered as a voter in Sacramento county and gave his residence as 2409 P street. His next registration was on August 3, 1912, at which time he gave his residence as No. 2415 P street, which was the home of his wife's mother and adjoined the premises in controversy. On March 11, 1914, he registered as a voter in Placer county and gave his residence as Roseville. This registration was canceled and he re-registered in Sacramento on December 16, 1915, nearly three months after the recording of the homestead declaration. In November, 1915, he was a witness in the superior court in Placer county on the first trial of the former action, and he there testified that he then resided at Roseville and that he had been a resident of Roseville for three years.

On March 28, 1912, and on January 7, 1914, the defendant Clara E. De Bock registered as a voter in Sacramento and stated her residence as No. 2415 P street. On November 16, 1911, she subscribed for a telephone and had the same installed and listed in her name at 2415 P street and such listing remained up to the time of trial of this action. At no time since 1911 did the appellants or either of them register as residing at No. 2409 P street. In the deed to the lot on which the appellants built their new home in Roseville appellant Clara E. De Bock was named as the grantee "of Roseville" and she personally filed the deed for record on November 2, 1914.

[1] G. A. Eichelberger, a witness produced on behalf of respondent, testified that he occupied the lower flat with his family from March 15 until December 8, 1915; that from March 15 to some time in August, 1915, a family by the name of Strand occupied the upper flat exclusively, and that from the time the Strands moved out, in August, 1915, until December 8, 1915, the upper flat was wholly unoccupied. The testimony of this witness, together with the testimony of other witnesses produced on behalf of respondent, which need not be recited, and the admissions and declarations of the appellants, was sufficient evidence on which to base the finding of the court, as follows:

"That neither on the 20th day of September, 1915, nor on the 21st day of September, 1915, nor at the time of the making or the execution or the filing of the declaration of homestead set out in and annexed to defendants' answer, were the defendants, or either of them, residing upon or occupying the premises described in plaintiffs complaint, or any part thereof; * * * that said real property is not, nor is any part thereof, the homestead of the defendants or of either of them; and that at no time was said real property or any part thereof the homestead of the defendants or either of them."

[2, 3] The appellants contend that because of the nature of the occupation of the appellant August De Bock, he was required to be absent from Sacramento, and they testified that at the time of the filing and recordation of the declaration of homestead they considered No. 2409 P street as their home and intended to return to that place in seasons of repose. But the court was not bound to accept their testimony as to their intentions as conclusive. Concerning such evidence of intention this court said in the case of Tromans v. Mahlman, 44 P. 327, 111 Cal. 646:

"Whether she [the appellant] did in fact actually reside on the premises at the time the declaration was filed was a question of fact to be determined by the court from the evidence before it. The physical fact of her occupancy, as well as the intention with which she occupied the house, were both elements to be considered in determining actual residence, and the court was not bound to accept her statement that she intended to reside thereon as conclusive, if other facts to which she testified were inconsistent with such intention. Whatever inconsistency there was between these facts and her statement of her intention presented merely a conflict of evidence, on which the decision of the trial court was final. Its decision upon this conflict of evidence that she did not reside there is conclusive upon this court."

In the former appeal in that action (Tromans v. Mahlman, 27 P. 1094, 28 P. 579, 92 Cal. 1) it was said:

"It is settled law in this state, that to constitute a valid homestead the claimant must actually reside on the premises when the declaration is filed [citing cases]. * * * The obvious purpose of the statute in providing for the selection of a homestead was to thereby make a home for the family, which neither of the spouses could encumber or dispose of without the consent of the other, and which should at all times be protected against creditors. To effect its purpose, the statute has been liberally construed in some respects, but the requirement as to residence at the time the declaration is filed has been strictly construed."

The foregoing statement of the law was approved in Bullis v. Staniford, 171 P. 1064, 178 Cal. 40. See, also, 13 Cal. Jur. 554, and cases cited. From a consideration of the record it must be concluded that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence as to the residence of the appellants at the time the declaration of homestead was filed, and even if it be assumed that there was sufficient evidence on which the court could have made a contrary finding on that issue, we are not at liberty on the record before us to disturb the finding that was made. Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 134 P. 1157, 166 Cal. 140; 2 Cal. Jur. 880, and cases cited.

[4] Under date of April 8, 1909, the appellant Clara E. De Bock entered into an agreement with her mother, Mary E. Welch, wherein and whereby, in consideration of the execution and delivery of the deed of the same date by the said Mary E. Welch and her husband to said Clara E. De Bock conveying to the latter the property in question, it was provided that if at any time in the future the said Mary E. Welch should so desire she should have the right to occupy the lower flat, with the proviso that the said Clara E. De Bock should have the benefit of all rentals from the whole of said building until all of the expense of the erection of said building had been paid by her. The trial court awarded to the respondent, in addition to the right of possession, the value of the use and occupation of the entire property from the date of the issuance of the sheriff's deed on March 19, 1918. The appellants contend that the judgment herein must be reversed for the reason that the evidence shows that the foregoing agreement was still in force at the time of trial, and that there was no authority on the part of the court to award to the respondent the value of the use and possession of the entire property during a period when Mary E. Welch was entitled to possession of the lower flat free of charge. The contention cannot be sustained. Section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint, where they all arise out of: * * * (2) Claims to recover specific real property, with or without damages for the withholding thereof, or for waste committed thereon, and the rents and profits of the same. * * *"

Under the permission of this section the respondent filed her complaint, wherein she alleged her title and right of possession under the sheriff's deed and damages on account of being deprived of the rents and profits. These allegations were denied by the answer, wherein the appellants also affirmatively alleged that continuously since the 8th day of April, 1909, the said Clara E.

De Bock was the owner in fee of the said property and was in possession of the same, and that the respondent had no right, title, or interest therein. The court found the allegations of the complaint to be true and the allegations of the answer to be untrue. Assuming that the mother was in possession under the appellant Clara E. De Bock without the payment of rent during the period in controversy, or some part thereof, it was immaterial whether or to what extent said appellant was receiving rent, for when the respondent established her right of possession she was entitled to the rental value of the premises during the time she was unlawfully deprived of the same. Love v. Shartzer, 31 Cal. 487; Nathan v. Dierssen, 130 P. 12, 164 Cal. 607; Italian American Bank v. Canepa, 199 P. 55, 52 Cal. App. 619; 9 Cal. Jur. 1030. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 151
OGDEN v. BYINGTON et al. (Sac. 3594.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 18, 1926.)

1. Mechanics' liens ⚡23.

To support lien under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, or section 1191, work or materials furnished must permanently improve land affected.

2. Mechanics' liens ⚡24—Preparing land for rice crop did not support lien (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 or section 1191).

Plaintiff, furnishing tenant stock and equipment for construction of irrigating ditches and levee work in preparing certain lands for planting rice, held not to have lien on such land, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, establishing mechanic's lien, or section 1191, providing for lien on lots for improvement; work not having structural character or permanency necessary to bring it within statute.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by H. L. Ogden against Lewis F. Byington and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston and Harry L. Huston, both of Woodland, for appellant.

George K. Ford, Lewis F. Byington, and Tirey L. Ford, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is by the plaintiff from a judgment in the defendants' favor, in an action brought by the former to establish and foreclose a lien upon the real property of certain of the defendants. On and prior to March 22, 1920, the defendants, other than T. E. Maroney, were the owners of a large tract of land in the county of Colusa, and thereafter continued to be the owners of said lands down to and after the date of the institution of this action. On March 22, 1920, the said owners of said lands entered into a cropping lease, in writing, whereby they leased to the defendant Maroney their said lands for a period of two years or thereabouts for the purpose of planting and growing thereon "rice and other grain." By the terms of said lease, the lessee was to properly irrigate said land and do all things to insure the growing of a good crop of rice thereon, and to harvest the same, and to deliver to the lessors one-third in weight of said rice, except that the lessors were to provide two pumps and engines for the supplying of water to certain portions of said premises from a water channel upon said lands, and were also to pay the expense of the necessary plowing and watering of a certain portion of said lands, during the summer of 1920, which had become infested with water grass, for the purpose of eradicating the same. The said lessee went into possession of the whole of said premises under said lease, and on April 12, 1920, entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff herein, by the terms of which the latter was to furnish certain stock and equipment at designated prices per month, consisting of teams, scrapers, plows, wagons, truck, tents, utensils, and labor for use "in connection with the construction of irrigating ditches and levee work" upon land generally described as lying about 5 miles northeast of Colusa, and for which said Maroney was to pay as the said work proceeded. Upon completion of the work contemplated by this agreement, the said Maroney not having paid the full amount claimed by plaintiff on account of the performance by him of said agreement, the plaintiff filed and recorded a claim of lien under the provisions of part 3, tit. 4, c. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure against the real property of the said owners of said lands covering the balance alleged to remain due upon said agreement, and thereafter, and on October 18, 1920, commenced this action for the establishment and foreclosure of said lien. The defendants other than said Maroney appeared and answered, denying the existence and validity of said asserted lien upon their said real property, and in the trial which followed upon the issues thus presented the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein it found that, while the said plaintiff furnished to said Maroney the material, labor, appliances, teams, supplies, etc., to be used, and which were used in connection with the preparation of the said lands for the planting of a crop of rice thereon, the said preparation thereof, and the work done in connection therewith, and the results accomplished thereby were solely and only for agricultural purposes, and were part of the work necessary to, and included in, the cultivation of said lands and the raising of a crop of rice thereon, and "that no structure of improvement of any kind was constructed or erected on said land, nor was any value added to said land." The court made certain other findings not necessary to be considered in our view of the only real question presented upon this appeal.

It is the contention of the appellant that the work done and material and supplies furnished by him in the performance of his contract with Maroney, the tenant of the owners of the lands sought to be subjected to his said lien, was such as is "contemplated and contained within the terms and provisions of the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the liens of mechanics and materialmen," and particularly of sections 1183 and 1191 of said Code. He chiefly relies upon the provisions of section 1183 thereof for support of his said claim of lien, and upon that portion thereof which provides that:

"Mechanics, materialmen, contractors, sub-contractors, artisans, architects, machinists, builders, miners, teamsters and draymen, and all persons and laborers of every class performing labor upon, or bestowing skill or other necessary services, or furnishing materials to be used or consumed in or furnishing appliances, teams and power contributing to the construction, alteration, addition to or repair, either in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, wagon road or other structure, shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished and for the value of the use of such appliances, teams or power," etc.

In support of his contention that the labor done, materials and equipment furnished, and supplies used by him in the performance of his said contract with Maroney comes within the scope and intent of the foregoing provision of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appellant strongly relies upon the decision of the District Court of Appeal in the case of Mendoza v. Central Forest Co., 174 P. 359, 37 Cal. App. 289. That was a case wherein the lien sought to be upheld was one created under a contract for the construction of certain ditches, drains, roads, checking, and other like work in the course of the development of a tract of land, so as to prepare the same to be seeded to alfalfa, and to provide for the irrigation of the crop or crops of alfalfa to be thereafter grown thereon. The trial court, in upholding said lien, referred in its findings to the detailed specifications of the contract for the doing of the said work and to the permanency of its structural character, and in its conclusions of law found and concluded "that the farm development thus erected upon the lands of the Central Forest Company, as aforesaid, constitutes and is a structure within the meaning of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure." In sustaining this conclusion, the appellate tribunal held that:

"The farm development here contemplated was a finished piece of work composed of integral parts, some of which the statute expressly designates as structures, and when completed consisted of ditches, drains, embankments, roads, so correlated as to form one harmonious entity designed to accomplish a particular object and constituting a permanent and valuable improvement to the land and necessary to its highest and most profitable uses. When finished, it stood out as obvious and visible in its usefulness and its purpose as would a house, or barn, or any other of the structures enumerated in the statute."

A comparison of the findings of the trial court in the foregoing case with those of the trial court in the case at bar will serve to show that the essential characteristic of the work done and improvement made upon the surface of the land in the Mendoza Case is entirely lacking from the facts and findings in the present case. The characteristic referred to is that of "permanence." In the former case the specified development to be done was in the preparation of the land for the planting and conservation of a perennial crop, viz. alfalfa; and both the trial and the appellate court designated it to be a permanent and visible structural change in the surface of the land in question, "constituting a permanent and valuable improvement to the land necessary to its highest and most profitable uses." In the case at bar, on the contrary, the findings of the trial court are that the materials furnished and the work done were solely and only done in the preparation of the land in question for the cultivation and raising of a crop of rice thereon: "and that no structure or improvement of any kind was constructed or erected on said land, nor was any value added to said land."

[1. 2] When we come to consider the other cases which have been brought before this court or the appellate tribunals involving similar claims or lien for work done or materials furnished under either the provisions of section 1183 or section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we find that the element of permanency in the improvement of the land affected has been in each instance a determining factor in the disposal of each case. As in the case of Young v. Shriver, 206 P. 99, 56 Cal. App. 653, wherein the lien sought to be imposed was claimed under the provisions of section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which purports to provide a lien for the grading, filling in, or otherwise improving of a lot or tract of land, or the street, highway, or sidewalk in front of or adjoining the same, the court holding that the preparation of agricultural land by plowing or otherwise for the ordinary seasonal or agricultural uses thereof was not such work as was contemplated by said section of the Code; and in so ruling the court cites the case of Brown v. Wyman, 9 N. W. 344, 56 Iowa, 452, 41 Am. Rep. 117, as holding that the breaking up or plowing of virgin prairie land for the growth of crops, while necessary for that purpose, was not more necessary than the annual plowing of such lands which precedes the planting of such crops, and hence was not such work as would entitle the party doing the same to the benefit of a lien upon the land. In the case of Thomas v. Gismegian, 216 P. 601, 191 Cal. 497, wherein a claim of lien was asserted for the grading and leveling of agricultural land so that the same could be irrigated for the purpose of farming by means of irrigation, this court approved the ruling of the appellate court in the case of Young v. Shriver, supra, but in so doing drew the distinction between that case and the case then at bar, which consisted in the fact that the grading and leveling done in the latter case, as shown by the record in said case, was done upon hilly, rough, ridgy, uneven, hog wallow land which required the grading, leveling, and filling shown to be done as a necessary prerequisite to its cultivation. This court, in referring to such work, designated it "as in the nature of a permanent improvement as distinguished from the plowing and leveling essential to the raising of annual crops," and for that reason upheld the asserted lien. From this comparison of these recent decisions it would seem to be sufficiently plain that the character of the work done and materials and supplies furnished, and for which a lien is sought to be established and foreclosed in the instant case, was not such in point of structural character or permanency as would bring it either within the provisions of section 1183 or section 1191 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so as to subject the lands of the respondents to any lien predicated upon the performance of the plaintiff's contract with the respondents' tenant, and for the collection of any balance claimed to be due from such tenant by virtue thereof. This conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of any other questions presented upon this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 196

FAIR OAKS BANK v. JOHNSON et al.
(Sac. 3523.)(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 25, 1926.)

1. Sales ⇨52(7)—Evidence held to justify finding that execution of note and mortgage, given in payment of tractor, was procured by false and fraudulent representations.

Evidence held to justify finding that execution of note and mortgage given in payment of tractor, was procured by false and fraudulent representations as to condition of tractor.

2. Estoppel ⇨110—Facts constituting estoppel against defense set up in cross-complaint, in action on note and mortgage, cannot be relied on on failure to set up any of such facts in any of pleadings.

Where, in action on note, and to foreclose mortgage, maker filed a cross-complaint against owner and payee, alleging fraud in procuring note and mortgage, to which separate answer was filed, owner and payee cannot rely on facts constituting estoppel, as defense to cause of action embraced in cross-complaint, which were not set up in any of their pleadings.

3. Estoppel ⇨110.

Rule requiring party relying on estoppel to plead it, applies only when such party has an opportunity to make such plea.

4. Estoppel ⇨115—Failure of plaintiff to plead facts by way of estoppel in answer to cross-complaint precludes it from proving such facts either to controvert answer to complaint or in support of answer to cross-complaint.

Where owner of note and mortgage, after bringing action thereon, had opportunity to plead facts by way of estoppel in answer to cross-complaint filed by maker, failure to make such plea precluded it from proving such facts either to controvert answer to complaint or in support of its answer to cross-complaint.

5. Mortgages ⇨455—Cross-complaint to action on note and to foreclose mortgage, securing it, setting up fraud in procuring note and mortgage, was properly filed to secure cancellation of mortgage.

Cross-complaint to action on note and to foreclose mortgage securing it was properly filed by maker, setting up allegations that execution of note and mortgage was procured by fraud, so as to secure cancellation of mortgage.

6. Estoppel ⇨121—Express finding on facts relied on as estoppel against allegations of cross-complaint was not necessary, where court impliedly found against such facts by finding allegations set up in cross-complaint were true.

Where trial court found that cross-complaint, setting up fraud in procuring note and mortgage sued on, was true, and action was tried on theory that estoppel relied on by plaintiff as defense to cross-complaint was in issue, it thereby impliedly found against plaintiff on issue of estoppel, rendering express finding on such issue unnecessary.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Fair Oaks Bank against Elmer N. Johnson and Don H. Slocum, wherein defendant Johnson filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff and the other defendant. From a judgment for defendant Johnson, plaintiff and defendant Slocum appeal. Affirmed.

Elliott & Atkinson, of Sacramento, for plaintiff and appellant.

Elliott & Atkinson and Verne McGeorge, all of Sacramento, for cross-defendant and appellant.

Evan J. Hughes, of Sacramento, for defendant and respondent.

CURTIS, J. This is an action brought to collect the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the same. The note and mortgage were executed by the defendant Johnson in favor of the defendant Slocum, and assigned by the latter to plaintiff. The complaint is in the usual form of a complaint for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The defendant Johnson answered, alleging that the note and mortgage were given in payment of a second-hand Avery tractor purchased by him from the defendant Slocum, and that the latter, in order to induce Johnson to purchase said tractor, made certain false and fraudulent representations as to said tractor. Said defendant Johnson also filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and said defendant Slocum, setting up the same matters as were alleged in his answer, and asked for a cancellation of said note and mortgage. The court found that the allegations of defendant Johnson's answer and cross-complaint were true, except in some respects not material on this appeal, and gave judgment in favor of Johnson and against plaintiff and Slocum. Plaintiff and Slocum have appealed.

[1] Appellants' first contention for a reversal of the judgment is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. While the evidence is conflicting, we are not able to say that it is not sufficient to support respondent's claim that the note and mortgage were procured through the false and fraudulent representations of the defendant Slocum. There was evidence that Slocum represented to respondent that the tractor, for the purchase price of which the note and mortgage were given, was in first-class mechanical condition, except for a few loose bolts; that it was good as new; that it had not been used enough to really break the machine in; that it had only plowed about 10 acres; and that the former owner had no trouble with it; that the tractor had been returned by the previous owner because his land was too steep to operate the machine; that, compared with the land of the defendant Johnson on which it was proposed to use the tractor, if purchased, the land of the previous owner was practically straight up and down, and that there was no reason why the tractor would not do perfectly satisfactory work on respondent Johnson's land. There is no question from the evidence but that Johnson believed these statements, and relying upon them, bought the tractor and gave the note and mortgage sued on herein as payment thereof. The evidence further shows that, after the delivery of said tractor to respondent, he attempted to use the same upon his land, and in doing so the countershaft of the tractor broke within 3 hours after respondent had begun operating it and within 10 to 12 days thereafter a second countershaft broke; that within one month from the time he began to use the machine a connecting rod broke, and knocked a large hole in the side of the crank case; that in the ordinary use of the tractor the engine heated excessively; that the tractor would not pull up hill; and the former owner had returned it to the defendant Slocum for the reason that he could not get the power out of it.

The evidence further shows that the tractor would not pull the plows up the grades on respondent's land, and that these grades were steeper than those of the land of the former owner; that, upon the connecting rod breaking, Johnson notified Slocum of that fact, and the latter agreed to take it up with the company; that later the tractor was taken from Johnson's land, and he testified at the trial that "it is all scattered about the ground where they left it when they took it apart." Thereafter respondent gave notice of rescission of the contract, note, and mortgage. This evidence was sufficient to justify the findings of the court that the execution of the note and mortgage was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of the defendant Slocum.

The evidence being sufficient to justify the findings, the judgment against the defendant Slocum is valid. As to the judgment against the plaintiff, the assignee of Slocum, it is conceded by appellants that at the date of the execution of the note and mortgage, April 2, 1921, a note secured by a mortgage was a nonnegotiable instrument, although since that date such a note has been made negotiable. Civ. Code, § 3265. It is not contended that the amendment to said last-mentioned section of the Code has any retroactive effect. The judgment, therefore, is valid and binding upon the plaintiff as well as on the defendant Slocum, unless the further contention of appellants is meritorious. This contention is that the respondent is estopped from setting up the defense of fraud as against plaintiff, for the reason that the evidence showed that at the time of the purchase of said tractor said respondent himself procured the loan from the plaintiff, evidenced by said promissory note and mortgage, and that, although said note was made payable to defendant Slocum, yet in reality the loan was made by the bank, the plaintiff herein, to respondent Johnson for the purpose of enabling the latter to purchase said tractor, and that, while it was made in the first instance payable to defendant Slocum, it was immediately thereafter indorsed and transferred by Slocum to plaintiff, and that this was all done in accordance with the agreement and understanding entered into prior to the execution of said note between respondent and appellants; that respondent Johnson failed to inform the appellant bank of any of the statements or representations made by Slocum to him at the time they were negotiating for the purchase and sale of said tractor, and therefore said respondent is estopped from setting up said defense as against the appellant bank.

[2, 3] Neither appellants the Fair Oaks Bank nor Slocum set up in any of their pleadings any of the facts which they now rely upon as constituting an estoppel against respondent. In other words, neither of said appellants has pleaded any facts by way of estoppel. Each of said appellants was made a defendant in respondent's cross-complaint asking for the cancellation of said note and mortgage, and each filed a separate answer to said cross-complaint. The opportunity to plead estoppel was thus given to each of said appellants. "It may now be regarded as firmly settled that, as a general rule, a party who has an opportunity to plead an estoppel upon which his cause of action depends must do so." 10 Cal. Jur. 654. Upon his failure to do so the question cannot be considered. Placer County v. Lake Tahoe Ry. & Tr. Co., 209 P. 900, 906, 58 Cal. App. 764. "Such is the uniform rule of decision laid down by this court from the case of Clarke v. Huber, 25 Cal. 593, and to Chapman v. Hughes [58 P. 298, 60 P. 974, 66 P. 982] 134 Cal. 641." Burk v. Santa Cruz, 127 P. 154, 156, 163 Cal. 807, 811. These authorities unquestionably dispose of appellants' right to rely upon an estoppel as a defense to the cause of action embraced in respondent's cross-complaint. The question arises, however, whether appellants' failure to plead an estoppel to the cross-complaint in any way affected the right of the appellant the Fair Oaks Bank to rely upon an estoppel as against the defendant Johnson's defense in the proceeding to foreclose said mortgage. Did the appellant the Fair Oaks Bank, by its failure to plead facts by way of estoppel as a defense to respondent's cross-complaint, waive its right to prove said facts in the foreclosure proceeding? The rule requiring a party relying upon estoppel to plead it only applies when such party has an opportunity to make such a plea, and it is well settled that in a proceeding like that instituted by the plaintiff herein, to foreclose its mortgage, no opportunity is afforded it to make the plea of estoppel, and that it may, without pleading it, prove the facts relied upon in the same way as if they had been pleaded. This action, although it embraces the proceedings instituted to foreclose a mortgage, and those instituted by the respondent for the purpose of having said mortgage canceled, is but one action. There can be but one judgment rendered thereunder. The rights of the parties thereunder are determined by their respective pleadings. There cannot be one rule applicable to the Fair Oaks Bank as the plaintiff in said action and another and different rule applicable to said bank as a cross-defendant in the proceedings instituted by Johnson to cancel the note and mortgage. To hold that the bank could rely upon an estoppel as the plaintiff in said action, but that it could not rely upon an estoppel as a cross-defendant therein, might result in a judgment in said action decreeing the foreclosure of said mortgage, and further adjudging that it be set aside and canceled, two absolutely inconsistent determinations. "The law does not favor estoppels, for their effect is to prevent the party against whom they are invoked from proving the truth of the matter, to ascertain which, as a general proposition, is the great end of judicial inquiry. * * *

The doctrine is a harsh one, and is never to be applied, except where to allow the truth to be told would consummate a wrong to the one party, or enable the other to secure an unfair advantage." Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558, 566 (95 Am. Dec. 129); Wheaton v. Insurance Co., 18 P. 758, 76 Cal. 416, 430, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216.

[4] The appellant the Fair Oaks Bank had an opportunity to plead facts by way of estoppel in its answer to the cross-complaint, and, having failed to make such plea, is, in our opinion, precluded from proving said facts in any stage of the proceedings, either to controvert the allegations of respondent's answer to the complaint or in support of its answer to respondent's cross-complaint. Our attention has not been called to any direct authority in support of the conclusions to which we have arrived. On the other hand, we know of none prescribing a contrary rule. It seems, however, upon principle, that from the well-established rule requiring an estoppel to be pleaded in case there is an opportunity to do so, otherwise no proof thereof will be permitted, there can be no escape from the above conclusion.

[5] We are unable to agree with the assertion that the cross-complaint was unnecessary as between the parties to this action. It is true that the same facts substantially are set up therein as were alleged in respondent's answer to the complaint. Had the action been confined simply to the foreclosure of the mortgage, and had judgment therein been rendered in favor of the respondent, said judgment could have provided only that the plaintiff in said action take nothing. It could not have been decreed in said action that said mortgage be delivered up and canceled. The mortgage was on record as a lien against respondent's real property, and he was entitled, if the same had been procured by fraud and misrepresentation, to have the same surrendered up and canceled of record. This relief could only be obtained by him either by an independent action brought for that purpose, or, in case action had been brought to foreclose the mortgage, by the filing of a cross-complaint asking for the same relief.

[6] There is another consideration, however, which in our opinion leads to the conclusion that the judgment should be affirmed. Even if we assume that the plaintiff had the right to rely upon estoppel, yet, as the trial court found the allegations of respondent's answer to the complaint and his cross-complaint to be true, we think this was at least an implied finding that the facts relied upon by appellant as an estoppel were not true. As we have already seen, the effect of an estoppel is to prevent the party against whom it is invoked from proving the truth of the matter upon which he relies. In this action the facts relied upon as an estoppel, if proven to the satisfaction of the trial court, would have prevented the respondent from proving the false and fraudulent statements, which he claimed were made to him by the defendant Slocum, as a defense to plaintiff's action to foreclose said mortgage. The record shows that the action was tried upon the theory that it was not necessary to plead the facts relied upon by plaintiff as an estoppel, and that such estoppel was in issue. When the court, therefore, found that the allegations of respondent's answer and cross-complaint were true, it must have necessarily passed upon the issue of estoppel, and, by finding in favor of respondent, impliedly found against the appellant upon said issue of estoppel. An express finding, therefore, upon such issue was not necessary under the circumstances of this particular case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 157

SALTZEN v. ASSOCIATED OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA (two cases).
(Sac. 3616, 3617.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 18, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨882(12).

Party, requesting instruction given by court, cannot deny that it is correct in law.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1032(1).

Injury is not presumed from error.

3. Trial ⇨243—Specific instruction as to contributory negligence and general instruction as to burden of proof held not contradictory and misleading.

Where, in automobile accident case, court correctly instructed that burden of showing contributory negligence was on defendant, subsequent general instruction that, if proof was equally balanced on any material issue, plaintiff had not sustained burden imposed on him, did not render instructions so contradictory and misleading as to be reversible error.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(9)—Negligence of truck driver in not giving timely turning signal, as required by Motor Vehicle Law, held for jury (Motor Vehicle Law, § 20, subd. n, as amended by St. 1919, p. 216, § 12).

Where automobile in which plaintiffs were riding was propelled against a tree on edge of highway through alleged carelessness of driver of defendant's truck, and evidence was conflicting as to whether driver gave timely signal of turning, as required by Motor Vehicle Law, § 20, subd. n, as amended by St. 1919, p. 216, § 12, question of negligence held for jury.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Separate actions by Susan M. Saltzen and by J. D. Saltzen against the Associated Oil Company of California. From judgments for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston, Sr., and Arthur C. Huston, Jr., both of Woodland, for appellants.

Henry Ach, of San Francisco, Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, and A. G. Bailey, of Woodland, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. These two appeals, while taken separately, depend upon the same state of facts and the same question of law and are submitted upon a single set of briefs. They arise out of the same accident wherein each of the plaintiffs therein suffered injuries for which damages were sought to be recovered by each in a separate action; the two actions having, however, been, by stipulation of the parties, tried together. The accident in question occurred upon August 22, 1922, upon the public highway between the town of Davis and the city of Woodland, in Yolo county, when an automobile owned and being operated by the plaintiff and appellant J. D. Saltzen and in which his wife, Susan M. Saltzen, the other plaintiff and appellant, was riding, was propelled against a tree along the edge of said highway through what they each alleged to be the carelessness and negligence of a driver of a large truck owned by the defendant in each action and being operated by its said agent along and upon said highway. To the complaint of each of said plaintiffs charging such negligence and resultant injuries the defendant answered, denying negligence on the part of the defendant or its said servant, and denying that whatever injuries the said plaintiffs or either of them sustained were the proximate result of any such negligence, and, on the other hand, alleging affirmatively that the said accident and whatever resultant injuries the plaintiffs, or either of them, suffered thereby, were proximately caused by the negligence and also by the contributory negligence of the said J. D. Saltzen in the operation of the car of which each of said plaintiffs was an occupant at the time of their injuries. The causes went to trial before a jury and were tried together, and at the conclusion of said trial the jury returned a verdict in each case in favor of the defendant, and from the judgments entered thereon, respectively, the plaintiffs have prosecuted these appeals.

[1-3] The first contention urged by these appellants is that the trial court erred in giving certain instructions to the jury which the appellants assert to have been erroneous and contradictory. In the course of its charge to the jury the court gave, as applicable to each case, the following instruction at the plaintiff's request, viz.:

"You are instructed that the burden of showing that the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence rests upon the defendant in this case, unless the same appears from the plaintiff's own evidence."

Later, in the course of its instructions, the court gave to the jury the following instruction having application apparently to the case of the plaintiff J. D. Saltzen, viz.:

"You are instructed that the burden is upon plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he actually sustained the injury from which he claims to have been suffering since the accident, and also, if he sustained any injury, the nature and extent thereof. If you believe from the evidence that the proof is equally balanced upon any material issue of fact, then plaintiff has not sustained the burden which the law imposes upon him of making proof of any fact in issue by a preponderance of the evidence, and in such event it will be your duty to find in favor of defendant upon such issue."

The plaintiff and appellant J. D. Saltzen insists that the foregoing two instructions are contradictory to the extent of being prejudicially misleading to the jury, and hence that the giving of them constituted prejudicial error. In making this contention the appellant J. D. Saltzen concedes that the first of the foregoing instructions was and is correct in point of law. He could not in point of fact do otherwise, since it was his own requested instruction; but he contends that the instruction which followed it, and which is above quoted, was so erroneous and contradictory of the former instruction as to have misled the jury to the extent of a verdict against him. We do not, however, so read said latter instruction. In its opening phrases it evidently has reference to the burden which is cast upon the plaintiff of proving the nature and extent of his injuries and their relation to the accident in question; and, while the scope of the instruction was unduly broadened by its concluding phrases, and hence ought not in that form to have been given, we are unable to say that the jury would be misled by its general phrasing to the point of a disregard of the earlier and very clear and pointed instruction which the court had given at the said plaintiff's request upon the subject of contributory negligence, and upon which of the parties to the action the burden rested of showing that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. In said first given instruction the court was dealing specifically, expressly, and only with the subject of contributory negligence, and the jury could not have misunderstood its plain and explicit terms. In the second of said instructions the subject of contributory negligence was not mentioned, and it is difficult to see how its generalities, however inapt, could have wrought confusion in the minds of the jurors upon that subject. The older rule that injury was to be presumed from error has not obtained in this court since the decision of the case of Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 147 P. 238, 169 Cal. 545, 554, and the cases which the appellant J. D. Saltzen cites as upholding his above contention do not, when examined, sustain it. In the case of Rathbun v. White, 107 P. 309, 157 Cal. 248, there was a specific instruction which was erroneous and highly prejudicial, and this court held that the error created thereby would not be cured by a merely general instruction correctly stating the rule but giving it no specific application. The reverse of that situation is presented here wherein we find that the specific instruction correctly sets forth the rule as to where the burden of showing contributory negligence lies, and the utmost that the appellant J. D. Saltzen can claim is that its effect has been destroyed by the later giving of a general instruction which, however erroneous, does not purport to cover the subject to which the correct and specific instruction relates. The other cases cited by said appellant are either easily distinguishable from the instant case or were decided at a time when the prior rule as to presuming injury from error prevailed. In the recent case of Alloggi v. S. P. Co., 173 P. 1117, 37 Cal. App. 72, it appeared that the trial court had given an incorrect instruction upon the subject of contributory negligence, but at a later point in its instructions gave a correct instruction upon the same subject, and in dealing with that situation upon appeal the court said:

"We are not unmindful of the rule that conflicting and contradictory instructions upon a material phase of the case require a reversal where it cannot be ascertained from the record before us which instruction prevailed, or was likely to prevail with the jury. While it is true that the instruction complained of in the present case is erroneous, and in a measure in conflict with several other instructions which correctly stated the rule of law relative to contributory negligence, nevertheless the correct rule of law was so specifically stated and restated to the jury that we feel that the idea in the several correct instructions must have preponderated in the consideration of the jury, and that as a consequence the erroneous instruction neither contributed to nor controlled the verdict."

We think a similar and even stronger situation is here presented and that this court ought not to adopt or give application to a rule that the positive effect of an express instruction upon a specific subject which is admittedly correct will be overcome by a general though erroneous instruction not expressly dealing with that subject in the absence of a very clear showing that the jury have been misled thereby. Among other cases bearing upon this subject are Garrette v. Granger, etc., Ass'n, 208 P. 1010, 58 Cal. App. 396; Bourguignon v. Peninsular Ry. Co., 181 P. 669, 40 Cal. App. 689, 695; Green v. S. P. Co., 199 P. 1059, 53 Cal. App. 194; Haun v. Tally, 181 P. 81, 40 Cal. App. 585 (on rehearing); Phillips v. Hobbs, 227 P. 622, 67 Cal. App. 199, 210.

The appellant Susan M. Saltzen makes the same contention as that above considered with respect to similar instructions applying to her case. While it is true that the instruction which the trial court gave with special reference to her case is more broad and hence somewhat more objectionable than that above quoted as complained of by the appellant J. D. Saltzen, we are bound to conclude that if the jury was not misled in the one case they would not be in the other in the light of the fact that the court's correct and specific instruction as to contributory negligence was given in each case, and that the foregoing authorities set forth the correct doctrine to be applied to each of these appeals.

[4] The appellants each make the final contention that the jury should have found by their verdict that the driver of the defendant's truck was guilty of negligence as a matter of law and that their and each of their injuries were proximately caused thereby. The evidence with relation to the said driver's conformity to or disregard of the duty enjoined upon him by the Motor Vehicle Law (St. 1919, p. 216, § 12, subd. n) of extending his hand a sufficient length of time before turning his truck as to give timely notice of his intention is quite in conflict, and under the quite well-settled rule the question of the negligence of the driver of the vehicle is under such circumstances a question of fact for the jury. We think it was so in the instant case, and, the jury having resolved the conflict in the defendant's favor, there is no merit in the appellants' said contention upon these appeals. We discover no error in the record sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of these cases.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

198 Cal. 163

In re BURKE'S ESTATE. (Sac. 3626.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ¶1010(1).

Supreme Court is bound by finding of trial court on question of fact, if supported by any substantial evidence.

2. Executors and administrators ¶93(1), 96—Administrator, or executor, undertaking to carry on deceased's business without authority, or make new contracts, does so at his peril.

If administrator, or executor, without authority, undertakes to carry on business in which deceased was engaged, or undertakes new contracts or engages in new enterprises, he does so at his peril.

3. Executors and administrators ¶93(1).

Generally, an administrator, or executor, is under no obligation to continue business of deceased.

4. Executors and administrators ¶91—Administrator, acting to detriment of estate, is not surcharged, if he acts with authority in good faith as a reasonable man.

Where administrator is charged with duty or vested with power to act, and does so to detriment of estate, he will not be surcharged, if he acts in good faith and as a cautious and prudent man would likely act under same circumstances.

5. Executors and administrators ¶510(10)—Whether it would have been better for administrator to have breached building contract rather than complete performance was for probate judge.

Where administrator completed a building contract binding on personal representatives, and there was no evidence that intestate would have performed contract more profitably, the question whether damages for breach would have been less than loss by performance was for probate judge.

6. Executors and administrators ¶202½—Administrator is under duty to perform his intestate's contracts, unless acts to be performed are personal.

Administrator is under duty to perform contracts of his intestate, unless acts to be performed are personal, and therefore discharged by death.

7. Contracts ¶309(1), 311—Contracts contemplating performance by others, or involving services that may be performed by others, are not discharged by death or disability.

Contracts involving services that may be performed by others, or in which performance by others is contemplated, are not discharged by death or disability of party who was to perform such acts.

8. Contracts ¶311—Building contract is not ordinarily deemed a personal contract discharged by death.

Ordinarily, a building contract is not one deemed to have been entered into because of personal skill or taste of contractor, so as to be discharged by contractor's death, unless it appears that the character, credit, and substance of contractor was an inducement to the contract.

9. Executors and administrators ¶109(1).

Procurement of permission of probate court is not absolutely essential to allowance of expenditure by the administrator.

10. Executors and administrators ¶92—Loss sustained by administrator in completing building contract held properly allowed, though question of completing contract was not submitted to probate court.

Where probate court found that administrator acted reasonably in completing building contract, and there was no evidence that intestate could have performed contract more profitably, the probate court properly allowed loss sustained by administrator, though administrator acted without submitting question of completing contract to probate court.

11. Executors and administrators ¶82—In cases of doubt as to administrator's duty, probate court should be consulted.

Where there is a doubt as to duty of an administrator or as to policy to be pursued, the probate court should be consulted before any steps are taken that might seriously affect funds of estate.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas Francis Burke, deceased. From an order of the probate court, settling and allowing the first account and report of the administrator, Miller & Lux, Incorporated, a creditor, appeals. Affirmed.

T. P. Wittschen, of Oakland, Gail C. Larkin, of Los Angeles, and Joseph C. Sharp and J. E. Woolley, both of San Francisco (Vincent J. McGovern, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Stephen P. Galvin, of Los Banos, and H. K. Landram, of Merced, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is from an order made and entered by the probate court settling and allowing the first account and report of the administrator in the above-entitled proceedings, against the objections of appellant, a creditor, whose claim had been approved and allowed for the sum of $3,376.62 by the judge of said court.

Said account included the allowance of a credit in favor of the administrator covering a loss sustained as the result of the administrator carrying out to completion two building and construction contracts, one of which was entered into by the intestate with the Odd Fellows' Association of Los Banos, and the other was made with the city of Los Banos.

The intestate, a contractor and builder, had commenced to perform both of said contracts, and while so engaged died, and his administrator completed the performance of the covenants of his said intestate's contracts at a loss. While the work commenced by the intestate had not greatly advanced at the time of his death, it had, nevertheless, progressed to a somewhat substantial stage. The foundations were laid, and the preliminary work had been completed in both instances, and considerable material, steel, and timbers had been cut and placed in preparation for the erection of the superstructure. Contracts for material had been entered into by the intestate. No complaint is made that the administrator, in completing the contracts of his intestate, was guilty of fraud or mismanagement, or that the cost of completing said work of construction was greater than it should have been. Objection is made, however, to his undertaking the completion of said unfinished construction in the circumstances of the situation. There would have remained sufficient assets in the hands of the administrator to have discharged said creditor's claim, had not the loss been sustained in the manner above related. No objection appears to have been made by the creditor to the completion of said work at any time during its progress.

The probate court, in its order settling said account, make the following finding:

"The court finds that the administrator carried out and completed two building and construction contracts entered into by deceased in his lifetime, but uncompleted at the time of his death; that said contracts did not require the personal skill of the deceased in their carrying out and completion; that in the carrying out and completion of the same a loss of $6,894.17 was suffered and sustained; that said loss is a charge against the estate, and chargeable against the estate, as part of the cost of administration, and should be allowed."

[1] This court is bound by the finding of the trial court on a question of fact, if the finding is supported by any substantial evidence. Appellant has not pointed out wherein the above finding is not sufficiently supported, but we have, nevertheless, examined the record, and find there is sufficient evidence to support it.

[2] The law is well settled in this state by numerous authorities that if an administrator or executor, without being authorized to do so, elects or undertakes to carry on the business in which the deceased was engaged, he does so at his peril. Estate of Knight, 12 Cal. 200, 73 Am. Dec. 531; Estate of Moore, 13 P. 880, 72 Cal. 335; In re Rose, 22 P. 86, 80 Cal. 166; Estate of Broome, 122 P. 470, 162 Cal. 258; Estate of De Rome, 165 P. 919, 175 Cal. 399.

[3, 4] The rule announced in the above-cited cases is also applicable in cases wherein an administrator or executor undertakes to make new contracts or to engage in some new enterprise. In all such cases it is held that the administrator, or executor, except in rare and special instances, is under no obligation or duty to continue the business of the deceased. Nor is he permitted to enter into contracts or speculate by embarking in business enterprises on behalf of the estate, and, if he ventures to do so, he will be held to strict accountability for any losses thus suffered. The reasoning of those cases is not applicable in its strict sense to cases in which the administrator is charged with a duty, or vested with power to act, and the wisdom of the course to be pursued is in doubt, and who, in the performance or exercise of his duty or power, acts to the detriment of the estate, provided he acted in good faith and as a cautious and prudent man would likely act under similar circumstances. In such a case he will not be surcharged, although the consequences may be bad.

[5] In the instant case, the decedent had entered into a contract binding himself and his personal representative to perform the covenants, which were subsequently performed by the administrator. There is no evidence before us to sustain the conclusion, and we are not permitted to assume as a fact proved that the intestate would have performed his contract, more profitably to himself than it was performed for his estate by his administrator. The solvency or insolvency of himself or his estate depended upon the wisdom or lack of wisdom evidenced by the execution of his contract as tested by the final result. We cannot say, therefore, that, had he lived, he would have been better able to pay his obligation to appellant than was his administrator. The foregoing obligations were created by his own hand and act and were not new obligations incurred by the contracts of his administrator. The parties with whom the contracts were made were entitled to have them respected, and there is no evidence or suggestion that performance was waived by them. Whether it would have been to the interest of the estate, and the creditor as well, for the administrator to have refused to perform, on the theory that any damages recovered against the estate for a breach would have been smaller than the loss suffered by performance, was at best a question addressed to the judgment of the probate judge.

[6-8] The general rule is that it is the duty of an administrator to perform the contracts of his intestate unless the acts to be performed are personal, such as an author to compose a particular work, an artist to paint a particular painting, a sculptor to produce a particular piece of statuary or other work of art, or a lawyer, or physician to render services. Contracts to perform such personal acts are discharged by death or by the disability of the person who was to perform said acts. This rule, however, does not apply where the services are of such a character that they may be as well performed by others. Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 37; McCann v. Pennie, 35 P. 158, 100 Cal. 547; Husheon v. Kelley, 124 P. 231, 162 Cal. 656. Nor where the contract by its terms shows that performance by others was contemplated. 6 Cal. Jur. 448. Ordinarily, a building contract is not to be brought within that class of contracts which are deemed to have been entered into because of the personal skill or taste of the person who is to perform it. Janin v. Browne, supra; McCann v. Pennie, supra; In re Hinchon, 116 P. 47, 159 Cal. 755, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303; Macdonald v. O'Shea, 108 P. 436, 58 Wash. 169, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 417; Bambrick v. Webster Groves Presbyterian Church, 53 Mo. App. 225. It is otherwise, of course, where it is made to appear, as remarked by Lord Denman, that the "character, credit and substance of the party" contracted with was an inducement to the contract. A building contract may, from the character and kind of work to be performed, properly fall within the rule of "personal performance acts." But this is not such a contract.

The rule as stated by 24 Corpus Juris, 53, 54, and which is approved by the weight of judicial authority, and text-writers, is that—

"Executors or administrators are generally bound by all the covenants or contractual obligations of their decedents, except such as are personal in their nature and of which personal performance by the decedent is of the essence, or such as are terminated by decedent's death, even though performance is detrimental to the estate; and, where the personal representative neglects or refuses to carry out the contract of his decedent, the other party has the usual remedies, as in electing to treat it as rescinded and claiming damages. * * *

The rule has been thus stated by this court:

"Where the contract * * * is of an executory nature, and the personal representative can fairly and sufficiently execute all the deceased could have done, he may do so and enforce the contract (Parsons on Contracts, 131); e converso, the personal representative is bound to complete such a contract, and, if he does not, may be made to pay damages out of the assets (Siboni v. Kirkham, 1 Mees & W. 418)." McCann v. Pennie, supra. See, also, Janin v. Browne, supra; Quick v. Ludbarrow, 3 Balshode, Rep. 30; Hawkins v. Ball's Adm'r, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 816, 68 Am. Dec. 755; Halyburton v. Kershaw as Adm'r, etc., 3 De-saus. (S. C.) 105; Billing's Appeal, 106 Pa. 558; 2 Woerner's American Law of Administrators (3d Ed.) p. 1041, § 328; 2 Williams on Executors and Administrators, p. 1348 (10th Ed.).

Appellant chiefly relies upon Exchange National Bank v. Estate of Betts, 176 P. 660, 103 Kan. 807, 3 A. L. R. 1604, as a case directly in point. We have examined that case and others cited by appellant, but we cannot accept the doctrine as therein announced as a precedent which should control our decision in the instant case, in view of the legal principles heretofore announced by this court, and other courts, and which we think are applicable to the facts and binding as to the law of the case. While it may be said that some of the authorities of this state herein cited to sustain the position of respondent, strictly speaking, may be said to be obiter, nevertheless they are at least persuasive, and find support in well-recognized principles of the law of contracts. In the cases of this state in which this court has had occasion to consider the question at all, the conclusion arrived at by us has been favored either by express language or by implication. There is, however, direct authority to be found in the cited cases sustaining our conclusion.

[9, 10] It is a fact that the administrator herein acted without having first submitted the question of the completion of the contracts to the judgment of the probate court. In some jurisdictions such a failure on his part would be regarded as a sufficient reason for the disallowance of an expenditure of the estate's funds. But this court has not gone to the extent that some jurisdictions have gone and made the procurement of the permission of the court absolutely essential to the allowance of an expenditure made by the administrator. In Re Clos, 42 P. 971, 110 Cal. 494, it was said:

"It would have been better, perhaps, as it would in any case, had the executrix first procured the permission of the probate court to make the contemplated improvement before proceeding thereto; but this is not an indispensable condition to the allowance of the demand in her account, where it appears that the expenditures were just and reasonable, and have been made in the interests of the estate. Estate of Moore [25 P. 915] 88 Cal. 1."

[11] The probate court, having examined into the matter before us, concluded that the administrator had acted reasonably in the premises and approved his action. We emphasize the recommendation made by the court, and add that, in all cases where there is room for doubt as to the duty of the administrator or as to the policy that should be pursued, the judgment of the probate court should be consulted before any steps are taken that might seriously affect the funds of the estate.

In view of our decision on the main question, it becomes unnecessary to pass upon the other questions raised by appellant, for the reason that they are included within and are subsidiary to the main question decided.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

193 Cal. 183

SULLIVAN v. DUNNE, Judge of Superior Court. (S. F. 11802.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1926. Rehearing Denied March 18, 1926.)

1. Mandamus ☞164(4)—Objections to writ of mandate to certify transcript on appeal, not specifically alleged by appellees and adopted by judge, are waived (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq.).

Objections to writ of mandate to judge to compel certification of transcript on appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq., not specifically alleged by appellees and adopted by judge, are waived.

2. Mandamus ☞15—Failure to appeal orders striking demurrer to and motion to strike petition for appointment of guardian is no defense to mandate to certify transcript, on appeal from appointment; they not being appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3).

Failure to appeal from orders striking demurrer to and motion to strike petition for appointment of guardian for incompetent is no defense to writ of mandate to certify transcript, on appeal from order granting letters of guardianship, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, as they were not final nor appealable.

3. Guardian and ward ☞8—Proceedings in general guardianship are in probate, but statute gives broad discretion analogous to that of chancery courts (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1763, 1767; Civ. Code §§ 251, 253, subd. 5).

Proceedings in general guardianship of infants, idiots, and lunatics are in probate, but Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, with section 1767, gives a broad discretion analogous to that of courts of chancery to conserve the best interests of their wards as shown in Civ. Code, §§ 251, 253, subd. 5, providing for control and removal of guardian.

4. Attorney and client ☞74.

Determination of actual existence of presumed authority of attorney attempting to act for insane client rests with trial court.

5. Attorney and client ☞78.

Where an attorney was not authorized, his assumed client can found no rights on his unauthorized act.

6. Attorney and client ☞72—Claim of attorney to represent client in another case is of no moment on issue of authority in instant case.

Claim of attorney, whose authority is questioned, to represent insane client in another case, is of no moment, as authority to represent client in one case is no evidence of authority in another.

7. Attorney and client ☞76(3)—Attorney's authority was terminated by total incapacity of insane client of which he knew (Civ. Code, § 2356, subd. 3).

Attorney's authority to resist appointment of guardian was terminated by total incapacity of insane client of which he knew, under Civ. Code, § 2356, subd. 3.

8. Insane persons ☞33(2).

One, understanding nature of guardianship proceedings, may appeal from appointment of guardian, without a guardian ad litem, but not one totally incapacitated.

9. Insane persons ☞33(1).

Under guardianship proceedings, no confinement of incompetent is authorized, unlike proceeding under St. 1903, p. 485, as amended.

10. Amicus curiæ ☞1.

Attorney cannot urge, as amicus curiæ, right to represent insane person in opposing appointment of guardian.

11. Insane persons ☞34.

Son and daughter are preferred as guardians and ministers of temporal affairs of insane person over strangers to his blood.

12. Attorney and client ☞96.

Where attorney, without authority, attempted to appeal his acts, noticing appeal and preparation of record, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, were ineffectual.

13. Insane persons ☞33(2).

Attorney in his individual capacity had no power to appeal from decree appointing guardian for his incompetent client, under Code Civ. Proc. § 938.

In Bank.

Petition by Frank J. Sullivan for writ of mandate to be directed to Frank H. Dunne, as Judge of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Department No. 9 thereof, to compel certification of reporter's transcript on appeal from a decree adjudging petitioner incompetent. Writ denied.

Robert P. Troy, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This is an original proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent, Hon. Frank H. Dunne, as judge of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, to certify a reporter's transcript prepared in accordance with section 953a et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, on an appeal from an order and decree adjudging Frank J. Sullivan, the alleged petitioner herein, to be an incompetent, and appointing as guardians of his person and estate (consisting of property of the value of about $2,000,000) his children, Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle. Said appeal was attempted to be perfected by Robert P. Troy, Esq., who, as he claims, was at all times herein mentioned the attorney for the said incompetent.

It appears from the application herein, that on the 8th day of May, 1925, Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle filed in the respondent court their verified petition, alleging the incompetency of the said Frank J. Sullivan, and prayed that they be appointed guardians of his person and estate. Thereafter, on May 14, 1925, the said Robert P. Troy, Esq., appeared in opposition to the petition, and at the same time alleging himself to be the attorney for the said Frank J. Sullivan, purported to file a demurrer and a notice of a motion to strike the said petition from the files. Said attorney had made no prior appearance in the cause and based his authority to so represent the said Frank J. Sullivan in all matters therein pending upon an authorization which he claimed the said Frank J. Sullivan had executed about six months prior to his incompetency. It is also alleged that he is at the present time acting, as the attorney for the said Frank J. Sullivan in the case entitled Phelan v. All Persons, S. F. No. 11565, pending in this court, and which will again be referred to. On May 18, 1925, Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle served upon the said Robert P. Troy a notice of a motion supported by affidavits striking the demurrer and motion theretofore interposed by the latter from the files, for the reason that the said Robert P. Troy had not been authorized by said Frank J. Sullivan to appear for him in said cause or authorized to file on his behalf said demurrer or motion, and that he willfully and without authority appeared for said Frank J. Sullivan therein, and, finally, that there was no authority in law for the filing of a motion, demurrer, answer, or other opposition of any kind to the petition. On the 8th day of June, 1925, the respondent struck from the files the demurrer and motion of the said Robert P. Troy, on the grounds:

"That said Robert P. Troy had no authority from Frank J. Sullivan to file on his behalf either said demurrer or said notice of motion to strike out said petition and that said Robert P. Troy willfully and without authority appeared, or attempted to appear, for a party in said proceeding, to wit, for Frank J. Sullivan. * * *

At the same time the respondent judge refused to make an order permitting the latter to visit and consult with the said Frank J. Sullivan on account of his physical and mental condition, and also denied his application for a trial by jury. The court thereupon declined to recognize said Robert P. Troy as an attorney in the proceedings, proceeded to a consideration of the merits, and, at the conclusion thereof, found that the said Frank J. Sullivan had been personally served with notice and a citation of the proceeding (section 1763, Code Civ. Proc.), and that since the 10th day of March, 1925, he was, on account of old age, paralysis, and weakness of mind, unable, unassisted, to properly manage or take care of himself or his property, and by reason of his condition was likely to be deceived and imposed upon by artful and designing persons. It thereupon ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the petition of Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle be and the same was granted. Entry of judgment was made on June 15, 1925, but Troy averred that he had never been served with a notice of the entry thereof and that he had no knowledge of the entry of the same until he voluntarily examined the records on August 4, 1925. He attempted to file a notice of appeal therefrom on August 7, and at the same time filed a notice to the clerk to prepare a record in accordance with section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. After the preparation of the record and the forwarding of the five-day notice to the attorneys by the clerk, it was presented by the said Robert P. Troy to the respondent for certification. On motion of the said Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle, respondent refused to certify the same, for the reasons that the said Robert P. Troy had no authority to file said notice of appeal from said order granting the petition for guardianship; that said Robert P. Troy had no authority to file a notice and request to the clerk of said court to make up and prepare said transcript or to appear for the said Frank J. Sullivan in any proceeding for the settlement thereof; and that said Robert P. Troy had no right to have a record on appeal from said order granting said letters of guardianship prepared, for the reason that the orders striking from the files had not been appealed from within the time allowed by law. Hence the proceeding.

In response to the issuance of an alternative writ duly issued herein, the respondent interposed both a demurrer and an answer, wherein he admitted that a notice of appeal had been filed in said court, but alleged the fact to be that the making or filing of said notice was not the act of the said Frank J. Sullivan, but was the act of the said Robert P. Troy alone; that he appeared in the said proceeding wholly without the authority of the said Frank J. Sullivan; that respondent had no information or belief sufficient to enable him to answer the allegations relative to a prior authorization of the said Robert P. Troy, but alleged in respect thereto that such an appointment was inherently and wholly improbable in the nature of things, and that he was unwilling to find as a fact that the said Robert P. Troy had ever been so authorized, and that he was warranted in finding as a fact that said Troy had no authority to appear in said cause or proceeding; that if any antecedent, authorization, or employment existed, it had been wholly canceled and terminated by the total incapacity of the said Frank J. Sullivan on the 10th day of March, 1925, of which the said Robert P. Troy had full knowledge.

[1, 2] The contentions advanced by the said Troy in support of the issuance of the writ are that the finding of the court that "he appeared willfully in the cause and without the authority of the said Frank J. Sullivan" should not be affirmed in view of the presumption that he was acting in accordance with and by force of a prior authorization from the latter, and that the proceeding, by virtue of the perfection of the appeal, had been transferred to this court, notwithstanding the fact that the appeal may not have been filed by an attorney duly authorized by his client, and that it was the duty, therefore, of the respondent to certify the transcript. Inasmuch as all objections which might have been urged against the certification of the transcript have been waived except those specifically set out by the said Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle and adopted by the court as a justification for its refusal to certify the same (Pierce v. Works, 154 P. 852, 171 Cal. 684), and in view of our conclusion that the third assigned reason is without merit, inasmuch as the attempted appeal has been taken from the order granting letters of guardianship (section 963, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc.; 13 Cal. Jur. 167), rather than from the intermediate and interlocutory orders striking the demurrer and motion from the files, which were neither final nor appealable (Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Missouri, etc., Ry. Co., 92 P. 868, 152 Cal. 344), we pass at once to the consideration of the question whether the first two grounds assigned by the respondent and attacked by the said Robert P. Troy are legally sufficient to justify the former's refusal to certify the transcript. We are of the opinion that they are.

[3-6] At common law the king, as parens patriæ and fountain of justice, is the general protector of all infants, idiots, and lunatics. But the chancellor, in his quality of keeper of the king's conscience, in this respect fully represented the crown, and thus acted in the general guardianship of all infants, idiots, and lunatics; the king delegating his authority to avoid application to him in person. But the superintendence of the trust, when the fact of lunacy is ascertained and a proper custodian of the insane person and of his estate appointed, is a part of the general jurisdiction of the court of chancery. Woerner, American Law of Guardianship, pp. 2, 3, 4. Such proceedings in this state, however, are in probate. In re Bundy, 186 P. 811, 44 Cal. App. 466; 14 Cal. Jur. 354. Nevertheless, section 1763, Code of Civil Procedure, prescribing the methods to be followed in matters of guardianship of insane and incompetent persons and the powers of the courts in such proceedings, gives a broad discretion, quite analogous to that vested in courts of chancery to conserve the best interests of their wards. In re Crocker, 163 P. 1015, 174 Cal. 660. In such proceedings the courts, indeed, will zealously guard and scrupulously conserve the interests of the incompetent. Under section 1767, Code of Civil Procedure, the appointment of a guardian is proper where it appears that the alleged incompetent is for any reason mentally unable, unassisted, to properly take care of himself or manage his property, and, by reason thereof, would be likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons. Estate of Schulmeyer, 153 P. 233, 171 Cal. 340. In the determination of this cause the issue arose, at the time of the disposition of the order striking the demurrer and motion from the files, and at the time of the certification of the record on appeal, whether the said Robert P. Troy acted with authority from his alleged client. The trial court found and adopted its conclusion thereon, as a basis and justification for its refusal to certify the record, that it was inherently and wholly improbable that there ever existed a prior appointment authorizing the said Robert P. Troy to represent the incompetent in the cause. The solution of this question must rest in this case, as in any other, with the trial court. Estate of Schulmeyer, 153 P. 233, 171 Cal. 340. The fact that an attorney appears on behalf of a party raises a presumption of "authority upon his part to do so." But this presumption is disputable, and where it is shown, as it is here, that the attorney was not authorized, the party whom he assumed to represent can find no rights upon the unauthorized act. Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 143 P. 723, 168 Cal. 397. The claim that the said Robert P. Troy is at the present time representing the said Frank J. Sullivan in a cause now pending in this court, entitled Phelan v. All Persons, supra, in which the latter is the appellant, is of no moment in this case. The fact that an attorney may possess the necessary authority to represent a client in one case is not evidence of his authority to represent him in another and distinct proceeding. Whether the interests of the guardians and the incompetent herein will be necessarily antagonistic or adverse to the faithful performance of their duties in that proceeding does not appear, but, if such adversity of interests should arise, it may then become the duty of the probate court to remove the forner and substitute other competent persons in their stead. Section 253, subd. 5, Civ. Code. Furthermore, section 251, Civil Code, provides that—"In the management and disposition of the person or property committed to him, a guardian may be regulated and controlled by the court."

[7] The court further found, and alleged in its answer, that, if any antecedent employment authorizing an appearance of the said Robert P. Troy for or on behalf of the said Frank J. Sullivan in this proceeding existed, the same and the relationship of attorney and client upon which it was based had become wholly canceled and terminated by the total incapacity of the said Frank J. Sullivan on March 10, 1925, of which the said Robert P. Troy had full knowledge. There is not the slightest doubt but that the said Frank J. Sullivan is now and since March 10, 1925, has been an incompetent person. The court found that the latter had become mentally unable, unassisted, to properly care for, and manage his property or himself, and that it would be likely that he would be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons. Estate of Schulmeyer, supra. In support of the petition for letters of guardianship, affidavits were introduced by Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle. Other documentary evidence, such as affidavits of the attending physicians and others, was introduced upon the motion to dismiss the instant appeal, all of which is, in the main, reproduced and discussed by counsel in the closing brief filed in this case. Said affidavits establish the fact that on March 10, 1925, the said Frank J. Sullivan suffered a hemorrhage of the left ventricle of the brain and that the right side thereof, within a very short time, likewise became affected; that since that time the said Frank J. Sullivan has been unable to speak, write, talk, or communicate in any way with any person; that his mind since said time and by reason thereof has become a "complete blank"; that he has been unable to use his limbs or to care for himself or to exercise any of his faculties; that he is absolutely helpless and at all times since said time has been compelled to require assistance to enable him to eat and drink and has likewise been unable to sit up or stand alone; that on June 8, 1925, he was removed to Santa Cruz in the hope and expectation that the climate there would be beneficial to his health; that at all times since said 10th of March, 1925, he has been "of profoundly unsound mind." This evidence, in addition to other circumstances appearing herein, is legally sufficient to support the conclusion of the respondent. Not only is this true, but there is not the slightest statement or suggestion of substantial value contradicting or controverting the showing made by the guardians as to the utter helpless physical condition and general insanity of the said Frank J. Sullivan. Counteraffidavits, interposed by the said Robert P. Troy, are wholly lacking in material substance, and for the most part constitute mere conclusions of the affiant, inasmuch as it is alleged therein that the latter has neither seen nor communicated with the said Frank J. Sullivan since March 10, 1925.

It is the statutory rule in this state that the power of an agent is terminated as to any person having notice thereof by the incapacity of the principal to contract. Section 2356, subd. 3, Civ. Code; San Francisco Clearing House v. McDonald, 122 P. 964, 18 Cal. App. 212, 216. It is also well recognized by the authorities that the law of principal and agent is generally applicable to the relation of attorney and client (1 Weeks on Attorneys, p. 216), and that the insanity or incapacity of the client will therefore operate as a termination of the authority of the attorney (1 Thornton on Attorneys at Law, p. 236; 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1226; In re Stenton, 105 N. Y. S. 295, 53 Misc. Rep. 515; Merritt v. Merritt, 50 N. Y. S. 604, 27 App. Div. 208; Joost v. Racher, 148 Ill. App. 548; 6 C. J. 676; Chase v. Chase, 71 N. E. 485, 163 Ind. 178).

The case of Chase v. Chase, supra, likewise involved a proceeding in mandamus and presented facts not dissimilar to those appearing in this proceeding, and the court there stated, in answer to similar contentions herein advanced, that:

"Although it appears to be a controverted question whether the intervening insanity of a principal operates per se as a revocation of the agency, as against third persons, who have, without knowledge of such insanity, and before an inquest, dealt with the agent on the assumption that the prior authority still existed, yet we apprehend that no authority can be found which sanctions, as between the principal and the agent the right of the latter to act where he has full knowledge of the principal's insanity. Indeed, the doctrine that the insanity of the principal per se terminates the agency is stated in unrestricted terms by most of the text-writers. * * * This is generally put upon the ground, where a reason is assigned, that the derivative authority cannot continue beyond the time when the principal might himself lawfully act in the premises. * * *

"We must assume, to give the agreement operation, that it was intended to provide for circumstances which afterward existed, wherein the client was too insane to request counsel to defend him, or to exercise any act of authority over the litigation. Indulging the assumption indicated, the agreement was contrary to public policy, as it is incompetent for an attorney to bargain for an authority which enables him, at his own discretion, and without let or hindrance from any one, to carry a defense to the limits of the law."

[8] We may add to what has already been said that, if the said Frank J. Sullivan has not become so mentally enfeebled but what he could have understood the nature of the guardianship proceeding herein, he would have undoubtedly been entitled to the benefit of an appeal from the decree, in his individual capacity and without the necessity of the intervention of a guardian ad litem. In re Moss, 53 P. 357, 120 Cal. 695. If, however, he has become so mentally destitute as to lack that degree of understanding, it must be presumed in support of the validity and the regularity of the findings of the respondent that the institution of the guardianship proceeding had become essential to the protection of his person and the preservation of his estate. In either proceeding, or on appeal therefrom, an appearance or attempted appearance by the said Robert P. Troy, as the alleged attorney of the incompetent, would have been without authority of law.

[9] It may be pertinent to here point out that this particular proceeding is not, and bears no relation to, a proceeding instituted under the provisions of the general and comprehensive act defining the powers and duties of the state commission in lunacy and providing for the "care, custody, apprehension, commitment, and maintenance of insane persons and other incompetents" (St. and Am. 1903, p. 485, approved March 26, 1903), and which act has been subsequently amended and supplemented. That act provides the procedure that must be observed in the determination of the question whether or not any person who is alleged to be insane is so far mentally disordered in mind as to endanger health, person, or property, and therefore a fit person for commitment to a state hospital for the insane. The rights of alleged insane persons are fully set out in said act, including the right to be represented by counsel, if desired, and, if finally committed and dissatisfied with the order of commitment, the right is given to such person to have the question of his insanity tried by a jury, if a demand is made therefor within five days thereafter. But this is not such a proceeding. Under guardianship proceedings no purpose of confinement is contemplated; in fact, the adjudication of incompetency in this proceeding would not justify a commitment of Frank J. Sullivan to a state hospital for the insane. And this would be so even if the court had pronounced him insane. The only thing determined in a proceeding of this kind is that a guardian should be appointed by reason of incompetency. Incompetency is but a preliminary step, but necessary to support the order appointing the guardian. In re Moss, supra.

[10, 11] Upon a full consideration of the matter we feel satisfied that the court's finding that said Robert P. Troy was not authorized by any enforceable agreement or contract of employment to represent the alleged incompetent in the proceedings had in the court below must be sustained. He does not and could not urge such right of representation as amicus curiae. The petitioners for letters of guardianship are son and daughter, respectively, of the incompetent, and there appears to be no reason why their good faith should be questioned or suspected. All other things being equal, the law would prefer them as guardians and ministers of his temporal affairs over strangers to his blood.

[12, 13] It appearing that the attempted appeal has been taken by Robert P. Troy on behalf of the said Frank J. Sullivan, but without authority from him, the filing of the notice of appeal and the notice for the preparation of a record under the authority of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, were ineffectual (Title Insurance & Trust Company v. California Development Company, supra), and since the said Robert P. Troy has no authority to perfect an appeal from the decree, in his individual capacity (section 938, Code Civ. Proc.; 2 Cal. Jur. 215, 216), the respondent was therefore justified in refusing to certify the transcript on his behalf.

The alternative writ heretofore issued will be dismissed, and the application for a peremptory writ is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 195

In re SULLIVAN. (S. F. 11765.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 18, 1926.)

Attorney and client ~~§~~96—Appeal by attorney without authority may be dismissed on motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Appeal by attorney without authority, his acts, under Code of Civ. Proc. § 953a, in attempt to appeal, being void so that appeal was not taken according to law, may be dismissed on motion.

In Bank.

Motion in the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Frank J. Sullivan, an incompetent person, to dismiss appeal from a decree of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank H. Dunne, Judge, adjudging appellant an incompetent. Motion granted.

Robert P. Troy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco, for guardians.

SEAWELL, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal, perfected by one Robert P. Troy, from an order adjudging one Frank J. Sullivan to be an incompetent, and appointing his children, Noel Sullivan and Gladys S. Doyle, guardians of his person and estate. Said attorney has, at all times during the pendency of the instant proceeding, and now subscribes himself as the attorney for the said Frank J. Sullivan, and claims the authority to represent the latter in the premises. In the case of Sullivan v. Dunne, S. F. No. 11802, 244 P. 343, this day decided, it was determined by this court, on a proceeding in mandamus, that the said Robert P. Troy had no authority from the said Frank J. Sullivan to appear for him in the said cause, and, by reason thereof, the notice of appeal and the notice to the clerk for the preparation of a record in accordance with section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, were void and ineffectual. The appeal has not been taken, therefore, in accordance with law, and is subject to be dismissed on motion. Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 143 P. 723, 168 Cal. 397.

From what has been said herein, and in the case of Sullivan v. Dunne, supra, the motion to dismiss the appeal must be granted, and the appeal is dismissed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 204

In re GARTENLAUB'S ESTATE.

GARTENLAUB v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

(S. F. 10902.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 23, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 25, 1926.)

1. Trusts $\Leftrightarrow$ 272(1)—Accretions to trust fund from increase in value of securities composing its corpus are part of corpus and not "income, revenues, and profits of trust estate," payable to life beneficiary.

Accretions to trust fund resulting from increase in value of bonds or other securities in which its corpus is invested are regarded as part of corpus of trust and not as "income, revenues, or profits," to which life beneficiary is entitled.

2. Trusts $\Leftrightarrow$ 272(1)—Discount at which bonds are purchased for trust estate is not net income, revenue, and profit to which life beneficiary is entitled.

Discount at which bonds are purchased by trustee as part of corpus of estate is not net income, revenue, and profit to which life beneficiary is entitled, but amount of discount remains in hands of trustee as uninvested part of corpus, and he has duty to make timely investment in other securities, the interest of which would accrue to life tenant.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Abraham Gartenlaub, otherwise known as A. Gartenlaub, deceased. From an order settling the sixth annual account of the Union Trust Company of San Francisco, as trustee, Alice G. B. Gartenlaub appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 197 P. 90, 185 Cal. 375, 24 A. L. R. 1.

Garret W. McEnerney and Andrew F. Burke, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Norman A. Eisner and Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, all of San Francisco (Samuel S. Stevens, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from an order of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, settling the sixth annual account of the respondent Union Trust Company of San Francisco as trustee of the trusts created by the last will and testament of Abraham Gartenlaub, deceased. The appeal is prosecuted by Alice G. B. Gartenlaub, the widow of said deceased and a life beneficiary under the terms of his last will and of the trusts created thereby; and the sole question presented upon this appeal involves the extent, if any, of the right of said life beneficiary entitled to the "net income, revenue and profit" of the trust properties in the hands of said trustee to have the discounts, if any, at which bonds are purchased by the trustee accumulated for her benefit and paid over to her by the trustee. Abraham Gartenlaub died in the city and county of San Francisco on June 1, 1914. His will was thereafter admitted to probate and his estate distributed according to its terms. By his said last will and testament, practically his entire estate, then appraised at the sum of $476,900.42, was devised and bequeathed to the Union Trust Company of San Francisco as trustee for the uses and purposes therein set forth. The trusts thereby impressed upon said properties and imposed upon said trustee were the following:

"First. As soon as may be to sell and convert into money said entire estate and property (except such portion thereof, if any, as may consist of money or of securities of the kind or kinds hereinafter authorized as and for investments for and on account of this trust estate, and except also that the home hereinafter referred to shall not be sold during the lifetime of said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub, unless she shall in writing consent thereto, or unless she shall have relinquished her right in and to the said home, or any part thereof).

"Second. To invest and reinvest the same and also the proceeds thereof arising from such sale or sales and from time to time to change investments with full power and authority to do all and everything requisite or advisable for the efficient discharge of its duties hereunder and subject only to the rules of law and equity applicable to such cases, or as is herein provided, and said trustee is hereby authorized and empowered to invest said trust estate in the securities mentioned immediately hereinafter, to wit:

"(a) In loans secured by first mortgage on first class real estate, to an amount not exceeding sixty per cent. of the value of the security;

"(b) Bonds of the municipalities of the state of California;

"(c) Bonds of public school districts of the state of California;

"(d) Bonds of the various counties in the state of California;

"(e) Bonds of the state of California; and

"(f) First mortgage bonds of commercial railroads, but not including street or interurban railroads; and subject further to the provision that no investment in the bonds of any one debtor, whether state, county, municipal or corporate, shall exceed the sum of twenty thousand ($20,000) dollars and further that no investment shall be made in the stocks of any corporation whatsoever, nor in the bonds of the United States, for the reason that said bonds yield too low a rate of interest.

"Third. To have and to receive the rents, issues, income and revenue of every kind of said trust estate during the lifetime of said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub and Mrs. Sarah Fox, both of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and during the lifetime of the survivor of them and thereout to pay to said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub monthly from date hereof and during the lifetime of said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub seventy-five per cent. of the entire net income, revenue and profit of every kind arising from said estate in said month in any way whatever, and if at the end of any one year it shall appear that said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub has not received an average of at least the sum of seven hundred and fifty ($750.00) dollars for each month of said year, or the portion of the year that said trust has been operative, then, and in that event, said trustee shall resort to the personal property of the corpus of said trust estate and thereout shall take sufficient to make up and pay over to said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub a sum sufficient to make the aggregate receipts of said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub the equivalent of seven hundred and fifty dollars ($750.00) for each month of said year, or portion of year that such trust has been operative, unless said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub shall in writing consent to waive the making up of said deficiency, or shall consent to postpone payments on account thereof in whole or in part; and it is hereby expressly provided that said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub shall have no right to anticipate any payment or payments herein provided for, or to give, grant, sell, assign, or transfer or in any way or manner dispose of her rights, or any thereof, herein provided for, save only of course that after she receives monthly her share of the income or payments, as herein provided, she may then freely use and dispose of the same as her pleasure and wish may dictate.

"Fourth. The remaining twenty-five per cent. of said net income, revenue and profit shall be paid by said trustee from time to time as received to Sarah Fox, or if she shall die before the death of said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub, leaving any child or children her surviving, or the issue of any deceased child, then to such child or children and the issue, if any, of any deceased child, such issue to take per stirpes and not per capita.

"Fifth. If said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub shall die before said Sarah Fox, then, and thereafter the whole of said net rents, income, revenue and profits of said trust estate shall then and thereafter be paid by said trustee to the use of said Sarah Fox, so long as she shall live; or if said Sarah Fox shall die before said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub, leaving a child or children her surviving or the issue, if any, of a deceased child then the said remaining twenty-five per cent. of said net income, revenue and profit of said estate shall go to and shall by said trustee be paid over to such surviving child or children, said issue to take per stirpes and not per capita.

"Upon the death of the survivor of said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub and of said Sarah Fox, the trust and trusts hereby created shall wholly cease and determine and thereupon all of said property of every kind whatsoever shall pass to and vest in the children of said Sarah Fox, or to the survivor of them, if any, and to the issue, if any, of any or all of said children who may then be dead, said issue to take per stirpes and not per capita."

The interpretation to be placed upon the foregoing provisions of the will of said decedent and upon the duties and responsibilities of the trustee thereunder was in certain of its phases before this court upon a former appeal (Estate of Gartenlaub, 198 P. 209, 185 Cal. 648, 16 A. L. R. 520), wherein the question involved was as to whether premiums paid in the purchase of bonds by said trustee should be charged against the principal or corpus of said trust estate or against the revenue thereof derived from such investment of its funds. In order to determine that question, this court was called upon to deduce and set forth the essential principle governing the administration of trusts of this character and hence governing this particular trust; and it did so in the following terms:

"A testator who creates a trust such as that in the instant case has two objects in view: First, the payment of the income arising from a fund to certain persons during lifetime; second, the transfer of that fund to certain individuals upon the death of the life tenants. The existence of a corpus, principal, or fund is an essential element of the trust and the preservation of this principal until the termination of the life estates is indispensable to the fulfillment of the testator's plans. Therefore, any depletion of the principal tends to frustrate the fundamental purpose of the trust and should be avoided and, where the price paid for a bond consists of more than the par value thereof, that method of accounting should be adopted which will prevent the impairment of the principal unless the testator has clearly directed to the contrary. Otherwise the life tenant, who is entitled to receive only income, will, in effect, have received a part of the principal."

Applying the foregoing principle to the question presented upon that appeal, this court held it to be the duty of the trustee in cases where bonds had been purchased at a premium to withhold from the income derived from such an investment such an amount thereof as would be required to return to the principal the amount of the corpus thereof which had been expended in the payment of the premiums paid upon such purchases. The appellant herein, while apparently conceding the correctness of the foregoing principle as applied to purchases of bonds at a premium by the trustee, insists that the converse effect of its application is to be given to the purchase of bonds by the trustee at a discount. A moment's consideration will, however, show that the two situations are not such in either identity or in difference as to give room or reason for such converse application. In the case of premiums they are paid out by the trustee from the corpus of the trust funds in the course of making an investment of such funds in securities which have the twofold desirability of being safe and of yielding a satisfactory return in the way of income; and it is, therefore, held in harmony with the aforesaid principle that the premium at which such securities were purchased should be amortized out of such income in order that the integrity of the corpus may be preserved. But in the case of purchases of securities at a discount, the amount of such discount remains in the hands of the trustee for the time being at least, in the form of uninvested corpus and does not become, as we shall show later any part of the income or profits of the investment to which the life tenant is entitled under the terms of the trust. It does not, therefore, follow that since the life tenant in the application of said principle to premiums must yield up a portion of the income in order to maintain the integrity of the corpus he must, therefore, be entitled to the discounts which, if allowed him, would impair, for the time being at least, and perhaps imperil in the long run the corpus of the trust fund. The only possible or even plausible basis upon which the life beneficiary can rest the claim that she is entitled to receive the amount of unexpended corpus represented in the discount of any particular bond purchase consists in the assumption that the controlling reason why bonds, of equal safety with other bonds which command a selling price at par or at a premium, are upon the market at a discount and are purchased by trustees at such discount, is that such yield lower interest returns, and that this being so, and such bonds being safe and hence certain of being eventually redeemed at par, the life tenant is entitled to have the amount of the discount at which such bonds have been purchased paid over to her in order to make up to her that amount of income which she would have received had the trustee invested that portion of the corpus in securities having a par valuation and hence yielding the larger income. In order to support this assumption, the appellant urges that in the purchase of bonds trustees are governed by certain bond tables or interest tables known to the money market, and wherein the value of bonds as a purchasable commodity is determined by the rate of interest which they carry. The appellant argues from this premise that, since the corpus of the estate can suffer no ultimate impairment from the investment in safe bonds at a discount, she is entitled to such discount for the reason stated.

The difficulty with the foregoing assumption, and hence with the argument based thereon, is that said assumption is not true in point of fact. The question as to what is the duty of the trustee in making investments of the corpus of the trust fund is a question of fact determinable by other conditions and considerations than those derivable merely from the study or comparison of bond and interest tables or than the state of the money and bond market as shown thereby. This is made clear in the instant case by the uncontradicted testimony of Mr. Greene, the trust officer of the respondent and admittedly an expert in both knowledge and experience in respect to those states of the bond and money market which relate to and determine the duties of trusteeships of this character. Mr. Greene testified as follows:

"In buying bonds for trust estate, my company does not ordinarily pay so much attention to the interest yield of the bond as to the safety of the investment. It is our duty to maintain the capital unimpaired as far as we can. Of course, I realize that it is the duty of a trustee to secure as high a return on the bonds purchased by it as is compatible with safety, in order that a life tenant entitled to the income of bonds may receive as large a return as a safe and conservative investment will permit. Therefore, as between two bonds which may be considered equally safe for investment purposes, I would prefer the one which yields the higher rate of return if it is a legal investment for trust funds under our Bank Act. The fact that safe bonds are selling at a discount at any time is due very largely to general financial conditions and to the fact that other bonds presumably as safe pay a higher rate of interest on their par value. Other considerations play a part in requiring the sale of a bond at a discount, such as the fact that the company issuing the bond is new, or not well known or established. It is true that in the case of a well-known and well-established company issuing bonds which are well secured and which constitute safe investments, the main factor which leads to the sale of the bonds at a discount is that the interest return from the bonds is lower than that which can be obtained from other investments presumed to be equally safe. It is true that bonds of the same issue and which are secured by the same security sometimes sell at different times at different prices. Such bonds may sometimes sell at par, again above par, and at other times below par. The fluctuation in price of such bonds of the same issue and secured by the same security may be due to the relation which the interest rate of the bonds will bear at different times to the return which may be secured from other investments which are equally safe and numerous other causes and factors. Undoubtedly, the safest bonds are state, county, municipal, and school district obligations. The rates of interest which they bear are generally less than corporation bonds because of their safety and their income tax exemption."

[1, 2] The effect of the foregoing evidence is to negative the assumption that the controlling factor in determining bond investments by trustees is that of the state of the market, as shown by bond and interest tables, and to affirm the right of trustees to invest the corpus of their trust estates in bonds which may at the time of the investment be obtainable at a premium or at par or at a discount, regardless of the return in the way of interest or income which is provided for by their terms. If this be true, it follows that since the right of the life tenant is measured by the duty of the trustee, the full amount to which the former would be entitled in the way of "income, revenue, and profit arising from said corpus" would be none other than the amount actually provided for as such income, revenue, and profit by the terms of the bond regardless of the price at which it had been acquired. This conclusion becomes all the more inevitable when the legal meaning which has been given to the terms "income, revenue, and profit" is ascertained. These terms have been held in a uniform line of decisions as not to include increases from any cause in the value of the corpus of trust estates; as in Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.) § 546, it is stated that—

"Any accretion to the fund itself as by the rise in value of securities goes to the remainderman. The life tenant also derives advantage from this increased value through the larger income resulting; but if the securities mature or are sold the increased value belongs to the remainderman."

In Stewart v. Phelps, 75 N. Y. S. 526, 71 App. Div. 91, the court holds that—

"Increase" the value of the "trust estate by reason of the increase in value of certain securities belonging thereto * * * belong to the corpus of the fund and should not be paid over to the life beneficiary as income."

In the Matter of Gerry, 9 N. E. 235, 103 N. Y. 445, it was held in respect to a trust fund created by will by the terms of which the "annual interest, income and dividends" were to be payable to a life beneficiary, a surplus over the amount of the original fund resulting from the sale of securities in which the fund was invested was an accretion to the fund to which the remaindermen were entitled and was in no sense a profit upon the investment. In the case of In re Cutler, 52 N. Y. S. 842, 843, 23 Misc. Rep. 508, it was declared to be well settled that in investments and reinvestments of trust securities gains realized are capital, and not income, citing In re Gerry, supra. In the Matter of Graham's Estate, 47 A. 1108, 198 Pa. 216, it was held that where a trustee invests the moneys of the trust estate in bonds and subsequently sells the bonds at an advance and invests the proceeds in other securities, the profit on the bonds is part of the principal of the estate, and as between a life tenant and a remainderman is capital, and not income. In the Matter of Vedder, 15 N. Y. S. 798, it was held that the increase from natural causes in the value of the property of a trust estate does not constitute "profits," and therefore does not go to a life tenant to whom are given the "income and profits of such estate during life; but such increase becomes principal and goes to the remainderman." In the case of Duclos v. Benner, 17 N. Y. S. 168, 62 Hun, 428, it was held that under a direction in a will to set apart and invest a certain sum and pay over "the income, interest, profits and earnings thereof" to the testator's widow semiannually, where such sum is invested in government bonds which are subsequently sold at a profit, the widow is not entitled to such profit, but it belongs to the trust fund as a part thereof. In the early case of Townsend v. United States Trust Co., 3 Red. Sur. (N. Y.) 220, it was decided that under a trust created by will which directed a specified sum to be invested in one of three named classes of bonds and "the interest, income or dividends" arising therefrom to be paid to the cestui que trust during his lifetime, the investment having been made in one of the forms specified and the bonds so acquired thereafter sold at a profit, the cestui que trust was not entitled to receive such profits, but only interest upon the same. This case has been quite generally cited and uniformly followed in later cases involving the same principle, and we think it may be taken to be settled law that accretions to a trust fund resulting from the increase in value of the bonds or other securities in which its corpus is invested, due to whatever cause, are to be regarded as part of the corpus of the trust and not as income or revenues or profits to which the life beneficiary is entitled. This conclusion gains an added force from the consideration that whenever bonds are purchased by the trustee at a discount the amount of such discount remains in the hands of the trustee as an uninvested part of the corpus of the trust estate, and it is the duty of the trustee to make a timely investment of the same in other securities to the interest upon which as it accrues the life tenant would be entitled, and thus there would be made up to her approximately the amount of income which she would have received had the original investment been in bonds at par; and this is all to which, under the express terms of the trust, she would be entitled.

It may be apt at this point in the discussion to dwell upon the foregoing suggestion in its application to the terms of the particular trust involved in this inquiry. The appellant herein is given by the will of her deceased husband "seventy-five per cent. of the entire net income, revenue and profit of every kind arising from said estate," payable monthly during her lifetime; and it is further provided therein that "if at the end of any one year it shall appear that said Alice G. B. Gartenlaub has not received an average of at least the sum of $750 for each month of said year, or the portion of the year that said trust has been operative, then, and in that event the said trustee shall resort to the personal property of the corpus of said trust and thereout shall take sufficient to make up" to said life tenant such deficiency. It thus appears that the only contingency upon the happening of which the trustee would be justified in paying over to the life tenant any portion of the corpus of the trust estate would be that above provided for; yet if the argument presented on behalf of the appellant is to be given effect the trustee would be required to withdraw from the corpus of said estate the uninvested portion thereof represented in the amount of the discount he has retained in making purchases of bonds at less than par, and pay the same over to the life tenant under the terms of the foregoing trust which require the monthly payment to her of the income, revenue, and profit arising from said estate. If it be contended by the appellant that she is not asking the present payment over to her of such discounts but only their accumulation for her benefit, the answer is twofold: First, that the right to have such discounts accumulated must rest upon her right to receive the same now or later as "income, revenue and profits" of said estate, which right, as we have seen, does not exist; second, there is no provision in the will of said decedent creating said trust which would empower the trustee to accumulate any portion of the trust properties in any other form than as a part of the corpus itself. It is not difficult to forecast the confusion which the application of the principal for which the appellant contends might create not only in the administration of this trust but generally in the administration of trust estates. Mr. Greene has testified to the fact that there are various conditions other than the rate of interest which determine the advisability of buying securities at less than par and which determine the disposition of such securities from time to time by the trustee. This is in accord with common knowledge as to the variable state of the bond and money market during the very years that the trustee in the instant case has been exercising the offices and duties of its trust. It is easy to conceive of instances during this period wherein trustees who have justifiably purchased certain securities at a discount might later find it equally advisable to dispose of such securities at the same price below par at which they had been purchased. But what if in the meantime some court upon the life tenant's insistence had directed the discount represented in the original purchase paid over to the life tenant? Or, it might well be during the changing conditions of the recent strenuous years securities deemed to be good investments at the offered discount might, without fault on the part of the trustee, become valueless. In such case, would the corpus of the estate be held to suffer not only the loss incident to the unfortunate investment, but also the amount of the discount which its trustee had in the meantime been required to pay over to the life tenant?

Again, the assumption on the part of the appellant of her right to discounts, based upon investments in the classes of safe securities contemplated by the creation of this trust, is based upon the fixity of such investments until the maturity and redemption at par of the particular bond purchased at such discount; but such a limitation cannot in reason be imposed upon trustees, since in the performance of their duty to invest, preserve, and increase the corpus of the trust they are empowered to purchase and sell securities and to invest and reinvest in the same, depending upon the state of a variable bond and money market and upon the variations in the value of securities caused thereby. This being so, to bind such trustees by the obligation to pay over, or even to accumulate discounts for the benefit of life beneficiaries, would be to create conditions constantly involving, if not imperiling, the integrity of the corpus of the trust estate which it is their essential duty at all times to preserve intact; or, as in the case of the purchase of bonds at a premium, to restore as soon as is practicable out of income. It is the duty of courts in giving application to the essential principle governing the administration of trust estates announced in Estate of Gartenlaub, supra, to approve a rule of action which will tend to relieve the administration thereof in the hands of trustees from the confusion, difficulties, and possible involvement of the corpus of the estate as would arise out of the situations above outlined and others that might well arise out of the adoption of the proposition for which the appellant herein contends. We therefore deem it wiser to adhere to the doctrine enunciated by this court in its former decision and to render the same applicable to discounts as they were therein made to premiums, viz.:

"The duty to restore to principal the total amount invested in the bonds cannot be evaded upon the theory that the bonds may, as a result of fluctuations in market value, be sold at higher prices than those for which they were purchased. * * * The fluctuations in market value after purchase by the trustee are merely changes in the value of the assets of the trust estate, which are to be wholly disregarded in any accounting between life tenant and remainderman for funds from the trust estate invested in income-bearing property."

The trial court having given such application of the principle in its order settling the trustee's account from which this appeal is taken, it follows that its said order must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

198 Cal. 273

CITY OF OAKLAND v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 11748.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 29, 1926.)

Admiralty — 20—Employment on dredger tender had no relation to navigation and commerce, and Workmen's Compensation Act applied, not general admiralty law (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

Work of employee on city dredger tender while tied to wharf being prepared for day's work, though in navigable waters and used throughout San Francisco Bay, had no direct relation to navigation and commerce, and the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended) applied to employee and abrogated his remedy for injury under general admiralty jurisdiction.

In Bank.

Petition by the City of Oakland for writ of certiorari to the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California to review an order awarding compensation for injuries. Award affirmed.

Leon E. Gray, City Atty., and Markell C. Baer, Asst. City Atty., both of Oakland, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Charles Paul, a civil service employee of the city of Oakland, a municipal corporation, was injured while working as a deck hand or donkeyman on an anchor barge or scow, used as a tender to a municipal dredger owned and operated by the city. The dredger was, from time to time, employed for the purpose of deepening the channel in the Oakland estuary and in the Bay of San Francisco. The barge was used in stringing out towlines and hoisting anchors, and in transporting such material as was necessary. It was capable of being towed anywhere about the bay, or even beyond the Golden Gate. At the time of the injury to Paul, it was tied up at one of the city's municipal wharves, and was afloat on the navigable waters of the estuary. At 8 o'clock on a morning, while the crew was making preparations for the day's work, and preliminary to the barge being towed to such places along the shore as might be required, Paul was injured while engaged in cutting wood for the purpose of supplying fuel for a boiler on board. On application by the injured employee, the respondent, Industrial Accident Commission, made an award of compensation, and the cause comes to this court on a writ of review to determine whether or not it has jurisdiction in the premises.

The contention of the city of Oakland, which is its own insurance carrier, is that the injury was of a maritime character, and that therefore the application of the state Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended) was excluded by the paramount force of the law maritime of the United States. The respondent Commission was at first of the same mind, and dismissed the application for an adjustment of compensation. On rehearing, it assumed jurisdiction, and made an award. Two theories are advanced by it in support of its final action. Its first contention is that Paul's employment and injury were nonmaritime, in that neither had any direct relation to navigation or commerce, citing Grant Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, 42 S. Ct. 157, 257 U. S. 469, 66 L. Ed. 321, 25 A. L. R. 1008. Petitioner relies upon certain decisions of this court as sustaining a contrary view. It was held in Zurich, etc., Insurance Co., Ltd., v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 218 P. 563, 191 Cal. 770, that the Industrial Accident Commission of California did not have jurisdiction in the case of a deck hand on a dredger and launch operator, whose work was performed mainly in connection with a privately owned dredger operating on navigable waters, and who was drowned while driving a launch from the dredger to the shore while engaged upon an errand in connection with his employment. It was conceded, in fact during the oral argument it was stipulated, in that case that the employment of Denny at the time of his death was of maritime nature. See, also, Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 218 P. 561, 191 Cal. 763, and James Rolph Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 220 P. 669, 192 Cal. 398. Petitions of the Industrial Accident Commission to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari to this court in the Alaska Packers Case and in the Zurich Insurance Co. Case were denied. Subsequently, on a writ of error in the Rolph Co. Case, the decision of this court, that the Industrial Accident Commission had no jurisdiction to award compensation for the death of a workman killed while actually engaged in maritime work, under a maritime contract, upon a vessel moored to her dock in San Francisco Bay, and discharging her cargo, was affirmed. 44 S. Ct. 302, 264 U. S. 219, 68 L. Ed. 646. When these decisions are correctly understood, it is at once apparent that actual engagement by the injured employee in maritime work, under a maritime contract, were the distinguishing features of each of the cases. They do not decide the question here presented.

Grant Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, supra, relied on by the respondent, lays down the rule to be followed under the facts here present. That was a proceeding in admiralty to recover damages from a shipbuilder for injuries which a carpenter received while working on an unfinished vessel moored in the Willamette river at Portland, Or. The questions presented were determined on a certificate from the court below stating the facts to the Supreme Court of the United States. That court said that the contract for constructing the boat "was nonmaritime, and, although the incomplete structure upon which the accident occurred was lying in navigable waters, neither Rohde's general employment, nor his activities at the time had any direct relation to navigation or commerce"; and, as the matter was only of local concern, to permit the rights and liabilities of the parties to be determined by the local law would not interfere with the characteristic features of the general maritime rules. Therefore it held (page 478, 42 S. Ct. 159) that, while general admiralty jurisdiction extended to a proceeding to recover damages resulting from a tort committed on a vessel in process of construction when lying in navigable waters within a state, under the circumstances stated, the "exclusive features of the Oregon Workmen's Compensation Act [Or. L. § 6605 et seq.] would apply and abrogate the right to recover damages in an admiralty court which otherwise would exist." Another, and the latest, decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on this subject (Millers' Indemnity Underwriters v. Braud, 46 S. Ct. 194, 70 L. Ed. —) also supports the contention of the Industrial Accident Commission. In that case the decedent, while employed as a diver, submerged himself from a floating barge anchored in navigable waters near the bank of the river for the purpose of sawing off the timbers of an abandoned set of ways, once used for launching ships, which had become an obstruction to navigation. While thus submerged, the air supply failed and he died of suffocation. The courts of Texas affirmed an award of compensation made under the Workmen's Compensation Law of that state (Vernon's Ann. Civ. St. Supp. 1918, arts. 5246—1 to 5246—91), and, on writ of error, the case went to the Supreme Court of the United States. In its decision that court again points out that matters which are not of mere local concern because of their special relation to commerce and navigation are beyond the regulatory power of the state (citing cases); but holds that, as to certain local matters, regulation of which will work no material prejudice to the general maritime law, the rules of the latter may be modified or supplemented by state statutes. The decision of the Supreme Court of Texas sustaining the award was accordingly affirmed, for the reason, said the court, that:

"The record discloses facts sufficient to show a maritime tort to which the general admiralty jurisdiction would extend save for the provisions of the state Compensation Act; but the matter is of mere local concern and its regulation by the state will work no material prejudice to any characteristic feature of the general maritime law."

So, in the case at bar, there is nothing in the record from which it can be said that either Paul's general employment as a civil service employee of the city of Oakland, or his activities at the time he was injured, had any direct relation to navigation or commerce. We are of opinion, therefore, that, under the circumstances stated, the exclusive features of the Workmen's Compensation Act of the state apply and abrogate any remedies the injured employee would have under the general admiralty jurisdiction. Grant Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, supra; Millers' Indemnity Underwriters v. Braud, supra. On the authority of these decisions, we are satisfied that to permit the rights and liabilities of the parties to this proceeding to be determined by the respondent commission, under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, will not in any way interfere with the characteristic features of the general maritime rules.

The second theory on which the Industrial Accident Commission assumed jurisdiction of this matter is that the city of Oakland, being but a political subdivision of the state, cannot attack the right of the state to make the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act applicable to all its employees. It contends that it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in a very recent case (City of New York v. McEntee et al., 44 S. Ct. 229, 263 U. S. 688, 68 L. Ed. 507) that a municipality is not entitled to invoke the protection of the federal maritime law in opposition to the law of the state of its creation, for the reason that the state is under no restriction from the federal Constitution or laws in regulating the rights and duties of state and municipal employees. The petitioner stoutly resists this contention, and raises many points in opposition to the theory of the respondent. For two reasons we are not disposed to enter into a consideration of the issue thus presented. The first is that the conclusion we have reached, supra, that, because of the purely local nature of Paul's employment, the exclusive features of the state Compensation Act apply to the case, renders it unnecessary to determine the second contention raised. The second reason is that, while we have been unofficially given the facts involved in the McEntee Case, which show a similitude to those of the case at bar, the court rendered only a "per curiam decision," dismissing the proceeding "for the want of jurisdiction" on the authority of four of its previous decisions. None of these has any direct relation to the question we are here asked to consider. We therefore deem it unwise to attempt to apply the McEntee Case to this proceeding.

The award of the Industrial Accident Commission is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 216

Ex parte DAL PORTE. (Cr. 2833.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1926.)

1. Holidays ⇨5.

Courts, except Supreme Court, are prohibited from transacting business on Saturday afternoon, other than that excepted by Code Civ. Proc. § 134; it being a holiday in view of section 10, amended by St. 1925, p. 225, § 1, and Pol. Code, § 10.

2. Holidays ⇨5.

Judgment rendered in police court on Saturday afternoon in criminal prosecution held void, and imprisonment thereunder, illegal.

3. Habeas corpus ⇨109—Where conviction was void because trial was on holiday, prisoner on habeas corpus will be remanded to custody of sheriff for further action.

Where conviction was void because trial was on holiday, prisoner on habeas corpus will be remanded to custody of sheriff for further action; such conviction not vitiating complaint or process issued thereunder.

4. Criminal law ⇨90(2).

Police court held to have no jurisdiction to try prisoner for sale of intoxicating liquor, since maximum punishment for such offense is over $500.

5. Criminal law ⇨90(2).

Police court held to have jurisdiction to try prisoner for possessing intoxicating liquor.

6. Criminal law ⇨258(2)—Police court docket reciting that defendant was found guilty held equivalent to verdict of guilty on each of two counts.

Police court docket showing trial without jury in prosecution on two counts, and reciting "defendant found guilty," held equivalent to general verdict of guilty on each count.

7. Indictment and information ⇨203.

Judgment will be reversed when based on general verdict of guilty under indictment containing two counts attempting to charge two crimes, where one count was defective.

8. Habeas corpus ⇨4.

Remedy for erroneous conviction in police court because of defective count in indictment held to be appeal to superior court, and not habeas corpus.

9. Criminal law ⇨102—Count charging sale of liquor, over which police court has no jurisdiction, held not to oust court of jurisdiction of another count charging possession of liquor.

That first count of complaint charged sale of intoxicating liquor, over which police court had no jurisdiction, is not sufficient to oust such court of jurisdiction of second count, alleging possession of liquor, over which it had full and complete jurisdiction.

In Bank.

Application of Paul Dal Porte for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Santa Cruz County to secure release of petitioner from custody after conviction of sale and possession of intoxicating liquor. Writ denied.

George W. Smith and Ralph H. Smith, both of Santa Cruz, for petitioner.

Stanford G. Smith, Dist. Atty., and David C. Clark, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Petition for writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner was tried, convicted and sentence pronounced upon him on Saturday afternoon in the police court of the city of Santa Cruz, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 and in default thereof to be imprisoned not exceeding 250 days. The fine was not paid, and at the date of the filing of the petition the petitioner was imprisoned under said judgment in the county jail in the county of Santa Cruz. Petitioner claims that his imprisonment was illegal for the reason that the court had no jurisdiction to try and pronounce judgment against him on Saturday afternoon, a legal holiday.

Section 134 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"No court, other than the Supreme Court, must be open for the transaction of judicial business on any of the holidays mentioned in section ten, except for the following purposes:" (Then follows an enumeration of certain acts which may be legally performed on a holiday, but the trial of an action and the pronouncement of judgment against a defendant convicted of a crime are not included among them.)

Section 10, mentioned in said section 134, Code of Civil Procedure, obviously refers to section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was amended in 1925 to read as follows:

"Holidays within the meaning of this Code are every Sunday and such other days as are specified or provided for as holidays in the Political Code of the State of California." St. 1925, p. 225, § 1.

Prior to this last amendment to the section, section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure was substantially the same as section 10 of the Political Code, which provides (after design-nating Sundays and certain other days as holidays) that—

"Every Saturday from twelve o'clock noon until twelve o'clock midnight is a holiday as regards the transaction of business in the public offices of this state, and also in political divisions thereof where laws, ordinances or charters provide that public offices shall be closed on holidays."

There has been more or less uncertainty as to the legality of certain judicial business transacted on Saturday afternoon ever since the amendment of the Code making Saturday afternoon a holiday for certain purposes. In People v. Heacock, 102 P. 543, 10 Cal. App. 450, the court had under consideration the validity of a judgment of conviction in an action where the trial was concluded during Saturday afternoon. The judgment was reversed upon other grounds, but the court, after reviewing the authorities bearing upon the question of the legality of certain acts performed on Saturday afternoon, declined to decide the point, but made the following observation:

"But under the present state of legislation we venture to suggest to trial courts that it would be safer to treat Saturday afternoon as a legal holiday until the question has been determined."

In People v. Maljan, 167 P. 547, 34 Cal. App. 384, 388, it was held that if it were error for the court to proceed with the trial on Saturday afternoon that the defendant in that action could not complain of such error, for the reason that his attorney had in open court waived the right to object to the trial proceeding on said afternoon. In a later case it was held that "Saturday afternoon has been made a nonjudicial period by the Code. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 10, 133, 134." McGrath v. Langford, 169 P. 424, 425, 35 Cal. App. 215, 217. California Jurisprudence, vol. 23, page 776, treats the subject as follows:

"At one time there was some question as to whether Saturday afternoon was a legal holiday for the transaction of business in trial courts, but with certain changes made in the code provisions pertaining to the subject, such a holiday is now recognized as a nonjudicial period."

[1] From the foregoing authorities we think it must be held to be definitely settled in this state that Saturday afternoon is a nonjudicial day and that the courts, except the Supreme Court, are prohibited from transacting during said period any judicial business other than that excepted by the Code sections above referred to.

[2, 3] In the Matter of Smith, 98 P. 191, 152 Cal. 566, it was held that a judgment pronounced against defendant in a criminal action on a legal holiday was void. It follows, therefore, that the judgment under which petitioner is now being held is void and his imprisonment thereunder is illegal. This does not mean, however, that the petitioner is entitled to be discharged absolutely from custody. The petition herein shows that the complaint was filed against petitioner in said police court, and that under said complaint a warrant of arrest was issued, under and by virtue of which petitioner was placed under arrest and held pending said trial. These proceedings are still pending against petitioner. The mere fact that the police court had no jurisdiction to try petitioner on a holiday, and for that reason all such proceedings, including the judgment rendered against petitioner, were void, does not in any manner vitiate the complaint filed therein against him or the process issued thereunder. In the Matter of Smith, supra. He is still subject to be tried on any valid charge made against him in said complaint. In the Matter of Smith, supra, the judgment was pronounced on a holiday and therefore held to be void. The court, however, refused to discharge the prisoner from custody, but remanded him to the custody of the sheriff to await further action of the superior court. The course adopted by the court in that proceeding is, in our opinion, the correct one to follow in the present one.

[4-9] A further contention is made by petitioner that the judgment is void for the reason that the police court had no jurisdiction to try the petitioner upon the charge set forth in count 1 of the complaint filed against him in said court. It appears that the complaint contained two counts. In the first of these the petitioner was charged with the sale of intoxicating liquor, and in the second with the possession of intoxicating liquor. There is no question but that said court had no jurisdiction to try the petitioner for the offense charged in count 1 of said complaint, for the reason that the maximum punishment for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor is over $500. It is therefore urged by petitioner that the judgment is absolutely void. It is conceded that the police court had jurisdiction over the offense charged in count 2 of said complaint. The docket in the police court shows that the trial was by the court without a jury and recites that, "Defendant found guilty." This was equivalent to a general verdict of guilty upon each count of the complaint. Upon this finding by the court judgment was pronounced. It has frequently been held in this state that the judgment based upon a general verdict finding the defendant guilty under an indictment containing two counts, where it is sought to charge the defendant with two separate crimes, but where one count was radically defective, was erroneous, and would be reversed even though the other count of the indictment was perfectly good. People v. Turner, 45 P. 331, 113 Cal. 278; People v. Garnett, 61 P. 1114, 129 Cal. 364. Accordingly, had petitioner herein appealed from said judgment, the superior court of said county of Santa Cruz was authorized to correct, and no doubt would have corrected, the error of the police court and reversed the judgment. We are not prepared to say, however, that petitioner is entitled in this proceeding to any relief from said judgment on account of its being based upon a defective count of the complaint. As we have already seen, the charge set forth in the second count of said complaint was one within the jurisdiction of said police court, and the fact that the offense charged in the first count of said complaint was one over which said police court did not have jurisdiction would not be sufficient to oust the court of jurisdiction of the offense over which it had full and complete jurisdiction. State v. Silhoffer, 48 Iowa, 283. However, as we have already held that the judgment herein is void by reason of the trial having been held on Saturday afternoon, the question of whether or not said judgment is void for any other reason does not become important, but in the event there should be any further proceedings in the action before said police court, it is obvious that they should not be had under the complaint in its present form.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the petition is denied, and petitioner is remanded to custody to await the further action of said police court under the complaint filed therein against him.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 230

TOWN OF ST. HELENA v. BUTTERWORTH. (S. F. 11124.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 25, 1926.)

1. Licenses $\S$ 7(4)—Ordinance imposing arbitrary license tax on wholesaler, whose place of business is outside city limits, and who makes personal delivery, held not discriminatory because tax on merchants with places of business in city was computed on their sales (Const. art. 1, § 21).

City ordinance, imposing license tax of $15 per quarter on wholesale merchant, whose place of business was outside city limits, and who made personal delivery, is not discriminatory and contrary to Const. art. 1, § 21, because tax on merchants having places of business in city was computed according to amount of their sales.

2. Licenses $\S$ 7(6)—City ordinance taxing nonresident wholesale merchant, who delivers by automobile or other vehicles, but not nonresident merchants who do not deliver by such method, held discriminatory (Const. art. 1, § 21).

City ordinance, imposing license tax on wholesale merchants, whose place of business is outside city, and who makes personal delivery in city by automobile or other vehicle, and not taxing merchants who do not deliver goods sold within city by means specified, held discriminatory and contrary to Const. art. 1, § 21.

In Bank.

Action by the Town of St. Helena against H. J. Butterworth to collect a license tax and a penalty. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. L. Webber, of Napa, for appellant.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The plaintiff municipality brought an action against the defendant to collect a license tax, and the penalty for nonpayment thereof, imposed under the terms of a section of the general license ordinance of the town of St. Helena. The defendant was engaged in the business of selling merchandise at wholesale to merchants of the town. He maintained no fixed place of business in St. Helena, nor was he in the employ of any person maintaining such place of business. He carried his goods into the town and to the merchants in an automobile or automobile truck, and refused to procure a license for the conduct of his business. The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff, and, from the judgment rendered, the defendant has appealed.

[1] It is not disputed that under the provisions of section 862, subd. 10, of the Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, p. 270), the town of St. Helena is authorized to license, for the purpose of revenue and regulation, every kind of business authorized by law and carried on in the town. The sole question presented in the court below and argued here is whether or not section 73a of the general license ordinance of the town is constitutional. It reads as follows:

"Every traveling salesman or merchant carrying his goods in a wagon, automobile, truck, or other vehicle operated over and along the streets of the town of St. Helena, selling his goods at wholesale to the merchants of said town, and who does not maintain a fixed place of business within the said town, distinct and separate from all other places of business or residence, regularly kept open with a salesman in exclusive attendance therein between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. for at least 48 hours in each and every week, or who is not in the sole employ of the proprietor of such an established place of business, shall pay a license tax of $15 per quarter in advance."

It is provided elsewhere in the ordinance that merchants who have a fixed place of business in St. Helena shall pay a license fee which is determined by the amount of business that such merchants transact during any one quarter year. The ordinance fixes a graduated scale for these merchants, running from $5 a quarter, for a merchant whose sales amount to less than $1,500 during the period, to $15 per quarter, for merchants whose sales amount to $6,000, and not over $9,000 per quarter. No license is imposed on any merchant or salesman, doing business with the merchants of the town at wholesale only, whose place of business is outside the limits of St. Helena, but who makes deliveries in any other manner than by personal delivery in a wagon, automobile, truck, or other vehicle.

The appellant contends that the requirement that he pay an arbitrary license fee of $15 per quarter, when the amount of the tax required by other provisions of the ordinance to be paid by merchants who have a fixed place of business in the town of St. Helena is determined by the amount of business that such merchants do during any one quarter, renders the ordinance discriminatory, and the license excessive, as to him. He also invokes the provisions of section 21 of article 1 of the Constitution of California, which provides that no citizen or class of citizens shall be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens. These contentions of appellant appear to be met, in part, by the decision of this court in Ex parte Haskell, 44 P. 725, 112 Cal. 412, 32 L. R. A. 527. That case holds that we are not called upon to say that the ordinance is either oppressive or unreasonable by reason of the difference in the manner of arriving at the amount of the license to be paid by appellant, and the amount to be paid by one having a fixed place for the conduct of business of the same general character within the limits of St. Helena. The court there said (44 P. 725, 112 Cal. 417):

"The very power to license for purposes of regulation and revenue involves the right to make distinctions between different trades and between essentially different methods of conducting the same general character of business or trade."

The manner in which one may conduct his business, by which he avoids the payment of rent, property tax, and other local burdens, makes it an essentially different business from that conducted by regular merchants having a fixed place of business, and is a good reason for discrimination in the matter of fixing the amount of the license tax each shall pay, provided, of course, the ordinance fixing the tax is not clearly open to the objection that it is oppressive and unreasonable. Ex parte McKenna, 58 P. 916, 126 Cal. 429, 432. The ordinance here in question is not open to attack because, in arriving at the amount of the license tax to be paid by appellant, it makes a distinction between essentially different methods of conducting the same general character of business. Bramman v. City of Alameda, 124 P. 243, 162 Cal. 648.

[2] But, for another reason we are of the opinion that the ordinance imposing an arbitrary license tax of $15 per quarter on the business of appellant is open to attack. It discriminates between the wholesale merchant whose place of business is outside the town of St. Helena and who ships his goods to the merchants in the town by any other method than by personal delivery in a wagon, truck, automobile, or other vehicle, and the wholesale merchant whose place of business is outside St. Helena, and who uses those means of delivering his goods within the town. The wholesale merchant in the first class is exempted; the merchant in others is placed under the burden of the tax. We are unable to perceive any rational reason for such discrimination in favor of the one class as against the other. The decision in Ex parte Haskell, supra, has no application to the objection to the St. Helena ordinance we are now considering. The ordinance in that case, as was pointed out by the court (page 420), was general in its terms, and applied alike to all residents and nonresidents who did not maintain regular places of business in the city of Chico, and who sold to persons not regularly engaged in carrying on such lines of business. The ordinance here, in the imposition of the license tax on appellant and exempting other wholesalers, discriminates between persons similarly situated and exercising the same privileges. It therefore falls within the inhibition of the constitutional provision. Article I, § 21; Bramman v. City of Alameda, supra; In re Robinson, 230 P. 175, 68 Cal. App. 744, and cases cited.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; LENNON, J.; RICHARDS, J.

198 Cal. 221

Ex parte COHEN. (Cr. 2829.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1926.)

1. Criminal law §995(5)—Sentence imposing fine, or imprisonment in default thereof, is valid, although uncertain as to whether imprisonment is punishment or means of collecting fine (Wright Act [St. 1921, p. 79]).

Sentence for sale of intoxicating liquors contrary to Wright Act, imposing fine or imprisonment in default thereof, is valid, even if uncertain as to whether imprisonment is punishment or means of collecting fine.

2. Criminal law §1216(2)—Specified statutes held to provide only instances in which sentences may be made cumulative (Pen. Code, §§ 105, 669).

Pen. Code, § 105, punishing escape from state prison, and section 669, relating to method of computing term of imprisonment of person convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced on him for either, provide only instances in which sentences may be made cumulative.

3. Courts §493(1)—When state and federal courts may each take jurisdiction, tribunal where jurisdiction first attaches holds it to exclusion of other until its jurisdiction is exhausted.

When state court and federal court may each take jurisdiction of matter, tribunal where jurisdiction first attaches holds it to exclusion of other until its duty is fully performed and jurisdiction involved is exhausted.

4. Habeas corpus §85(1)—In absence of objection by federal authorities in whose custody accused was, his coming into state court voluntarily raises presumption in habeas corpus proceedings that he was properly before state court (Wright Act [St. 1921, p. 79]).

Where accused, in custody of authorities of federal court which had first assumed jurisdiction over him, voluntarily came into state court in prosecution under Wright Act, for sale of intoxicating liquors, no objection having been made by federal authorities, it will be presumed in habeas corpus proceedings that he was properly before state court.

5. Criminal law §1001—Where federal court first assumed jurisdiction of accused, staying judgment of state court imposing fine, or in lieu thereof imprisonment, during imprisonment under federal judgment, and imprisoning him thereafter under state judgment was proper (Wright Act [St. 1921, p. 79]).

Where federal court first assumed jurisdiction over accused, judgment of state court imposing fine for violation of Wright Act, by sale of intoxicating liquors, or imprisonment in lieu thereof, had to be stayed, where accused did not pay fine, pending satisfaction of federal judgment, and after his release from imprisonment by federal authorities, imprisoning him under judgment of state court was proper.

6. Criminal law §1216(2)—Statute relating to imprisonment of person convicted of more than one offense held not to apply, where federal court sentenced accused to imprisonment and state court sentenced him to pay fine with alternative of imprisonment (Pen. Code, § 669).

Pen. Code, § 669, providing for time of beginning of imprisonment for second or subsequent crimes of which accused was convicted before sentence was pronounced upon either of such crimes or for first offense, does not apply to person who was sentenced by federal authorities to imprisonment and by state court to pay fine with alternative of imprisonment.

7. Criminal law §1216(6)—After suspending execution of judgment by state court pending imprisonment by federal authorities, accused may be compelled to undergo imprisonment in pursuance of sentence by state court (Pen. Code, § 1203).

Suspending execution of judgment of state court in deference to exercise of federal jurisdiction and not intended to give accused probationary privilege provided for in Pen. Code, § 1203, on expiration or release from imprisonment by federal authorities accused may be imprisoned in pursuance of sentence by state court.

In Bank.

Original application by George Cohen for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the sheriff of Sacramento County to secure his release from custody upon commitment after a plea of guilty of violating the Wright Act. Writ denied.

Donald McKisick and Wallace Shepard, both of Sacramento, for petitioner.

J. J. Henderson, Dist. Atty., and Wm. A. Green, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. The petitioner alleges that he is unlawfully imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Sacramento; that on the 14th day of March, 1924, he pleaded guilty in the superior court of the said county to a charge of violating the "Wright Act" (St. 1921, p. 79), resulting from the sale of intoxicating liquor in that county; that upon said day the superior court pronounced judgment by which it was decreed that he pay a fine in the sum of $1,000 "or in default of payment of said fine that he be punished by imprisonment in the county jail * * * for the term of 6 months"; that a warrant of commitment on said judgment was issued out of the superior court on the 14th day of March, 1924; that, at the time of imposing said sentence and without his consent, said superior court, of its own motion, made a minute order staying the execution of said judgment for a period of 15 months; that said order of stay was made by the superior court because of the fact, as petitioner alleges, that he had, on the preceding day, to wit, March 13, 1924, been sentenced by the Northern Division of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, to serve a term of 15 months in the said county jail of Sacramento county; that on the 7th day of March, 1925, the petitioner was duly discharged from the county jail and the further service of the sentence imposed by the said District Court of the United States; that he remained at large until July 7, 1925; that upon said day "said sheriff, without any warrant, authority, or process of law, seized upon and imprisoned the petitioner, and has ever since held him prisoner in said county jail at Sacramento, Cal., wholly on pretense that by reason of said purported stay of execution the sentence pronounced by the superior court on the 14th day of March, 1924, has not been served and that he should be imprisoned for 6 months next after the 7th day of July, 1925"; that application for a writ of habeas corpus was first made on July 26, 1925, to the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, and was denied without prejudice; that on July 28, 1925, a similar application was made to the same court and was likewise denied; that thereafter application was made to the Supreme Court, which application was denied on August 1, 1925; that on August 24, 1925, a further application was presented to said District Court of Appeal "on grounds not presented on previous applications" and was denied; that this application is made "upon the grounds last presented to said District Court of Appeal, viz.:

"(1) The sentence imposed imprisonment as a punishment, therefore that part of the sentence providing for imprisonment is void.

"(2) Unless it were a probationary measure the order affecting to stay execution of the sentence was void.

"(3) As a matter of fact there were not circumstances existing under which the court had authority to stay execution of the sentence; consequently the purported stay of execution was without effect.

"(4) The purported stay of execution was made for the purpose of rendering the sentence imposed by the superior court cumulative upon the sentences imposed by the District Court of the United States which neither the superior court nor the judge thereof had power to do.

"(5) Petitioner was imprisoned at the place appointed upon a regular commitment issued upon the sentence for more than 6 months next after the date thereof, and therefore the sentence has been fully executed.

"(6) That the only ground for petitioner's continued imprisonment is the purported stay of execution, and he is therefore deprived of his liberty without any warrant, process, or authority of law."

[1] 1. In support of this contention it is urged that:

"A sentence which imposes a fine, or imprisonment in default thereof is bad, when it cannot be determined whether imprisonment is provided as punishment or as means of collecting the fine. Brownbridge v. Peo., 38 Mich. 751."

Under the authority of People v. Magoni, 238 P. 112, the contention is without merit. Petitioner attempts to distinguish the judgment entered in the Magoni Case from the one here. We find no basis for the attempted distinction. Because of the similarity between the sentence in the instant case and that in the Magoni Case, we will set forth the facts and holding of the latter adjudication. The defendant was there charged by information with two unlawful sales of intoxicating liquor and was convicted on each count. The judgment provided that on each of the two counts she be punished by a fine of $1,000, and "that in default of payment thereof that she be imprisoned in the county jail * * * for the term of 6 months." The appellant in the Magoni Case contended, as petitioner contends here, that the provisions of the judgments for imprisonment in default of payment of the fines imposed were void. The District Court of Appeal declared:

"The question may be considered as settled in this state contrary to appellant's contention. Ex parte Garrison, 223 P. 64, 193 Cal. 37; In re Kennerly, 214 P. 857, 190 Cal. 774. * * * Appellant urges that the judgment is fatally uncertain because 'no provision is made for defendant in case a part of the fine is paid.' Judgments in substantially the same form as that in question here have been upheld. Ex parte Riley, 75 P. 665, 142 Cal. 124; Ex parte Chin Yan, 60 Cal. 78; Ex parte Ellis, 54 Cal. 204; Matter of Application of Robbins, 151 P. 14, 27 Cal. App. 677. It is proper to suggest that in such a case the judgment would be in more appropriate form if, after imposing a fine, it should provide 'that in default of payment thereof the defendant be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of — at the rate of one day for every dollars — of said fine remaining unpaid until said fine is satisfied, not exceeding — months.' [See section 1205, Penal Code.]"

The Magoni Case, involving as it did an appeal from the judgment, the court properly modified it (section 1260, Pen. Code) in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion. The modification, however, added nothing to the validity of the judgment. As originally entered it was valid, though perhaps lacking in certainty, which, in our view, may be said of the judgment at bar.

2-6. These several contentions, numbered 2 to 6, and set forth above, may properly be grouped, for, in effect, each attacks the validity of the order staying execution of the judgment, and declares it to be void and in excess of the jurisdiction of the superior court, thus rendering the petitioner's present confinement illegal and void.

It is contended by the petitioner that the order staying execution of the judgment is void, for "cumulative sentences cannot be imposed except where they are authorized by sections 105 and 669 of the Penal Code." It is, in effect, urged that the provisions of section 669 do not authorize the stay, for the reason that the judgment of the federal tribunal had been rendered the day preceding the entry of judgment by the state court.

[2] We are in accord with Ex parte Casey, 116 P. 1104, 160 Cal. 357, 358, and other cases holding that sections 105 and 669 provide the only instances in which sentences may be made cumulative. The stay of execution, in the instant case, was not made under the provisions of section 105. In view of the language of section 669—"before sentence has been pronounced upon him for either"—it cannot be said that petitioner's contention would not have some foundation if the two judgments had been pronounced in the state court, for the question of guilt had not been determined on both charges before either judgment was pronounced. But here there is a diversity of sovereignty, and the judgment was pronounced in the federal forum before the charge was determined in the state forum. Hence the question remains whether section 669 may properly be said to have application to a case where, as here, one of the judgments is rendered by a state forum and the other by a federal forum. We do not find it necessary to decide this question, for, even assuming that section 669 does apply to such a case, the writ must nevertheless be discharged for other reasons.

As already indicated, the petitioner had been convicted and judgment entered in the said United States District Court on the day preceding his conviction and the entry of judgment in the state court. Therefore, at the time judgment was pronounced in the state court, the petitioner was a federal prisoner, and, under these circumstances, the question presented is whether the state of California could exercise jurisdiction over petitioner pending the execution of the federal judgment.

The case of Ponzi v. Fessenden, 42 S. Ct. 309, 258 U. S. 254, 66 L. Ed. 607, 22 A. L. R. 879, gives a negative answer to this question. The Supreme Court there declared:

"We live in the jurisdiction of two sovereignties, each having its own system of courts to declare and enforce its laws in common territory. It would be impossible for such courts to fulfill their respective functions without embarrassing conflict unless rules were adopted by them to avoid it. * * * The chief rule which preserves our two systems of courts from actual conflict of jurisdiction is that the court which first takes the subject-matter of the litigation into its control, whether this be person or property, must be permitted to exhaust its remedy, to attain which it assumed control, before the other court shall attempt to take it for its purpose. * * * There is no express authority authorizing the transfer of a federal prisoner to a state court for such purposes. Yet we have no doubt that it exists and is to be exercised with the consent of the Attorney General. * * * Nor, if that be here important, is there any difficulty in respect to the execution of a second sentence. It can be made to commence when the first terminates. * * *" (Italics added.)

[3] Other federal cases affirming the rule that, "when a state court and a court of the United States may each take jurisdiction of a matter, the tribunal where jurisdiction first attaches holds it, to the exclusion of the other, until its duty is fully performed and the jurisdiction involved is exhausted," are Patterson v. Veasey (D. C.) 295 F. 163, 165; U. S. v. Twenty-Six Cases of Intoxicating Liquors (D. C.) 287 F. 542; Harlan v. Harlan, 281 F. 602, 603; Harkrader v. Wadley, 19 S. Ct. 119, 172 U. S. 148, 164, 43 L. Ed. 399; and U. S. v. Van Fossen, Fed. Cas. No. 16607, 1 Dill. 406, 411.

[4, 5] In the instant case, quoting the language of the district attorney at the oral argument, the petitioner "came into court voluntarily." The petitioner having come into the state court voluntarily, and no objection having been made thereto by the federal authorities, in whose custody he was at the time, it must be presumed that petitioner was properly before the state court. But, as the federal court first assumed jurisdiction over petitioner, it follows from the principle enunciated by the foregoing authorities that the judgment of the state court had to be stayed pending the satisfaction and exhaustion of the federal judgment.

As additional reasons for the discharge of the writ we will consider two other grounds urged by the respondent against petitioner's release, namely, (1) that the provisions of section 669 do not apply where one judgment is directly for imprisonment and the other is for a fine with alternative imprisonment; and (2) that, where no part of a judgment has been served and there is no question of probation, the accused, if he be at large, may be taken into custody in execution of the judgment.

[6] (1) Assuming that section 669 applies to this case where the respective judgments were entered by different sovereignties, Ex parte Selowsky, 186 P. 608, 44 Cal. App. 421, properly interprets its provisions. The court there declared:

"We are of the opinion that said section [669] refers to cases where there have been two convictions and the punishment for each has been that of imprisonment. The second judgment for contempt against the petitioner was not a judgment of imprisonment in the county jail. The judgment was that she pay a fine of $200, and, in default thereof, she should be imprisoned. * * *

"The sentence imposed upon the petitioner was that she pay a fine. Imprisonment was not the punishment inflicted, but was only to take place in the contingency that the fine was not paid or collected.

"We think the section of the Penal Code quoted [669], and upon which petitioner relies, must be limited to those cases where there have been two convictions, and the punishment for each is fixed at imprisonment, and is not applicable to a case where the punishment of one of the offenses is a fine with an alternative of imprisonment in the event the fine is not paid."

In view of Ex parte Selowsky, supra, it cannot be held that section 669 is applicable here, where the judgment entered by the one sovereignty (federal) imposed a sentence of confinement, but that entered by the other (state) inflicted a fine alone, with an alternative of confinement in the event the fine was not paid. This reason would seem sufficient, of itself, for a discharge of the writ.

(2) Ex parte Clark (Cal. App.) 234 P. 109, 110, declares in part:

"Section 1203 of the Penal Code first confers upon the court authority, in the cases to which it applies, 'to place the defendant upon probation as hereinafter provided.' The subdivision relating to suspension of imposing of sentence, or of execution thereof, is a part of the process of admitting to probation as authorized by the general provisions of the section. It does not purport and should not be construed to authorize suspension of execution of the sentence except as an incident to the granting of probation, for by implication it declares the opposite intention. Therefore, in order to reach the conclusion that the suspension was within the authority of the court, it must be determined first that the order was, in effect, an order admitting to probation. But in the present case this cannot be so determined for the two sufficient reasons: First, that the order itself states that the application for probation is denied; and, second, because it attempts to retain the defendant in actual custody. We hold, therefore, that the order suspending execution of judgment in the principal case was void, and that the judgment itself has not been satisfied by the expiration of a term of probation. This being so, there appears to be no reason why the defendant may not be taken into custody and compelled to submit to imprisonment in the state prison as required by the terms of the judgment."

[7] Keeping in view the circumstances of the instant case, it cannot be held that the order of the superior court suspending execution of its judgment was intended to extend to the petitioner the probationary privileges provided for in section 1203 of the Penal Code—the sole purpose of the order being to defer to the exercise of authority by the federal jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that the "judgment itself has not been satisfied by the expiration of a term of probation," and "there appears no reason why the defendant may not be taken into custody and compelled to submit to imprisonment * * * as required by the terms of the judgment," or, as in this case, being retained in custody pending the execution of the state judgment.

Upon the three indicated grounds, the writ of habeas corpus is discharged, and the petitioner remanded to custody.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LENNON, J.

193 Cal. 233

PEOPLE v. SLOPER. (Cr. 2806.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 25, 1926.)

1. Criminal law §48—Insanity is not available as defense to crime, unless defendant, when act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of wrongful nature of such act.

Insanity is not available as defense to crime, unless defendant, when act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of wrongful nature of act committed; and, if he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to particular act he is doing, he is responsible for his conduct.

2. Criminal law §49—Defendant is not relieved from responsibility for criminal act, though laboring under partial insanity, if he understands nature and character of his act and its consequences.

Though defendant may be laboring under partial insanity, if he understands nature and character of his act and its consequences, such partial insanity will not relieve him from responsibility for his criminal act.

3. Homicide §270.

Whether accused, when he committed murder, was legally responsible therefor, is question of fact for jury.

4. Homicide §237.

Evidence held to warrant finding that defendant was legally responsible when he committed murder while attempting to rob a bank.

5. Criminal law §50, 51.

Irresistible, uncontrollable impulse and moral insanity doctrines are not recognized as a defense to criminal acts.

6. Criminal law §331.

Defendant has burden of proving existence of insanity by preponderance of evidence.

7. Criminal law §823(7) — Instruction admonishing jury to examine defense of insanity with care held not prejudicial, in view of other instructions (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Instruction admonishing jury to examine defense of insanity with care lest an ingenious counterfeit of such mental malady should furnish immunity to guilt held not prejudicial, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of court's instructions to jury not to be influenced by any opinion that any of them might think court entertained on the evidence and requiring them not to indulge in any prejudices against defense of insanity.

8. Criminal law ⚡823(7) — Instruction that defense of insanity, when "satisfactorily established," must commend itself to sense of justice of jury, held not reversible error, in view of court's charge.

Any error in instruction that defense of insanity, when "satisfactorily established," must commend itself to sense of humanity and justice of jury, etc., held not reversible, in view of court's charge that burden was on defendant to establish insanity by preponderance of evidence.

9. Criminal law ⚡560.

To require fact to be clearly established casts on actor a burden greater in degree than would be necessary to establish it by satisfactory proof.

10. Criminal law ⚡785(16) — Instruction as to credibility to be given witness, who has shown himself to be willfully false in part of his testimony, held not erroneous.

Instruction as to credibility to be given witness, who has shown himself to be willfully false in part of his testimony as affecting his credit with reference to other matters about which he has testified, held not erroneous.

11. Criminal law ⚡981(2) — No abuse of discretion in refusal to submit question of defendant's insanity to jury when he appeared for sentence, where no showing was made that his mental condition had changed since murder was committed (Pen. Code, § 1368).

No abuse of discretion was shown, in view of Pen. Code, § 1368, in refusal to submit question of defendant's present insanity to jury when he appeared for sentence, where jury, by its verdict, impliedly found defendant to be sane at time he committed murder, and no showing was made that his mental condition had since changed.

12. Criminal law ⚡311.

Sanity is presumed to continue.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Felix Sloper was convicted of murder in first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Harry A. McKenzie, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., Harmon D. Skillin, and Robert E. Fitzgerald, Asst. Dist. Attys., all of San Francisco, for the People.

SEAWELL, J. On April 16, 1925, the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco returned an indictment against the defendant, Felix Sloper, accusing him of having unlawfully, with malice aforethought, killed one George W. Campbell, a police officer of the city and county of San Francisco, on the 9th day of April, 1925. He was subsequently placed upon trial, and the jury returned a simple verdict of guilty of murder of the first degree, and the law in such cases adjudges the penalty, which is death, and that penalty was accordingly pronounced by the court upon the verdict as returned. From the judgment of conviction and the denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial this appeal was taken. It was not contended in the court below, nor is it contended here, that the defendant did not fire the fatal shot which caused the death of said George W. Campbell, but it is claimed, first, that he should be relieved of the legal consequences of his act by reason of the alleged insanity of said defendant; and, secondly, that a new trial should be ordered because of the giving of certain instructions by the trial court, which it is claimed were erroneous and were prejudicial to the defendant. The latter will hereafter be briefly referred to.

The facts are brief and the questions of law are both simple and well settled. Some time prior to the 9th day of April, 1925, defendant formed the intent of robbing a branch bank of the Mercantile Trust Company, located at the southwest corner of Pacific and Hyde streets, city of San Francisco, by overcoming by means of force and fear any resistance that might be made to his purpose by the employees in charge of said bank. Prior to the commission of the crime with which he is charged, he had purchased a Nash automobile with funds which he had acquired by engaging in the illicit sales of intoxicating liquor. A few days prior to the 9th day of April he stole a Studebaker automobile, which he planned to use in the actual perpetration of the crime. As a means of confusing the identity of this stolen car he took from it the license plate that was upon it and placed another in its stead which he had stolen from still another automobile. On the day before the attempted robbery of said branch bank he made a reconnoitering tour in said Studebaker car to that locality and explored the bank premises and neighborhood with a view of further familiarizing himself with the situation pursuant to carrying out his purpose of robbing said bank on the following day. In accordance with his plan he drove to the bank building on the next afternoon—April 9th—and bided the time when conditions would be most favorable for the execution of his purpose. The time selected was a few minutes after 2 o'clock. He parked his machine at a convenient place, with the engine running, and entered the bank at a time when no one was present except its manager and two tellers or employees. The manager of the bank was seated at his desk on the business floor with nothing but an ordinary low rail partition separating him from the business public. The defendant, in his preparation for the commission of the crime, had purchased a new satchel in which he expected to carry away the fruits of his crime, which he carried with his left hand. Upon entering the bank he drew a Colt's 38-caliber United States Army model revolver, and pointed it at the manager, who was seated in the inclosure above mentioned, whereupon the manager raised his hands. He was ordered to put his hands down and commanded to pass through the door leading into the cages where the paying and receiving tellers were engaged. Upon entering this compartment, the defendant, closely following the manager, ordered the other two employees, one a man and the other a lady, who started to raise their hands, to put them down. He then ordered said three persons to take positions facing one another in group form, which gave them the appearance, to passers-by, who might by chance look into the bank through the glass doors and windows, of being engaged in ordinary conversation. While the manager and the employees were held in this position, the defendant proceeded to the places where the coin guards and currency drawers were, and, holding said employees under guard, placed within the satchel which he carried some $1,300 of the bank's funds before attempting to make his escape. In the meantime the manager of the bank had stepped upon the burglar alarm which was concealed beneath the carpet and this set the alarm ringing in a nearby store. The continuous ringing of the alarm caused the occupant of said store to partly open the bank door, and, upon observing the manager standing in the position in which he had been placed, he called to him and requested him to turn off the burglar alarm, as it had been ringing for quite a while. Not suspecting that a robbery was being enacted, he departed. Presently a gentleman came into the bank to write his indorsement upon a check, and, observing no one within, went to the "shelf counter" for that purpose. While writing his indorsement upon the check, the defendant, in his attempt to make his escape, holding the satchel with his left hand and the revolver in his right, entered the main business room through one of the cage doors. He proceeded to within 5 or 6 feet of the front entrance door, when the police officer, who had been attracted to the bank by the ringing of the burglar alarm, entered the bank, and said, "Hey, fellows, what is going on in here?" In reply to this inquiry the defendant, who was facing the officer, commanded, "Get 'em up." So far as any one could observe the officer made no motion to draw a weapon. Simultaneously with his command the defendant fired. The first shot knocked the officer's cap from his head and the second entered his abdomen at a point slightly to the right of the median line. The officer, although thus mortally wounded, sprang upon the defendant and prevented him from firing further shots. Immediately the employees and the person who was already in the bank came to the assistance of the officer. A number of people and officers were soon upon the scene. The defendant was overpowered, handcuffed, and delivered into the custody of the officers a short time after the shots had been fired. While thus detained the defendant said to his captors, "I didn't aim to shoot him," and requested that he be not held so tightly. The revolver taken from the defendant contained 2 exploded shells and 4 loaded shells. The defendant also carried upon his person 16 other loaded shells which fitted his Colt's revolver. He also had upon his person $55 of his own money.

Defendant's plan was so well timed that he would have been outside the bank and into his parked machine within a few seconds, had not the officer entered as above related. The defendant, in planning his escape, had previously parked his Nash automobile in a vacant lot at the corner of Ninth and Mission streets, replenished with gasoline for flight. It was his intention to abandon the Studebaker car at an opportune time and make his final escape in the Nash car, thus confusing and misleading the officers as to his connection with the crime. While his plan miscarried, it was a well-considered scheme and was calculated to succeed. Later in the afternoon of the same day the defendant made a statement to the officers which showed that he was fully oriented as to time, place, and person and that he attempted to excuse his crime by saying that it was an accident and that he did not intend to shoot the officer. When brought into the presence of the wounded officer the latter pointed him out as the man who had shot him and denounced him as a coward, to which the defendant replied: "I am sorry that I shot you, but I had to shoot you in order to get away." In all of his statements the defendant was lucid in expression and showed no mental disturbance. Upon the completion of the first statement made by him, which was taken down in longhand, he was requested to sign it, but declined, stating that he did not know what the officer who had purported to record what he said had written. He said he wanted to see an attorney. He was then requested to read the statement, which he did, and upon finishing it remarked that it was correct, but that he wished to make an addition to it. He was told that he was at liberty to make any addition he desired to make. He thereupon took a pen and added the following: "I accidentally shot, not knowing if I hit him." He then subscribed his name to the statement.

[1, 2] There was nothing shown in the plan or execution of the crime from its inception to its tragic end, nor in the appearance, manner, or conduct of the defendant, nor in the disclosures made by him of his connection with the crime or the history of his criminal career, as related by him to the officers of the law, that would tend to establish a case of insanity, considered from the viewpoint of a criminal purpose. His motive, of course, is self-evident. The plan as devised by him and by which he undertook to execute his purpose is conclusive to the point that it was the creation of a deliberate, calculating mind. Within its range there is to be found system and method and the power of co-ordination and the ability to assemble and combine things and events in a congruous manner which could only be done by one who is conscious of the rule of relationism as the average man has learned it by common experience. Further, he unquestionably exhibited a sense of realization as to what he was doing and of the wrongfulness of the criminal act he had planned to commit, and he displayed a keen sense of appreciation as to the dangers attending its execution, as well as the punitive consequences which would follow apprehension. No one act of his betrayed a symptom of mental disorder which the law recognizes as a defense to the commission of crime. In order that "insanity may be available as a defense to a crime charged, it must appear that the defendant, when the act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of the wrongful nature of the act committed. If he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, knowledge and consciousness that what he is doing is wrong and criminal and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct. Although he may be laboring under partial insanity, as, for instance, suffering from some insane delusion or hallucination, still if he understands the nature and character of his action and its consequences—if he has knowledge that it is wrong and criminal, and that if he does the act he will do wrong—such partial insanity or the existence of such delusion or hallucination is not sufficient to relieve him from the responsibility for his criminal acts." People v. Willard, 89 P. 124, 150 Cal. 543. See, also, People v. Gilberg (Cal. Sup.) 240 P. 1000; People v. Perry et al. (Cal. Sup.) 234 P. 890; People v. Williams, 194 P. 1019, 184 Cal. 590; People v. McCarthy, 46 P. 1073, 115 Cal. 255; People v. Hubert, 51 P. 329, 119 Cal. 216, 63 Am. St. Rep. 72; Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 35 P. 856, 36 P. 813, 101 Cal. 338; People v. Hoin, 62 Cal. 120, 45 Am. Rep. 651; People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 50; People v. Coffman, 24 Cal. 230; People v. Hobson, 17 Cal. 424; 7 Cal. Jur. 862, 863. In substance the foregoing instruction was given in the instant case. Measured by the test announced in the Willard Case, which has been approved by this court in every case in which the question of insanity has arisen since our earliest decisions, there is no room for doubt as to the defendant's responsibility to the law.

[3] The foregoing test, known as the "right and wrong" test, and which was very early

adopted as the rule of this state, and is the rule of most of the American courts, is denounced by appellant as being an "antiquated and unscientific" test. It is his contention that the question of insanity is "a question of fact for the jury and not a question of law for the court." Whether the accused was, at the time he committed the act for which he is upon trial, legally responsible therefor, as responsibility is defined by the law, is a question of fact entirely within the province of the jury. The mental test is but a standard by which responsibility is to be measured. It would tend to weaken the safeguards that protect the lives and property of the citizen from the assaults of the vicious and lawless and to aid disorder if it should be established as the law that any mental disorder or disease, however slight, and whether such malady had any perceptible bearing or influence upon the mind of the person moved by malice to commit murder, would afford immunity to crime. The rule that prevails in this state, and, so far as we are advised, in most if not in all civilized nations, was restated, after much discussion and long deliberation in 1843, by Lord Chief Justice Tindall in response to questions propounded by the House of Lords to the judges as to the degree of reason a person should have to be responsible for crime. 16 Corp. Jur. pp. 99, 100, 101, 102. The wisdom of the rule has the approval of the highest judicial tribunals known to the Anglo-Saxon race, and no reason, resting upon experience or known to legal or medical science, has been pointed to which would justify the abolition of a test founded upon necessity and approved by experience, and which prescribes, with reasonable regard for the frailties and weaknesses of mankind, the degree, kind, and quality of mental incompetency or derangement that must be shown to exist to relieve a person of the consequences of his act which otherwise would be punished as a crime.

Counsel for defendant attempted to establish his insanity by offering evidence tending to show that a blood taint produced by syphilis had been transmitted to him from his ancestors, and further that he was a victim of congenital or inherited insanity. The defendant was confined in the state's prison at San Quentin in 1918-1919 under a commitment of burglary. The resident physician testified that he examined him physically during that period and diagnosed his case as triple positive syphilis or syphilis in the tertiary stage. He gave no testimony as to the mental condition of the defendant while confined in the prison. There was no indication of an active syphilitic condition existing in the blood stream at the time defendant was awaiting trial, considered from either a physical or neurological viewpoint. Such was the admission of one of the physicians who examined him upon the request of his counsel. An examination made shortly before trial of the spinal fluid showed negative reaction as to the Wasserman test, negative or normal for globulin and negative for the colloidal gold test. The cell count, however, was higher than normal. A high cell count of the spinal fluid is produced by any inflammation or irritation in the nervous system and it may be caused by syphilis. It indicates some inflammation or irritation of the membrane which covers the brain or spinal cord. Tested by the several standards this was the only test which registered a positive reaction. There was no evidence that the defendant was suffering from active syphilis at the times that he was examined by the alienists, nor, as a matter of fact, were there any physical symptoms manifest that would indicate that he ever had the disease, save the cell count test above mentioned.

[4] The family history of the defendant, as related by two members of his father's family, and which largely forms the basis of the defense's theory of insanity, was placed before the jury. A judgment pronouncing the defendant's father insane and committing him to the state hospital at Agnews in 1911 was received in evidence. The father was detained in the hospital for a period of but 3 months and a few days and was subsequently discharged. He was never thereafter returned to the hospital. The superintendent of the institution testified that when the father was admitted to the hospital he was suffering from a psychosis induced by alcoholism, and that he was not afflicted with paresis. Testimony was offered by the defense and received in the case tending to show the abnormal or subnormal mental condition of the mother and sister of defendant's father, and also similar mental conditions existing as to certain other collateral relatives. Without analyzing or further commenting upon the evidence as offered it is sufficient to say that the jury gave it such weight and consideration as in its judgment it was entitled to receive. The purpose, plan, acts, conduct, and statement of the defendant, considered in orderly sequence, constitute irrefutable proof that the defendant knew and appreciated the nature and the quality of the act he was committing, and he knew that it was wrong to commit it and that it was punishable under the law. In a statement made by him after the commission of the crime, he admitted that he fully understood the act which he had committed, and also knew the law punished its commission. The defendant, doubtless unfortunately circumstanced, had persistently pursued a criminal career since he was 12 years of age. At that early age he was committed to the Preston school of industry, where he spent the larger part of 6 years. When at liberty it seems that he had no settled place of abode. He confessed to the commission of a number of burglaries, and his mental condition seems not to have been questioned until he was placed upon trial for the crime of murder in the instant case. We feel convinced, as the jury must have been convinced, that the defendant is legally responsible for the commission of the crime of which he stands convicted.

[5-7] Prejudicial error is claimed to have been committed by the trial court in giving certain instructions tendered by the people and by refusing to give certain others proposed by the defendant as to the law of insanity. If the instructions given at the request of the people were sound expositions of the law of insanity the defendant's proposed requests, which announced a converse doctrine, were properly refused. The charge of the court, as to language and substance, was a repetition of the charges that have been approved (except in one instance, to be hereafter discussed) by this court in numerous decisions, and the law has become definitely settled as to the soundness of the principles challenged by appellant. To summarize, the attacks consist of objections made to the soundness of the "right and wrong" test which has already received attention, and to the following propositions: The refusal of the law to recognize as a defense the "irresistible, uncontrollable impulse" and moral insanity doctrines; the instruction which admonishes the jury to examine the defense of insanity with care lest an ingenious counterfeiter of this mental malady shall furnish immunity to guilt; the burden of proving the existence of insanity by a preponderance of evidence resting upon the defendant. It is not necessary to cite authorities to support these firmly established principles of law. The most serious objection is the one directed against the simulation of insanity as a defense. The instruction given in this case is in all essentials identical with the instruction approved in People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 625; People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 50; People v. Larrabee, 46 P. 922, 115 Cal. 158. The principle was also upheld in People v. Bumberger, 45 Cal. 650. Again, in People v. McCarthy, 46 P. 1073, 115 Cal. 255, the same instruction was given. The court there held that the instruction had received the repeated approval of this court and refused to hold it to be prejudicial error, or an invasion of the constitutional right of the defendant. It did say, however, in admonishing trial courts to follow approved language, that—

"It would be better, in most cases, if the instruction were omitted altogether; and, indeed, if its propriety were an open question, we should be much inclined to doubt it."

It was further said that there might be some danger that the jury may construe such an instruction as expressing an intent on the part of the judge to intimate and characterize his opinion of the case on trial—a result which, in effect, would be a trespass upon the constitutional right of the jury to pass upon facts free from the influence of the judge. In People v. Nihell, 77 P. 916, 144 Cal. 200, an instruction similar to the one given in the instant case as to the caution that juries should exercise in examining the defense of insanity, it was said that such an instruction has often been considered by this court, and, while it has been disapproved, yet no case has ever been reversed on account of the giving of it. While it is true that the propriety of cautioning the jury against ingenious counterfeits of mental maladies finds support in the earlier decisions of this court, the propriety of giving such an instruction has been questioned, as above pointed out, by our more recent decisions, coupled with a recommendation that it would be better not to give it lest the jury should conceive the notion that the court looked upon the defense with disfavor. A jury, doubtless, would, without being so advised by the court, examine with care the defense of insanity in cases in which the proof of the overt act is so full as to cut off all other means of avoiding conviction, and it is therefore unnecessary to quicken its sense of caution by an admonition on the part of the court. The reasons urged against the giving of the instruction do not appear with such pronounced force in the instant case as in some of those cited, for the reason that the court carefully and fully admonished the jury to guard against being influenced by any opinion that any members of the jury might think the court entertained, or had formed, as to any matter of fact or as to any inference deducible from the evidence. In this respect the court gave the additional instruction:

"Where insanity is relied upon as a defense, you are not to indulge in any prejudices against such a defense, but should give it thoughtful, thorough, and dispassionate consideration."

In People v. Methever, 64 P. 481, 132 Cal. 326, an instruction similar to the one under consideration in the instant case was before the court, supported by the same citations that are urged here, and the court there said:

"But whether or not the instruction was legally sound or unsound upon its face, it is apparent that no injury resulted to defendant from the giving of it."

If it was proper for the court to so state a rule prior to the adoption of section 4½ of article 6, state Constitution, we feel satisfied, from an examination of the record in this case, that the error complained of, if error it was, resulted in no miscarriage of justice or prejudice to the defendant. We hold that the giving of the instruction in the instant case, while contrary to the recommendations of this court made in the more recent cases, would not justify a reversal of the judgment. Cases may arise in which it would be a more serious question.

[8-10] In one part of the general charge the court instructed the jury that insanity is a "defense to be weighed fully, fairly, and justly, and, when satisfactorily established, must commend itself to the sense of humanity and justice of the jury," etc. It is argued that to require the defendant to satisfactorily establish insanity is equivalent to telling the jury that the defendant must establish it beyond a reasonable doubt. Certain decisions are cited wherein it was held to be error to instruct the jury that any fact "must be clearly established by satisfactory proof." To require a fact to be clearly established casts upon the actor a burden greater in degree than would be necessary to establish it by satisfactory proof. No case has been cited which would demand the reversal of a case because of the giving an instruction so framed. In various parts of its charge the jury was simply told that the defendant was required to establish insanity by a preponderance of the evidence and the burden was upon him to do so. There is no merit in the above contention. Appellant complains of the giving of an instruction as to the rule by which the jury should be guided in judging of the credit to be given to a witness who has shown himself to be willfully false in a part of his testimony as affecting his credit with reference to other matters about which he has testified. The instruction complained of is identical with an instruction discussed by this court in People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 491, and which principle of law was considered in People v. Wells, 78 P. 470, 145 Cal. 138, and is not open to the construction that appellant's argument would seem to place upon it.

[11, 12] When the defendant appeared for sentence, counsel moved for a stay of all proceedings on the ground that the defendant was then insane, and requested that the court submit the question of his present insanity to a jury. In support of the motion his counsel offered all of the evidence taken at the trial. The motion was denied and counsel assigned the action of the court in denying the motion as an abuse of discretion. Obviously the court did not abuse its discretion. The jury, by its verdict, impliedly found the defendant to be sane at the time he committed the murder, and no showing was made that his mental condition had since changed. The presumption was that he was still sane. But, aside from what we have said with reference to the question of presumption, the court, in its refusal to submit the question of the defendant's insanity to a jury, was acting in the exercise of a sound discretion reposed in it by the provisions of section 1368, Penal Code. People v. Gilberg (Cal. Sup.) 240 P. 1000.

We find no reversible error in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LENNON, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.
I concur in the judgment: LAWLOR, J.

198 Cal. 252

FIRST NAT. BANK OF REEDLEY v. REED.
(S. F. 11110.)(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1926.)

1. Banks and banking ☞116(1)—In absence of evidence, it is assumed that cashier and manager of bank communicated his knowledge of facts material to transaction to his principal.

In absence of any evidence, it is assumed that cashier and manager of bank communicated to his principal his knowledge of any facts material to giving of note as accommodation for bank.

2. Bills and notes ☞49.

Party for whose accommodation a note is made may not sue accommodation party.

3. Principal and agent ☞181—Exception to general rule imputing knowledge of agent to principal, that principal is not bound by knowledge of agent acting in collusion with third party, ordinarily applies in cases where liability of principal to third party is involved.

Exception to general rule imputing to principal knowledge of agent, that, if agent and third party are acting in collusion to defraud principal, principal will not be bound by knowledge of agent, is ordinarily applied in cases where liability of principal to third person is involved, and is based on idea of protection to innocent principal.

4. Banks and banking ☞114—Bank, relying on note taken by cashier as accommodation, must take it on terms on which cashier took it, that maker would not be responsible.

Bank, relying on note taken by cashier as accommodation note for benefit of bank, must take it with terms on which cashier took it, that maker would not be responsible.

5. Principal and agent ☞172.

Principal, seeking to recover on contract in which agent exceeded his authority, must take the contract as a whole.

6. Bills and notes ☞49—Accommodation maker of note for bank, with express understanding with cashier that he would not be called on to pay note, cannot be held liable in suit by bank, where no rights of innocent third parties intervened.

Maker of accommodation note for bank, with express understanding with cashier and manager that he would not be called on to pay note, cannot be held liable thereon in suit wherein the bank is plaintiff and no rights of innocent third parties intervened.

7. Bills and notes ☞518(1).

Finding of trial court of no consideration for note given as accommodation to bank held supported by the evidence.

8. Bills and notes ☞98—Accommodation maker of note for bank to cover overdraft held not estopped to assert that it was not valid obligation as against bank, no rights of third persons intervening.

Defendant, giving accommodation note to bank to cover overdraft to deceive bank examiner, held not estopped to assert against bank that it is not valid obligation, where bank did not become insolvent and no rights of innocent third persons were involved.

9. Estoppel ☞61—Estoppel cannot be asserted, where agent participated in deceit and fraud, and solicited act from person sought to be estopped by principal.

Estoppel cannot be relied on to create a liability, where agent, acting solely for benefit of his principal, actively participated in deceit and fraud, and solicited act from person sought to be estopped by principal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Reedley against E. R. Reed. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mark H. Edwards, of Reedley, and Frank Kauke, of Fresno, for appellant.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and Dan F. Conway, all of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an action brought by the First National Bank of Reedley against the defendant, E. R. Reed, on two promissory notes, each bearing date May 3, 1921, one for $11,000, and the other for $440. The first note for $11,000 was in renewal of a note dated November 3, 1920, executed by the defendant Reed; the second note represented the accrued interest on the original note. The defendant by his answer admitted the execution of the notes, but denied that the sums set forth in said notes were due or payable by the defendant, or any part thereof. The defendant, in addition, interposed a special defense which is clearly and succinctly stated in defendant's answer to plaintiff's complaint as follows:

"That more than three months prior to the 3d day of May, 1921, the said plaintiff had on its books an overdraft of the Reedley Canning Company, a corporation, for the sum of eleven thousand ($11,000) dollars. That about three months prior to the 3d day of May, 1921, a bank examiner was in the bank and banking house of the said plaintiff in the city of Reedley for the purpose of making an examination of the books and accounts of the said plaintiff. That at said time, and while said bank examiner was in said bank, the said overdraft of the said Reedley Canning Company for the sum of $11,000 was carried on the books of said plaintiff. That at said time and place, and while the said bank examiner was in said bank for the purposes aforesaid, M. J. Wickstrom, who was then and there the cashier and vice president of the said plaintiff, met defendant, and then and there requested defendant to make and deliver to said plaintiff his promissory note for $11,000 in favor of said plaintiff, so that the same might be applied to and cover the said overdraft, and that the said M. J. Wickstrom then and there stated to defendant that the said plaintiff would guarantee defendant against loss which might be sustained by reason of the making and delivering of said promissory note. That the said M. J. Wickstrom then and there stated and represented to defendant that the said bank had honored overdrafts of the Reedley Canning Company to the amount of about $11,000. That bank examiners were about to make an examination of the affairs of the bank. That the officers of the plaintiff were desirous of cleaning this account up and that they wanted defendant, as an accommodation to the said bank, to execute his note to the bank for $11,000, and that the said Reedley Canning Company would receive credit therefor, and that it would be simply a temporary affair, and that the bank would guarantee to protect defendant against loss by reason of giving the said note. That on the date of the delivery of said promissory note to said bank by said defendant the said bank then and there credited the amount thereto, to wit, $11,000, on the said overdraft of the Reedley Canning Company, and the said bank retained the said note.

"That the defendant, then and there believing the statements and representations made as aforesaid that the plaintiff would guarantee to protect him against loss by reason of giving said note, and as an accommodation to the payee named in said note, did then and there make and deliver said note to the plaintiff. Defendant alleges that he did not receive at said time, or at any time, any consideration for said note, and was not given anything of value or credit therefor.

"That on the 3d day of May, 1921, M. J. Wickstrom, who was then and there the cashier and vice president of the said plaintiff, stated and represented to defendant that the bank had not been able to raise funds to replace defendant's note, and then and there requested plaintiff to execute a new note in the sum of $11,000; also another note in the sum of $440. That, if defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff the two notes just described, the bank would deliver to defendant the original note for $11,000. The said M. J. Wickstrom then and there stated and represented to defendant that it was necessary for the bank to carry these notes, because the bank had not been able to raise the $11,000, the amount of the overdraft of the Reedley Canning Company. That the said M. J. Wickstrom represented then and there and stated to defendant that the plaintiff would guarantee the defendant against loss which he might sustain by reason of making delivery to said bank of said promissory notes. That the bank needed said notes as an accommodation, and that he would not look to defendant for the payment of said notes, or either of them, and that the said bank would guarantee to protect defendant against any loss by reason of giving the said note.

"That the said defendant, then and there believing the statements and representations, made as aforesaid, that the plaintiff would guarantee to protect him against loss by reason of giving said notes, and as an accommodation to the payee named in said notes, did then and there make and deliver said notes to the said plaintiff. Defendant alleges that he did not receive, at the time of the delivery of said notes or at any other time, any consideration for said notes, and was not given anything of value or credit therefor."

Upon the issues thus raised the cause was tried before the court without a jury. The court found that there was no consideration for the notes and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, from which judgment the plaintiff has prosecuted this appeal. It is plaintiff's contention that (1) the findings are not supported by the evidence; and (2) the defendant is estopped to assert that there was no consideration for the notes. A review of the record before us clearly shows that the defendant's statement as to the facts and circumstances surrounding and attending the original execution of the note for $11,000 in November, 1920, and the renewal thereof, together with another note for accrued interest, in May, 1921, is amply supported by the evidence.

At the time of the original execution of the note many persons living in the vicinity of Reedley were interested in the success of the Reedley Canning Company as a community enterprise, and were stockholders in said company. Mr. J. J. Eymann, the president of the plaintiff bank, was a stockholder in the canning company, as was also Mr. Krehbiel, a director of the bank. Mr. Wickstrom, cashier and manager of the plaintiff bank, was a stockholder to the extent of $11,000, and Mr. Reed, the defendant, owned stock in the company to the extent of $2,500. On November 3, 1920, the canning company had overdrawn its account with plaintiff's bank to the extent of $11,000, which was in excess of the credit which plaintiff might under the law extend to any one person or corporation. On that date a national bank examiner commenced an examination of the affairs of the bank. The bank had been previously criticized by reason of the amount of its overdrafts, and in the words of Mr. Wickstrom, cashier of the bank, "the overdraft had to be covered." "It was illegal * * * and had to be taken care of."

Mr. Wickstrom, on opening up the bank that morning, saw Mr. Reed out in front of the bank, and spoke to Mr. Eymann, president of the bank, of the possibility of getting Mr. Reed to sign a note until such time as stock in the canning company could be sold to take care of the note. Mr. Eymann said it was a "mighty good idea," and Mr. Wickstrom went out and asked Mr. Reed to execute his note in the sum of $11,000. Mr. Reed, so Mr. Wickstrom testified, "had always been an awful good friend of mine, all my life, and I usually got all I wanted out of him." According to Mr. Wickstrom's own testimony, he explained to Mr. Reed that the bank needed a note for $11,000 to cover the overdraft while the bank examiner was there, and assured him that he would not have the note to pay; that it was simply an accommodation note, to help the bank out. Mr. Wickstrom explained to Mr. Reed that the bank could take care of the note by selling subscriptions to stock in the canning company. Mr. Krehbiel, a director of the bank, was also in the bank on the morning that the bank examiner was there; but the entire negotiations with regard to the execution of the note were carried on between Mr. Reed and Mr. Wickstrom, cashier and manager of the bank, on the sidewalk in front of the bank. Mr. Reed testified that, although he understood that his note was to cover an overdraft of the Reedley Canning Company, he had no intention or thought of loaning his credit to the canning company, but gave the note as a matter of favor to the bank, and gave it upon the express promise of the cashier that the bank would take care of the note, and that he would not be out on it whatever.

That Mr. Reed had no intention of loaning his credit to the canning company is substantiated by the testimony of Mr. George H. Rogers, the manager of the canning company, who testified that on the same day, before the execution of the note, the cashier of the bank stated to him (Rogers) that Reed was about to execute his note to cover the overdraft of the company, and requested Rogers to transfer to the bank, as security therefor, certain stock of the canning company owned by Rogers, and that Reed at that time stated to the cashier:

"I don't want the stock. If you want the stock, it is up to you. I am doing this for the bank, and not for the canning company. It is an accommodation note."

Mr. Rogers also testified that later in the day he brought into the bank, as security, stock in the canning company to the extent of $45,000. Upon the execution of the note, credit was entered to the account of the canning company on the books of the bank for $11,000.

Mr. Reed testified that, prior to the execution of the second notes in renewal of the first, he had asked Mr. Wickstrom for his original note back, but that Mr. Wickstrom had said that it was impossible at the time, because they were still carrying overdrafts, and wanted that note to cover them.

Mr. Reed further testified that in May, 1921, Mr. Wickstrom again approached him on the street, and said that the bank examiner was liable to be there at any time, and that the original note was overdue, and he would like to have him renew it under the same conditions, at the same time positively assuring him that the bank would take care of it, and that he would not be out on it whatever.

The canning company became insolvent, and suit was instituted by the bank against the defendant for the recovery upon the two promissory notes.

The respondent contends that the facts present in this case bring it within the application of the rule laid down by this court in Bank of Orland v. Harlan, 206 P. 75, 188 Cal. 413. The evidence might well support a finding that would bring the case within the rule there laid down, but we deem it unnecessary to consider it from the point of view there suggested, because of the finding of the trial court that "respondent received no consideration whatever for such promissory note, and it is true there was no consideration whatever for the making or delivery of said promissory note."

The appellant suggests that the cashier, Wickstrom, had no authority to bind the bank in the negotiations with Reed as to the purpose for which the note was executed. It is admitted by the plaintiff, that, if the sole purpose on the part of the plaintiff in taking the note was to cover up a deficit in the bank's assets and deceive and mislead the bank examiner, then, notwithstanding the fact that defendant participated with the bank officers in a fraudulent transaction, the court would not aid either party, and the plaintiff could not recover. But it is insisted that the directors of the bank had no knowledge of the criminal nature of the transaction, and believed that the giving of the note was a strictly legitimate transaction.

[1, 2] Respondent testified that Wickstrom was vice president and manager of the bank. Wickstrom himself testified that he was, at various times, vice president, manager, and cashier of the bank, and that he acted as such cashier or manager could. He was such cashier at the time the original note in this transaction was executed. Appellant concedes in its brief that Wickstrom was "cashier and manager" of the institution. The evidence justifies the assumption that, as such cashier, he had general charge of the business of the bank as such cashier and manager. In the absence of any evidence on the point, it would be assumed that Wickstrom communicated to his principal his knowledge of any facts material to the transaction. McKenney v. Ellsworth, 132 P. 76, 165 Cal. 326. Wickstrom testified that he explained to the board of directors of the bank "how the note was taken, and how it was to be taken care of." Both he and the respondent testified that Reed executed the note as an accommodation to the bank, upon the assurance of Wickstrom that Reed would never be called upon to pay the same. The party for whose accommodation such a paper is made may not sue the accommodation party. Williams v. Hasshagen, 137 P. 9, 166 Cal. 386, 390; Coghlin v. May, 17 Cal. 515.

Mr. Wickstrom testified that both Mr. Eyermann, president of the bank, and Mr. Krehbiel, one of the directors, were present on the morning of the execution of the note, and knew that the bank examiner was there. Mr. Wickstrom also testified that he explained to the directors, at a meeting subsequent to the taking of the note, that the note "was taken to cover an overdraft of the Reedley Canning Company, to be taken care of by stock subscriptions, as the stock was sold, the note brought into the bank and placed to the credit of the cannery, or used otherwise whatever we saw fit to use them, and it was explained to the board of directors." Mr. Wickstrom could not remember, however, directly telling the directors that the note of Mr. Reed was for the accommodation of the bank, and that Mr. Reed was not to be held liable.

[3] It is also insisted by plaintiff that the knowledge of the cashier could not be imputed to the principal—in this case the bank—for the reason that this rule was established for the protection of those who deal with the agent in good faith. It is true that there is an exception to the general rule imputing to the principal the knowledge of the agent, which exception is to the effect that, if the agent and the third party are acting in collusion to defraud the principal, the principal will not be held bound by the knowledge of the agent. Obviously, the purpose of this exception is to protect the innocent principal against the fraud of his agent, acting in collusion with the third person. It is to be noted that the exception to the rule is ordinarily applied in cases where the liability of the principal to a third person is involved, and is based upon the idea of protection to the innocent principal.

[4, 5] The exception, holding, as it does, that the principal is not bound by the knowledge of his agent, has no application to a situation such as presented here, wherein the principal is seeking to establish the liability of a third person. In the situation presented here, the sole representative of the bank was the cashier and acting manager. The bank cannot claim anything, except through him, and therefore, if it claims through him, it must accept his agency, with its attendant notice of his knowledge of the facts as they actually existed. The bank cannot in one breath be heard to say that the cashier was without authority to bind itself as its agent, and accept the note upon condition that it was an accommodation note, for which the defendant should not be liable, and in the next breath insist that it can avail itself of his act in taking the note. It cannot avail itself of only so much of the transaction as was beneficial to it, and repudiate the rest. If it relies upon the note, it must take it with the terms upon which the cashier took it, namely, that the defendant should not be responsible. The bank must take the burden with the benefits, and by demanding performance of the contract the bank assumes responsibility for the instrumentalities—that is to say, the representations, promises, and conditions—through which the act was induced.

The law is well settled that, in case a principal seeks to recover upon a contract in which the agent exceeds his authority, he must take the contract as a whole. 1 Mech- em on Agency (2d Ed.) § 448; Central Bank of Bingham v. Stephens, 199 P. 1018, 58 Utah, 358; Simmons v. Thompson, 51 N. Y. S. 1018, 29 App. Div. 559. The fact that the principal was mistakenly under the impression at the time the agent made the contract with the third person that the contract was of a certain nature cannot transmute the contract made between the agent and the third person into the contract which the principal mistakenly thought had been made. The contract must exist as made between the agent and the third person, or not at all.

[6, 7] It follows, from what we have said, that, Reed having given his note with the express understanding with the cashier and manager of the bank that he would not be called upon to pay the note, he cannot now, in a suit wherein the bank is plaintiff, and no rights of innocent third parties intervene, be held liable. The finding of the trial court that there was no consideration for the note, based as it undoubtedly was upon the theory that Reed had loaned his credit to the bank, and not the canning company, is correct, and supported by the evidence.

[8, 9] We find no merit in plaintiff's contention that, the defendant having given his note with the purpose and intent to deceive the bank examiner, he is now estopped to assert that it is not a valid obligation. Those cases which hold that he is so estopped are distinguishable from the instant case. Those cases present situations wherein the bank became insolvent, wherein the rights of innocent third persons were involved, or wherein a consideration for the note was expressly found. The plea of estoppel is primarily for the protection of innocent third persons, who would suffer injury if the defendant were permitted to set up the true state of facts. Estoppel cannot be relied upon to create a liability in a situation where, as here, the agent, acting solely for the benefit of his principal, actively participated in the deceit and fraud, and solicited the act from the person sought to be estopped by the principal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

76 Cal. App. 264

GRECIAN v. JACKSON. (Civ. 5357.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 18, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 18, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error — 1011(1).

Finding, based on conflicting testimony not inherently improbable, is conclusive on appeal, and all reasonable inferences will be indulged in its support.

2. Appeal and error — 1041(2).

Permitting amendment to complaint on day of trial held not ground for reversal, where it did not mislead or prejudice defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by H. Grecian against John M. Jackson, also known as J. M. Jackson, individually and doing business under the firm name of J. M. Jackson & Co. From an adverse judgment, J. M. Jackson appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Bennett, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John P. Beale, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action by respondent upon certain assigned claims for legal services and expenditures alleged to have been rendered to and made on behalf of appellant. The complaint alleged in separate counts an express agreement to pay a sum stated for a portion of the services, the reasonable value of others, with a further count for money paid at the request of appellant. The court found that the services and expenditures alleged were rendered and made at the special instance and request of appellant; that the reasonable value of a portion of such services was the sum of $175; that for others appellant had agreed to pay the sum of $1,500, of which $1,374.50 remained unpaid; and that there had been expended the sum of $63 as alleged. Judgment was entered for the amounts found to be unpaid, aggregating the sum of $1,612, from which judgment the appeal was taken. As stated by appellant, the question presented on appeal is the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court.

[1] According to the testimony of appellant, the payment of compensation for the services for which was claimed the sum of $1,500 was, by agreement, to be contingent upon the success of a certain corporation in the organization of which the services were rendered. The attorneys by whom the claims were assigned testified to conversations with appellant which preceded the rendition of the services, from which the inference might reasonably have been drawn that the agreement was made as found.

Contrary to the contention of appellant, we find no inherent improbability in the latter testimony, and, the evidence being conflicting, such finding is conclusive, and all reasonable inferences will be indulged in its support. Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 261, 228 P. 25; Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 84, 165 P. 432; Levi v. Chesley, 178 Cal. 145, 172 P. 607.

The findings as to the third count are fully supported by the evidence; and, while no direct evidence was offered with respect to the value of the services rendered as alleged in the first count, the character of the services in connection with certain litigation in which appellant was interested was shown, from which the court might, in the exercise of its independent judgment, determine such value; and we cannot say that its conclusion was unsupported or unreasonable. Patten v. Pepper Hotel Co., 153 Cal. 460, 96 P. 296; Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 49; Kendrick v. Gould, 51 Cal. App. 712, 197 P. 681.

[2] Appellant complains of an order of the court permitting respondent to amend his complaint on the day of the trial by alleging an express agreement to pay the sum stated for the services alleged in the second count in lieu of the allegations of the original complaint as to the reasonable value thereof; it being stipulated that the allegations of the amended complaint should be considered as denied by appellant.

It appearing that all of the evidence as to the agreement alleged in the latter count consisted of conversations between the parties thereto, and, it not having been suggested then or at the conclusion of the trial that testimony or evidence other than that adduced by appellant was available, he was not misled or prejudiced by the filing of the amendment.

The evidence being sufficient to support the findings, and no error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

76 Cal. App. 369

CITY OF STOCKTON v. VOTE. (Civ. 3010.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 2, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 2, 1926.)

1. Evidence ⇨333(1)—Admission in eminent domain proceeding of flood control report, on theory that witness had referred to maps and tabulations therein, held error, where report was not a state document.

In action of eminent domain to condemn land for flood control purposes, admission of flood control report, on theory witness had referred to maps and tables contained therein which were copies of government maps and tables, held error, where report showed upon its face it was not a state document, but a mere compilation of statistics and opinions of engineer making it.

2. Evidence ⇨318(4)—Report of engineer, not made pursuant to duty, enjoined by law, and constituting nothing more than private compilation and opinion of engineer, held inadmissible in eminent domain proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6).

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for flood control purposes, report of engineer, which was not made pursuant to any duty enjoined by law, but was mere private compilation of theories and opinions of writer, held inadmissible as an official document, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6; opinions and statements therein being mere hearsay.

3. Evidence ⇨333(1)—No section of Political Code makes report by subordinate officer to his superior a public document, admissible in controversies between independent parties.

No section of the Political Code relating to the department of public works makes the report by a subordinate officer or field officer to his superior a public document, admissible in evidence in controversies between independent parties.

4. Evidence ⇨318(4)—That report of city manager was adopted by council as to portion dealing with flood control did not authorize its admission in eminent domain proceedings as to other portions, which were hearsay arguments and opinions of city manager.

In eminent domain proceedings by city to condemn land for flood control purposes, the fact that city council had by resolution adopted a report of city manager dealing with flood control did not authorize its admission in evidence as to purely hearsay arguments and opinions of city manager as to feasibility of using impounded water for irrigation or power purposes.

5. Evidence ⇨237.

It is a cardinal principle of an admission that the party speaking must be in a position of authority to speak.

6. Evidence ⇨245—Resolution of council adopting report of city manager as to flood control did not make report admissible in eminent domain proceedings as admission against interest of city, where council at time of passing resolution had no authority to undertake work contemplated.

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for purposes of flood control, resolution of city council adopting report of city manager respecting flood control held not admissible as admission against interest of city, where council at passage of resolution had no authority with respect to work contemplated.

7. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Purposes for which water is to be used by plaintiff in eminent domain and beneficial purpose to be derived therefrom are not to be considered in determining market value of flowage easement.

In a proceeding to condemn flowage easement, purposes for which water is to be used by plaintiff and beneficial uses to be derived therefrom are not to be taken into consideration in determining market values.

8. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Testimony as to speculative uses to which impounded water might be put held erroneously admitted in determining market value of land sought to be condemned.

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for purposes of flood control, reports unfolding speculative purposes to which impounded water might be put held erroneously admitted on question of market values of land sought to be condemned.

9. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Necessities of public are never to be taken into consideration in fixing value of land to be condemned.

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for purposes of flood control, necessities of public are never to be taken into consideration in fixing value of land to be condemned.

10. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Growth of city as respecting need for future water supply held not to be considered in determining market value of land sought to be condemned.

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for flood control purposes, growth of city as respecting need for future water supply held not to be considered in determining market value of land sought to be condemned, and evidence respecting such growth was inadmissible.

11. Eminent domain ⇨202(4)—Value in use of land sought to be condemned is inadmissible in eminent domain proceedings in determining its market value.

In eminent domain proceedings, evidence of value in use of land sought to be condemned is inadmissible, the present market value being measure of damages rather than value in use.

12. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Market value of land sought to be condemned is not to be determined by fact that party seeking to condemn it has already determined to build a reservoir thereon.

Market value of land sought to be condemned is not to be determined by the fact that party seeking to condemn it has already determined to build a reservoir thereon.

13. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Matters which any one contemplating a purchase of land might well take into consideration in determining value of land which he was about to buy are proper matters to be considered by jury in condemnation proceedings.

Matters which any one contemplating a purchase of land might well take into consideration in determining its value are matters which are proper to be laid before jury in determining value of land sought to be condemned in eminent domain proceedings.

14. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Capabilities of watershed, and nearness of irrigable lands, cities, and municipalities, held proper matters to be considered by jury in determining value of reservoir site sought to be condemned.

In proceeding to condemn reservoir site for flood control purposes, capabilities of watershed to fill reservoir, nearness of irrigable lands, cities, and municipalities were proper to be laid before jury on question of damages; being matters which one contemplating purchase of property might take into consideration in determining its value.

15. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—That highest use of land to which it was adapted would be subserved by a 200-foot dam held admissible on value of land sought to be condemned for reservoir site.

In eminent domain proceeding to condemn reservoir site for flood control, the fact that highest use of land to which it was adapted for such purposes would be subserved by a 200-foot dam held admissible upon the value of land sought to be condemned, and testimony of persons qualified to speak on such subject was properly laid before jury.

16. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—That party seeking to condemn land was not proposing to make highest use of land to be condemned was not to be considered in determining value thereof.

That party seeking to condemn land was not proposing to make highest use of land to be condemned was not to be considered in determining value thereof.

17. Eminent domain ⇨202(4).

Value in use of property to condemnor is not to be considered in determining its value.

18. Eminent domain ⇨202(4)—Adaptability of defendant's land for reservoir purposes may be considered in eminent domain proceedings, though his land alone does not constitute complete entire reservoir site.

Adaptability of defendant's land for reservoir purposes may be considered in determining value of land to be condemned, though such use would require joining of his land to other tracts.

19. Eminent domain ⇨202(4)—Question of value for reservoir purposes of land sought to be condemned, should be eliminated, where it appears that defendant's land does not constitute entire site, and that defendant does not own and cannot acquire other tracts necessary.

In proceeding to condemn land for reservoir site for flood control purposes, value of land for reservoir purposes should be eliminated from consideration, if it appears that it does not constitute entire site, and that defendant does not own and cannot acquire other necessary tracts.

20. Eminent domain ⇨202(1)—Practicability of uniting lands in one ownership for reservoir purposes, and costs, expenses and time consumed in doing so, are elements bearing on market value on premises sought to be condemned.

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for reservoir site, where defendant's land did not constitute entire site, held that practicability of uniting lands in one ownership and costs and expenses of doing so were proper elements to be considered by jury under proper instructions in determining whether market value of land was enhanced by reason of its adaptability for reservoir purposes when joined to other land.

21. Appeal and error ⇨1048(3) — Permitting hypothetical question to be answered, where questions simply set forth as a basis the hearing of testimony of other witnesses by the expert, if error, held not to warrant reversal of judgment in eminent domain proceedings.

In eminent domain proceedings, permitting hypothetical questions to be answered, where the questions simply set forth as a basis the hearing of testimony of other witnesses by the expert, and upon whose testimony the opinions were based, if error, held not to warrant reversal of judgment.

22. Appeal and error ⇨1170(7)—Inadmissible testimony by experts as to value in use of land sought to be condemned held prejudicial as against contention that jury disregarded values fixed by experts (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In eminent domain proceedings to condemn reservoir site for flood control purposes, admission of inadmissible expert testimony as to value in use of land sought to be condemned held prejudicial, as against contention that error was harmless under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in that jury must have disregarded values fixed by experts, in that they set a valuation of $240 per acre, whereas the jury only allowed $100 per acre.

23. Eminent domain  265(4)—Landowner is entitled to full value of his land condemned, when finally ascertained, exclusive of costs, and hence costs of appeal will be charged to condemnor.

Landowner is entitled to full value of his land condemned, when finally ascertained, exclusive of costs, and hence costs of appeal by condemnor will be charged to condemnor, though judgment was reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the City of Stockton against Jacob G. Vote. From the judgment awarding compensation, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. Le Roy Johnson and Thos. S. Louttit, both of Stockton, for appellant.

F. J. Solinsky, of San Francisco, Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, and Joe Huberty, of San Andreas, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Pursuant to certain resolutions passed by the city council of the city of Stockton and the affirmative result of an election participated in by the qualified electors of the city of Stockton, the plaintiff in this action proposes to erect a restraining dam, or a dam to control the flood waters of the Calaveras river at a point on said stream in the county of Calaveras about three miles from the town of Valley Springs. The defendant in this action is the owner of a tract of land lying easterly of the site of the proposed restraining dam, and a portion of whose land lies within the basin that would be submerged in the operation of the dam herein referred to. By its amended complaint in this action the plaintiff seeks to condemn or acquire a flowing easement for the flood waters restrained by the proposed dam over 66.6 acres of the lands belonging to the defendant, and sought a judgment of the court fixing the price of said easement, damages to be allowed for the improvements situated on the said 66.6 acres, and also such sum as should be justly awarded on account of the severance of said area of land from the larger acreage belonging to the defendant.

Upon the trial of this action had before a jury, the value of the land proposed to be taken by the city of Stockton for flowage purposes was fixed at the sum of $6,606, the value of the improvements taken $10,000, and the damages due to the severance assessed at the sum of $3,400, aggregating the total sum of $20,000. Judgment was entered accordingly. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals. In support of its appeal the appellant alleges, among others, that the trial court erred in the following particulars: (1) In considering the term "market value"; (2) that testimony was improperly admitted showing possible value of property in use by condemnor; (3) that testimony concerning the value of the defendant's land under altered conditions was improperly admitted; (4) that the court erred in admitting evidence concerning the reasonable value of defendant's land, assuming that other necessary lands had been and would be joined to that of the defendant; (5) that witnesses not properly qualified were permitted to give opinion evidence concerning the value of the defendant's land; (6) that witnesses were allowed to answer hypothetical questions based upon the testimony of other witnesses; (7) that the court erred in admitting a report made by Charles E. Ashburner to the city council of the city of Stockton, and also a report on flood problems of the Calaveras river, signed by one Harry Barnes.

The record shows that the city of Stockton proposes to erect a restraining dam of the height of 144 feet on the Calaveras river at the site above mentioned; that by means of spillways and floodgates it proposes to control the flood waters of the Calaveras river during the rainy season in such manner as to avoid the danger of periodical flooding, to which the city prior to the year 1911 was subject; that just prior to the year 1911 a diverting canal had been built to the east and north of the city of Stockton, by means of which the flood waters of the Calaveras river were diverted around the city and inundation avoided; that the diverting canal, however, throws the flood waters back upon adjoining agricultural lands and does not afford the city of Stockton sufficient immunity from the flood waters coming down from the watershed of the Calaveras river; that by means of the proposed restraining dam the flood waters gathered by the Calaveras river would be allowed to escape from the reservoir created by the dam in such quantities only as would not endanger the flooding of the city of Stockton or any of the adjoining territory. Between the city of Stockton and the site of the proposed dam there are several thousand acres of land, called the "plainland," before the foothills, which gradually merge into the Sierra Nevada mountains, are reached. The ascent from the plain lands just referred to to the site of the proposed dam is more or less gradual, so that the elevation of the foot of said dam is estimated to be at about 530 feet above the level lands lying to the west of the foothills referred to herein. The dam proposed to be erected by the appellant, when completed, will have a maximum elevation of 680 feet, and the 680-foot contour line mentioned in the testimony is the maximum flood line that would be reached by the waters impounded by the proposed dam, and is the maximum line to which and for which the flowage easement was asked for by and awarded to the plaintiff in this action.

The testimony introduced on the part of the defendant, in most part, had reference to and directed to a possible dam, 200 feet in height, that might be erected on the site selected by the city of Stockton, placing the maximum flood contour line at an elevation of 730 feet. Four expert witnesses were placed on the stand by the defendant, and severally proceeded to testify as to the possibility of erecting a 200-foot dam, also as to 394 square miles of watersheds lying easterly of the dam; that such a dam would have a reservoir capacity of about 350,000 acre feet, and would afford water for irrigation purposes of from 34,000 to 50,000 acres of land situate in the foothills and plain lands of Calaveras and San Joaquin counties; that such a reservoir would afford water for domestic purposes for the cities of Lodi, Stockton, Antioch, and other places, and also might be used for power purposes at a point near Jenny Lind, in the county of Calaveras, where a drop of 200 feet might be had. The reports of Ashburner and Barnes go into detail of the projects mentioned by the expert witnesses and the possibilities attendant upon the construction of such a dam; the Barnes report going into detail as to estimated costs. A consideration of the questions presented upon this appeal necessitates the setting forth of sufficient testimony to illustrate the points involved. All of the testimony hereafter set forth was introduced and admitted over the objections of the plaintiff, and the testimony will therefore be set forth, omitting the several objections. The testimony of the experts was along the same general lines, and therefore the testimony of one expert will illustrate the testimony of all, save and except as may be necessary to supplement the general recital in order to properly consider the objections raised.

Mr. M. O'Shaughnessy, of San Francisco, a witness called on the part of the defendant, after detailing at length his qualifications and experiences as an engineer, testified partly as follows:

"I have been on this reservoir basin three times; I know the portion of the reservoir that is at the western outlet of this river, and which has been testified to, and designated the dam site, where the structure to hold the waters will be constructed; I have observed at what height a dam or embankment can be constructed on that site; I believe it could be economically built up to a height of 200 feet. * * *

"Q. What purpose would such an embankment built at that point serve so far as you can judge from your examination of that locality? A. That dam would serve to impound a very large body of water behind it, which has a value for many purposes. It has a value for domestic use for cities; it has a value for irrigation use for farming; it has a value also for power use to take the energy out of it; and it is also of a subsidiary value for a regulating reservoir, provided enough spillways will pass through the dam to pass the floods.

"Q. Do you know the location of this dam to any irrigable lands upon which the water from this dam could be used? A. Yes.

"Q. Where are such irrigable lands located? A. From the foothills where the stream discharges on the San Joaquin valley over towards Stockton; all those lands adjacent to the stream are capable of development by irrigation.

"Q. Do you know whether or not they are subject to gravity irrigation? Which are now being irrigated by the flowing of water on to those lands from any ditches or aqueducts? A. I would say in a moderate way by wells.

"Q. In your opinion as an engineer what would be the economical manner of irrigating those lands if such a reservoir as you have mentioned could be constructed and filled with water? A. The water would be allowed to flow down the stream bed, released from the dam, to a lower level, and then lead out by canals on each side of the river, one canal flowing north-erly and the other southerly to main line canals, such as are constructed on the Stanislaus river and on the Tuolumne river for irrigating those lands; a canal on each side of the river bed.

"Q. Have you obtained data as an engineer as to the contents of water in this dam constructed to the height of 200 feet, assuming that sufficient water would be running in the Calaveras river into the canal? A. I have.

"Q. And what does that data show, the data to be the contents of that dam when it was built to the height of 200 feet, the contents of the reservoir? A. The volume behind a 200-foot dam will amount to 350,000 acre feet of water at an elevation of the 730-foot contour.

"Q. 730-foot contour, as I understand, gentlemen, is an elevation of a 200-foot dam; 530 is the bed of the river, and 730 foot to the crest of the dam would be a 200-foot embankment. Now, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, I show you here Defendant's Exhibit C which is table 93, showing the seasonal run-off data of the Calaveras river with a drainage area of 394 square miles, and ask you to examine that. A. I have seen this report before.

"Q. Will you state to the court and jury whether, in your opinion, the runoff of water in the Calaveras river as shown thereon would be sufficient to fill this reservoir on the Calaveras river to the height of 200 feet during many, if not all, of the years? A. From this table of estimated seasonal runoff in acre feet, it looks as if that size reservoir could be filled practically half the years between 1871 and 1921. In some years, like 1888, 1889, the runoff is 1,003,000 acre feet; another year, I am familiar with the year 1889 and 1890.

"Q. Now, speaking of this reservoir from the standpoint of its irrigation value, in your opinion, would it be sufficient at a height of 200 feet carrying a volume of 350,000 acre feet to carry over two years of irrigation if that became the proper plan of using it for that purpose? A. Well, there are two factors entering into that. The first, the extent of area you would irrigate, and, secondly, the amount of water you would apply.

"Q. So you would be obliged then to first determine the quantity of land that could be economically irrigated from this reservoir and the quantity of water that you would apply to each acre of the tract so selected? A. You would have to have those two factors to determine the total volume of water you would need, and also the losses in transmission; the aqueducts leak and the ditches leak, and you have got to have a percentage to take care of that leakage.

"Q. Now, state, in your opinion, whether that leakage would become of a serious nature considering the location of this reservoir and its relation to the irrigable lands, and taking into account the distance. A. It wouldn't be any more difficult than the problems met by the successful irrigation districts immediately to the south.

"Q. Referring to what districts? A. South San Joaquin irrigation district; the Oakdale irrigation district; the Modesto irrigation district; the Turlock irrigation district; the Merced irrigation district.

"Q. Have you made any determination in your own manner as an engineer as to what quantity of land on the San Joaquin valley plains could be economically irrigated with water from this reservoir, taking into account these factors of the amount of land or quantity of water on it to be used for irrigation and taking into account the seasonal flow of water as determined from Defendant's Exhibit C that you have just read? A. I have.

"Q. Will you state what your opinion is in answer to that question? A. There are about 34,000 acres of land available for irrigation immediately below this river.

"Q. And state whether or not in your opinion, following that question up, that that 34,000 acres could be economically irrigated by this dam under conditions I have stated? A. That area can be economically irrigated.

"Q. And in your opinion, on the opportunities you have had of examining the data of this stream, would you say that on such a stream such a reservoir would hold enough water to irrigate 34,000 acres of property each year? A. That is my opinion.

"Q. Will you state to what other uses the water stored in this reservoir could be used? A. The water is at a high enough level above the sea, or over 500 feet elevation, so it can be conveyed by gravity through pressure pipes to towns in the San Joaquin valley conveniently accessible, and this is a very great value, because lots of the valley water used by those present towns at present is objectionable in character.

"Q. I will direct your attention particularly to the city of Stockton as one of those municipalities on the plain: Are you familiar with the city water of Stockton that is now being used? A. I am. Three years ago I examined the water situation in Stockton, examined the little sumps or reservoirs that they pump water into, and went up to one of those reservoirs and found a boat there with a rake to rake the moss off the water, green moss, green scum, and this scum formed as the water was pumped from the lower levels. The wells, I think, were 600 or 700 feet in depth, and this scum formed on the reservoirs and had to be raked off; so that a body of water of this kind—pure, soft mountain water—would certainly be a great value to the city of Stockton or to any other city."

It does not appear that any motion was made to strike out this particular answer.

"Q. For domestic use? A. For domestic use. I estimated the fall or drop from the reservoir to the plain lands to be about 500 feet.

"Q. Will you explain to what use that fall of water could be put to? A. Possibly 250 feet of head could be taken out by means of an aqueduct and pressure pipes and the energy taken out of the water in the shape of power, hydroelectric energy, such as is now being done on the Don Pedro dam on the Tuolumne river, and as is proposed to be done on the Exchequer dam on the Merced river; that latter dam or water district have sold the energy from the dam for practically $450,000 a year, contracted for a number of years, and I think at least a third of that energy could be taken out of this water, or $150,000 a year from the power feature."

No motion appears to have been made to strike out this particular answer.

"Q. Will you state again whether in your opinion the use of this dam for the storage of water to the 200-foot height of the dam is or is not an economical use of such dam and the water flowing therein? A. It is the greatest economical use that can be made of that dam site and this reservoir by building a dam to the 200-foot level.

"Q. Then I will ask you whether in your opinion the building of a dam and the storage of water as indicated by the blue shading, a dam to the height of 144 feet, is the greatest economical use that could be made of that reservoir site? A. It is not."

The witness then referred to the additional area that would be flooded by the erection of a 200-foot dam.

"Q. Then when this reservoir is built and devoted to this highest economical use and value of a 200-foot embankment and storing the water, this particular 160 acres of land would be largely submerged; is that true? A. Over 100 acres of the 160.

"Q. Mr. O'Shaughnessy, are you able to state by an examination of the exhibits and maps that are before you where the 200-foot contour line would intersect or affect that south 160 acres? A. Here is the 160 acres in question, and here is the 730-foot contour in the northeast quarter of that 160 acres, and it practically covers about one-third of a quarter of a mile, or about 400 or 500 feet in depth, running east and west from the easterly line, and practically the same depth north and south."

The witness here further described the effect of raising the water to the 730-foot contour, and also stated that raising the water to the 680-foot contour line would flood the improvements on the defendant's lands. The witness was then asked the following question:

"Mr. O'Shaughnessy, this is an action brought by the city of Stockton, a municipal corporation, to condemn a perpetual easement and right to flood that portion of the Vote tract of land, of which you are already acquainted and by reference to these exhibits, lying below the 680-foot contour line for the purposes of protecting the city against flood and for the use of impounding waters for such purposes as shall not be inconsistent with flood control. Do you know what the market value of that land lying below the 680-foot contour line of the Vote land, within improvements, was on the 27th day of August, 1924, when this action was commenced; by market value I mean the value that it would be sold for for cash in the market, giving the owner of the land, Mr. Vote, a reasonable time in which to make such sale? A. I do.

"Q. Will you then state to the court and jury, what, in your opinion, was the market value of this Vote land, without improvements, lying below the 680-foot contour line on the 27th day of August, 1924, when this action was commenced, and by market value meaning what I have been stated before? A. Taking all conditions of the land into account, the elevation of the land above the sea, I would say that land is worth $15,000."

Mr. Galloway, a witness called by the defendant, after detailing his experience as an engineer, testified:

"A dam erected at the point referred to, 200 feet in height would impound 350,000 acre feet; that the water could be used for domestic consumption, irrigation, power and the reservoir site could be used for flood control; that the waters could be used for municipal purposes in any of the cities in the immediate vicinity; that it has been proposed to store water in that reservoir site and carry it out to Oakland; the water could be stored in the reservoir, flown down the stream to certain distances, taken out by canals on each side of the river, and delivered to the lands adjacent to the river; this reservoir is similar to others along the foothills of the Sierras; the usual procedure is to allow the water to flow a certain distance down the natural channel of the stream, pick it up with a diverting dam, because the lands all lie below the reservoir; therefore, the water will flow by gravity through canals on to the lands; the fall between the reservoir and the first lands to be irrigated is in the neighborhood of 400 feet; a power plant could be erected so as to use the waters from this reservoir; the power plant could be placed somewhere in the vicinity of Jenny Lind; the uses to which I have referred are the ordinary and usual and practicable uses of the water.

"Q. Mr. Galloway, you stated that one of the uses that could be made of this reservoir if constructed to the height of 200 feet and containing the volume of water that has been testified to, 350,000-acre feet maximum, what, in your opinion, as an engineer, would such a reservoir take charge of or supply in the way of irrigation and the number of acres? A. The answer to that question involves a statement that there is a certain watershed above the reservoir site from which the water will flow to fill the reservoir, and under the conditions of the Calaveras reservoir site, the reservoir could and is adapted to be used to irrigate some 35,000 or 40,000 acres of land.

"Q. Do I understand you, as an engineer, to state that the use of the water for both irrigation and for power can be made at the same time? A. The same idea of the use of water for irrigation and power are carried out in developing plans in the Merced district on the Merced river.

"Q. When you say the same idea, I think you have already testified that you have prepared the plans for the construction of the Merced dam and the development of electricity before the water reaches the Merced plains for irrigation purposes? A. Yes; that was the answer that was intended.

"Q. You may go right along and explain your answer. A. I am referring to the Exchequer dam; they are building it, it is more than proposed; it is under construction. I located the power plant there that would give a certain output of energy during the irrigation season, at the time the water was being released from the reservoir for irrigation. The system of the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation at that place had an electrical demand, a demand for power for pumping for irrigation that came on at the same time, and for the same purpose that the Merced irrigation district is releasing water from its reservoir for its own purposes, with the result that when the water was taken out of the reservoir for the irrigating season in different amounts we used it to generate energy, and that energy in the form of electricity was transmitted over the line of the power company, and they purchased it, so that when the proposition is built it will return to the irrigation district about $500,000 revenue per year. There are some parts of the state where that cannot be done; that depends on the market for power, and I say, I think, that anywhere from the American river south, wherever there is an irrigating reservoir proposed, a power plant can be built at the base of it and developed, and there is a market for that power; so that the two things working together are feasible, practicable propositions.

"Q. Now, I will ask you again, in your opinion, whether those two uses of water stored in the reservoir contemplated here, the development of power the same time the use of the water that develops the power, for irrigation—is that feasible and practicable? A. It is.

"Q. Assuming that it, has been answered, would you state approximately the amount of water that would be used or could be drawn from that reservoir for municipal supply, and whether or not that water would be lost for irrigation? A. Naturally the water would be lost for irrigation if used for domestic supply. The balance of the question is wholly on the matter as to how much water you would want to take for domestic consumption; in the case of the city of Stockton, the amount taken for domestic supply as compared to the amount required for irrigation is relatively small."

The witness then proceeded to state he knew the Vote lands, and was then asked the following question:

"The action is brought by the plaintiff in this case to obtain a perpetual easement on the Vote lands lying below the 680-foot contour to flow and flood that part of the land for the purposes of protecting the city of Stockton by flood control from floods, and for the purpose of using the impounded waters in such a reservoir for such purposes as shall not be inconsistent with the purposes of flood control. I will ask you now with that explanation, what, in your opinion as an engineer, or do you know what the market value of the Vote land lying below the 680-foot contour line, without improvements, was on the 27th day of August, 1924, explaining to you that market value means the price in cash that could be obtained for that portion of the land in the market, giving a reasonable time to the owner of the land to find a purchaser?"

—which question the witness answered: "16,000."

The witness further testified that the 680-foot contour would cover a reservoir basin covering 2,900 acres, and the 730-foot contour would include an area of about 3,540 acres.

M. C. Polk, a witness called for the defendant, after stating his qualifications and experience as an engineer, testified along the same general lines as testified to by the witness O'Shaughnessy, and testified, in part, as follows:

"Q. I will ask you again, to what uses, in your opinion, as an engineer, can be made of this proposed reservoir, or a reservoir on this site filled with water? A. The water impounded in the reservoir could be used for four different purposes: Municipal purposes, domestic uses, flood control, and most important in my mind is for irrigation and for power.

"Q. I will ask you again if the quantity of water that could be stored in this proposed reservoir would be adequate for the city of Stockton, assuming that they have a population of 55,000 people? A. 55,000, being the present population, would use about 10,000 acre feet from the reservoir a season. One year instead of a season; that is not allowing anything for future growth.

"Q. Assuming that the population of Stockton would be growing and increasing in population at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, not per annum, no; wouldn't it be, for a period of ten years, normal growth? (Johnson interposing): Increase of 84 per cent.

"Q. What would be the quantity of water necessary to be stored for municipal purposes for a city of such growth? A. In round numbers it would probably be necessary to double that amount, figure on 20,000 acre feet, for not a decade, for two decades probably."

The witness Pope further described the power possibilities that might be developed from the reservoir holding 350,000 acre feet of water, and then answered the following question:

"Q. Will you now state to the jury in a general way your views as to the use of this water in this dam when constructed to a height of 200 feet for irrigation purposes? A. My engineering work for a number of years has been particularly along the line of irrigation and investigation for water supply for irrigation purposes, and I found and know that all the natural flow of the stream, particularly in the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valley, have been located and in fact over located, and there is none for irrigation; that there is an endeavor to get storage water almost all over the entire valley area for irrigation, an extreme endeavor you might say, and the site available for storage of water for irrigation, all the available economical sites are practically all used, and I know in fact none as admirably situated as this for irrigation with lands along side needing the irrigation; this being an elevation of about 400 feet above the plains and only a few miles away, relatively speaking, makes it admirable for that purpose, not only on the plains, but, more or less, on the foothill lands of Calaveras and San Joaquin counties both, for lands upon which this water can be used, and being situated below the reservoir site, and being capable of storing 350,000 acre feet, providing for sufficient holdover to take care of the low years, perhaps not with a full irrigation, or extreme low years, to provide for a safety factor. It seems to me at least 50,000 acres could be irrigated from that amount of water at an economical operation.

"Q. Will you tell be how many acre feet to the acre you devote in the irrigation of these lands? A. On similar types and considering conditions, I have in my investigations allowed three acre feet of stored water for one acre of land to be irrigated on ordinary crops; that is, such as orchards, alfalfa, the ordinary crops. For rice irrigation it requires a great deal more.

"Q. Now, the other use that you mentioned that could be made of this reservoir constructed to the height of 200 feet, was flood control? A. Yes; that is true.

"Q. As an engineer what will you state as to such a use of this reservoir when constructed when devoted to flood control? A. The capacity of the reservoir would seem to me with regulating the holdover would probably take care of the flood control, although there is a little question in that as to the peak floods which might come, but as the factor of safety, I think, they will be safe on that. I haven't worked out the details on that; however, it would require a great deal of study."

This witness estimated the value of the 66.6 acres over which the plaintiff was seeking an easement of $16,000.

N. Randall Ellis, a witness called by the defense, after stating his qualifications and experiences, testified along the same general lines as that of the other experts. He testified as to his experience with the installation of power plants, the uses of water for irrigation and power purposes, the situation of the reservoir in question, that he had given consideration to the subject of the use of a portion of the waters impounded by a dam 200 feet in height erected on the site in question, and was asked the following questions:

"Q. Will you state what consideration you gave to that particular use? A. Yes sir; with my familiarity with the growing demands for water throughout California, throughout all municipalities, some familiarity with the existent situation in Stockton and in all valley towns, I believe that a municipal water supply could be supplemented quite economically for water withdrawal from this proposed reservoir without any appreciable interference with its function either as an irrigation reservoir or with a power by-product."

This witness, in answer to a question as to the market value of the land sought to be condemned, answered:

"A. I would say $16,000 as a minimum value, with a possible differential above that between 10 and 15 per cent.

"Q. That would mean $16,000 with 10 per cent. differential above that, would be $1,600 more, or 15 per cent. above that would be $2,400 more; is that what you mean? A. Yes, sir. In other words, my idea being this, if I may explain my answer: I consider $16,000 as a minimum reservoir value; not being absolutely susceptible to a fine mathematical analysis I consider that there is some differential in there; that differential probably would not exceed 15 per cent. above the basic figure that I have stated."

The testimony set forth in the transcript shows that the land over which the plaintiff was seeking an easement is the ordinary grazing land found in the canyons in the foothills before reaching the higher altitudes of the Sierras. The testimony also show that the Calaveras river is a "flash stream," not having its source in the perpetual snows of the higher Sierras. Following days of successive rainfall, the Calaveras takes on a turbulent character, but when the rains have ceased, the Calaveras river, as a river, has also ceased. Except during the rainy season, it is a river only by courtesy, and carries a volume of water so small as to be negligible for any practical use.

During the cross-examination by the defendant of the witness Hogan, the defendant offered, and, over the objection of the plaintiff, the court admitted in evidence, a report signed by Harry Barnes, purporting to deal with flood problems of the Calaveras river, dated October 31, 1919. This report takes up and gives the opinion of the writer upon the subject of controlling the flood waters of Calaveras river, it sets forth a description of the country involved, its physical characteristics, the improvements in the way of levee building, and other matters relating to the waters passing over San Joaquin county, contains tables showing annual rainfall, as compiled by the United States gauging station covering the period of years referred to by the witnesses and also plats or maps, copies of which were elsewhere admitted in evidence. This report is too lengthy to be set out in extenso, and the following excerpts are taken therefrom to illustrate the general character of the report:

"The interest of the federal government is primarily that of navigation on the San Joaquin river, and the maintenance of navigable waters to the city of Stockton. The San Joaquin river has a difficult debris problem to contend with.

For maintaining a necessary deep water channel in that stream, thousands of dollars are spent annually for dredging, straightening channels, etc., and upon the assumption that prevention is better than cure, it is realized that the ideal way to control the debris is to prevent it from reaching the river at all, if such a scheme be economically feasible. Prior to the construction of the Stockton diverting canal, completed in 1910, the government had expended for dredging in a period of 23 years, up to 1908, the sum of $233,000 to maintain open channels in Stockton and Mormon sloughs. The debris thus dredged came principally from the Calaveras river floods, and the expenditure of about $10,000 per year for this purpose, capitalized at 5 per cent., represents interest on $200,000. While it is true that since the construction of the canal the government has been relieved of much of this dredging work in Stockton and Mormon channels, due to the fact that silt has been deposited in the canal and the lower Calaveras river, such use of the diverting canal cannot be considered as a permanent solution of the debris problem. The canal is now filled several feet deep with sediment and its capacity greatly reduced, and it is apparent that a continuation of its effectiveness will necessitate extensive and regular dredging of the canal and lower Calaveras river before many years elapse. * * *

"The city of Stockton lies directly in the path of the Calaveras flood waters. Levees have been built around the city to keep out the high water of the Calaveras and San Joaquin rivers, but these levees do not afford complete immunity from danger. The levee built in connection with the construction of the diverting canal saved the city from a most disastrous flooding from the east side in 1911, but the city continues to be menaced by Calaveras water from other directions. Aside from the actual saving of property due to keeping out the flood waters, it is unnecessary to enlarge upon the advertising value to a city to be able to assure investors and prospective residents that flood dangers have been removed. As an instance of this, it is stated that a considerable portion of the growth of Stockton's population and industries of recent years has been due to the partial security afforded by the presence of the diverting canal levee east of the city.

"It should also be emphasized that the prosperity of a city is in direct ratio to the prosperity of the surrounding country, tributary to that city. Stockton's interests are inseparable from the interests of the agricultural country surrounding her, of which territory she is the business and shipping center, and to the extent that flood control on the Calaveras river contributes to the upbuilding of that country. Stockton has an indirect but very definite interest in the project. * * *

"The flood of 1911 was the highest of which we have record, and is stated to have been the greatest within the memory of old settlers—since that of 1862. Aside from the flood of 1911, however, it will be seen that floods of between 30,000 and 40,000 second feet may be considered of possible occurrence during any season. After the March rains the discharge rapidly decreases, and during the summer and autumn months the flow is practically nothing, and does not pick up until the storms of the following winter.

"Although the records of the U. S. Geologic Survey only extend from 1907 to date, it is fortunate that within that period have occurred seasons of both maximum and minimum runoff. As stated above, maximum conditions obtained in 1911, while the successive seasons of 1912 and 1913 comprised the dryest two-year period experienced in California for many years. 1908, which was also a dry year, was immediately preceded and followed by seasons of abnormal rainfall, and so the scarcity was not so noticeable as in the case of the two-year period of 1912-1913. * * * The specific location of the above area, comprising some 34,000 acres between the diverting canal and Bellota, is noted simply to give an idea of the magnitude of a feasible-sized irrigation project which could utilize the reservoir in conjunction with flood control. The use of the water is not limited by the topography to this area, however. If the farmers of this region do not wish to use the water there is plenty of land otherwise north of the Calaveras river and south of Mormon slough that would be benefited by a gravity irrigation supply, and might perhaps be glad to get it.

"In an irrigation project comprising 34,000 acres of good land it is probable that 90 per cent. or 30,600 acres will be under irrigation when fully developed. Figures are based upon the assumption that half the area goes into alfalfa and other crops requiring considerable water, and half put into fruit trees or vines. It is assumed that 2½ acre-feet per acre net per year will be required for the alfalfa, and 1.0 acre-foot net will be used on trees or vines. This gives a net requirement for the project of 1.75 acre feet per acre, totaling 53,550 acre-feet, or practically 54,000 acre-feet annually. Estimating that losses between the reservoir and the land to which the water is applied amount to 40 per cent. of the amount of water available, the gross requirement for the district will be 90,000 acre-feet per year. The water should be available for a season of six months. Using about 25 per cent. of the total during each of the months of maximum demand would require a canal with a capacity of 375 cubic feet per second at the head, or 15,000 statute miner's inches.

"This additional to the dam and reservoir will add to the cost of the project as outlined for flood control alone by the following amount:

Additional masonry in dam, 60,000 cubic yards at $8.....	$480,000 00
Additional acreage in reservoir, 1,000 acres at $25	25,000 00
	$505,000 00
Contingencies, 15 per cent.....	75,750 00
Total	$583,750 00

"For the irrigation of a tract of 34,000 acres this is at the rate of $17.17 per acre. Construction of canals and laterals to this tract will probably cost close to $25 per acre, making the cost for irrigation about $42 per acre. This latter estimate of canals and laterals is a general figure, and can only be determined accurately by a survey of the ditches proposed and ascertaining the yardage of material involved, but the figure given above is considered conservative.

"The details of the administration of the combined interests of flood control and irrigation would depend considerably upon whether the irrigation area lay within or without the flood control district. In any case it would doubtless be better to have two separate organizations, although the duties of the officers could often be combined and certain overhead expense thus eliminated.

"Following is a brief summary of the matter of the foregoing report:

"(1) The interests involved in the question of Calaveras river flood control are, United States government, state of California, county of San Joaquin, city of Stockton, public utilities operating within the flooded or menaced territory, and agricultural lands flooded or menaced.

"(2) The Calaveras river watershed extends to an allottee of 6,000 feet with a mean elevation of about 2,000 feet. It embraces 500 square miles above Bellota, 395 square miles above the Jenny Lind gauge of the U. S. Geologic Survey, and 368 square miles above the Valley Springs dam site.

"(3) Records of the flow of the Calaveras river kept by the U. S. Geologic Survey are available from 1907 to 1918. The record of the big flood of 1911 of the U. S. Geologic Survey is accepted as the best data available thereon, and matter of this report is based upon that record. The above period of observation of the river includes the consecutive dry seasons of 1912 and 1913, upon which figures of storage requirement for irrigation are based.

"(4) A comparison of a by-pass plan of flood control with that of utilizing the Valley Springs reservoir indicates the latter plan to be the more feasible.

"(5) An analysis of the reservoir requirements finds as follows, for full flood control: Capacity of channels below reservoir placed at 12,500 cubic feet per second. Capacity of reservoir, outlets, 7,500 cubic feet per second. Capacity of reservoir, 163,000 acre feet. Area of reservoir, 2,900 acres. Maximum height of dam, 151 feet.

"(6) Diamond drill borings made at the Valley Springs dam site indicate a feasible and sufficient foundation thereat.

"(7) Figures on a partial protection scheme are offered, based upon reservoir capacity to accommodate yearly or normal floods, but not the unusual flood such as that of 1911. For this plan is found as follows: Capacity of reservoir, 89,000 acre-feet. Area of reservoir, 2,100 acres. Maximum height of dam, 121 feet. Estimated cost of full protection plan, $1,613,450. Estimated saving in first cost of partial protection over full protection plan, $477,000.

"(8) It is not considered that this saving is justified on account of the great damage that would be caused by the abnormal floods.

"(9) The proposed flood control district includes 90,800 acres flooded or menaced by the Calaveras river water. The status of respective sections of this district is explained in the body of the report.

"(10) It is not assumed that all lands within the proposed district will be equally assessed. It is expected that some plan such as that used by the state reclamation board in large districts will be applied to determine the rates of taxation on different lands for benefits conferred by flood control.

"(11) It is considered that the problem of lands flooded or menaced by the present operation of the Stockton diverting canal is a question separate and apart from the general flood control scheme, and one that logically should be settled by the parties at interest without involving the proposed district further than that the general relief offered by such a district may make differences between those parties easier to settle.

"(12) A capacity of 284,000 acre-feet in the Valley Springs reservoir will provide storage for sufficient water to irrigate 34,000 acres through a two-year dry period such as 1912-1913, in addition to reserving sufficient capacity to safely control any flood of the magnitude of that of 1911. Such additional storage is estimated to add to the cost of the flood control project $583,750, or at the rate of $17.17 per acre on a 34,000-acre tract for irrigation storage alone. A canal and lateral system to these lands will bring irrigation costs up to about $42 per acre."

This report refers also to the diverting canals built by the United States government to protect the city of Stockton from overflow and its insufficiency in that respect, also takes up the subject of constructing a by-pass, and finally concludes with the general summary which we have herein set forth. The defense also offered, and, over the objections of the plaintiff, the court admitted in evidence, a report made by Charles E. Ashburner to the city council of the city of Stockton on the subject of flood protection for the city of Stockton and its vicinity. This report includes copies of tables showing the runoff of the waters of the Calaveras river for a number of years, also takes up the subject of irrigation, the organization of possible irrigation districts, and the writing off of the initial expense of the cost of building the restraining dam for flood control purposes by the values created in the stored water. This report is also too long to be inserted herein, but we copy therefrom the following excerpts:

"We recognize that Stockton is menaced by flood waters from two sources, the Calaveras and its tributaries, and the Little John Creek (including other small streams having their sources between the Calaveras on the north, and the Stanislaus on the south). The greatest menace confronting us to-day, however, is from the flood waters of the Calaveras river. The plan submitted proposes to protect the city from all flood menace and to furnish water for beneficial uses. Keeping the fiscal situation in view, it is proposed to eventually write off a large portion of the initial expenditure for flood control by the values created in the stored water; to initiate the work and to share these waters with adjoining communities upon fair and equitable terms. The dedication of irrigation water upon lands immediately adjacent to Stockton provides for all time the municipal supply of such area when later annexed by the expansion of the city. The dedication of water on neighboring lands and communities assures the growth of a higher and more productive contributory territory. Having in view the ultimate prosperity of the community, the question of flood control, water supply, and irrigation will be treated under the following chapters: * * *

"Damsite is located on the southwest quarter of section thirty-one (31) in township four (4) north, range eleven (11) east, M. D. B. & M. The site is in a narrow canyon between hills that rise about 200 feet above the bed of the river. The south bank rises steeply at an angle of about 30 degrees, while the north bank is flatter. The distance from hill to hill at the 690 foot elevation being approximately 1275 feet. The site is well adapted for storage purposes, and has a maximum capacity of 350,000 acre-feet. The dam is described, 160 feet in height, in addition to affording regulating capacity against flood waters to the extent of 163,000 acre feet, which is the amount estimated to be necessary to reduce the flood waters to 7,500 cubic feet per second, also furnishes storage for 37,000 acre-feet of water to be put to beneficial uses, such as domestic water supply and irrigation.

"The surplus water insures for all times a water supply for the city of Stockton, but will not be needed for several years, and can be used in the interim for irrigation purposes, thereby reducing the cost of flood prevention. The matter of augmenting the irrigation supply in order to release water for the municipal purposes is treated in subsequent chapters. The analysis of the matter is thus: We have flood protection and storage space for water for municipal purposes and for irrigation. * * *

"To any one who has studied conditions in the San Joaquin Valley, it is unbelievable that, with water available at the above cost, that an irrigation district that would use all this water would not be formed within a very short time. * * *

"It should not be necessary to direct one's attention to the value of water to the lands in this community, or to the lands which could be irrigated from this source of supply. One need only look at the marvelous results which have been accomplished in the South San Joaquin, Oakdale, Turlock, Modesto, and other irrigation districts of the San Joaquin Valley. All irrigable land below the 600 foot elevation lying between the Mokelumne river on the north, and the South San Joaquin and Oakdale districts on the south, are within the economic reach of this supply.

"In the foothill district of the Sierras lies a thermal belt where mild and equitable temperatures prevail throughout the winter, and on which citrus fruits thrive. The soils in the valleys of this foothill region in Calaveras county are of a sandy loam character, and are well adapted to the raising of deciduous, as well as the citrus fruits. One need only to look to the marvelous development of the fruit industry in Placer county around Loomis and Auburn. Lying in San Joaquin county below the 150 foot elevation is a vast acreage which should be under irrigation. North and east of Stockton in the vicinity of Lodi and Lockeford is a highly developed territory where land values of $1,000 to $1,500 an acre are not uncommon, and upon which irrigation by pumping is expensive and increasingly so with a falling water table, which has been very noticeable of late. Unless an economical gravity supply of water can be obtained for these lands, there must be a great depreciation in the value of the land and in the crops derived from the same.

"It is very noticeable that the crops raised in this section of San Joaquin county are seasonal, and do not bring in the steady monthly returns that would be derived from a more extensive dairy industry, which fact, coupled with the condition that makes it necessary for the state of California to import a large portion of its dairy products, would lead us to believe that, with sufficient water, an industry can be built up in this section of the state that will be reflected in the general business of the community. Lying between the Calaveras river and the Mormon channel is a large acreage of high productivity and increasing land values. In this territory the deciduous fruit and nut industry is rapidly developing. This territory like the territory in the vicinity of Lodi and Lockeford must of necessity resort to irrigation if productivity and land values are to be maintained. It is inconceivable that the residents of Stockton and vicinity and those of the foothill districts of Calaveras county should fail to see the enormous community benefit derived by us all from taking advantage of a situation which gives us too much water at one time in the year and too little at another.

"It is believed by some that water can be stored in the Mokelumne river for the purpose of developing electric power and irrigation. It is only necessary to make a thorough study of the situation to be convinced that, although these things may be done, the enormous cost of storage of water per acre-foot on the Mokelumne, when compared with the Calaveras, makes the Mokelumne project financially unsound. * * *

"Is it possible that further indorsement of this method of control could possibly be required by any one? It seems hardly necessary to speak of the small ultimate outlay for this project as security for the property and peace of mind of the citizens of Stockton."

[1] The theory upon which the Barnes report was admitted appears to be that it was referred to by the witness Hogan, in his testimony, in that he had copied certain tables therein contained, which were copies of tables made by the United State gauging officers, showing the run off of the Calaveras river, and also had copied certain of the maps contained in said report, which were, in turn, copies of government maps, and also that upon cross-examination counsel for the defense had questioned the witness as to certain portions of said report. The maps and tables concerning which the witness was examined were admitted without objection, and specific portions showing the area of the watershed were likewise admitted. The remainder of the report, which includes all the excerpts which we have set forth, were admitted over the plaintiff's objection. It is further argued that the Barnes report is admissible under subdivision 6 of section 1918 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We do not find any of these reasons tenable. The Barnes report does not purport to be a state document. It shows upon its face (page 6) that it was denied legal authority by the state Legislature. It also shows upon its face that it is a compilation of statistics and is the opinion of an engineer by the name of Harry Barnes, based upon the investigations conducted by him, under his statement that it was made by him at the direction of W. F. McClure, state engineer.

[2, 3] No objection was made to the introduction of this report on the ground that it was not properly authenticated; but that fact does not make the opinions and theories contained in the report admissible in evidence in this case, because of the further fact that the report is not an official document as that term is used in section 1918. It was not made in pursuance of any duty enjoined by law, but, as therein stated, shows that it was expressly undertaken in the absence of such authority, and therefore constitutes nothing more than the private compilation, theories, and opinions and estimates of the writer, Harry Barnes. Had it been made in the line of official duty, in pursuance of an investigation directed by the Legislature or some of the Code provisions of the state, then, and in that case, the authorities cited by the respondent would be applicable, but as it expressly appears to be the contrary, nothing has been called to our attention that would justify the admission of the results of the investigation, conclusions, opinions, and statements of the writer of said report. The case of Vallejo, etc., R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 147 P. 238, 169 Cal. 545, is not authority for the admission in evidence of the Barnes report. A reference to page 571 of the opinion in that case shows the report therein referred to to have been specially authorized by the provisions of the Political Code. Referring to section 332 of article 12 of the Political Code, it will be noted that provision is made for the reports of certain officers of the state to the governor. The officers therein referred to are to all intents and purposes the heads of the respective departments of the state government. These reports are then submitted to the state board of examiners, which board may, in its judgment, direct the publication thereof. The report in question was not made by the head of any department; was not made by the state engineer, as head of the department of public works. No section of the Political Code relating to the department of public works has been called to our attention that would make the report by a subordinate officer or field officer to his superior, or whatever designation may be applicable to the position occupied by Mr. Barnes, a public document admissible in evidence in controversies between independent parties. These considerations show the opinions and statements of Mr. Barnes to be mere hearsay so far as this case is concerned, and wholly inadmissible.

We will next consider the report made by Charles E. Ashburner, city manager of the city of Stockton, to the city council of the city of Stockton, bearing date of February, 1924. Respondent is in error in stating that only a general objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality and hearsay was made to the whole of said report. If such were the case and any portion of the report were admissible, then it might be that a general objection would be insufficient, but an examination of the transcript shows that between five and six pages are covered by the special objections urged by counsel for plaintiff. These objections take up the Ashburner report chapter by chapter and page by page, particularly specifying the portions of the report so specifically objected to, and calling the attention of the court to the particular portions of the report so objected to. Under these circumstances, if any of the chapters, paragraphs or pages of the report are inadmissible, the court erred in its rulings.

[4-6] In support of the admissibility of the Ashburner report, the respondent urges two propositions: (1) That it was included in and made a part of certain resolutions adopted by the city council of the city of Stockton; and (2) that it is admissible as being an admission against interest by the city of Stockton, the plaintiff in this action. The first resolution referred to adopted by the city council April 24, 1924, among other things, contains the following, "That it concurs in that portion of the report of the city manager providing for a dam to control the flood waters of the Calaveras river and for a levee protecting the city against the waters of Little John Drainage System"; and a further resolution adopted May 5, 1924, by the city council of the city of Stockton reciting the formal resolutions and containing the following section:

"That the public interests and necessity demanded the acquisition, construction and completion by the city of Stockton of certain municipal improvements, to wit, the construction of a restraining dam on the Calaveras river in the southwest quarter (S.W.¼) of section 31, township four (4) north, range eleven (11) east, Mount Diablo Base and Meridian, for the protection of the city of Stockton from floods and for the use of said impounded water for such purposes as shall not be inconsistent with the purposes mentioned in said resolutions."

Another one of these resolutions purported to adopt the Ashburner report further than the first resolution concurs in that portion thereof relating to flood control of the waters of the Calaveras river for protective purposes, and if the first resolution which does concur in the Ashburner report in so far as flood control is concerned be treated as an adoption thereof and as a part of the resolution of the city council, that would not admit the other portions of the report, which are merely arguments and opinions relating to other matters and which therefore became purely hearsay statements and opinions by Mr. Ashburner. Nor can we agree with counsel that the Ashburner report, extracts from which we have set forth herein, constituted admissions by the city council. At the time in question, neither Ashburner nor the city council was in a position to make any admissions against the interest of the city. They had no authority at that time to undertake the work contemplated. It was a matter subsequently to be passed upon by the electors of the municipality. It is one of the cardinal principles of an admission that the party speaking must be in a position of authority to speak. The cases relied upon by the respondent in his position upon this question do not seem to us to be in point. In the case of Los Angeles City Water Co. v. Los Angeles (C. C.) 88 F. 720, argued at length in respondent's brief, the question presented was primarily the data upon which the water rates of the city of Los Angeles were fixed. It appears that the committee examining and passing upon the schedule of rates had taken as its guide data and rates theretofore fixed. The court said:

"A corporation, municipal as well as private, is bound by the declarations of its officers, where such declarations accompany, and are explanatory of, an act done by the officer in the scope of his authority."

The committee were in the performance of duty expressly enjoined upon them by the city, and the statements in their reports that they had followed the rates charged in July, 1868, were explanatory of the rates they had established. These matters were therefore held admissible, as data upon which the committee had acted. Likewise are the cases relating to declarations made by a state commissioner when engaged in the performance of some particular duty to show knowledge of what might result from the performance of that particular duty. Admissions which show knowledge on the part of officers, as in the case of Weir v. Plymouth, 148 Pa. 566, 24 A. 94, have frequently been admitted, where it is necessary to bring home knowledge to an officer charged with neglect of duty, or a defective street or sidewalk or instrumentality under the control of or belonging to a municipality. These cases are entirely beside the question, as presented in the consideration of the admissibility of the Ashburner report. The city council, by its resolutions, explicitly excluded every other consideration than that of flood control in its resolution concurring in the report made to the city council. The fact that the city council in a subsequent resolution used the words, "for the protection of the city of Stockton from floods and for the use of said impounded water for such purposes as shall not be inconsistent with the purposes mentioned in said resolutions," does not open the door for the admission of hearsay testimony or the opinions or conclusions of Mr. Ashburner as to the feasibility of using the impounded waters for irrigation purposes, or as to the revenue that might be derived for power purposes, or for purposes of irrigation. The sale of such waters might possibly, as said by Mr. Ashburner, "eventually write off a large proportion of the initial expenditure for flood control by the values created in the stored waters"; but this statement, in addition to being hearsay, as introduced in this case, is pure speculation, and is entering upon a field condemned by an almost unanimous current of authorities dealing with eminent domain proceedings. While the general objection to the introduction of this testimony, that it is incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and hearsay, might not have been sufficient to exclude that portion of the Ashburner report concurred in by the resolutions of the city council of the city of Stockton relating to flood control, as heretofore stated the record shows that the report was objected to, page by page, chapter by chapter, so as to call the attention of the court to the specific parts of the report which could not, under any view of the case, be considered as relating merely to flood control. The figures relating to what it would cost per acre to furnish water for irrigation purposes were withdrawn from the offer of the report in evidence; but the fact of profit hoped to be derived from the venture was left before the jury for its consideration, as shown by the excerpt above quoted relating to the writing off of the initial expense. In this particular, we may again refer to the Barnes report where the cost of furnishing water for irrigation under the plan proposed by the testimony of the defendant's experts, above referred to, is estimated at $42 per acre. The Barnes report differs from the testimony of the experts only in that the proposed dam is given an altitude of only 190 feet instead of 200 feet. From these reports and the testimony of the experts, the entire project was before the jury as clearly as could be in the form of a completed enterprise. The dam was there before them, 200 feet in height, canals on either side of the river came into being, conducting water down to a point near Jenny Lind, where, through penstocks, the water was being dropped from 200 to 250 feet upon waiting water wheels, which, in turn, gave motion to great dynamos, producing a current carrying light and heat to thriving cities in the valley while the impounded waters, having discharged this duty, were carried forward through diverting ditches to some 34,000 acres of lands lying below the foothills at an approximate cost of $42 per acre, a limited portion of the water being taken through conduits to the cities needing impounded water for municipal purposes, the cost of the enterprise being gradually written off by the revenue derived from the sale of the impounded waters for power and irrigation purposes. It is true that this picture existed only on paper, but the reports referred to enabled the jury to visualize the speculative project as an actuality and measure the market value of the flowage easement sought over the defendant's lands according to the standard thus presented. These reports follow directly in line with the predicate set forth in the question asked of some of the expert witnesses, which we have heretofore quoted, and again insert here the following excerpt:

"Q. This is an action by the plaintiff in this case to obtain a perpetual easement on the Vote lands lying below the 680-foot contour for the purposes of protecting the city of Stockton by flood control from floods and for the purpose of using the impounding water in such a reservoir for such purposes as shall not be inconsistent with the purposes of flood control," etc., and unfolded to the jury a speculative purpose of using the impounded waters.

[7, 8] All the authorities agree that the purposes for which the water is to be used by the plaintiff in eminent domain and the beneficial purpose to be derived therefrom are not to be taken into consideration in determining market values. Availability may be shown, but the purposes and uses, necessity and values of or to the plaintiff in such actions are wholly irrelevant matters. These matters all tend to base the estimate of market value on what the plaintiff can afford to pay rather than forego the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

Again, in the testimony of the witness Polk, the same speculative testimony appears where reference is made to the possible growth of the city of Stockton and the estimated quantity of water that would be necessary to supply the wants of that city 20 years hence. The same is true of the testimony of the witness Ellis, where he describes his familiarity with the growing demands for water by the municipalities in the valley, and stating the situation in the city of Stockton which injects also the needs of said city into the question of determining market values.

The voluntary statements of the witness O'Shaughnessy as to the condition of the municipal water supply of the city of Stockton, and as to the revenue that might be derived by the city of Stockton from the sale of the energy contained in the impounded waters for power purposes, not having been made the subject of a motion to strike out, are not considered herein, but this does not obviate the errors in the admission of testimony covering practically the same subjects over the objection of appellant, as elsewhere referred to in this case.

Both parties to this controversy place reliance upon the opinion in the second appeal of the case of San Diego Land, etc., Co. v. Neale, 25 P. 977, 88 Cal. 50, 11 L. R. A. 604. This case has been considered in subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court, notably in Sacramento, etc., R. Co. v. Heilbron, 104 P. 979, 156 Cal. 408. The court, in the Neale Case, thus sets forth its views of the law applicable to situations such as are presented here:

"The cost of works necessary for the utilization of the land for reservoir purposes was an element in the calculation as conjectural and speculative as would be the cost of a railroad and running stock necessary for the operation thereof in fixing the value of land condemned for railroad purposes. The quality and condition of the lands to be affected was as foreign to a legitimate estimate of the market value of the land as the size and growth of a city on the line of the railroad would be in fixing the value of land taken for railroad purposes. The necessities of the public are never taken into consideration in fixing the value. They are an element which must be proved before the land can be taken, but are never an element of the question as to compensation. The proportion which the defendants' land bore to the remainder of the plaintiff's reservoir, and the quantity of water which would be stored by use of the defendants' land in connection with the land of plaintiff, and the value of the water as a salable commodity, were clearly improper elements to be considered. Tide W. Canal Co. v. Archer, 9 Gill & J. [Md.] 481, and other cases.

"The question was, not what the property was worth to a person intending to acquire it and the dam site and the remainder of the reservoir by purchase or condemnation for the purpose of supplying water over the territory tributary to the system, but what was the market value of the property itself. In other words, what the defendants could have obtained for their land if it had been offered for sale in the market, a reasonable time being given within which to make the sale. The plaintiff must compete in the market with bona fide purchasers generally, but its necessities cannot be taken advantage of. So far as the value of the land in controversy may have been increased to purchasers generally by the construction and use of the plaintiff's dam and reservoir, or as a part of the entire reservoir site, such fact should be considered, but the value of the land when used in connection with the plaintiff's land cannot be taken as a criterion, for this would be taking the value to the plaintiff as the measure of compensation. The jury had a right to consider the fact, in determining the market value, that the land in controversy was in proximity to a dam site, and to consider its adaptability for reservoir purposes, and to determine whether or not its market value had been enhanced by improvements put upon adjoining property; but for the reasons stated its adaptability for reservoir purposes should not have been considered 'in connection with such dam site and other adjacent lands.' * * *

"It is sufficient to say that any facts showing the nature of the land in controversy, and its adaptability for reservoir purposes, may be shown. The area of the watershed and amount of water were matters proper to be considered; for a reservoir would be useless without water. That there was land irrigable from the reservoir, and cities and towns which were being supplied with water from wells, were matters not only tending to show that it was a practical reservoir site, but bearing directly upon its value. The condition of the property, the uses to which it may be put, having regard to the existing advantages for making a practical use of the property, and such advantages as may be reasonably expected in the immediate future, are all matters for consideration in estimating the value of the lands (Boom Company v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403 [25 L. Ed. 206]); but to attempt to ascertain the value by estimating the cost of works necessary for its use for a particular purpose, the cost of operation, prospective sales and estimated profits, increased demands through growth of population, etc., requires 'a degree of refinement in the measure of values which seem to us totally incompatible with the gross estimates of common life. * * * The gross estimates of common life are all that courts and juries have skill enough to use as a measure of value. All other measures are necessarily arbitrary and fanciful.' Searle v. L. & F. R. R. Co., 33 Pa. 64."

In the Heilbron Case, after a review of a number of the preceding authorities and of the opinions in the Neale Case, the law applicable is thus stated:

"The present market value of the land is the measure of damages, and not its value in use to the owner or to the parties seeking to condemn. There is nothing in the Neale Case indicating a different rule. The availability of the property for any particular use may be shown, and in the present case all the facts bearing on the use to which the building was adapted and for which it was being used were shown.' It is seen, therefore, that this court by its latest utterances had definitely aligned itself with the great majority of the courts in holding that damages must be measured by the market value of the land at the time it is taken, that the test is not the value for a special purpose, but the fair market value of the land in view of all the purposes to which it is naturally adapted; that therefore while evidence that it is 'valuable' for this or that or another purpose may always be given and should be freely received, the value in terms of money, the price, which one or another witness may think the land would bring for this or that or the other specific purpose is not admissible as an element in determining that market value. For such evidence opens wide the door to unlimited vagaries and speculations concerning problematical prices which might under possible contingencies be paid for the land, and distracts the mind of the jury from the single question—that of market value—the highest sum which the property is worth to persons generally, purchasing in the open market in consideration of the land's adaptability for any proven use."

A reference to the testimony which we have heretofore set forth and the predicate contained in the questions asked, as well as the answers of the witnesses, show that their estimated market value of the land was really an estimate of what they thought the land was worth for a specific purpose. The two purposes were set out and the statement incorporated in the question propounded to the witnesses relative to market value.

[9-11] The opinion in the Neale Case shows that "the necessities of the public are never taken into consideration in fixing the value." The necessities of the city of Stockton were presented to the jury in this case, as shown by the testimony, relative to its water supply, as hereinbefore set forth. Likewise, the growth of the city of Stockton is a subject held inadmissible by the Neale Case. The Heilbron Case is directly in point in holding that the value in use of the land sought to be condemned is inadmissible. The reports which were admitted in this case set forth the value in use, as we have heretofore shown.

[12] As said in the concurring opinion of Justice Harrison in Spring Valley W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 28 P. 681, 92 Cal. 528:

The land "may be adapted for a reservoir site, but its value for such a purpose would be qualified by the prospect, greater or less, of any one seeking to build such a reservoir. Its market value is affected by such contingency, but is not to be determined by the fact that the party seeking to condemn it has already determined to build a reservoir. To allow that element to enter into the computation would be to make the plaintiff's necessity the owner's opportunity."

[13-17] Excluding the Ashburner report and the Barnes report and the elimination of the speculative parts of the testimony given by the experts, to which we have herein specifically referred, we do not find anything in the record in this case which violates the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the Neale Case as limited and applied by the Heilbron Case. The fact that there was a watershed upon the Calaveras river capable of affording a runoff of rainwater sufficient to fill a reservoir containing 350,000 acre-feet of water, that there were lands susceptible of irrigation lying within a reasonable distance of the reservoir site and also cities or municipalities in the San Joaquin Valley, were matters which any one contemplating a purchase of the premises in question might very well take into consideration in determining the value of the land which he was about to buy, and, if these are matters which an intending purchaser might consider, they are proper matters to be laid before the jury. The fact, also, that the highest use of the land to which it was adapted for such purposes would be subserved by a 200-foot dam, we think, is also admissible. Testimony on the part of persons qualified to speak on such subjects was also proper to be laid before the jury. The fact that the party seeking to condemn was not proposing to make the highest use of the condemned property is not a matter to be taken into consideration in determining values, any more than the value of the use of the property to the condemnor is likewise not to be considered. Both of such elements are inadmissible. The rule for determining values is set forth in the Heilbron Case, supra, is also fully set forth in the case of Brack v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 93 A. 994, 125 Md. 378, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 880, following the rule laid down in the Heilbron Case.

[18, 19] The Brack Case, supra, is also authority for the proposition that adaptability of a defendant's land for reservoir purposes may be taken into consideration, although his land alone does not constitute an entire reservoir site and a complete reservoir site requires the joining of his land to a number of other tracts of land belonging to different owners. The record in this case shows that the lands included within the proposed reservoir site are owned by at least 32 different persons; but we do not find in the transcript anything further that would lead to the declaration, as a matter of law, that it is impractical to join all of the lands with the lands of the defendant to form such reservoir. In the case of Medina Valley Irr. Co. v. Seekatz, 237 F. 805, 151 C. C. A. 47, the court, in its opinion, sets forth an apparently contradictory ruling. It was there said:

"The defendant was entitled to be paid the value of his land as it was held and owned by him, but was not entitled to a proportion of an advance in value of a much larger tract due to a union of his land with the lands of a number of other proprietors. The contest in this case was enough to show that it was not to be assumed that it was reasonably practicable, without an exercise of the power of eminent domain, to bring together into one ownership the sundry parcels of land required to constitute the reservoir site, the value of which was deposited to. The defendant was not entitled to share in an enhancement of value attributable to an expected exercise of that power"—citing a number of cases.

The facts upon which this holding is predicated are not very clearly set forth in the opinion. It does appear, however, that a different rule as to ascertaining values in such cases was followed than that prevailing in this state, in that the value of the lands for the purposes for which it was being condemned, and not its market value, was really being considered. It appears also that the testimony admitted covered such questions as the estimated returns upon the land when used for reservoir purposes. What the facts were tending to show that the lands could not be joined in one ownership does not appear. In the case of Board of Water Supply, 109 N. Y. S. 1036, 58 Misc. Rep. 581, and authorities having to do with the Ashokan reservoir site, cited by appellant, the number of property owners was so great and the interests in the lands necessary to be taken and united in one interest to constitute a reservoir site were so diversified, contingent, and far-reaching, it was apparent to the court that the value of any particular site, lot, or tract of land as part of a reservoir could not be enhanced in its market value by reason of the obstacles necessary to be overcome in uniting the lands in one ownership. The facts of this case are so dissimilar from the one at bar that we think the conclusions there reached are not controlling here. We think the true rule applicable to this case is set forth in the case of Gearhart v. Clear Spring W. Co., 51 A. 891, 202 Pa. 292. There the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania holds this question to be one of fact. We quote from the opinion of the court in that case:

"The location alone fixed the value. Whether the land was available for the use testified to was a question of fact, and the argument directed to the court against the admission of the testimony should have had great weight with the jury in determining the value. The question was submitted with instructions that if the land, by itself, could not be used for building a reservoir, an estimate of its value for that use in connection with other properties which the plaintiff did not own, and could not acquire, should be disregarded by the jury."

[20] If it should appear in the case at bar that there are other lands which the defendant does not own and cannot acquire, then and in that case, which is a fact for the jury to pass upon, the value of the land for reservoir purposes should be eliminated. In other words, the practicability of uniting the lands in one ownership for reservoir purposes, and the cost and expenses thereof, and the time consumed in so doing, are elements of fact which would bear upon the market value of the premises in question, and, we think, would be considered by any bona fide purchaser of the land purchasing for any purpose for which the land is reasonably adapted, and where the land is only a part of a larger tract owned by a number of individuals, all of these facts should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions to take into consideration whether the location of the land does or does not add to its market value by reason of its adaptability for reservoir purposes when joined to other lands. It is apparent that in and of itself the tract of land belonging to the defendant is not adapted for reservoir purposes, and hence no market value was affected by such adaptability. It is only when such union has been effected and the practicability of such union is a matter of fact. These questions, we think, were substantially covered by instruction No. 29, given by the court to the jury. Which instruction sets forth the law as favorably for the plaintiff as the testimony and the transcript warranted.

[21] We do not think it necessary to go into the question of alleged errors by the court in permitting hypothetical questions to be answered, where the question simply set forth as a basis the hearing of testimony of other witnesses by the expert, and upon whose testimony the opinions were based, further than to say that the better practice is to set forth in the hypothetical question the facts upon which it is sought to illustrate the opinion of the witness being examined. In other words, if error has been committed in this particular, it is not sufficient, in and of itself, to warrant reversal.

[22] Our attention has been called to section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution, in support of the verdict rendered by the jury. It is set forth that the jury must have disregarded the values fixed by the experts in that they set a valuation of about $240 per acre upon the 66.6 acres, while the jury allowed only $100 per acre. There is some testimony to the effect, outside of the testimony of the experts introduced by the defendant, that the land was worth $100 per acre. Some of the witnesses testified it was worth $150 per acre. On the part of the plaintiff in rebuttal much testimony was offered to the effect that the land was grazing land and was worth but little over one-fourth of the sum allowed by the jury; that the improvements were not worth anything like the sum awarded by the jury, and that the total valuation was only about one-half the damages awarded by the jury. Under these circumstances, we do not very well see how it can be held that the inadmissible testimony to which we have referred to be other than prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff in this action. The testimony of the experts, which we have hereinabove set forth and referred to, except as to the limited parts specified, we think admissible, but, when supplemented by the Ashburner and Barnes reports, an entirely different and completed picture was presented, carrying with it the semblance of official or state authority. We have not discussed the question as to the qualification of the experts or others to give opinions, as the law on that question seems well settled and may not be presented in any subsequent trial. What we would have to say could not be other than a repetition of the rules of law already well established.

[23] The errors set forth necessitate a reversal. Under the law, a landowner is entitled to the full value of his land, when finally ascertained, exclusive of costs. For that reason costs on appeal herein must be charged to the appellant.

It is hereby ordered that the judgment herein be and the same is hereby reversed, and the respondent will have and recover his costs on appeal.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 352

PEOPLE v. GIMINIANI. (Cr. 1251.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 1, 1926.)

Jury 116—Refusal to dismiss panel because judge had reprimanded juror who voted not guilty in trial for similar offense a few days before was not error (Pen. Code, § 1059).

Refusal to dismiss panel from which jury was selected in part because judge had publicly reprimanded juror who voted not guilty in trial for similar offense a few days before was not error, there being no contention that challenge to any individual juror was improperly denied, as the fact that some jurors do not possess the requisite qualifications is not ground for the challenge to the panel under Pen. Code, § 1059.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

William Giminiani was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Charles A. Barnhart, of Los Angeles, and Rollin Laird and Rowen Irwin, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Irwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of misdemeanor, to wit, contributing to the delinquency of a minor. His appeal is from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and also from the judgment. The same action was before this court on a former appeal. People v. Giminiani, 232 P. 993.

When the case was called for trial, and before any juror was sworn, the defendant moved "to dismiss the present panel of jurors and draw another, on the ground of prejudice arising from the trial of Benjamin C. Bellomi by the same panel on the same charge as that on which the present defendant is being tried, and because of the statements of the court during and subsequent to such trial." The motion was supported by an affidavit which set forth certain facts concerning the Bellomi Case, which was tried a few days before the trial of the Giminiani Case, and by a jury drawn from the same panel. The substance of the matter was that Bellomi was charged with an offense similar to that charged against Giminiani; that the Bellomi jury was discharged without rendering any verdict, because one John Nord, one of the jurors, voted "not guilty," although the other eleven were in favor of conviction; that the judge of the court, being of the opinion that Bellomi should have been convicted, publicly reprimanded Nord, and discharged him from the panel. The evidence produced before the court on the motion in the present action consisted of said affidavit, plus a statement by the judge. It does not show how many of the jurors in the Bellomi Case were present when Nord was reprimanded. It does appear that the jury had been discharged, and that the remainder of the panel was not present. The affidavit also shows that the Nord incident was given conspicuous publicity in the newspapers of the county.

The sole ground of appeal is that the court erred in refusing to dismiss the panel from which (in part) the jury was selected for the trial of this action.

"A challenge to the panel can be founded only on a material departure from the forms prescribed in respect to the drawing and return of the jury in civil actions, or the intentional omission of the sheriff to summon one or more of the jurors drawn." Pen. Code, § 1059.

The challenge as offered by the defendant did not relate to any of the matters described in this section. The objections comprised in the challenge were in the nature of a general charge that the jurors composing the panel, or some of them, had become so far prejudiced or unduly influenced by the statements of the judge relating to a similar action that they would not be fair jurors for the defendant in this action. But there is no contention that in the further progress of the trial any challenge of the defendant directed toward any individual juror was improperly denied.

"The fact that some of the jurors selected do not possess the requisite qualifications is not a ground of challenge to the panel, even if such ground had been stated in the challenge." People v. Richards, 82 P. 691, 694, 1 Cal. App. 566, 573; People v. Harris, 188 P. 65, 45 Cal. App. 547, 550.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 333

GODEAU v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(Civ. 5399.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1926. Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 29, 1926.)

1. Master and servant 405(6)—Evidence held to show employer's refusal to furnish medical treatment to injured employee.

Where employer furnished first treatment 12 days after injury, partial treatment only for a month, and thereafter employee was treated by own physician, evidence was held sufficient to show that employer refused to furnish treatment reasonably adequate to cure and relieve.

2. Master and servant 385(16)—Employer refusing to furnish medical treatment is liable for reasonable expense incurred by employee in securing same.

Upon refusal of employer to furnish reasonably adequate medical treatment, employee is justified in seeking relief elsewhere, and employer is liable for reasonable expense in securing such treatment.

Application for certiorari by Julius S. Godeau, doing business as the Pacific States Casket Company, against the Industrial Accident Commission of California and another, to review an award under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, made to Jesus Yanus, claimant. Award affirmed.

J. Clark Benson and Dunne, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury and Frederick W. Crawford, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Certiorari to review an award of compensation benefits made by the Industrial Accident Commission to one Jesus Yanus for injuries received in the course of his employment.

Yanus was engaged as a laborer by petitioner Julius S. Godeau to perform certain services in his casket factory. Both employer and employee were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended). On April 7, 1924, Yanus, while performing his duties, was injured by reason of a board falling upon his left foot, which caused a serious fracture of two of the metatarsal bones.

On July 7, 1924, he filed with the Industrial Accident Commission his application for adjustment of a claim for compensation growing out of said injuries. Several hearings were had thereon, and on March 5, 1925, the commission entered its award. It found, in substance, that the employer had notice of the injuries received by Yanus, and had furnished him, in part, the medical treatment required. It further found that the applicant was entitled to further medical treatment which the employer had tendered, but which was refused by the applicant, in consequence of which his disability was aggravated, but, considering the seriousness of the injury, such aggravation was inconsiderable. It also found that the refusal to receive the additional treatment was unreasonable, and further compensation was discontinued until such time as the applicant should submit to the offered treatment. With reference to the result of the injuries it was found that they caused temporary total disability continuing from the date thereof to and including the 13th day of May, a period of $4\frac{1}{4}$ weeks, exclusive of the waiting period of 7 days, entitling the employee to \$11.12 per week, amounting to \$46.07.

Beginning with the 14th day of May, 1924, the employer furnished to the employee light work at full wage which he was able to perform. The commission found that the employee was not entitled to any compensation beginning with the last-mentioned date, or until such time as he should submit to the offered treatment above mentioned. On the 25th day of March, 1925, Yanus filed a petition for rehearing, which was granted on April 15, 1925.

Thereafter the matter again came on for hearing. Further testimony was had, and on July 6, 1925, the commission entered its decision finding that the employer, Godeau, had neglected to seasonably furnish applicant with the medical treatment reasonably required to cure and relieve him from the effects of his injury, thus in effect revoking its former finding that the disability was due to the refusal of Yanus to accept treatment. It further found that the injury caused temporary total disability beginning from its date to and including February 16, 1925, entitling the employee to \$11.12 a week during said period, exclusive of the waiting period of 7 days, and an additional three days during the month of May, 1924, while Yanus was re-employed by Godeau. The amount accrued was found to be the sum of \$484.51 for $43\frac{3}{4}$ weeks. Of this amount \$46.80 had been paid to Yanus, leaving a balance due him of \$437.71, for which amount an award was made. It further found, in substance, that the refusal of Godeau to furnish the required treatment compelled Yanus to seek such treatment elsewhere, for which Godeau was liable, and the commission declared that a supplemental award would be made upon the filing of itemized bills with the commission approved by the medical department thereof.

From this award a petition for rehearing was filed by the employer on July 24, 1925, upon the grounds that the commission acted without or in excess of its powers; that the evidence did not justify the findings of fact; that such findings did not support the decision; and that the award was unreasonable.

The petition for rehearing was denied by the commission, whereupon the present proceeding was instituted, and the same grounds are here urged against the award as were urged before the commission upon rehearing.

It is claimed in support of these contentions that the record discloses that for a period of time after the injury the respondent Yanus refused to accept medical attention which was tendered to him by petitioner, but finally did so, and, in consequence of the treatment received, he was making all reasonable progress toward a permanent and satisfactory cure and recovery under the care of an experienced and competent physician furnished by petitioner, when without notice or a request for a change of doctors, he discontinued taking treatment, and employed a physician of his own, who removed certain supporting bandages, with the result that the injured foot was subjected to severe and unwarranted strains, causing a pulling apart of the bones of the foot and resulting in an aggravation of the injury. Under these facts it is urged that Yanus was at no time justified in deserting the physician furnished by petitioner without first advising him of any dissatisfaction he may have had to such physician, and requesting a change in doctors.

Conceding that an employer has the right in the first instance to designate the surgeon or physician who shall attend an injured employee, the controversy is not affected by this question, but rather is entirely controlled by the facts of the case, upon which there is a decided conflict.

There is evidence to show that when Yanus was injured petitioner was acquainted with the fact, and told him to go home and write to him concerning his progress. The injury occurred on April 7, 1924. On the following day Yanus advised his employer in writing that he was unable to walk. No attention was paid by Godeau to this communication. On April 16, 1924, Yanus again wrote informing his employer of this fact, whereupon Godeau directed a physician to call upon him. The visit was made on April 19th, a period of some 12 days following the accident. The injured foot was bandaged, but no fractures were discovered by this physician until May 5, 1924, when an X-ray picture disclosed the same. During the period from April 19 to May 5, 1924, Yanus was not directed to refrain from using the foot, nor furnished appliances to keep the foot at rest. There is also testimony to show that the physician furnished by Godeau directed Yanus to return to work on May 14th, a period when his injured foot should have been at rest, as the fractures had not united; that he did so return and worked 3 days, when he was compelled to quit, and in consequence of this wrong advice the disability was prolonged. On May 19th or 20th Yanus called upon Godeau to receive compensation payments and wages for the period of disability and the 3 days' work. On this occasion, according to the testimony of Yanus, Godeau called him a faker, and told him to get out and not call again. Godeau denied that any such incident had happened, but the statement of Yanus finds some support in the testimony of the physician furnished by Godeau, for he testified that he had discovered that there was some trouble between Godeau and Yanus. There is also testimony to show that Yanus was induced to again call upon this physician by an officer of the commission. He did so, and was informed that he was to be sent to a hospital, but later the physician told him that Godeau had concluded to fight the case. There is, therefore, evidence to show that the employee received no treatment from the date of his injury to April 19, 1924. After that time, and until May 20th following, when the trouble occurred, he did receive but partial treatment from his employer. There is also evidence to show that subsequent to May 20th he was under the care of a physician of his own selection until June 20th, when he again visited his employer's physician and was informed that nothing further would be done for him.

[1,2] There is, therefore, ample evidence in the record to show that petitioner refused to furnish treatment reasonably adequate to relieve and cure the employee.

Having refused to do so, the employee was justified in seeking relief elsewhere, and his employer is liable for the reasonable expense incurred in securing the same. The evidence as a whole is not without conflict, but this is a matter with which we are not here concerned.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 310

PEOPLE v. PEPPA. (Cr. 1306.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 26, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1926.)

Larceny §40(6) — Accused, who procured check with intent, subsequently executed, of converting proceeds thereof to his own use, held guilty of larceny of check as well as of money.

Accused, who procured from witness check for payment of stock, with intent, subsequently executed, of converting proceeds thereof to his own use, held guilty of larceny of check as well as of money.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Rocco Joseph Peppa was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Frank W. Allender, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of grand larceny and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The amended information upon which the trial was had contains four counts. Upon only one of them was defendant convicted and sentenced. This count charges defendant with the larceny of a check of the value of $300, the personal property of the complaining witness, one Bernard Erb, and alleges that it was stolen by defendant on February 24, 1925. It is claimed that the verdict convicting defendant of this charge is contrary to law and to the evidence.

There was evidence tending to establish these facts: The complaining witness, before his first meeting with defendant, was the owner of a few shares of the capital stock of the Gold Ridge Mining Company, an Arizona corporation maintaining offices in the city of Los Angeles. Two or three days before the complaining witness met defendant the latter was introduced to the secretary of the Gold Ridge Mining Company. Defendant represented to the secretary that he (defendant) was a man who had acquired experience in promoting mining corporations, and that he could be of some assistance to the company in selling shares of its capital stock. He told the secretary that he knew some Italians whom he said he thought he could interest in the purchase of the company's stock. The secretary then informed defendant that, while the corporation had a permit from the state of Arizona to sell in that jurisdiction 5,000 shares of stock, no permit to sell its stock had been issued in California by the corporation commissioner of this state. The secretary testified that defendant had "a sort of tentative agreement" with the company to sell its stock in Arizona under the Arizona permit. Later, on February 20, 1925, at the company's office in Los Angeles, defendant asked the secretary for some of the corporation's blank certificates of stock. He told the secretary that he had succeeded in interesting in the company the Italians of whom he had spoken in his first interview with that officer, and stated that these men wanted to see "this stock." The secretary then said to defendant, "You can't use them [the certificates] in the state of California. * * * You can't sell them." To this defendant replied, "The only thing I want to do is to show them." Thereupon the secretary delivered to defendant two blank certificates of stock. The secretary's signature was subscribed to each of these documents, but neither of them was signed by the president of the corporation. When these blank certificates were delivered to defendant, the secretary told him that they "were not any good because they were not signed by the president." On the day preceding that upon which defendant thus succeeded in securing possession of these two blank certificates, i. e., on February 19th, defendant was introduced to the complaining witness at the latter's place of business in Los Angeles. He was introduced as a mining promoter who was interested in financing the Gold Ridge Mining Company. Defendant subsequently visited the complaining witness at the latter's store on the 24th day of February. This visit was made for the ostensible purpose of interesting Erb in the purchase of additional shares of the company's capital stock. Defendant falsely represented himself to be a stock salesman under a $5,000 bond, authorized to sell the company's stock. It would seem that upon this occasion defendant offered to sell Erb 100 shares of the company's stock for $300. Such an offer was evidently made and accepted, for at that time Erb gave to defendant the check for $300, and also signed a written contract entitled "Agreement to Purchase Stock," whereby he subscribed for, and agreed to purchase, 100 shares of the company's stock. The check was drawn by Erb on a Los Angeles bank, and was made payable to the order of defendant, who, upon receiving the check, delivered to Erb a written receipt for $300. It is a fair inference from all the evidence in the case that the 100 shares for which Erb subscribed, and for which he gave defendant his personal check in the sum of $300, were represented by defendant to be, and were understood by Erb to be, a part of the company's treasury stock. Defendant did not deliver the check to the company or to any officer thereof. Instead, he indorsed it and cashed it on the day it was given to him. The money which he received from the bank on cashing the check he converted to his own use. Nor did defendant ever deliver to Erb any certificate or certificates for the 100 shares for which the latter had subscribed. A few days after receiving the check defendant again called at Erb's place of business. Upon that occasion he delivered to Erb the two stock certificates which the company's secretary had handed to defendant a few days previously, but which had not been signed by the president. In each of these certificates the words "five hundred" had been written, so that each purported to be a certificate for 500 shares of the company's stock. But, since these pieces of paper had not been signed by the president, each of them was utterly worthless as a stock certificate.

It is difficult to determine from appellant's argument what are his specific reasons for making the broad and comprehensive claim that the evidence is contrary to the law and to the evidence. From the authorities cited by him it would seem that his main reason for this contention is that the evidence, so it is claimed, shows that, if any offense was committed by him, it was not larceny, but the crime of obtaining the check by false pretenses. There is no merit in the contention. From the facts as we have stated them it is apparent that the jury was justified in finding, as implied by its verdict, that appellant procured possession of the check by trickery and chicanery, and that at the very time when he thus succeeded in getting that instrument into his hands he intended, after cashing it, to convert the proceeds to his own use. It also appears from the facts as we have recited them that the jury was warranted in finding that Erb never intended to vest in appellant the title to the check, or to invest him with title to the money which appellant was to receive from the bank when he cashed the check. That instrument was not delivered to appellant as his property.

It was delivered to him to be used for and on behalf of Erb, and for one specific purpose, namely, to cash it at the bank, and then to deliver the money thus received to the mining company in payment of the 100 shares for which Erb had subscribed. Erb was not buying stock from appellant. His agreement with appellant was to buy the stock from the mining company through appellant. Possession of the check was delivered by Erb to appellant for the sole purpose of purchasing this stock from the company; it evidently being Erb's intention and belief that the proceeds of the check would be delivered by appellant to the mining company in payment for the 100 shares. Erb evidently intended that these acts, cashing the check and paying the proceeds to the company, should be done for him by appellant as Erb's agent. In using the check as a means to secure, and to convert to his own use, the money represented by that instrument, appellant misappropriated the check as well as the money. It doubtless is true that Erb intended that appellant should cash the check at the bank after indorsing it. This is, perhaps, the only reasonable inference which is deducible from the fact that the check was made payable to appellant's order. But, even so, it does not necessarily follow that it was the money, and not the check, which was feloniously stolen by appellant. Under the circumstances here disclosed there could be a larceny of both the check and the money. As we already have stated, the check was delivered to appellant for the specific purpose of using it for Erb's benefit; and, though it doubtless was Erb's intention that appellant should cash the check, it also was his intention that the latter should pay to the mining company the money thus received by appellant from the bank. The check was intended to be a link in a chain of facts terminating in the payment of the money by appellant to the company. In other words, the procuring of the check was but a step which appellant took toward procuring the money. When, therefore, appellant secured possession of the check by trickery and deceit, and with the previously conceived intent to employ it as a medium that would enable him to misappropriate its proceeds, and followed these acts with one of actual conversion of such proceeds to his own use, he was guilty of larceny of the check as well as of the money. In People v. Arnold, 20 Cal. App. 39, 127 P. 1062, the court says:

"* * * Although the evidence shows that the prosecutrix gave her check to the codefendant of appellant, it also shows without contradiction that such check was promptly cashed, and the money ($1,000) obtained thereon without resort to any other trick, device, or fraud than such as had resulted in procuring the check, which was but a step toward procuring the money. Under such circumstances defendant might be guilty of larceny of both the check and the money. If the check was obtained by larceny thereof, no right or title to the money was acquired thereby. In this case, under the evidence in the record, if the defendant was guilty of a larceny of the check he was necessarily also guilty of a larceny of the money obtained thereby."

For the foregoing reasons we are satisfied that the check was the subject of larceny by appellant, even though Erb did voluntarily give it into the latter's possession, and that the misapplication of that instrument to appellant's own base purpose, coupled with his pre-existing design to defraud Erb in the manner we have stated, constituted the crime of larceny by trickery and deceit. People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 737, 81 P. 131; People v. Arnold, 17 Cal. App. 68, 118 P. 729; People v. Harold, 17 Cal. App. 426, 119 P. 949; People v. Sichofsky, 58 Cal. App. 257, 208 P. 340.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

76 Cal. App. 315

In re MASON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 5410.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 27, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1926.)

1. Executors and administrators ⇐178 — Allowance of $75 per month to widow as family allowance pending filing of inventory and appraisal, and administration, and setting apart exempt property, of testator's estate, held not abuse of discretion.

Allowance of $75 per month to widow as family allowance pending filing of inventory and appraisal, and administration, and setting apart exempt property, of testator's estate worth $11,000, held not abuse of discretion, in view of widow's small income.

2. Homestead ⇐150(1).

To establish homestead, where testator has made no declaration, it is essential to show that property asked for is community property.

3. Homestead ⇐150(1).

Evidence held to show property set aside by probate court as homestead of widow was purchased and improved with community funds.

4. Homestead ⇐150(1).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1465, court must set apart a homestead to widow; it having discretion merely in selection of the homestead.

5. Homestead ⇐141(1).

Homestead may be set aside to widow, notwithstanding estate is insolvent, and that property so set apart constitutes whole estate.

6. Homestead §136—Testator's power to dispose of property by will is subject to statutory duty of court, to which heirs, devisees, legatees, and creditors are all subject (Code Civ. Proc. § 1465).

Testator's power to dispose of his property by will is subject to the duty placed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1465, on the court to select a homestead, and heirs, devisees, legatees, and creditors are all subject to that duty.

7. Constitutional law §70(3).

Any argument against setting aside of homestead to widow is matter properly to be addressed to Legislature and not to court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1465).

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Z. A. Mason, sometimes known as and called Zina A. Mason. From three separate orders, two of which granted family allowance, and the third set apart to the widow a probate homestead, Elizabeth Boling and Clara Rees, as legatees and devisees, appeal. Affirmed.

D. L. Beard and L. A. Maynard, both of Napa, for appellants.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Elizabeth Boling and Clara Rees, as legatees and devisees under the will of Z. A. Mason, deceased, have taken three separate appeals from three separate orders of the probate court in the above-entitled estate. All three appeals are presented to the court on a single typewritten record consisting of the clerk's and reporter's transcripts.

The first appeal is from an order granting to the widow of the deceased a temporary family allowance pending the filing of inventory and appraisal. The second appeal is from a similar order granting to the widow a family allowance pending administration, and also setting aside certain exempt property to the widow. The third appeal is from an order setting apart to the widow a probate homestead which was claimed to be community property.

[1] The only ground urged by the appellants on their appeals from the two orders relating to family allowance is that the allowance of $75 per month was unreasonable and excessive. The argument is that inasmuch as the appraised value of the estate was but $11,000 and that the income therefrom was about $64 per month at the time of the order the effect of the order is to give to the widow a part of the corpus of the estate under the guise of a family allowance. It is conceded by the appellants that the amount to be allowed in cases of this kind is wholly within the discretion of the probate court and that this discretion cannot be disturbed by the appellate court, unless it can be shown to have been abused. In the record before us it appears that the widow is sick and infirm and requires the aid of a nurse or other attendant and that outside of the allowance made by the probate court she has an income of but $52 a month, consisting of $22 in rentals from her own private property and $30 as a pension from the federal government as a widow of the deceased, who was a Civil War veteran. We are not prepared upon this record to say that the trial court abused its discretion in the actions complained of.

As to the third appeal, it appears that the deceased had some private property prior to his marriage to the surviving widow and that since their marriage (which occurred in 1903) he had purchased several lots of land in the city of Napa, had erected some houses thereon, and had received the rents therefrom; that during all of this time he had been engaged as a carpenter and builder and was receiving from the federal government the sum of $12 per month as a pension for his services in the Civil War. It appears also that his greatest source of income was his wages. It appears also that the property which the probate court set aside to the widow was purchased for $300 in the year 1907 and that in 1910 he erected a home thereon. He then moved his family to this home and continued to occupy it as his home until the date of his death. There is no dispute that the cost of the erection of this home was borne by community funds, but it is appellants' contention that the lot itself must have been purchased from the separate property of the deceased and that the improvements thereon must follow the character of the land. The respondent relies upon the presumption that property purchased after marriage is community property and that the burden of proof rested upon the appellants to prove otherwise. This burden the appellants undertook to assume by the offer of the decedent's will, in which he stated that this property was his own separate property, and by the cross-examination of the widow wherein she contradicted herself as to her knowledge of the source of the funds. It appears, however, that in her direct examination she testified positively that at least part of the purchase price of the lot came from the decedent's wages and that she was uncertain as to the balance. The situation is, therefore, that as against the presumption that the property was community, the appellants set up the conflict in their own evidence, and ask the court to give greater weight to that conflict than to the presumption. We are satisfied that the learned trial judge gave a correct interpretation of the law in the opinion which he filed on the granting of the application, and we therefore adopt as the opinion of this court so much of that opinion as is applicable to the order relating to the setting apart of the homestead, and reading as follows:

"In this matter application has been made for a family allowance, for the setting apart to the widow of the property exempt from execution, and for a homestead. Objection is made to the setting apart of a homestead and to the making of a family allowance. No objection having been made to the application for the exempt property to be set apart to the widow, and the widow being legally entitled to it, that application will be granted.

[2,3] "As to the petition for a homestead: That a homestead may be set apart absolutely, it is essential to show that the property asked for is community property; no declaration of homestead having been made during the lifetime of the testator. A consideration of the evidence presented on this subject shows that at the time of the marriage the testator had as his separate property some $3,800, with which he came to California and settled in Napa.

"He bought a place on Franklin street in Napa, December 29, 1903, the day after their marriage, taking the deed in the name of husband and wife. For this he paid either $1,100 or $1,200, and made improvements and alterations costing about as much. He was a carpenter and did most of the work himself. Therefore, when this property was improved, he probably had about $1,500 left. As he was working on his own place, they probably lived on his capital.

"January 28, 1905, he bought the place on Seminary street for $300, and thus apparently had but $1,200 of his separate property left. February 7, 1905, he bought a place on Levee street, paying $800, and thus leaving but $400 of his original capital. With this and other funds he built a seven-room hard-finished house and a three-story tankhouse on the Seminary street place. Doubtless the $800 which he received from the sale of the first lots in Chickasha about October, 1906, went also into this. At this time he had been married between two and three years, and the only separate property he had was the original $3,800, this $800, received in October, 1906, and the sum of $500 received from an old debt, at a time not specified, making a total of $5,100. He drew a pension, probably at this time of $12 a month, and was an industrious man, receiving when he worked as a carpenter, $2.75 to $3 a day. Having built two houses and a tankhouse for himself during the period of say three years from December, 1903, date of his marriage, it is more than probable that the living expenses for even this frugal family partly came from his capital.

"Then April 2, 1907, he bought the Wilson street property, and improved it, and the funds with which this was done must have been the savings from his pension, rentals, and earnings. On this he paid $300 purchase price and erected a good house, into which he and his wife moved in 1910, and in which she still lives. This is the house asked as a homestead. At this time his separate property must have been exhausted, and it was doubtless bought and improved from his earnings. At any rate it is impossible to trace any separate funds into it. The rentals of his improved property were negligible up to the time of buying the Wilson street lot, because he had only one place till 1905, and only the Levee street property was available for rental purposes then, until he completed the house on the Seminary street lot, some time during that year. He thus had for rent only one or at most two houses for a period of less than two years prior to buying the Wilson street property. It does not appear definitely when the first house on Wilson street was completed, but it was probably not until 1910 when they moved into it.

"I am therefore satisfied that a fair showing has been made that the Wilson street property, a portion of which is the subject of the application for homestead, was purchased and improved with community funds, constitutes the community property of the decedent and his surviving wife, and is suitable property for a homestead.

[4-7] "As to the law regarding a probate homestead: Section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure explicitly provides: That, if no homestead has been selected, designated, and recorded, 'the court must select, designate and set apart, and cause to be recorded, a homestead for the use of the surviving husband or wife and the minor children.' The former law on this subject used the word 'may' instead of the present wording 'must,' but the courts then held that the duty was imperative. The court has no discretion, except a discretion in the selection of a fit and proper place to be set apart as a homestead. A homestead may be set aside, even though the estate is insolvent and the property set apart constitutes the whole estate. The power of a testator to dispose of his property by will is subject to the duty placed upon the court in such cases, and heirs, devisees, legatees, and creditors are all subject to this duty of the court, which 'must' set apart a homestead. As a higher court once said in discussing this subject, 'Any argument against setting aside the homestead is properly addressed to the Legislature in support of an amendment to the law.'"

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 326

DUSIS v. KARNEZIS et al. (Civ. 2897.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 28, 1926.)

Master and servant — 80(9).

Evidence of amounts paid plaintiff for services held not to support finding of total sum due.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Peter Dusis against T. Karnezis and others. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant named, and latter appeals. Reversed.

J. E. Ebert, of Marysville, for appellant.

Harry L. Huston and Arthur O. Huston, both of Woodland, for respondent.

HART, J. The action is for the recovery of the total sum of $1,489.85, alleged to be the balance due plaintiff for personal services alleged to have been performed, and moneys advanced and expended by plaintiff for defendants "at their special instance and request."

The facts, taken in part from plaintiff's testimony, generally stated, are: That the three defendants and one Eron, in the year 1920, jointly owned a band of some 1,500 head of sheep which they were keeping and pasturing on a tract of leased grazing land in Yolo county. In June, 1920, they employed plaintiff to herd and take care of said sheep, at a monthly wage or salary of $100 per month. Plaintiff worked for the four defendants from the 26th day of June, 1920, until about the 26th day of October, 1920, at which time or thereabouts defendants divided the sheep between themselves. Immediately after such division was made, and the defendants were no longer jointly interested in the sheep business, appellant, who was then residing in the city of Marysville, and consequently not stopping at the sheep ranch, engaged plaintiff to continue to take care of his (appellant's) sheep, and to take charge of the sheep camp, agreeing to pay plaintiff the sum of $125 per month for his services, and to reimburse him for any moneys he (plaintiff) might advance in purchasing groceries, provisions, etc., necessary for living purposes at the camp, and for any expense he might incur in procuring pasturage for the sheep. The plaintiff worked for appellant, upon the terms stated, from the 26th day of October, 1920, until June 13, 1921. The total number of months during which the plaintiff was so employed by and for the defendants and for the appellant was 11 months and 18 days.

The complaint, which is in two counts and unverified, alleges, in the first count, that defendants are indebted to plaintiff as for labor performed in the aggregate sum of $1,- 346.06, of which the sum of $750 had been paid, leaving a balance unpaid, on account of labor performed, of $596.06. In the second count it is alleged that plaintiff advanced and expended the sum of $893.79 for the defendants in the purchase of provisions, supplies, pasture, feed, etc., and incurred and paid "other expenses in connection with the care of a band of sheep" belonging to defendants.

The answer interposed a general denial of the allegations of both counts of the complaint.

The court found that defendant Karnezis was indebted to plaintiff on the first count in the sum of $406.66, being the balance due and owing for labor after the payment to plaintiff on that account of the sum of $750, and that on the second count the same defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $608.17. It was further found that neither the defendant Fundulakis nor the defendant Koralis was indebted to plaintiff on either count. Eron, it will be observed, was not made a party defendant.

Judgment was awarded plaintiff as against Karnezis in the aggregate sum of $1,014.83, and, a motion for a new trial by him having been denied, he appeals from said judgment.

The appealing defendant, among several points upon which he relies for a reversal, contends that the findings are not supported by the evidence. This contention must be sustained upon the plaintiff's own testimony, which, in part, is as follows:

"Mr. Eron paid me first time $100 and Mr. Thero Karnezis paid $200 and Mr. Fundulakis paid $50 on February 15, 1921. On December 24, 1920, I received a check from Mr. Allan for $68.40. The check was made to the order of Pete Dusis, and signed by M. G. Allan. On February 3, 1921, I received a check payable to myself for $300 from M. G. Allan, and I indorsed it with my mark and cashed it for Nick Koralis, but I did not get the money. The money was for sheep that Mr. Karnezis sold to Mr. Allan, the butcher. I took the check and went to Sacramento, and got the money and gave it to Mr. Koralis. On April 6, 1921, a check signed by T. H. Karnezis, payable to Harry J. Demis, for $100 was not given to me, or cashed by me, and Mr. Demis did not give me the money. I received $240 by check dated January 31, 1921, signed by T. H. Karnezis, and made payable to myself, and on December 24, 1920, I received the money from a check for $100, signed by T. H. Karnezis, and payable to Pete Dudasher. On March 5, 1921, I received a check from T. H. Karnezis for $100. On February 26, 1920, or 1921, I received another check from T. H. Karnezis for $100 and cashed the same and received the money. I also received $150 from T. H. Karnezis on March 7, 1921, by check. I did not receive any other money from these defendants other than the checks which you have shown me. Mr. Karnezis did not pay me $100 in cash on or about May 23, 1921, at Marysville. He gave me a check for $100 in his saloon. The time

Mr. Karnezis went to Marysville he said he would pay me $125 per month."

On redirect examination the witness testified as follows:

"Mr. Eron did not give me $200; he just gave me a check for $100."

On recross-examination the witness testified as follows:

"This man Eron paid me $200; he gave me two checks; the check for $68.40, I spent for myself. I am not sure whether Mr. Eron gave me $200 or whether there was another check for $30, I am not sure."

Leaving out of the computation the check referred to by plaintiff in his testimony as above given herein as having been issued by appellant to and in the name of one Harry J. Demis for the sum of $100, which check, or the money thereon, plaintiff stated he did not receive, also excluding the $300, which he said he received in the form of a check from one Allan, but which, he further said, he cashed and delivered the money to Koralis, and assuming that Eron paid him the sum of $100 only and including the $100 in the computation of the amounts paid plaintiff, as shown by his own testimony, the defendants were entitled to be credited with the total payment of $1,208.40 in the place of the sum of the $750 found by the court to be the total amount paid by defendants to plaintiff. But it will be noted that the plaintiff stated that he was not sure whether Eron paid him $100 or $200. As is to be seen, once he unequivocally stated that "this man Eron paid me $200; he gave me two checks," but subsequently declared that he was not certain that Eron paid him $200, "or whether there was another check for $30." In any event, it is clear that plaintiff could not deny, and apparently did not attempt to deny, that he could not positively say whether Eron did, or did not, pay him more than the sum of $100. Thus the testimony of Eron as to the payment made by him to plaintiff becomes important. He positively testified that he paid plaintiff over $200; being uncertain, however, as to the amount in excess of $200. It therefore stands undisputed in the record that Eron paid at least $200 to plaintiff, and hence the further sum of $100 must be added to the total sum which should be allowed or credited defendants on account of payments made to plaintiff by them. Thus the total amount which appellant is entitled to be credited with as payments to plaintiff, as found by the court, is the sum of $1,308.40, instead of $750, as likewise found. Subtracting said item of $1,308.40 from the total amount of the said indebtedness, as found by the court, viz. the sum of $1,764.83, and the result is that, at the most, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the sum of $456.43 only, or the sum of $558.40 less than the sum awarded plaintiff by the judgment. It obviously follows that the findings as to the total sum due plaintiff from defendants are not supported, for which reason, of course, the judgment must be reversed.

The point made by appellant that the evidence shows that whatever indebtedness was due the plaintiff was the joint obligation of the three defendants and Eron, and that the finding that the defendants Fundulakis and Koralis were not indebted to the plaintiff by reason of the latter's employment as alleged in the complaint and for moneys advanced, as likewise alleged, is without support we cannot say is well grounded. The evidence as to that matter is so confusing and unsatisfactory that it is difficult for this court to say how far or to what extent, if to any, the three defendants and Eron were jointly liable for the indebtedness counted on in the complaint. The court below was of the opinion that appellant alone was liable for the total amount which it found was due plaintiff, and, as there was evidence that the parties were joint owners of the sheep, and jointly employed plaintiff for 3 months only of the 11 months that plaintiff was employed, that some payments were made prior to the business separation between the parties, and that the court did not allow the full amount claimed by plaintiff, we cannot say but that the court was warranted in finding that the appellant was solely liable for any balance due plaintiff. The real fact as to this matter could, we think, and should, be more clearly shown than it appears to have been at the trial of which this appeal is the culmination, and probably will be on a retrial of the case.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 216

PEOPLE v. NOWAK et al. (Cr. 1272.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 15, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 15, 1926.)

1. Burglary ☞45.

Court held not warranted in saying as matter of law that defendants could not have been present at time of burglary charged.

2. Burglary ☞41(1).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for burglary in the second degree of defendant, who was caught crawling from window of building.

3. Criminal law ☞1159(4).

Direct testimony of people's witness, if believed by jury, must receive credence on appeal.

4. Criminal law ☞1159(3)—Appellate courts will not disturb verdict on conflicting evidence unless it clearly appears there was no substantial evidence.

Appellate courts will not disturb a verdict on conflicting evidence, particularly after motion for new trial has been denied, unless it clearly appears that there was no substantial evidence to support trial court's conclusion.

5. Burglary ☞41(1).

Evidence held insufficient to sustain conviction of particular defendant for burglary in second degree.

6. Criminal law ☞200(1).

Defendants' conviction for vagrancy, under Pen. Code, § 647, held not to preclude their prosecution for burglary, committed on same occasion.

7. Criminal law ☞1171(6)—Conduct of district attorney in asking defendant if he had not been convicted of felony under another name held not ground for reversal.

In prosecution for burglary, conduct of district attorney in asking defendant if he had not been convicted of felony under another name held not ground for reversal, where, notwithstanding defendant was permitted to answer in the negative, district attorney withdrew question and stated jury should disregard it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Frank J. Nowak and Andrew H. Nowak were convicted of burglary in the second degree, and they appeal. Affirmed as to Frank J. Nowak, and reversed as to Andrew H. Nowak.

Benjamin V. Elconin, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellants and one Max Fenski were jointly charged by information with having committed the crime of burglary in the county of Los Angeles on or about the 26th day of February, 1925. Appellants were convicted of burglary in the second degree, but the jury failed to agree upon a verdict as to the defendant Fenski. A motion for new trial was presented in behalf of the former, which was denied, and they appeal from the order of the trial court upon such motion, and from the judgment. The principal ground urged for reversal is an alleged insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict and judgment as to each appellant.

The testimony offered by the people was substantially as follows: Shortly after midnight of February 26, 1925, police officer Kunzman, of the city of San Fernando, while making his rounds, discovered a man, who gave the name of Charles Larkin when arrested, but who thereafter proved to be Frank J. Nowak, one of the appellants above named, emerging from a window of the Studebaker salesroom and shops, in the Studebaker building, at the corner of Celis avenue and Brand boulevard, in said city. Kunzman observed Nowak go to the sidewalk, stop, look, then return to the building, tap on a window, and immediately walk away. Kunzman pursued Nowak, calling upon him to stop, whereupon the latter started to run, but finally was arrested. At about that time a door of the Studebaker building slammed, and the officer saw another man run across Brand boulevard; Kunzman conducted his prisoner back to the said building and asked him where his partner was, to which Nowak replied that he had no partner, but that he had a friend down the street about two blocks; the officer then took him to a nearby hotel and telephoned the police station for assistants. He then asked Nowak who helped him "do the job," and he denied that he did it, or that he had any partner, but later, when pressed, he said: "I did it; you find out who my partner is." The officer and Nowak then returned to the Studebaker building, and were soon joined by the chief of police and other officers, two of whom were instructed to search the immediate vicinity, and to arrest any one whom they might find on the streets.

The Studebaker building was divided by a partition, consisting of brick and cement, which separated the automobile salesroom, on the east, from the office of the American Railway Express Company, on the west. The express agent in charge testified that at about 6:30 p. m. on the 26th he locked the office, leaving it in order. It appears from the testimony of the officers that a hole large enough to permit the passage of an ordinary-size man had been cut or broken through the partition from the salesroom into the express office, and a door had apparently been taken from its hinges; the floor of the express office was littered with books, files, drawers, and cards from interstate shipments, trunks had been opened, and the dial was battered off the safe.

Police Officers Fairfield and Rich, who were dispatched to patrol the neighborhood, testified that after some little reconnaissance they found a Studebaker machine standing at the curb near the corner of Wolfskill and Pico streets; that when their spotlight was thrown on the car a man was seen crouching down in the rear seat; that they placed him under arrest, and returned to the Studebaker building with the machine and its occupant. This man gave the name of Andrew H. Nowak, and stated that he and his brother had traveled from Buffalo, N. Y., through Ohio, Georgia, Florida, Texas, and Arizona to Los Angeles, for the purpose of seeing the country; that they begged rides, walked, and rode stages until they arrived at Yuma, where Frank and a boy by the name of Max Fenski, whom they picked up along the road, bought tickets and completed their journey by train. One of the officers testified that appellant Andrew H. Nowak later contradicted part of such statement, saying that all three men left Buffalo together; that they picked up another fellow somewhere in Arizona, and that all four rode into Yuma in a Ford coupé; that Frank and Fenski then came to Los Angeles by train, and that Andrew and the fourth man finished the trip in the Ford; that when asked why their stories conflicted, the two brothers engaged in a heated argument, wherein Frank asked Andrew, "For God's sake, what is the use of lying about it? Tell it all; tell the truth. Why are you lying?" and that one of them then insisted that they rode into Yuma on a train.

In the Studebaker automobile in which Andrew H. Nowak was arrested were found a suitcase, clothing, flashlights, hammers, two caps and an overcoat; and on the street in the direction of this car from the building which had been rifled was found a revolver, which the express agent swore had been taken from a shipment in his office. No stolen property was found in the possession of either of the appellants, and each of them strenuously denied having any knowledge of the robbery. They stated that they had purchased the Studebaker in Los Angeles, and that they were intending to return to Buffalo therein, but had lost their way in the night, and had parked in San Fernando to await daylight; that it was cold, and that Frank left his brother in the car and went in quest of a cheap lodging house.

[1] Officers of the police department and sheriff's office instituted thorough investigations as to the verity of appellants' statements regarding their past history and as to their whereabouts immediately preceding their apprehension. In the latter respects it was found that they had told approximately the truth; that appellant Frank J. Nowak had purchased the automobile as he claimed; that they had registered at a hotel which they had named and had attended a vaudeville and picture show on the afternoon or evening of the 26th. One or more of them had registered at said hotel under an alias, and Frank Nowak testified that he had worked in the East for a number of years under the name of Larkin. It was appellants' contention that, having attended the theater in Los Angeles until late in the evening of the 26th of February, it would have been impossible for them to have been at San Fernando at the time of the robbery. It appeared, however, that the distance between the two cities was but about 22 miles, and that they could have made the trip in about 45 minutes. They were arrested after midnight, and there is no evidence in the record as to the time of the robbery; it is therefore impossible for us to say, as a matter of law, that appellants could not have been present when the offense was committed.

[2-4] We think the evidence may well have been deemed by the jury as amply sufficient to justify them in finding the appellant Frank J. Nowak guilty of burglary in the second degree. Each appellant vigorously protested his innocence, and maintained that the charges were the result of a "frameup" on the part of Officer Kunzman; but appellants were not charged with the crime for a period of about two weeks after their arrest, in order that a searching investigation might be made of the officer's movements. It is apparent that their accusation of the officer was groundless. The direct testimony of the people's witnesses at the trial of the case, if believed by the jury, must receive credence upon appeal. People v. Lamb, 67 Cal. App. 263, 227 P. 969. It was for the jury to decide whether or not a man caught crawling from the window of a building in the middle of the night, which building admittedly had been ransacked and the walls broken after 6:30 p. m., had entered with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony. Throughout his protracted story of innocent travels, sightseeing, amusements, preparations to return East, and alleged persecution, appellant Frank J. Nowak nowhere attempted to deny that he came from the window of the Studebaker building in San Fernando, except to contend that he must have been elsewhere, and that it was all a "frameup" on the part of the officer. But it is an incontrovertible fact that he was arrested at San Fernando at the time alleged, which alone is sufficient to refute any claim of an alibi if the jury believed that he was in the building at the time. At all events, the evidence raised an issue of fact for the jury, and appellate courts will not disturb a verdict based upon conflicting evidence, particularly after a motion for new trial has been reviewed and denied by the court below, unless it be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached by the trial court. People v. King, 65 Cal. App. 306, 223 P. 1001.

[5] Apparently conflicting stories of appellant Andrew H. Nowak, his suspicious act of crouching down in the machine upon approach of the officers, and the fact that he was a brother of Frank J. Nowak, and was in the latter's automobile, constitute about all that can be said as to evidence of his guilt. There was no evidence of Andrew Nowak having been the man who ran from the Studebaker building, or that he had any knowledge of the robbery or as to his brother's whereabouts, other than that he supposed he had gone in search of lodgings. The jury may have believed that it was this appellant who dropped the revolver upon the street, but we are unable to find in the record any proof whatever that he had not remained in the machine from the time his brother left until the officers arrived. No witness saw him until the officers found him in the car, and it did not appear that he had possession of any property claimed to have been stolen from said building. We think, therefore, that the record is devoid of that degree of substantial evidence of guilt necessary to an affirmance of the judgment as to Andrew H. Nowak.

[6] When appellants were arrested they were charged with vagrancy in the justice's court at San Fernando, and sentenced to serve six months in jail. It was contended at the trial of this case that they had previously been placed in jeopardy in the vagrancy case, and could not therefore be prosecuted for burglary alleged to have been committed at the same time and place. There is no merit in this contention. Section 647 of the Penal Code provides that a known pickpocket, thief, burglar, or confidence operator, or a person who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night, without any visible or lawful business, is a vagrant. We know of no rule which precludes the prosecution of a vagrant for burglary upon discovery of evidence of his guilty connection with the latter offense. We are not authorized to decide, nor does the record indicate, that the appellants were not afforded the opportunity for a fair trial upon the minor charge; we must assume that they were legally found guilty and committed therein, and it appears that while they were confined upon that charge they were formally accused of the crime of burglary.

[7] Another point attempted to be advanced for reversal is that the district attorney should have been reprimanded by the court for misconduct in asking the last-named appellant, Andrew H. Nowak, if he had not been convicted of a felony in the state of New York on August 3, 1917, under the name of Thomas Larkin. Notwithstanding the fact that this appellant was permitted to answer the question, to which he replied in the negative, the district attorney withdrew it and stated that the jury should disregard it. The contention, we think, is untenable.

Finally, it is said that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that the prior conviction of vagrancy did not constitute former jeopardy in this case. We have heretofore discussed this question, and, upon the reasoning already expressed, we hold that the instruction was proper.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed as to appellant Frank J. Nowak and reversed as to appellant Andrew H. Nowak.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

76 Cal. App. 278

J. B. COLT CO. v. FREITAS. (Civ. 2999.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1926. Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 22, 1926.)

1. Evidence $\S$ 135(2)—To prove false representation inducing sale, testimony of another buyer as to similar representation to him held admissible.

In proving false representation of seller which induced buyer to buy carbide generator, testimony of another buyer that seller made same representation to him was admissible.

2. Evidence $\S$ 434(11) — Parol evidence of "fraudulent representation," inducing purchase of carbide generator, held admissible in action to recover purchase price.

Parol evidence that seller of carbide generator fraudulently represented that operation of plant was more economical than use of wood at $2 a cord, thereby inducing defendant to buy it, held admissible in action to recover purchase price, though contract stipulated that no representations were made modifying or adding to its terms and conditions; "fraudulent representation" being antecedent statement made as inducement to contract, but not part or element thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fraudulent Representation.]

3. Fraud $\S$ 11(1)—Representation by one possessing superior knowledge, though only expression of opinion, is actionable.

Representation made by party possessing or assuming to possess superior knowledge or special information to one so situated that he may reasonably rely on such knowledge or information will not be excused if it be false, though only an expression of opinion.

4. Sales $\S$ 176(5) — Buyer held not to have elected to treat contract as valid, where seller made repairs until and after buyer elected to rescind.

Buyer of carbide generator held not to have elected to treat contract of sale as valid, where seller made repairs and adjustments in effort to overcome defects of which buyer complained for more than a year after sale, continuing even after buyer refused to pay for plant and offered to return it.

5. Election of remedies $\S$ 9.

Rule of estoppel, which is basis of doctrine of election of remedies, will not be as strictly applied where fraud exists as in other cases.

6. Sales $\S$ 38(9).

Exact amount of damages suffered by buyer where sale was induced by fraudulent representation need not be shown, if it is appreciable sum.

7. Contracts $\S$ 98—Limitation of actions $\S$ 40(2)—Neither limitations nor laches will bar defense of invalidity of agreement for fraud.

It is not incumbent on one who has been defrauded to go into court and seek relief, but he may abide his time and when enforcement is sought excuse himself from performance by proof of fraud, and neither limitation of statute nor doctrine of laches will operate to bar defense.

8. Fraud $\S$ 31—One defrauded may obtain cancellation, compensation for injury, or defensive relief.

Party defrauded may obtain cancellation or rescission, affirmative relief by action to recover compensation for injuries sustained, or defensive relief, whereby fraud is set up to defeat action brought to enforce apparent obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the J. B. Colt Company against J. I. Freitas. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cook & Nichols, of Turlock, for appellant. F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount of a promissory note, dated May 29, 1922, alleged to be due from defendant. The note was given by defendant in consideration of the purchase by him from plaintiff of a carbide generator and equipment. The answer alleges in the usual form that the defendant was induced to make the purchase by plaintiff's false and fraudulent representations. The representations alleged to be false are:

"That on or about the 22d day of May, 1922, plaintiff offered to sell to defendant one carbide generator with fixtures and one stove with pipes and fittings for the sum of $388.10, and stated and represented to defendant that the said generator and equipment mentioned above would be and were more economical for heating, cooking, and laundrying than a wood stove burning wood at a cost not to exceed $2 a cord; that the generator and equipment worked automatically, required only slight attention; that 400 pounds of carbide, which would make two fillings of the generator, a year would be all that would be required for the operation of the equipment; * * * that if he would pay for installing said generator and equipment and give it his note for $388.10 payable in one year, that it would supply the generator and equipment and install the same on trial, and if the same did not prove satisfactory it would take it out, cancel his note, and that he would be under no further obligation to it."

The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of defendant, and he was given judgment for his costs of suit. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

The sale of the plant to defendant was negotiated by a salesman of the plaintiff. The contract provided:

"This order shall become a contract between the purchaser and the company upon acceptance thereof in the space below by an officer or credit manager of said company."

It was subsequently signed by "C. C. Shepley, Credit Manager," and the plant was thereafter installed. The contract contained the following provisions:

"Warranty: It is agreed that in accepting this order the company warrants the apparatus furnished to be automatic in action, and of good material and workmanship, and that it is on the permitted list of the National Board of Underwriters. * * * It being understood that this instrument, upon such acceptance, covers all of the agreements between the purchaser and the company, and that no agent or representative of the company has made any statements, representations or agreements, verbal or written, modifying or adding to the terms and conditions herein set forth."

[1] The defendant and his wife both testified that the plaintiff's salesman made the alleged representations. The plaintiff sold and installed several other plants of the same kind in the defendant's neighborhood during the year 1922. Three of such purchasers testified at the trial. One of them testified that something was said to him by the selling agent "about it being cheaper to operate than wood on a basis of $2 a cord." On objection of counsel for the plaintiff, the witness was not asked anything further as to any representations made to him by the agent. Another purchaser was asked if the agent represented to him that the operation of the plant for heating and cooking was cheaper than wood at $2 a cord. The court sustained plaintiff's objection to the question. The objection should have been overruled. 12 Cal. Jur. 831; Thompson v. Modern School, etc., 183 Cal. 112, 121, 190 P. 451; Kornblum v. Arthurs, 154 Cal. 246, 248, 97 P. 420; Bone v. Hayes, 154 Cal. 759, 767, 99 P. 172. A third purchaser testified that the agent who sold him a plant said that it would cost less to operate than wood at $2 a cord. On motion of plaintiff the answer was stricken out. On cross-examination, however, counsel for plaintiff brought out the fact that the agent made the representation. In order to save time, it was stipulated that a fourth purchaser, if called as a witness, would testify "substantially to the same effect" as the third, subject to the same objection that had been made to the introduction of such testimony. These witnesses testified that the cost of operating the plant was from six to ten times as much as the cost of wood for the same purpose at $2 a cord. The testimony as to the making of this representation to the defendant, as well as to the other purchasers, and as to its falsity stands uncontradicted. For the purposes of this opinion, it may be conceded that the other alleged representations are, some of them, mere expressions of opinion, others, in the nature of warranties not included in the written agreement, or that the evidence fails to show that the same were substantially false, or that they were a part of the oral negotiations which were not embodied in the written contract.

The defendant testified that he knew nothing about carbide plants at the time of the purchase except what the agent told him; that he believed the representations made by the agent and was induced thereby to make the purchase; that after about 15 days' use of the plant he had trouble with it; that about a month or a month and a half after the plant was installed, a representative of the plaintiff inspected it; that he told this representative that "that thing would bust a man up in business to operate it"; that the representative did some work upon it, but no improvement resulted therefrom; that "not very long" thereafter another representative was there "looking over" the plant; that he made a similar complaint to this second representative; that defendant could not operate the plant and ceased to use it about 2½ months after it was installed; that thereafter a third man connected with the company appeared and tested the pipes. About June 18, 1923, the plaintiff's credit and collection manager called upon defendant. The former testified that the defendant complained about the plant; that witness told defendant he would send a man to make adjustments, and that in the following July he did send a man to make "repairs or adjustments on the plant"; and that the plaintiff later sent defendant "a hopper and a bell for his plant, and he later on * * * refused to remove it from the depot." Another representative of the plaintiff testified that in the late spring of 1924 he went to the defendant's home "to make an adjustment on his plant and replace any defective parts, if there was any"; that "I asked him about a settlement, and we did not seem to get together, as far as a settlement was concerned, and Mr. Freitas said that if we would ship him a gas bell and a hopper, as was recommended, he would put it in operation and settle for his plant." Relative to such hopper and bell, the defendant testified:

"They was to send me a hopper and bell, but it was a different kind, a late improvement, and when it came here it was not what they was to send; I found out it was the same kind I had, so I did not take it; that was the reason. * * * It was to be a different kind of a hopper, it would be a later model."

The defendant further testified that he did not promise to pay for the plant if plaintiff would send another hopper and bell.

On June 28, 1923, the defendant wrote the plaintiff:

"The expense of operating it (the plant) is so great that I have had to discontinue its use entirely. I was given to understand that it was cheaper to operate than operation with wood at $2 a cord, and, further, that the plant would require only occasional attention, whereas in fact unless it is watched constantly I can get no service from it. Besides the agent told me that I was to have the plant on trial for one year, and if the same was not satisfactory it could be returned. If you will tell me what to do with it and where to ship it I will send it back to you. As it is the plant is of no value to me."

In reply to this letter the plaintiff wrote defendant, under date of July 6, 1923, in part as follows:

"We note your remarks as to the many promises which you claim our salesman made to you at the time of purchase, but as the writer explained to you personally, our only guaranty is that the plant be automatic in action and of good material and workmanship. * * * Relative to the trouble which you are experiencing with your plant: We are referring this matter to Mr. Fears, 105 Bacon Bldg., Oakland, our California state manager, and requesting him to give it his immediate attention, having utility man call and make any adjustments which may be necessary."

July 17, 1923, defendant's attorney wrote the plaintiff that the defendant would crate the plant and put it on board the cars at Merced subject to plaintiff's shipping instructions, but that the defendant would not pay any part of the purchase price or of the promissory note. July 24, 1923, the plaintiff wrote defendant's attorney stating, among other things:

"We are willing to make any adjustments to his plant which may be necessary, but we have absolutely no intention whatever of accepting the return of it."

[2] The chief point upon which appellant relies for a reversal is that "testimony cannot be admitted as to alleged prior misrepresentations where a proven written contract stipulates that none have been made other than those set forth in the written contract, and the party is not deceived as to the contents of the written contract." It is not stipulated in the contract that no representations other than those set forth in the contract were made, but only that no other representations were made "modifying or adding to the terms and conditions herein set forth." If it be conceded that the stipulation precludes proof of an oral promise to let the defendant have the plant on trial for a year and of any oral warranty other than those specified in the written contract, it does not follow that the defendant is barred thereby from proving false representations which induced him to enter into the contract and without which it would not have been executed by him.

"There is a definite distinction between a fraudulent representation and a warranty. A fraudulent representation is an antecedent statement made as an inducement to the contract, but is not a part or element of the contract." Griswold v. Morrison, 53 Cal. App. 93, 99, 200 P. 62, 65.

Appellant relies upon the case of Munn v. Earl C. Anthony, Inc., 36 Cal. App. 312, 171 P. 1082, where a somewhat similar stipulation was held to be a waiver of the right to prove that the execution of the contract there in question was induced by false representations. In Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 82, 195 P. 922, it is said that the decision in the Munn Case "is opposed to the authorities we have cited and hence cannot be followed." The stipulation in the contract considered in the Mooney Case was much more comprehensive than that here under consideration. It provided:

"It is expressly understood and agreed that no statements, agreements, understandings or representations of any kind or nature, have been made, or exist, other than those in this agreement contained."

Appellant there contended that "the writing itself is the only admissible evidence upon the issue of fraud." The court said:

"The contention ignores the well-established rule of law that 'parol evidence is always admissible to prove fraud,'"—citing Berry on Automobiles, section 814, and many other authorities.

See, also, Whiting v. Squeglia (Cal. App.) 232 P. 986. In view of the foregoing decisions, it is deemed unnecessary to consider the cases cited from other jurisdictions.

[3] The statement that the operation of the plant was more economical for cooking and heating than the use of wood at $2 a cord was not the mere expression of an opinion. It was made by the agent, who presumably knew the cost of operating the plant, to the defendant, who was without knowledge thereof. It is clear that the statement was made for the purpose of inducing the defendant to make the purchase. The form of expression used is immaterial. The agent must have intended and the defendant doubtless understood the statement to relate to an important quality of the plant, that of economy in operation. That seems to have been the agent's chief selling point. The defendant had the right to believe that the agent's statement was based upon his knowledge and experience. Under the circumstances shown by the evidence, the statement was as to an existing fact, a quality of the plant, and not the expression of a mere opinion. "What amounts to an expression of opinion as compared with a positive statement of fact depends upon all the circumstances of the case." French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 585, 217 P. 515, 517. See, also, Harris v. Miller (Cal. Sup.) 235 P. 981, 984; Herdan v. Hanson, 182 Cal. 538, 546, 189 P. 440; Tracy v. Smith, 175 Cal. 161, 165, 165 P. 535. "When one of the parties possesses, or assumes to possess, superior knowledge or special information regarding the subject-matter of the representation, and the other party is so situated that he may reasonably rely upon such supposed superior knowledge or special information, a representation made by the party possessing or assuming to possess such knowledge or information, though it might be regarded as but the expression of an opinion if made by any other person, is not excused if it be false." Haserot v. Keller, 67 Cal. App. 659, 670, 228 P. 383, 388.

[4, 5] Appellant says that "after the defrauded party, with knowledge of the facts has elected to treat the contract as valid he cannot change his position and assert it is invalid." But the facts in evidence do not show that defendant elected to treat the contract as valid. For more than a year after the plant was installed the plaintiff made repairs and adjustments in an effort to overcome the defects of which defendant complained. Its efforts were continued even after receipt of defendant's letter of June 28, 1923, and that of his attorney of July 17, 1923, in which defendant refused to pay for the plant and offered to return it to plaintiff. "The doctrine of election of remedies is based upon estoppel, and it is therefore apparent that where fraud exists, there is not the same reason for applying a rigid rule of estoppel as in other cases." 12 Cal. Jur. 787.

[6] It is contended that the defendant did not prove damages or that he had rescinded the contract, and that the evidence shows that he was guilty of laches. It was not necessary for the defendant to prove that the property purchased was of no value or that it was worth less than the amount he agreed to pay for it. "Property purchased need not be entirely worthless in order to entitle one defrauded into purchasing it to hold the seller liable for the loss thereby inflicted upon him. * * * The fact that the property is actually worth what the vendee gave for it does not preclude him from obtaining relief on the ground that the sale was induced by false representations made by the vendor, if it would have been worth still more had the representations been true." 12 R. C. L. 393. "The exact amount of damage need not be shown, provided it be in an 'appreciable' sum." Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, 219, 190 P. 808.

[7, 8] Where fraud is relied upon as a defense merely, "neither the limitation of the statute nor the doctrine of laches will operate to bar the defense of the invalidity of the agreement upon the ground of fraud, for so long as the plaintiff is permitted to come into court seeking to enforce the agreement, the defendant may allege and prove fraud as a defense. In short, it is not incumbent upon one who has thus been defrauded to go into court and ask relief, but he may abide his time, and when enforcement is sought against him excuse himself from performance by proof of the fraud." Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 140, 204 P. 583, 587. "Where no affirmative relief is sought, it is not necessary for him to have exercised an existing right to rescind." 12 Cal. Jur. 786; Simon Newman Co. v. Lassing, 141 Cal. 174, 74 P. 761. "There are three methods by which in cases like the present a party defrauded may obtain relief: (1) Cancellation or rescission," etc.; * * * (2) Affirmative relief by an action to recover * * * compensation for the injury sustained by the fraud; * * * (3) Defensive relief, whereby the fraud is set up by way of defense to defeat an action brought to enforce an apparent obligation or liability." Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 498, 33 P. 550, 553; Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 382, 63 P. 692.

Appellant complains of the court's refusal to give an instruction to the effect that the stipulations of the contract precluded proof of false representations. The contention is disposed of by what has already been said. Appellant sets out four instructions given by the court, and states that "the giving of these instructions by the court is assigned as error." No attempt is made to point out wherein any of the instructions are erroneous, and no statement of law therein appears to be unfavorable to appellant. The other alleged errors which are not covered by the foregoing discussion are of minor importance, and need not be separately considered. It is sufficient to say that appellant's contentions relative thereto are without substantial merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 267

SPRECKELS v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 5210.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 20, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 18, 1926.)

1. Municipal corporations §956(2)—Conclusion that conditions found by ordinance to exist were not sudden and unexpected, constituting emergency within exception to charter limitation on tax levy, held justified (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, §§ 2, 13).

Where ordinance of 1910 declared that conditions, which it found existed in that year, were created during 1906, and ordinances of 1908 and 1909 found same facts as basis for conclusion that necessity or emergency, essential under Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, § 13, to suspension of limitation on tax levy in section 2, then existed, conclusion that such conditions were not sudden or unexpected and hence did not constitute emergency within charter was justified.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 956(2)—Implied conclusion that necessity declared was not pressing, justifying tax exceeding charter limitation, held warranted (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, 13).

Declaration in ordinance of 1910 that no adequate provision had been made for conditions described, which had continued since 1906, held to support trial court's implied conclusion that purpose was to extend extraordinary taxing power under Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 13, over indefinite number of years, and that necessity declared was not pressing and urgent, so as to justify levy of additional tax in excess of limitation in section 2.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 956(2)—Continuance of sanitary measures to prevent recurrence of bubonic plague held not emergency authorizing tax exceeding charter limitation (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, 13).

Continuance of sanitary measures by board of health to prevent recurrence of bubonic plague, which had not existed in city for three years, held insufficient to constitute necessity or emergency within Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 13, so as to authorize additional tax exceeding limitation in section 2.

4. Evidence $\S$ 10(1)—Trial and appellate courts within jurisdiction will judicially notice geographical situation of San Francisco and maritime traffic between it and regions from which bubonic plague originally came.

Geographical situation of city of San Francisco, and maritime traffic between it and regions from which bubonic plague originally came, are matters of general knowledge, which trial and appellate courts within jurisdiction will judicially notice.

5. Municipal corporations $\S$ 956(2)—Emergency expenditures, not segregated by ordinance, declaring emergency authorizing taxes in excess of charter limitation, from those of nonemergency character, cannot be sustained (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, 13).

Where ordinance declaring emergency authorizing additional tax levy under Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 13, in excess of limitation in section 2, did not segregate emergency expenditures from those of nonemergency character, emergency items cannot be sustained.

6. Municipal corporations $\S$ 956(2)—It is assumed prima facie that board of supervisors, in declaring necessity for tax in excess of charter limitation, acted on sufficient inquiry, but its determinations are not conclusive (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, 13).

While it will be assumed prima facie that board of supervisors acted on sufficient inquiry in declaring necessity for tax levy exceeding limitation in Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, as authorized by section 13, and burden was on one suing to recover taxes paid under protest to show that facts found were untrue or conclusions therefrom unsupported, its determinations are not conclusive, but subject to review.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 996.

Where fair and impartial minds may draw different conclusions from unconflicting evidence, trial court's conclusions must be sustained on appeal.

8. Municipal corporations $\S$ 956(2)—Charter held intended to authorize suspension of limitation on rate of taxation to meet only temporary necessities (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, 13, art. 16, $\S$ 29).

Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 13, was intended to authorize suspension of limitation on rate of taxation in section 2 for purpose of meeting only temporary necessities; provision being made in article 16, $\S$ 29, for extraordinary conditions, not creating "great necessity or emergency," by submission of question of bond issue to electors.

9. Municipal corporations $\S$ 956(2)—Necessity of raising revenues exceeding amount of taxes authorized by charter, if not within emergency tax measure, must be met by bond issue (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, 13, art. 16, $\S$ 29).

If revenues sought to be raised by city of San Francisco in excess of amount which may be raised by taxation under Charter, art. 3, c. 1, $\S$ 2, are not within purview of emergency tax measure, authorized by section 13, necessity must be met by bond issue under article 16, $\S$ 29, or by charter amendment, regardless of hardship or inconvenience.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Rudolph Spreckels against the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco, (Delger Trowbridge and William H. Gorrill, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action to recover taxes paid under protest; it being alleged as the ground for recovery that the levy was in contravention of the provisions of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco restricting the taxing power of the municipality.

Section 2, c. 1, of article III of the Charter, at the time of the levy provided that, exclusive of certain special taxes, the tax levy for any year "shall not exceed the rate of one dollar to each one hundred dollars valuation of the property assessed"; this provision being qualified by the provisions of section 13 of the same chapter, which read as follows:

"The limitation in section eleven of this charter upon the rate of taxation shall not apply in case of any great necessity or emergency. In such case the limitation may be temporarily suspended so as to enable the supervisors to provide for such necessity or emergency. No increase shall be made in the rate of taxation authorized to be levied in any fiscal year unless such increase be authorized by ordinance passed by the unanimous vote of the supervisors and approved by the mayor. The character of such necessity or emergency shall be recited in the ordinance authorizing such action, and it shall be entered in the journal of the board. * * *

In preparing the tax levy for the fiscal year 1910-11, the supervisors of the city and county adopted two ordinances, the material portions of the first being as follows:

"Section 1. It is hereby recited, determined and declared that a great necessity and emergency exists within the city and county of San Francisco, which requires that the limitation of taxation contained in section 11, chapter 1 of article III of the charter of said city and county be temporarily suspended, and that the character of such necessity and emergency is as follows, to wit:

"On the 18th day of April, 1906, a large number of the public buildings and other structures, and much of the fire department equipment of said city and county were destroyed by fire, and on said day a large extent of the public sewers of said city and county were damaged and destroyed by earthquake; that a large extent of the public streets of said city and county were damaged by the combined effects of fire and earthquake; also there is danger that the bubonic plague, prevalent in 1907, may recur and provision should be made to prevent such recurrence; that it has been impossible to pave, repave, and repair streets, reconstruct and repair sewers, construct and repair the public buildings destroyed and damaged as aforesaid in April, 1906, from the appropriations heretofore made, and the great necessity and emergency hereby declared to exist has not been adequately provided for by previous tax levies made by the board of supervisors.

"Sec. 2. That by reason of the great necessity and emergency herein set forth large sums of money will be required to be expended by the city and county during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, for the paving, grading, repaving and repairing of streets, for the reconstruction and repair of sewers, construction of and repairs to public buildings, for construction and equipment of fire department buildings, for the purchase of land for fire department buildings, for the construction of, repairs to and equipment of school department buildings, and for the purchase of lands for police department purposes, and for the continuation and enforcement of sanitary measures. That the large sums required for the aforesaid purposes cannot be obtained from the annual income and revenue of the city and county, and said necessary expenditures cannot be made without temporarily suspending the limitation upon the rate of taxation provided for in section 11 of chapter 1 of article III of the charter of said city and county."

The ordinance further declared that, for the reasons therein stated, the limitation upon the rate of taxation be temporarily suspended, and that an additional tax of 29 cents upon each $100 valuation be levied.

The second ordinance, which levied the tax, apportioned the revenue to be derived therefrom as follows: For paving, repaving, grading, and repairs to streets, for reconstruction of and repairs to sewers, and for construction and repairs to public buildings and other structures, except school buildings, 22 cents; for construction and equipment of fire department buildings, and for purchase of lands for fire department purposes, 2½ cents; for reconstruction and repairs to and equipment of school department buildings, 2 cents; for construction and equipment of police department buildings, and for purchase of lands for police department purposes, 2 cents; for continuance of sanitary measures, one-half cent.

The protests filed by respondent and his assignor included as the grounds thereof those here urged against the validity of the levy, and were followed by demands for repayment, upon noncompliance with which the present action was filed.

At the trial, the ordinances mentioned, together with ordinances adopted during the years 1907, 1908, and 1909, were introduced in evidence, and, according to the language of the decision, no other evidence was received relating to the subject of an emergency or necessity within the meaning of the charter provision mentioned. The ordinance of 1907 declared the necessity for an additional levy for the purpose, among others, not included in the later ordinances, of repairing the streets of the city. The ordinances of the years 1908 and 1909 stated in addition thereto the same facts as are contained in the ordinance here in question as the basis for the conclusion of the board in each of said ordinances that a necessity and an emergency within the meaning of the charter existed, requiring an increase in taxation over the rate otherwise limited.

From the evidence, the trial court concluded that neither the necessity nor the emergency essential to a valid suspension of the charter limitation existed in 1910, and entered judgment for plaintiff, from which judgment defendant appealed.

It is contended by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to overcome the prima facie effect of the findings of the board, that the latter fairly support the board's conclusions, and that the judgment of the trial court is unsupported; and by respondent that, in addition to inferences reasonably to be drawn from the ordinances mentioned, any facts which that court might judicially notice should be considered on appeal as having the effect of evidence supporting the judgment.

[1] The ordinance in question declared that the conditions found to exist in 1910 were created during the year 1906. In San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 141 P. 384, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676, it is held that by the use of the adjective "great" the charter means a necessity or emergency of grave character and serious moment; the word "emergency" being therein defined as an unforeseen occurrence or combination of circumstances which calls for an immediate action or remedy, a pressing necessity, an emergency, the word being also defined as a "sudden or unexpected happening." 15 Cyc. 452; Colfax County v. Butler Co., 83 Neb. 803, 120 N. W. 444. Webster's International Dictionary defines the word "necessity" as "the quality or state of being necessary, in its primary sense signifying that which makes an act or event unavoidable." St. Louis, etc., Co. v. Wanamaker & Brown, 115 Mo. App. 270, 90 S. W. 737, 743.

The ordinances of 1908 and 1909 found, as the basis for the conclusion that a necessity or emergency then existed, the same facts as those contained in the ordinance of 1910. From the findings in the ordinance first mentioned, the trial court might reasonably have inferred that the board was then apprised as to the extent of the injuries to streets and sewers and to the real and personal property owned by the municipality; and, being so apprised, that the sums required to provide relief were then ascertained or ascertainable. These inferences fairly support the conclusion that the conditions declared to exist in 1910 were foreseen at least as early as the year 1908, were not sudden or unexpected, and hence did not constitute an emergency as defined above within the meaning of the charter. Mallon v. Water Commissioners, 144 Mo. App. 104, 128 S. W. 764; Parker v. Mayor, etc., of Monroe, 128 La. 951, 55 So. 587.

[2] It was also declared in the latter ordinance that theretofore no adequate provision had been made for the conditions as described. As stated, these conditions were known and had continued over a period of years, during which, as may fairly be inferred, the amounts required to furnish a remedy were ascertainable and as a reasonable probability had been ascertained.

This declaration, in view of the time which had elapsed since the catastrophe of 1906 and the above-suggested inferences, admits of a construction which supports the implied conclusion of the trial court that, contrary to the plain meaning of the charter (San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, supra), it was the purpose, following the occurrence mentioned, to extend the extraordinary taxing power over an indefinite number of years, and that the necessity declared in 1910 was not of the pressing and urgent character which would justify the conclusions and acts of the board. Colfax County v. Butler County, supra.

[3, 4] Among the purposes for which the additional tax was levied was that of providing for "the continuance of sanitary measures under the direction of the board of health," etc. It not being contended that cases of bubonic plague existed within the municipality after the year 1907, the measures declared necessary by the ordinance in evidence were wholly preventive, and similar in character to other activities of the board of health. The needs of the board, in the absence of epidemics, were not unlike those of the police and fire departments, and could with reasonable certainty be anticipated. Where, as here, the necessity declared in 1910 arose from conditions known and continuing since the year 1907 the trial court might fairly conclude that the situation alleged was not unforeseen. That the danger declared was in its nature continuous was reasonably to be implied, not only from the ordinance, but from the geographical situation of the city and the maritime traffic which passes between it and the regions from whence the disease originally came; the latter facts being matters of general knowledge which the trial and appellate courts within the jurisdiction will judicially notice (Varcoe v. Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 181 P. 223); and, though it may be said that action by the board of health was necessary in this as in similar situations, the case presented is analogous to that of Burr v. San Francisco, 186 Cal. 508, 199 P. 1034, 17 A. L. R. 581, wherein it was held that an increase in the annual expenses of the city, caused by new activities of its government, was insufficient to constitute a necessity of emergency within the meaning of its charter.

[5] Should it be urged that the need for fire, police, and school department equipment was such as to fairly come within the charter provision here considered, the sums required therefor were not segregated from the cost of construction of buildings in which such equipment was to be installed, or, in the case of the police and fire departments, from that of the acquisition of lands. The same is true of the cost of repairs to streets, sewers, and school buildings, included in amounts levied for the additional purposes of paving and grading streets, the construction of sewers and the reconstruction of school buildings. Even if the court, therefore, had been of the opinion that the proposed expenditures for equipment or repairs were for the purpose of meeting a great necessity or emergency, it could not have sustained these items, since the ordinance furnished no means of segregating them from others of a nonemergency character. Moreover, it is apparent that the necessity for the equipment arose from the same cause as the other declared needs, had existed for the same length of time, and was not sudden or unexpected—all of which facts would negative its alleged emergency character, and justify the same conclusion as to it which the court was warranted in drawing as to the proposed expenditures for new construction and the acquisition of lands.

[6] While it will be assumed prima facie that the board acted upon sufficient inquiry (In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 P. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75; Morgan v. Long Beach, 57 Cal. App. 134, 138, 207 P. 53), and the burden rested upon appellant to show either that the facts found were untrue or that the conclusions therefrom were unsupported (Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. San Francisco, 146 Cal. 673, 80 P. 1086; San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 504, 508, 2 P. 264), its determinations were not conclusive but subject to review (San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, supra).

[7] The evidence in the instant case was without conflict, and the findings rest upon inferences drawn from the declarations of the board, together with circumstances judicially noticed; and though the facts would support inferences favorable to appellant, those drawn by the court also find reasonable support therefrom. They fairly overcome the presumptions mentioned, and sustain the conclusion that no necessity or emergency within the meaning of the charter was shown. Where fair and impartial minds may draw different conclusions from the evidence, though there be no conflict therein, the conclusions drawn by the trial court must be sustained on appeal. Kelly v. Brown, 2 Cal. Unrep. 536, 8 P. 38; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308; Bettens v. Hoover, 12 Cal. App. 313, 107 P. 329; Pratt v. Phelps, 23 Cal. App. 755, 139 P. 906.

[8, 9] In conclusion it may be said that it was the evident intention of the charter that the power to temporarily suspend the limitation upon the rate of taxation should be exercised for the purpose of meeting such necessities as were temporary in character. Provision is therein made for extraordinary conditions not within the definition of a "great necessity or emergency" requiring the acquisition of lands or the construction of any permanent building or improvement, the cost of which, in addition to the other expenses of the city and county will exceed the revenue raised by ordinary taxation in any one year, by directing the supervisors by ordinance to submit a proposition to incur a bonded indebtedness to the electors of the municipality. Charter, art. 16, § 29. As observed by the court in San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, supra, if the revenues sought to be raised by the city do not fairly come within the purview of an emergency tax measure, the necessity must be met either by the issuance of bonds or by an amendment to the charter, and no argument of hardship or inconvenience will justify a court in ignoring its protective provisions.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

76 Cal. App. 293

TRUMAN v. SUTTER-BUTTE CANAL CO.
(Civ. 2981.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 23, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. March 22, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 995.

Probative force of expert witnesses' testimony is question solely for jury.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1002—Jury's verdict on conflicting evidence held conclusive on question whether water from defendant's ditch damaged orchard.

Verdict for plaintiff on conflicting evidence held conclusive of question whether damage to orchard was caused by water which escaped from defendant's ditch or from seepage from rice fields owned by plaintiff and others.

3. Evidence $\S$ 213(2)—Admission in evidence of letter containing offer of settlement to establish admission of liability for damages held not abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 895, 997, 2078).

Admitting letter in evidence, to establish an admission of liability for water damage to plaintiff's orchard contained therein, held, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 895, 997, and 2078, relating to admissions in evidence of offers of compromise, not abuse of discretion, though letter did contain offer to pay damages very greatly less than were claimed.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1064(1)—Instruction that escape of water from ditch alone was proof of negligence for which defendant was liable if it damaged plaintiff's orchard, if erroneous, held not prejudicial.

Where escape of water from defendant's irrigation ditch was admitted, instruction that escape or seepage of water from ditch was alone proof of negligence, and that if such negligence damaged plaintiff's orchard defendant was liable, if erroneous, held not prejudicial, in view of defendant's express admission of liability at least in part, and claim that damage was due principally to subterranean water from rice fields.

5. Trial $\S$ 295(1).

Jury should consider instructions as a whole.

6. Waters and water courses $\S$ 263—Instruction held not objectionable as authorizing jury to consider possible future negligence and damage in fixing damages to orchard from escaped water.

Instruction that, in determining damage to orchard from water escaped from irrigation ditch, jury might consider "detriment, if any, resulting by reason of the negligent acts and omissions, if any, of defendant, or certain to result in the future," though awkward, held not construable as erroneously authorizing jury to consider possible future damage from future negligence.

7. Appeal and error — 758(3).

Appellant's mere statement that requested instruction refused "should have been given" held not sufficient to justify review.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by I. J. Truman, Jr., against the Sutter-Butte Canal Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and Henry Ingram, of Gridley, for appellant.

George F. Jones, of Oroville, and Orville C. Pratt, Jr., and Arthur H. Barendt, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover the aggregate sum of $18,000, alleged to be the extent of the damage, measured in money, inflicted upon plaintiff's orchard by certain acts of the defendant. The issues of fact were tried before a jury, who awarded plaintiff a verdict for the sum of $5,000. Judgment was entered accordingly, and from said judgment defendant appeals.

The defendant is a public service corporation, and owns and operates an irrigation system, "consisting of ditches, dams, pumping plants, and other structures," and serves persons owning lands contiguous to its system with water for irrigating purposes. It takes water from the Feather river and conveys it through its ditches to its various customers in the counties of Sutter and Butte.

The plaintiff owns a tract of 40 acres of land (specifically described in the complaint) in the county of Sutter. Of this tract, 26 acres, situated in the northeast corner of the tract, borders upon certain ditches maintained by the defendant for the purposes of its business in the distribution of water to its customers. The said 26 acres had been and constituted, at the time of the damage thereto in the manner claimed and alleged by plaintiff, to be hereinafter explained, a prune orchard of 2,340 trees, 16 acres thereof being set out in three year old trees, and the remainder planted in the month of March, 1921, with trees of the age of one year. The defendant, it appears, prior to and at the time of the damage alleged and complained of by plaintiff, owned and operated, as parts of its irrigation system, two ditches "touching said above described tract, one on the north side thereof, designated by defendant as lateral A, which, from the northeast corner, touches at all points the north side of said tract, and carries water in a westerly direction to various consumers of this defendant; the other ditch, designated by defendant as lateral A-3, from its confluence with ditch lateral A at the northeast corner of said tract, extends in a southerly direction and touches at all points the east side of the above tract, and carries water in a southerly direction to various consumers of defendant." The complaint charges that, "for the first time during the season of the year 1921, and on or about the 5th day of May, 1921," the defendant caused said ditches to be filled with water, and that immediately thereafter the water so turned thereinto broke through and overflowed the banks at a point in lateral A-3, 100 feet, approximately, south of the junction of said lateral with lateral A, with the result that the water flowed over the banks of said ditch and "through the breach therein made" continuously for 24 hours, approximately, so that "for a period of 90 days, more or less, as plaintiff is informed and believes and therefore alleges, from said 5th day of May, 1921, the said 26 acres * * * were flooded, and water stood thereon at depths of from 6 to 18 inches, and that thereafter continuously, until on or about the 1st day of October, 1921, water seeped through the said laterals * * * onto said lands, keeping it in a saturated and soggy condition." The complaint alleges that, because of the flooding of said lands and the seepage referred to, more than 1,500 of the prune trees standing and growing thereon were "utterly destroyed, and the entire orchard was rendered wholly unfit for cultivation and useless for any purpose whatever, to the great injury, loss, and damage of plaintiff." The complaint charges that the inundation of plaintiff's land and the consequent destruction of his trees and injury to his land were due entirely to the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, either from the negligent construction of said ditches or from carelessly and negligently turning into said ditches and so forcing them to carry an excessive amount of water, or from both causes, and but for such carelessness and negligence the injury to plaintiff's land and the destruction of the trees thereon would not have occurred.

The damages claimed and asked for by plaintiff are: For the destruction of the trees, $13,200; for the loss of the beneficial use of said land by reason of the flooding thereof, as alleged, for the years 1921 and 1922, $1,300; as for special damage, by reason of the alleged necessity of the construction by plaintiff of a ditch paralleling the ditch of defendant on the north and east sides for a distance of not to exceed 30 feet, at a cost of $3,500, approximately, for the purpose of draining the land of plaintiff and carrying off the seepage water from defendant's canal, the total amount of the damage being the sum above stated.

The answer, after certain formal denials, admits: That for the first time, defendant, in May, 1921, turned water into and through the ditches referred to in the complaint or carried water down said ditches to the vicinity of plaintiff's said lands, but denies that at the time mentioned that there was carried through said ditches an excessive amount of water; "that it is a fact, however, that, on the 6th day of May, 1921, a small break occurred in lateral A-3, * * * through which water flowed out and upon plaintiff's land for a period of not to exceed six hours," but alleges that the said break was of such a nature as to have been unavoidable in the construction and maintenance of ditches, particularly during the first year of their use, and further alleging that defendant closed the break within a period of six hours after it occurred, and that thereafter, "and as soon as defendant could take the necessary apparatus upon the ground, it proceeded to and within a period of not more than 25 days from the occurrence of said break defendant caused said water to be pumped off said land, and no more breaks in said ditches or any thereof and no more water escaped from defendant's said ditches upon any of plaintiff's said land during said year by breaking of ditches, nor did any material or injurious amount of water during said year pass from defendant's said ditches to and upon plaintiff's land by any other means whatsoever." The answer proceeds to allege that the lateral ditch from which flowed the water onto plaintiff's land, as set forth in the complaint, was maintained along the north line of plaintiff's land at the request and for the benefit of plaintiff, so that the latter's land could be irrigated by water from defendant's said ditch. It is further likewise alleged that "plaintiff had maintained another ditch or lateral running along the entire south line of his said orchard tract * * * through which he took and received from defendant water, which he carried through said lateral for his own use and benefit, and in addition thereto upon the remainder of plaintiff's said land lying immediately south of that in said complaint, described and consisting approximately of 600 acres, upon which plaintiff, during the year 1921 cultivated and grew a rice crop, for the growing of which he procured from defendant and used thereon water during the whole of the rice cropping season of 1921." It is alleged by defendant that the drainage from plaintiff's land which was used in rice growing is in a northerly direction and "over and across plaintiff's orchard, described in the complaint," said land or orchard being "situated in a swale, hollow, or depression in plaintiff's said land; that the land itself is inclined to adobe and poorly fitted for the growing of an orchard, and owing to the unfavorable location of said orchard, particularly in view of the large amount of water which plaintiff took upon his own land for rice growing, and the drainage water escaping from plaintiff's said rice land, by both surface and subterranean flow over, to, and upon said orchard, the short time said water escaped from said defendant's said ditch as aforesaid, laid upon a portion of said orchard, not exceeding in all four acres, did not materially affect said orchard, and the results shown there now would have been the same had such break in defendant's said ditch or canal not occurred."

As a special defense, the defendant charges that the overflow of plaintiff's orchard was wholly occasioned through plaintiff's own negligence, as follows: That well knowing that the 26 acres of land which he planted in prune trees were entirely unfit for the growing of prune trees by reason of its location or physical relation to his 600-acre tract devoted to rice growing, he carelessly, negligently, recklessly, and without the exercise of ordinary caution and care, "set out his said orchard in an unfavorable position and place therefor"; that, upon and after receiving the water furnished him by defendant at his request to be used in the irrigation of the said 600-acre tract upon which he was growing rice, plaintiff carelessly, negligently, and without the use of ordinary care permitted said rice water so brought and used on said 600 acres to escape, "by both surface and subterranean flow, over, to, and upon said orchard, which saturated and kept saturated the ground in said orchard during said summer of 1921 and 1922 and 1923, and if, as a matter of fact, any trees in said orchard were killed by water during said period or at all, they were so killed because of such water negligently by plaintiff permitted to go upon said orchard." The answer also specifically denies that plaintiff's trees or any of them were destroyed, and that plaintiff suffered any damage as alleged in the complaint.

Upon the issues as thus framed, the cause was tried and submitted to the jury, with the result as above stated.

Counsel for plaintiff expressly admit in their briefs that the evidence is in substantial conflict upon the claim of plaintiff that the defendant's negligence in maintaining lateral ditches described in the complaint was a direct contributing cause of the damage to plaintiff's orchards. It is contended, however, as is to be implied from the defendant's answer, that such negligence was not the sole cause of the damage, but that much of the injury to the plaintiff's orchards was due to seepage or a subterranean flow of waters from certain rice fields situated in near proximity to and south, southeast, and east of the orchards. One of these rice fields, a tract of approximately 600 acres of land, and situated east of the orchards, belonged to plaintiff. Counsel for defendant also make this statement in their opening brief:

"Respondent claimed damage in his complaint in the sum of $13,200, and the jury awarded him $5,000. Of course, we believe that the jury had no right to award any damage at all, and that if any were awarded the sum specified by them in their verdict was grossly excessive, but we are also aware of the fact that we are dealing with a matter that went to the jury for consideration. * * * We must also admit that the amount of damages awarded, while apparently very excessive, finds some support in the testimony of Mr. Leonard A. Walton."

But while making those admissions, counsel for the defendant, nevertheless, insist that the evidence supporting the verdict was of so slight or unsatisfactory a character as to have made certain alleged errors of law occurring in the course of the trial singularly prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant in the trial of the case. A careful review of the evidence forbids our assenting to that proposition, assuming that there is merit in the contention that the rulings referred to were erroneous. Those rulings are three in number, the first of which involves the action of the trial court in admitting in evidence, over objection by defendant, a certain letter addressed to plaintiff by an engineer employed by defendant, and which had reference to the break in defendant's ditch, and in which the writer, among other matters therein stated, admitted that the damage to plaintiff's property was caused in part by water which flowed over and upon the orchards from the defendant's ditch by reason of the break occurring therein. The other assigned errors arise from certain instructions embraced within the court's charge to the jury.

The evidence shows, as the complaint alleges, that, on the 5th day of May, 1921, the defendant, for the first time after the lateral ditches mentioned in the complaint were constructed, turned into said ditches a flow of water equal to the capacity thereof; that these laterals bordered plaintiff's orchard on the east and the north; that during the nighttime between the 5th and 6th days of May, the bank of the east lateral, designated in the complaint as lateral A-3, gave way to the pressure of the water, causing a break in said bank covering a space in width of several feet and $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 feet deep; that the water from said lateral flowed in a large volume over and upon the orchard of plaintiff; that, besides flowing through said breach, water also passed through numerous cracks or interstices in the banks of both laterals; that the water then flowing on the low part of the orchard of plaintiff developed into a large pool, approximately "knee deep," and within three days from the time of said break and the overflowing of the water from the said ditches onto and over said orchard, approximately 1,000 prune trees of said orchard were destroyed. One Snyder was, at the time of the break and had been for some time prior thereto, foreman and in charge of plaintiff's orchard. He testified that, early in the morning of May 6th, he discovered the break, and that the orchard was covered with water; that not only was water passing through the break "good and fast," but was also passing over the banks and through the cracks in the banks for a distance along the lateral of from 120 to 150 feet. This witness stated that he immediately notified the man in charge of defendant's ditches at the "ditch camp," located about a mile east from the point where the break occurred, of the break; that the water was thereupon "shut off" so that it would not longer pass through the laterals; that, notwithstanding the shutting off of the water from the laterals, the break in the ditch continued to grow in size, and the water still therein to flow over and upon the orchards; that he attempted to stop the flow by depositing sacks of dirt in the break. It was further shown that about three days after the break the defendant installed a pumping equipment in the orchard and proceeded to pump the water therefrom; that the pumping was continued practically through the entire summer, and the water not entirely pumped from the orchard until the month of September or October, 1921. Further recapitulation herein of the testimony as to the break and the overflowing of plaintiff's orchard by the water from the ditch by reason of the break and of the existence of cracks in the banks of the laterals need not be made, since the fact of the break and the fact of the water from the ditch flowing in large quantities upon plaintiff's property are admitted, as is also the fact that there is evidence which supports the amount of the damages awarded. But it is important, as showing the faulty construction or careless maintenance of the ditch, to state that one Buckner, who was a ditch tender in the employ of the defendant for a month prior to and at the time the break occurred, testified that on each of three successive days immediately preceding the time the water was turned into the laterals on the 5th day of May, 1921, he was engaged in removing from the ditches or laterals weeds and dirt, preparatory to the turning thereinto water from the main canal, and that while so engaged he observed that the banks of the laterals "were cracked and low in places and uneven"; that "in some places the ditch was in good condition, but other places the banks were cracked for a space of 100 feet or more in spots all along the canal." This witness testified on cross-examination:

"Q. How many of those cracks did you see on A-3? A. I didn't count them; they were all along the whole levee.

"Q. How many did you see? A. I don't know.

"Q. Would you say there was 100 of them? A. I would say there was several thousand of them."

The witness stated that he went to where the break occurred on the 6th of May, about 10 o'clock a. m. As to what he then observed, he testified, on cross-examination:

"Q. How many breaks did you find? A. One break.

"Q. And that was as you have described it, about 10 feet wide? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you find water running out of that levee at any other place except at that break? A. Yes, sir; through the cracks.

"Q. Where? A. All along the east side.

"Q. What? A. As far as the water was at that time."

This witness further testified that one Sitton, then the water master of defendant, and two other employees thereof, went over and along the laterals for three days immediately before the water was turned into the laterals on May 5th and saw the cracks in the banks thereof.

The theory of the defense, as has before been stated and as is indicated by the answer of the defendant, is that the use of the large quantities of water necessary for the growing of rice upon the rice fields situated not far distant from the plaintiff's orchards had the effect of raising the subterranean water plane of said rice lands, with the result that the water from that source had continuously flowed underground in such large quantities to the orchard as to destroy the roots of the prune trees, it being a matter of common knowledge that fruit trees require a much smaller amount or acre-feet of water to sustain them than is required in rice culture, and that to give to such trees water much in excess of what, according to their nature, they require will generally result in their destruction. The distance of the rice fields from the plaintiff's orchard on the south and west thereof is, according to the evidence, over a quarter of a mile, and the distance of such fields from said orchards on the north is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles. It was admitted by defendant's expert witnesses that the general subterranean drainage from these rice fields is to the south and west, or, in other words, from the direction of the orchards; but the theory was and is (and the expert witnesses of defendant testified to that effect) that, due to the large quantities of water used on said rice lands in the two or three years preceding the time at which the break occurred, a water mound developed underground or beneath the surface of the rice lands, the effect of which was to raise the water plane or table below the ground an average of 11 feet over the whole of the acreage of the rice lands—some 9,000 acres in the aggregate; that the result of this increase in height of the water plane in said lands was to force the underground drainage from its natural flow and turn it in the direction of and to the orchards of the plaintiff, thus causing the roots of the prune trees to remain in standing water.

[1] Whether the testimony of the expert witnesses in support of that theory was of sufficient probative force to overcome the case made by the plaintiff presented a question solely for the jury to determine. The fact that the bank of the lateral ditch yielded, to the force of the water turned into the ditch and caused the water to pass over and upon the plaintiff's orchard or portions thereof is admitted. There was testimony, as we have shown, that the lateral in which the break occurred and from which the water flowed upon and inundated portions of the orchards was in very poor condition for holding or carrying water in quantities sufficient to be used for irrigation purposes because of the large number of cracks or interstices therein from which the water could and did seep. There was testimony that within three days after the overflowing of the plaintiff's orchards by reason of the breaking of the bank of the lateral ditch, almost 1,000 trees died. It was further shown that, notwithstanding that in the two years (1922 and 1923) immediately succeeding the year 1921, in which the damage complained of here occurred, the rice lands in the vicinity of plaintiff's orchards were flooded with water, and still there was testimony to the effect that the only trees found to be destroyed or dead on said orchards were in that portion of the orchards which was flooded from defendant's ditch in 1921. This testimony, it will be noted, tends to dispute the theory upon which the defendant relied to overcome the showing made by the plaintiff in support of the allegations of his complaint.

[2] Thus it will be observed that the most that can be said of the question whether the damage to plaintiff's trees was wholly due to the flooding of his land by the water from the defendant's ditch, or was caused by the joint action of the water thus thrown upon the orchard and the percolating waters from the rice fields, is that thereon there existed and does exist a conflict in the evidence. Of course, in that situation, so far as the evidence is concerned, the verdict of the jury, which necessarily implies a finding that the proximate cause of the damage was the negligent acts of defendant in the construction and management of its ditch, is conclusive upon this court.

We are now brought to a consideration of the alleged errors occurring in the trial of the case. The letter above referred to as having been erroneously, and to the prejudice of the rights of the defendant, admitted in evidence against the latter's objection, was addressed to plaintiff by Mr. Norton Ware, chief engineer of defendant, and was offered and received in evidence while plaintiff was under direct examination. The letter, after stating that a careful investigation of plaintiff's "orchard damage" had been made, and describing the conditions existing in the vicinity of the orchard, stating that the land, because of its character and its situation with reference to the rice fields, is not well adapted to the development of a thriving orchard under the "present irrigation methods in the vicinity" of the orchards, proceeds as follows:

"The value of the orchard has been placed at $185 per acre; the total valuation therefore would be $4,865 for the 26.3 acres planted to trees. The Canal Company has contributed to some extent to the general seepage condition in the orchard, but the major portion of the damage is due to the rice irrigation. There is a total of 2,266 trees in the orchard, of which 506 are dead and 571 not thrifty; or 47½ per cent. of the orchard has been damaged. This makes the damage done amount to $2,300. The Canal Company is willing to assume $250 of this damage, being the amount of damage due to direct seepage from our canals along and adjacent to the trees affected."

[3] The specific objection to the introduction of the letter in evidence was that it constituted an offer by defendant to plaintiff for a compromise and settlement of the claim of damages by the latter for the injury sustained, and that it was therefore inadmissible under sections 895, 997, and 2078 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Counsel for plaintiff stated, in reply to the objection, that his sole purpose in offering the letter was to show an admission by the defendant, through an authorized agent, that the defendant did contribute to the damage of plaintiff's orchard. The court, by its ruling admitting the letter, expressly limited the proof of the contents of the letter to the purpose for which counsel for plaintiff stated that they offered the letter in evidence. The two sections first named of the Code within the inhibitions of which it is claimed the letter falls provide that where, before the trial, the defendant offers in writing to allow judgment be taken against him for a specified amount, and the offer is not accepted, the offer and acceptance may not be given in evidence nor affect the recovery, otherwise than as to costs. Section 2078 provides that "an offer of compromise is not an admission that anything is due." The letter was written by Ware a short time after the break occurred, and nearly six months prior to the filing of the complaint herein. There is no evidence in the record showing that, at any time, either prior or subsequent to the writing of the letter, or prior or subsequent to the filing of the complaint herein, any negotiations were opened or pending between plaintiff and defendant looking to a compromise or settlement of any compensation which plaintiff might claim for the damage to his orchards. No question was asked plaintiff on cross-examination by defendant's counsel as to any proposition of compromise having been made or discussed between the parties, nor was Ware, who testified for defendant, asked by counsel for the latter whether any conversations or conferences or negotiations looking to a compromise were had at any time between the parties. If any such conferences or negotiations had taken place prior to the writing of the letter or at any time, it may be assumed that the fact thereof would have been brought out at the trial. The letter does not contain a direct or definite proposition to settle any claim which plaintiff might make. But, conceding, as well we may, that it contained a proposition to compromise, it did so upon an admission by defendant of liability for the damage, the offer to settle, however, being for much less than was and is claimed by plaintiff, and therefore the trial court cannot be justly charged with an abuse of discretion in admitting the letter in evidence as in proof of such admission. The rule in this regard is well stated in Hartford Bridge Co. v. Gran-ger, 4 Conn. 142, 148, as follows:

"The law on this subject has often been misconceived; and it is time that it should be firmly established. It is never the intendment of the law to shut out the truth; but to repel any inference, which may arise from a proposition made, not with design to admit the existence of a fact, but merely to buy one's peace. If an admission, however, is made, because it is a fact, the evidence to prove it is competent, whatever motive may have prompted the declaration. * * * The question to be considered, is, What was the view and intention of the party in making the admission; whether it was to conceive a fact hypothetically, in order to effect a settlement, or to declare a fact really to exist."

In Rose v. Rose, 112 Cal. 341, 44 P. 658, an action for divorce, in a letter written by the husband to the wife, the former offered to divide the property as in settlement of their property rights, and described it as community property. The offer of the letter in evidence was objected to on the ground that it was an offer of compromise which was not accepted by the wife. The trial court admitted the letter, however, and on appeal the ruling allowing the letter in evidence was assigned as error and prejudicial, to which the Supreme Court, through the late learned Judge Van Fleet, replied:

"The court did not err in admitting, on the issue as to the character of the property, the paper signed by defendant, in which he offered to divide the property, and described it as community property. It was admitted solely on the question as to whether the property was community or separate, and for this purpose it was proper as a declaration by the defendant, even conceding that the paper is to be regarded as an offer of compromise."

See, also, Donley v. Bailey, 48 Colo. 373, 376, 110 P. 65; Dunlap v. Montana-Tonopah M. Co. (C. C.) 192 F. 714; Teasley v. Bradley, 120 Ga. 373, 375, 47 S. E. 925; Kennell v. Boyer, 144 Iowa, 303, 122 N. W. 941, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488; also footnote at page 489, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1127.

In Batchelder v. Batchelder, 2 Allen (Mass.) 105, it is said that whether or not such admissions are by way of compromise and to buy one's peace, or are mere admissions of liability and express or implied promises to pay, are primarily questions of fact for the trial court in determining the admissibility of testimony. See, also, Greenfield v. Kennett, 69 N. H. 419, 45 A. 233; Langdon v. Ahrends, 166 Iowa, 636, 147 N. W. 940, 941.

[4] The following instruction, given by the court at the request of plaintiff, is criticized as invading the domain of fact:

"You are instructed that if you find that water escaped through or over the banks of said lateral A-3, or seeped or percolated from or out of such lateral A-3 or other canal or ditch of defendant company, the mere fact of such escape of water as aforesaid is in itself sufficient evidence to prove negligence on the part of defendant canal company, and if you find that such negligence resulted in damage to the premises of plaintiff and to the fruit trees thereon, your verdict should be for the plaintiff, for such sum as he has suffered therefrom, not exceeding the sum claimed in the complaint, to wit, $13,200."

It is said that by giving the above instruction the court practically took the case from the jury. In support of this conclusion the defendant cites a number of cases holding that a canal company is not an insurer against all damages arising from its ditches, but is required to exercise reasonable or ordinary care only in the construction, maintenance, and operation of its ditches, or, in other words, is to be held only to the usual and ordinary course and manner of constructing its irrigating system. See Nahl v. Alta Irrigation District, 23 Cal. App. 333, 137 P. 1080; North Stirling Irr. Dist. v. Dickman, 59 Colo. 169, 149 P. 97, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 973; Hunt v. Sutter-Butte Co., 66 Cal. App. 363, 225 P. 884. The cases named hold as counsel for defendant contend, and the court below, in addition to the instruction complained of, also gave instructions in accord with the theory upon which those cases proceed. The instruction under criticism here, however, was based upon and is supported by what the Supreme Court said in denying a petition for a hearing of the case of Tormey v. Anderson-Cottonwood I. Dist., 53 Cal. App. 559, 568, 200 P. 814. The exigencies of this case do not require us to attempt to differentiate, even if it may be done, between the case just named and the instant case upon the theory of a difference in the facts of the two cases, since it is plainly true that, whether the instruction correctly or incorrectly states the law, in so far as it is applied to this case, the giving of it cannot be held to have worked prejudice as against the defendant, in view of the fact that it (defendant) expressly admitted liability, at least in part, for the damage of which plaintiff here complains. And this is true, even though such admission was limited, as indicated, since the question of the defendant's liability, whether for any or for all, or for only a part of the damage, was essentially an issue in the case under the plea of defendant that the damage was due entirely to the subterranean water flowing into the orchard from the rice fields, the admission that it was in part, and only in part, responsible for the damage, and the undisputed evidence that the portions of the orchards damaged were inundated by the water passing through the bank of the ditch and the interstices therein.

[5, 6] The court told the jury that, in arriving at the amount of any damages they might assess against defendant and award the plaintiff, they were "to determine the difference, if any, between the value of plaintiff's premises, including the growing fruit trees thereon, immediately before they were damaged by reason of the negligent acts or omissions of defendant, if any, and the value of the same premises after they were so damaged, taking into consideration the detriment, if any, resulting by reason of the negligent acts and omissions, if any, of defendant, or certain to result in the future," etc.

The defendant assails the part of the instruction which we have italicized as so extending the scope of the inquiry as to the damage suffered by the plaintiff as to have justified the jury into taking into consideration, in assessing the damages, some other damage which the defendant might cause to plaintiff's property by some future negligent acts or omissions in the maintenance of its ditches—that is, damage which might be so caused after the 6th day of May, 1921—and counsel for defendant assert that the "jury probably" so understood it. Save and except the words in italics, the instruction is free from objection. To the extent of those words, the instruction is awkwardly expressed, to say the least of it. But the court, by those words, undoubtedly intended to say what it said in another of its given instructions, to wit, " * * * You are entitled to consider, not only the damage that has heretofore visibly occurred, if any, to plaintiff's premises and to the growing fruit trees thereon, but also the damage, if any, to said premises and to said trees that is certain to result in the future as the direct and necessary result of the acts or omissions of said defendant," the language "certain to result in the future," being specifically confined in other instructions, as well as in the rulings of the court as to the evidence addressed to the question of damage, to the damage caused in the year 1921, as alleged in the complaint. Indeed, a careful reading of the italicized portion of the criticized instruction must at once convey to the mind that the court predicated the expression, "certain to result in the future," entirely upon the "negligent acts and omissions" alleged in the complaint. Paraphrasing or amplifying the italicized language of the instruction, as it is amplified by the other instruction given on the measure of damages, it clearly means, and, of course, was intended to read, " * * * taking into consideration the detriment, if any, resulting by reason of the negligent acts and omissions, if any, as alleged in the complaint, or which may result in the future from the negligent acts and omissions so alleged." The jury, considering the instructions as a whole, as it was their duty to do, and also having in view the rulings of the court confining the evidence to the proof of such damage only as might have been done to plaintiff's property in the year 1921 from the overflowing of the water therein from defendant's ditch on May 5th or 6th of that year, certainly could not have understood the italicized words to mean anything other than as thus amplified and construed. Indeed, the proposition which the instruction would state under the construction thereof by counsel for defendant would be palpably absurd; so plainly so, indeed, that the absurdity would readily be perceived by any layman possessing ordinary intelligence.

[7] The counsel for the defendant in their brief set forth a number of instructions which they submitted, but which the court refused to give to the jury, and in this it is asserted that the court committed prejudicial error. The counsel do not point out that the instructions preferred by them and refused by the court announced any principles of law applicable to the case which were not stated in the charge of the court to the jury. All that counsel say in regard to the action of the court in refusing to allow said instructions is that they "should have been given." This is not sufficient to justify a review of the assignments in that particular. The charge of the court seems to have covered every rule or principle of law pertinent to the issues as made by the pleadings and developed by the proofs necessary to an enlightened consideration of the evidence by the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 227

PEOPLE v. McCLOSKEY. (Cr. 886.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 15, 1926. Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 15, 1926.)

I. Constitutional law ⚡200, 258—Weapons ⚡3—Statute prohibiting person convicted of felony to own or possess firearm capable of concealment held not, as applied to property possessed when it was enacted, violative of due process or ex post facto (St. 1923, p. 696, § 2).

St. 1923, p. 696, § 2, prohibiting person convicted of felony from owning or possessing firearms capable of concealment, as applied to property owned at time of its enactment, held not a taking of property in violation of due process clause nor ex post facto.

2. Criminal law ⚡304(2).

Danger to public from indiscriminate carrying of deadly weapons is matter of common knowledge.

3. Constitutional law ⚡92.

No one can acquire a vested right to continue in possession of that which is a menace to public safety.

4. Weapons ⚡17(4) — Jury held justified in finding revolver was capable of firing cartridges as against contention it was an "antique" within exception of statute (St. 1923, pp. 696, 702, §§ 2, 15).

In prosecution for carrying firearms in violation of St. 1923, p. 696, § 2, jury held justified under evidence in finding revolver was capable of being fired as against contention it was antique, within section 15 of the act.

5. Weapons ⚡8—If weapon still retains its efficiency to such an extent that it may be in some manner used as originally intended, a person carrying it contrary to law will be criminally liable.

No matter how disabled a weapon may be, if it still retains its efficiency to such an extent that it may be used as originally intended in some manner, a person carrying it contrary to law will be criminally liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

John McCloskey was convicted of possession of a revolver, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Lee Gray, of Colfax, and Boyer & Havens, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was charged with the crime of having "in his possession and under his control a certain firearm, to wit, a revolver capable of being concealed upon the person, he, the said John McCloskey, having been convicted of a felony against the property of another, to wit, burglary in the second degree." He was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. This appeal is from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The evidence shows that the defendant was the owner of the revolver, and that, at the time of his arrest, he was carrying it in the pocket of the right-hand door of an automobile owned and then being driven by him. Three cartridges fitting the revolver were in the same pocket. He admitted that he had been convicted of the alleged burglary.

Section 2 of the act under which the defendant was prosecuted, in so far as applicable to the questions here presented, provides:

"No person who has been convicted of a felony against the person or property of another * * * shall own or have in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person." Stats. 1923, p. 696.

Section 15 provides:

"This act shall not apply to antique pistols or revolvers incapable of use as such."

[1] The court refused to permit the defendant to prove that he owned and had possession of the revolver prior to the time the act went into effect. Appellant contends that "one cannot lawfully be convicted of a crime for continuing to own and possess that which had lawfully become his property"; that, as applied to such property, the act is an ex post facto law, and that to punish the owner for continuing in possession thereof would be to deprive him of his property without due process of law. It has been held in a number of cases that the act is a valid and reasonable exercise of the police power of the state.

"It is a well-recognized function of the Legislature in the exercise of the police power to restrain dangerous practices * * * and to regulate the carrying and use of firearms and other weapons in the interest of the public safety. * * * Private property rights of individuals are required to yield when in conflict with reasonable police regulations." In re Rameriz, 193 Cal. 633, 650, 226 P. 914, 921 (34 A. L. R. 51); People v. Gonzales (Cal. App.) 237 P. 812; People v. James (Cal. App.) 235 P. 81; People v. Camperlingo (Cal. App.) 231 P. 601.

See, also, People v. Smith, 36 Cal. App. 88, 171 P. 696.

[2] The danger to the public safety from the indiscriminate carrying of deadly weapons, especially by persons who are criminally inclined, is a matter of common knowledge, and, as justifying the regulation of the practice thereof by the state in the exercise of its police power, the evil is comparable to that of the use of intoxicating liquors. In Samuels v. McCurdy, 267 U. S. 188, 45 S. Ct. 264, 69 L. Ed. 568, 37 A. L. R. 1378, the Supreme Court of the United States had under consideration a statute of the state of Georgia which made it unlawful to possess intoxicating liquor which had been lawfully acquired before the passage of the statute. It was contended that the law, "under which liquor lawfully acquired can be seized and destroyed, is an ex post facto law," and that "the law in punishing the owner for possessing liquor he had lawfully acquired before its enactment deprives him of his property without due process." Both contentions were overruled. The court said:

"This law is not an ex post facto law. It does not provide a punishment for a past offense. It does not fix a penalty for the owner for having become possessed of the liquor. The penalty it imposes is for continuing to possess the liquor after the enactment of the law. * * * The ultimate legislative object of prohibition is to prevent the drinking of intoxicating liquor by any one because of the demoralizing effect of drunkenness upon society. The state has the power to subject those members of society who might indulge in the use of such liquor without injury to themselves to a deprivation of access to liquor in order to remove temptation from those whom its use would demoralize and to avoid the abuses which follow in its train. * * * The Legislature has this power whether it affects liquor lawfully acquired before the prohibition or not."

[3] The foregoing principles of law are applicable to the facts of this case. No one can acquire a vested right to continue in possession of that which is a menace to the public safety.

[4] Appellant contends that the weapon is an "antique * * * revolver incapable of use as such." The weapon "is a 32 caliber short cartridge revolver. * * * Five shots, * * * nickel plated, ivory handle," with a three-inch barrel, and a total length of seven inches. At the time of the trial it was "quite rusty." "If you pull the hammer once it is stuck, and will not work any more. * * * And it is necessary to take hold of the trigger and shove the trigger forward to get it to work again." The sheriff and his deputy both testified that in their opinion the revolver was in such mechanical condition that it could be fired. The former stated that it was doubtful whether the hammer of the revolver would "strike sufficiently hard to explode those old shells (referring to the three cartridges found with the revolver), but I believe if you put new shells in that gun right now and pull the trigger it would go off." In the revolver there was one empty shell which evidently had not been discharged recently. Two of the three cartridges were indented, indicating that an unsuccessful attempt had been made to fire them. Relative to the three cartridges, the sheriff testified:

"In my opinion there would be two reasons why those shells would not explode. * * * The shell itself appears to be an old shell. In order to explode it a gun would have to be in first-class condition.

"Q. It would take an especially hard concussion of the firing pin to shoot these particular shells? A. As old as they are, yes, sir.

"Q. What other reason? A. The matter of fact that the gun was not capable of hitting with sufficient force to explode the old shell.

"Q. Two of the shells are indented? A. Yes.

"Q. The third one was not? A. Was not.

"Q. And there was one exploded shell in the chamber of the gun? A. There was.

"Q. What would you say as to the nature of shells fired from a gun as to some of them going off and others not—does that happen? A. It does quite frequently—age and the nature of the gun—the primer, as you call it. * * * When we first took the gun in our possession it was not in quite as bad condition as at the present time, but it was not in condition at the time we received it.

"Q. Not in good condition then? A. No."

[5] The revolver and the cartridges were introduced in evidence, and the jurors had the benefit of their examination thereof. It cannot be said that the jury was not justified in concluding, from an inspection of the revolver and the cartridges, together with the foregoing testimony, that the revolver was capable of firing such cartridges.

"Although the courts to some extent differ as to what conditions will destroy the efficiency of a weapon, the rule seems to be established that no matter how disabled a weapon may be, if it still retains its efficiency to such an extent that it may in some manner be used as originally intended, a person carrying such a weapon contrary to law will be held criminally liable. * * * It has been held that whether a pistol carried is loaded or unloaded is immaterial, and does not affect the criminal liability of the person carrying it." 8 R. C. L. 290; Ann. Cas. 1913E, 513; 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1174.

The court instructed the jury in accordance with the foregoing quotation.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 434

CARTON CORPORATION v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY. (Civ. 5599.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1926.)

1. New trial $\S$ 38—Court's action in improperly granting or denying motion for nonsuit is ground for new trial.

Court's action in improperly granting or denying motion for nonsuit, whether made on opening statement or after close of evidence, is error of law occurring at trial, and ground for new trial.

2. Mandamus $\S$ 31—Writ of mandate will lie to compel court to hear and determine matters within its jurisdiction that come properly before it.

Writ of mandate will lie to compel court to hear and determine matters within its jurisdiction that come properly before it, where it has erroneously determined that it is without jurisdiction, such determination not being conclusive where there is no question of fact or sufficiency of facts involved.

3. Mandamus $\S$ 4(3)—Appeal held plain, speedy, and adequate remedy from order denying new trial, though it required more time in its pursuit than mandamus (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 956, 1086).

Remedy by appeal from order denying new trial for alleged error in granting motion for nonsuit, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 956, held plain, speedy, and adequate, within section 1086, so as to prevent issuance of writ of mandate, though it required more time in its pursuit.

Application by the Carton Corporation for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Alameda County. Writ denied.

Joseph C. Meyerstein and Frank Webster, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Crosby, Naus & Crosby and Girard Richardson, all of Oakland, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. A petition for a writ of mandate directing the superior court in and for the county of Alameda to hear and determine a motion for a new trial.

It appears that in an action pending in respondent court issues of fact were raised by the pleadings, that the cause having come on for trial, evidence was adduced by the plaintiff (who is the petitioner here) in support of the allegations of its complaint, and that upon the conclusion of the latter's case a motion by the defendant for a nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury, was granted. Thereafter and within the time provided by statute petitioner served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial upon the minutes of the court and the pleadings and papers filed in the action, stating as one of the grounds therefor errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by plaintiff. Therewith was served a notice of the time and place of making the motion. Defendant thereafter moved to strike from the files the notices mentioned, which motion was granted.

It is urged by respondent that the facts stated do not bring petitioner's motion within the purview of the statute providing for the granting of new trials, and, further, that the judgment upon the motion for a nonsuit being appealable, petitioner has by that means a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

[1] That the action of the court in improperly granting or denying a motion for a nonsuit, whether made upon the opening statement or after the close of the evidence, is an error of law occurring at the trial, and that such error is ground for a new trial, has been repeatedly declared by the decisions of the courts of this state. Stow v. Sup. Ct., 172 P. 598, 178 Cal. 140; Smith v. Hyer, 105 P. 787, 11 Cal. App. 597; Converse v. Scott, 70 P. 13, 137 Cal. 239; 20 Cal. Jur. "New Trial," $\S$ 89, 90.

It being our view that the cases cited have established the rule as the law of this state, it will be unnecessary to discuss the decisions of the courts of other states cited by respondent or the argument of counsel for the latter other than to point out the distinction between the cases of Abbey Land & Imp. Co. v. San Mateo, 139 P. 1068, 167 Cal. 434, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 804, and Stow v. Sup. Ct., supra, which, it is contended by respondent, are in conflict. In the former it was held that there had been no trial of the cause upon issues of fact, the case having been submitted for decision upon the pleadings, and that therefore a motion for a new trial could not be entertained; whereas in the latter the court carefully stated as the grounds for its decision that the judgment there in question was not upon the pleadings, but that the situation presented was that upon the trial of issues of fact, under pleadings which had passed demurrer, proffered testimony was rejected upon the ground that it could not be relevant under the complaint, believed by the court to be insufficient; that plaintiff stood upon his pleading, and the court gave judgment against him. It was therefore held that the judgment was in essence one of nonsuit; that the ruling was reviewable as an error in law occurring at the trial, and was ground for a new trial.

The distinction between the determination of the legal effect of the ultimate facts in issue and that of the probative effect of the evidence adduced in support of such facts, as affecting the power of the trial court to entertain a motion for a new trial, is also pointed out in Monteverde v. Sup. Ct., 212 P. 690, 60 Cal. App. 252, 259.

We hold, therefore, that, under the California cases cited, a motion for a new trial could properly be entertained in the instant case.

This brings us to the question raised by respondent as to the proper remedy to be pursued by petitioner.

[2, 3] The determination by a court that it is without jurisdiction is not conclusive, where there is no question of fact or of the sufficiency of the facts involved in its ruling. The law especially enjoins the duty of hearing and determining all matters which are within its jurisdiction and which come properly before it; and a writ of mandate may issue in a case where such determination is erroneous. Cahill v. Sup. Ct., 78 P. 467, 145 Cal. 42. Such being the rule, it remains to be considered whether petitioner has in the premises a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Code Civ. Proc. § 1086.

As held in Hughes v. De Mund (Cal. App.) 233 P. 94, any order made upon a motion for a new trial may be reviewed upon an appeal from the judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 956), including, as there stated, an order dismissing the motion, and such orders are no longer directly appealable. It is not contended by petitioner that grounds for a new trial existed other than the alleged error in granting the motion for a nonsuit. From that judgment an appeal would lie (Commis v. Guaranty Oil Co., 154 P. 882, 29 Cal. App. 139; Brown v. Sterling Furniture Co., 166 P. 322, 175 Cal. 563), upon which the alleged error could be reviewed (Code Civ. Proc. § 956; Converse v. Scott, 70 P. 13, 137 Cal. 239). But it is urged that such appeal, owing to the delay involved, does not furnish the speedy and adequate remedy contemplated by section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It has been uniformly held that an appeal affords a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, not only where jurisdiction has been exceeded, but where there has been a refusal to exercise it; that the remedy by mandamus or prohibition is given only in exceptional cases; and that the remedy by appeal is not inadequate because ordinarily it requires more time in its pursuit than either a proceeding in prohibition or mandamus. Lightner Mining Co. v. Sup. Ct., 112 P. 909, 14 Cal. App. 642; Agassiz v. Sup. Ct., 27 P. 49, 90 Cal. 103; Aldrich v. Sup. Ct., 66 P. 846, 135 Cal. 12; 16 Cal. Jur. "Mandamus," § 19.

No facts being shown in the instant case which fairly create an exception to the general rule stated, and it appearing that an appeal from the original judgment will furnish a speedy and adequate remedy for the correction of the alleged error, the writ is denied.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

76 Cal. App. 438

RUSS LUMBER & MILL CO. v. PEOPLE'S TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al.
(Civ. 5276.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 5, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 5, 1926.)

1. Guaranty ☞4.

Written instruments, signed by bank, and directing delivery of lumber to contractor, held not guaranties of payment, but orders for such lumber.

2. Banks and banking ☞1010.

Where lumber furnished to contractor on bank's order was used to swell assets of bank, seller was entitled to recover whether or not bank's acts were ultra vires.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Russ Lumber & Mill Company against the People's Trust & Savings Bank and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. G. Irving, of Riverside, for appellants.
E. S. Williams, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to recover a judgment for the reasonable value of building materials. The action was brought against the corporate defendant as the principal debtor, and against the other defendants on their stockholders' liability. The action was tried in the lower court before the court sitting without a jury; that court made findings in favor of the plaintiff and caused its judgment to be entered in accordance with those findings. The defendants have appealed.

The claim of the plaintiff was evidenced by seven different writings. In drawing its complaint the plaintiff alleged:

"That on or about March 11, 1919, at Riverside, Cal., said People's Trust & Savings Bank made and entered into an agreement with said plaintiff, wherein and whereby said People's Trust & Savings Bank agreed that, if said plaintiff would furnish to said defendant Albert Schliem lumber and building materials from time to time as said Schliem should order the same from said plaintiff, said People's Trust & Savings Bank would guarantee the payment of and pay to said plaintiff the amounts for all such lumber and building materials furnished to said Albert Schliem, and that said People's Trust & Savings Bank from time to time would execute and deliver to said plaintiff written orders authorizing the furnishing of such lumber and building materials by said plaintiff to said Schliem, and guaranteeing and agreeing to pay to said plaintiff the amount of lumber and building materials furnished by said plaintiff to said Schliem to the extent stated in said respective orders. That pursuant to said agreement said People's Trust & Savings Bank, on March 11, 1919, and June 17, 1919, and August 8, 1919, and September 25, 1919, and October 31, 1919, and December 9, 1919, and January 18, 1920, executed and delivered to said plaintiff its certain written orders and agreements, wherein and whereby said People's Trust & Savings Bank authorized said plaintiff to furnish to said Albert Schliem lumber and building materials and guaranteed the payment, and agreed to pay to said plaintiff for all such lumber and building materials to the extent stated in said respective orders and agreements. That each of said orders was in the amount of $2,000, and that in and by said orders said People's Trust & Savings Bank guaranteed the payment and agreed to pay to said plaintiff for lumber and building materials furnished by said plaintiff to said Schliem in the aggregate amount of $14,000. That copies of said orders and agreements are hereto attached and hereby referred to as parts hereof the same as if here set forth at length."

Later the trial court made a finding that all of the allegations contained in those paragraphs are true, and each of said allegations is true. The papers referred to in the complaint were attached to it and are as follows:

"Riverside, Cal., March 11, 1919.

"Russ Lumber & Mill Company, Riverside, Cal.—Gentlemen: Referring to the request of Albert Schliem for credit: Please be advised that we will guarantee the payment of any bills of lumber and other building materials ordered by Mr. Schliem. We would request that you give us, as soon as possible after delivery of any material, a copy of the invoice, setting forth the job or point of delivery, and also that you put a limit of $2,000 credit extended without additional verification from us. The price list to be in effect, approved by Mr. Schliem, is attached hereto.

"Yours truly,

"People's Trust & Savings Bank,
By J. C. Odell, President."

"Riverside, Cal., June 17, 1919.

"Russ Lumber & Mill Co., Riverside, Cal.—Gentlemen: On March 11, 1919, we gave you an order to furnish to Mr. Albert Schliem, lumber and other building material, to the extent of $2,000, for which we guaranteed the payment. As the above $2,000 has been almost all used up, we hereby authorize you to furnish to Mr. Albert Schliem, an additional $2,000, two thousand dollars, in lumber and other building materials, and present bills to us as soon as possible, showing amounts and where delivered, and we guarantee payment of this additional $2,000, in the same way as the $2,000 covered in our order to you March 11, 1919.

"Yours truly,

"People's Trust & Savings Bank,
By J. C. Odell, President."

"Riverside, Cal., Aug. 8, 1919.

"Russ Lumber & Mill Co., City.—Gentlemen: We gave you two orders for two thousand dollars each to cover material furnished to Albert Schliem, which orders are mostly used up. We therefore authorize you to furnish to Mr. Albert Schliem lumber and other building material to the extent of another two thousand dollars and charge same to our account and present bills as soon as possible showing amounts and where delivered.

"[Signed] People's Trust & Savings Bank,

"By J. C. Odell, President."

Except as to the date and the amount, each of the other seven instruments was in the same form as the one last quoted. It will be noted that the language of the complaint which alleges that the defendant corporation "guaranteed the payment" can be dropped, and that the pleading will still be sufficient. Furthermore, the finding of the court was such that, if all reference to said papers "as guaranties" should be eliminated, the findings will still be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, and will be sufficient to support the judgment.

On this appeal the appellant in the last analysis makes but one point, and that is that each of said written instruments purports to be a guaranty, and that the defendant corporation had no power to guarantee the written obligations of any person, and therefore the writings were ultra vires and void. The vice in this reasoning is that there is nothing whatever on the face of said writings indicating that said writings were guaranties excepting only the first two writings.

We turn then to the passages in the record which tend to throw light on the question as to whether either of the first two papers was intended as a guaranty. Mr. Schliem was a contractor doing business in the neighborhood of Riverside. On the 11th of March, 1919, he had an account with the defendant bank, and was owing the bank various sums of money. At the same time the bank held the title to numerous pieces of property as security for the moneys owing to it by Mr. Schliem. Mr. Schliem had at that time several incomplete building contracts. The bank held written authority authorizing it to collect such sums as would become due as the various contracts were completed. On March 11, 1919, Mr. Schliem needed building materials to complete some of those contracts. He called on the plaintiff and had a conversation with Mr. Kennedy, the representative of the plaintiff. Mr. Kennedy testified:

"Mr. Schliem came in the office one day and wanted we should furnish him some lumber; and I told him we would not agree to furnish lumber to him—we would not furnish lumber to him until we knew where we would get the money. He asked us if we would furnish the lumber if the bank would pay for it. I told him certainly we would. So he went down to the bank, and a few minutes after Mr. J. C. Odell called up on the phone, and said that Mr. Schliem had been speaking to him in regard to lumber, and wanted to know if we would furnish it. I told him we would if the bank would be good for it. So then Mr. Schliem came back in an automobile and got me and took me down to the bank, and I talked to Mr. J. C.

Odell, and he asked if I would furnish lumber to Mr. Schliem. I told him no, I would not furnish it to Mr. Schliem, but I would furnish it to the bank. The conversation was that if we would furnish the lumber to Mr. Schliem the bank would be responsible for it and pay for it. It was understood there was to be a written order given, but Mr. Odell did not want to give a written order at that time. He wanted me to come back again in the morning. He turned to Mr. Schliem and asked him if he had to have any lumber right away; and Mr. Schliem said he would have to have some that afternoon. Mr. Odell stated definitely that the bank would take care of the account and would give us an order. When I went in in the morning to get the order he presented the order to me and instructed me to furnish lumber to Mr. Schliem."

The next morning Kennedy went to the bank for his order, one was presented signed by Odell, Kennedy refused to accept it, and thereupon Odell asked him to prepare the paper in such form as he wanted it. Thereupon Kennedy prepared the paper which appears above, and which is dated March 11, 1919, and, on presentation, Mr. Odell signed in the form in which we have copied the instrument. Each of the other papers was prepared by the plaintiff and was presented to the bank for signature.

Mr. Odell was called as a witness, and gave no testimony contradicting Mr. Kennedy as we have quoted him above. Mr. Schliem was called as a witness, and testified that he did not remember the facts. Running through the entire transcript as the case was tried in the lower court the papers above set forth were referred to by the witnesses as orders, and counsel for the plaintiff and counsel for the defendants used the same language. After each one of these papers had been signed and delivered the plaintiff delivered building materials on such job and in such quantity as Mr. Schliem directed, and at the same time delivered to the bank invoices in form as follows:

"Riverside, Cal., Mar. 31, 1919.

"People's Trust & Savings Bank, A. Schliem, Main & Santa Ana Job, to Russ Lumber & Mill Co., Dr., Seventh & Mulberry Streets.

Date. Bill No.

March 11 6678 $96 50
etc."

Numerous similar invoices are copied into the record, and our attention is not called to any passage contained in the record wherein anybody contended that the real debtor was not the defendant bank, but should have been A. Schliem, and that the invoices were improperly written.

[1] There is testimony in the record that Mr. J. C. Odell had the management and supervision of the commercial department, the savings department, and the trust department, although it further appears that there was another individual specially in charge of each of those desks. Under these circumstances we think it is quite clear that the writings above set forth were not intended as anything but orders, and that they were orders issued by the manager of the defendant corporation. Furthermore, from the facts which we have recited, it appears that the president of the bank was attempting to save the bank from incurring a loss, and that it does not necessarily appear that his acts were ultra vires. Stewart v. Stewart Hotel Co., 164 P. 620, 33 Cal. App. 167; Dunne v. Independent Order of Foresters, 196 P. 41, 185 Cal. 211, 216, 18 A. L. R. 639.

[2] But if we assume for the purposes of this opinion, and for those purposes only, that the acts of the bank were ultra vires, still the defendant shows no defense. It is not disputed but what the plaintiff's property was delivered to, and on, the defendant's orders and was used to swell the assets of the defendant. In its complaint the plaintiff alleged and sought to recover the reasonable value of its materials so furnished to and used by the defendant. Under these circumstances the respondent was clearly entitled to recover. Pauly v. Pauly, 40 P. 29, 107 Cal. 8, 18, 48 Am. St. Rep. 98; Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. (C. O.) 65 F. 158, 162.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE J.

76 Cal. App. 207

MALACHOWSKI v. VARRO et al.
(Civ. 5283.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 15, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 15, 1926.)

1. Insurance — 512.

Contract of insurance indemnifying owner of motorbus, operating commercially, against liability for injuries to third persons, held one of indemnity.

2. Insurance — 152(3) — Ordinance, pursuant to which indemnity bond insuring owner of motorbus against liability for damages to third persons was executed, became part of such bond.

Provisions of ordinance, pursuant to which indemnity bond insuring owner of motorbus against liability for damages to third persons was executed, became part of such bond, as if incorporated therein.

3. Insurance — 591½ — Under policy of indemnity insuring owner of motorbus against liability for damages to third persons, administratrix of deceased, struck by bus, can directly sue insurer; "inure."

Where policy of indemnity, which insured owner of commercial motorbus against liability for damages to third persons, "inured" to benefit of any one sustaining damage or injury, and contemplated that claimants might either sue insurer directly or sue assured and, after obtaining judgment, sue insurer on such judgment, plaintiff administratrix of decedent, killed by motorbus, can sue insurer directly, notwithstanding bus owner was not served and did not appear at trial; "inure" meaning to devolve upon.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Inure.]

4. Appeal and error — 175 — Insurer could not, on appeal, contend policy under which plaintiff sought to recover did not cover car striking deceased, where license number of car was not in issue.

Where license number of car which killed deceased was not in issue, insurer could not, on appeal, contend policy under which plaintiff sought to recover did not cover car striking deceased.

5. Automobiles — 245 (2, 13).

Negligence of operator of motorbus striking pedestrian going to street car, and contributory negligence of pedestrian, held for jury.

6. Appeal and error — 931 (1).

Reviewing tribunal must assume that trial court believed testimony in support of its findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by Josephine Malachowski, as administratrix of the estate of Bruno Malachowski, deceased, against H. A. Varro, doing business as the Liberty Stage Line, and the California Highway Indemnity Exchange. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Exchange appeals. Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Bruno Malachowski was killed by being struck by an automobile bus. Later his widow took out letters of administration and thereafter she filed a complaint as such administratrix against H. A. Varro, doing business as Liberty Stage Line, and as the owner of the automobile bus, and she joined as a defendant California Highway Indemnity Exchange, a corporation. Service of process was not made on the owner, but it was made on California Highway Indemnity Exchange, a corporation, and it appeared and answered. In drawing her complaint the plaintiff pleaded a cause of action for personal injuries following the procedure in Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663. In addition thereto the plaintiff pleaded that on August 3, 1920, by its policy the said California Highway Indemnity Exchange agreed to indemnify the defendant H.

A. Varro for any loss or damage caused by the operation of the autobus, and that said policy provided that it should inure to and be for the benefit and protection of the plaintiff. In its answer the defendant inserted several denials and in addition thereto pleaded the contributory negligence of the deceased. A trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the California Highway Indemnity Exchange has appealed. The appellant makes several points and we will take them up in the order stated in the appellant's brief.

In several different issues the appellant makes the contention that the respondent was not entitled, at least before judgment had, to maintain an action against the appellant. In this behalf the appellant asserts that it was neither alleged, found, nor proved that the appellant or its agent owned or operated the bus, or that the appellant was guilty of any negligence. The respondent replies that her action is ex contractu and that, by reason of the terms of the policy and by reason of the terms of the ordinance requiring the execution of the policy, the respondent was entitled to adopt the procedure which she followed.

Ordinance No. 40502 (N. S.), approved June 30, 1920, of the council of the city of Los Angeles regulates the use of motorcars for the transportation of passengers for hire. By section 1 certain words are defined. By section 2 it is made unlawful for any person to engage in the business of operating an automobile for hire without first obtaining a permit in writing from the Board of Public Utilities so to do. Section 5 provides:

"Before any of the permits herein provided for are issued, the board shall require the owner of every automobile for hire * * * to file with the board and thereafter keep in full force and effect a bond or policy of insurance in such form as said board may deem proper, and executed by a surety or sureties approved by said board, insuring the public against any loss or damage that may result to any person or property from the operation of such vehicle * * * provided the maximum amount of recovery in such bond or policy of insurance specified shall not be less than the following sums, to wit: For the injury or death of one person, $5,000. * * *

On March 31, 1921, there was filed with the Board of Public Utilities, Los Angeles, an indenture in writing, which contained provisions as follows:

"* * * (a) Against loss from common-law or statutory liability for damages on account of bodily injuries, fatal or nonfatal, accidentally suffered (or alleged to have been suffered) while this contract is in force, by any person or persons, not in the employ of the subscriber, resulting directly from the ownership, use or maintenance of any automobile described in the schedule herein contained. This contract shall cover such injuries so sustained wherever any automobile covered hereby may be in the service of the subscriber. The exchange's liability is limited to five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) for injury to or death of any one person, and, subject to the same limit for each person, the exchange's total liability for injury to or death of more than one person in any one accident is limited to ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00). * * *

"* * * (g) The foregoing special agreements are made subject to the general agreements which shall be construed as conditions.

"Schedule of Warranties, Contract No. 1046. * * *

"Name of subscriber, H. A. Varro, d.b.a. Liberty Stage Line. Business, auto stages. * * *

"The automobiles covered hereunder are described as follows: * * * Number, 24,361. State License No. 263-597. * * *

Indorsement.

"Date, August 1, 1920.

"It is hereby understood and agreed that, notwithstanding expressions inconsistent with or contrary thereto in this policy contained, this policy is specifically issued to cover a passenger carrying automobile, jitney bus or motorbus. This policy shall inure to and be for the benefit and protection of any one who shall sustain any damage or injury, or to the heirs, personal representatives, administrators, executors or assigns of any such person who may be so damaged or injured or suffer death by reason of negligence on the part of the driver or operator of the automobile or so-called jitney bus or motorbus, or from the defective construction thereof when such jitney bus or motorbus and the driver or operator of same are duly licensed, have permit issued by authority of the Board of Public Utilities, Los Angeles, California. * * *

"It is further understood and agreed that, in the event a final judgment covering any loss or claim under this policy is rendered against the assured, the Exchange guarantees the payment of said judgment direct to the plaintiff securing such judgment, irrespective of the financial responsibility or any act or omission on the part of the assured, provided that any action by the said plaintiff to recover under this clause is commenced within twelve months next after such final judgment shall have been rendered, or where such limitation of time is prohibited by the laws of the state wherein this policy is issued, then and in that event no suit or action shall be sustainable unless commenced within the shortest limitation permitted under the laws of such state. The Exchange does not prejudice by this condition any defense against such loss or claim that it may be entitled to make under this policy, nor shall anything herein be construed to alter or waive any of the provisions of the general agreements of this policy in so far as they relate to any action brought against the Exchange by the assured. * * *

"Attached to and forming a part (when countersigned and dated by an authorized agent) of policy No. 1046 issued by the California Highway Indemnity Exchange, Los Angeles, California, to H. A. Varro d.b.a. Liberty Stage Line, of Downey, California.

"Countersigned this 3d day of August, 1920."

"* * * This contract subject to the following general agreements: * * *

"(13) No action shall lie against the attorney or any subscriber at the Exchange, to recover for any loss under this contract, unless brought by the subscriber himself, nor to recover for any loss arising under clauses (a) or (c) of the special agreements unless brought by the subscriber himself to recover for moneys actually paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue in a suit instituted within the period limited by the statute of limitations, and in no event shall any action lie unless brought within ninety days after the right of action accrues as herein provided; provided, however, that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the subscriber shall not release the Exchange from the payment of damages (to a person not a party to this contract) for injury sustained or loss occasioned during the life of this contract, and in case execution against the subscriber is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part in an action brought by the injured, or his or her representative in case death result from the accident, because of such insolvency or bankruptcy, or because sufficient property of the judgment debtor cannot be found to satisfy such execution, then an action may be maintained by the injured person, or his or her personal representative, against the Exchange, subject to and under the terms of this contract for the amount of the judgment recovered in such action not exceeding the amount herein limited or the amount that the subscriber might have recovered against the Exchange under this contract, in the event the judgment had been fully satisfied against him.

"* * * In witness whereof, the subscribers at California Highway Indemnity Exchange have caused this policy to be issued by their attorney.

"Countersigned at Los Angeles, California, this 3d day of August, 1920. * * *" (Duly executed.)

Indorsement.

"Effective March 15, 1921.

"It is hereby understood and agreed that the 1921 state license numbers of the Reo cars covered under this policy are as follows:

Motor No. 24361 1921 St. Lic. 233-688

" " 30961 " " " 233-690

in lieu of St. license numbers 263-597 and 263-688, respectively, as originally written under item (N) of the schedule of warranties of this policy.

"In all other respects the terms, limits and conditions of this policy remain unchanged.

"Attached to and forming a part (when countersigned and dated by an authorized agent) of policy No. 1046 issued by the California Highway Indemnity Exchange, Los Angeles, California, to H. A. Varro, d.b.a. Liberty Stage Line of Downey, California."

[1, 2] Taking up the contract by its four corners it is quite clear that it is an indemnity bond. Somers v. United States F. & G. Co., 191 Cal. 542, 547, 217 P. 746. The record discloses without any contradiction that the bond was given pursuant to the provisions of the ordinance approved June 30, 1920, of the council of the city of Los Angeles. That being so, the provisions of the ordinance became a part of the bond to the same extent as though the ordinance were incorporated in the bond. Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., 68 Cal. App. 372, 229 P. 891; Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443, 445, 181 P. 779.

[3] The document marked "Indorsement" states on its face that it is a separate paper, attached to the policy and effective when countersigned, etc. In this litigation the courts are required to give force and effect to that paper over and above the provisions contained in the other document to which it was attached. Civ. Code, § 1651. Specially examining that rider it is clear that it contemplated two different procedures. It provided:

"That the policy 'shall inure to and be for the benefit and protection of any one who shall sustain any damage or injury. * * *'"

"To inure" is a very broad expression meaning to devolve upon. Century Dictionary; Bouvier's Law Dictionary. It is also clear that under the terms of the policy it was contemplated that claimants might maintain an action against the assured, and, having obtained judgment, such persons could thereafter maintain an action on such judgment against the appellant. Acting under the theory first stated, it was held in an action involving a contract very similar in terms that the insurance company could be joined as a party defendant with the assured. Gugliemetti v. Graham, 50 Cal. App. 268, 270, 195 P. 64. The contract involved in Milliron v. Dittman, supra, was not so closely similar, nevertheless, the same ruling was made. This respondent followed that practice. The fact that the owner was not served and did not appear at the trial did not operate retroactively so as to create an infirmity in the procedure at the time of the trial when there was no infirmity at the time process was served on the appellant. Under the provisions of the contract executed by the appellant and the owner we think that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action directly against the appellant.

[4] The original policy covered an automobile No. 24361 having a state license number 263-597. There was some evidence that the automobile which struck the deceased bore the state license number 233-688. The appellant thereupon argues that the policy under which the respondent sought to recover did not cover injuries caused by the automobile that struck the deceased. The original policy was dated the 3d day of August, 1920. It covered an automobile number 24361 having a state license number 263-597. By the terms of the statute then in force the state license would expire January 31, 1921, and a new license must thereupon have been procured. The bus that was involved in the accident bore license number 233-688. An indorsement dated March 15, 1921, attached to the policy and signed by the appellant, contained the following:

"It is hereby understood and agreed that the 1921 state license numbers of the Reo cars covered under this policy are as follows: Motor No. 24361 1921 St. Lic. 233-688 * * * in lien of St. Lic. No. 263-597."

Moreover, in paragraph 4 of her complaint the plaintiff alleged that the state license number of the bus involved was 233-688. The appellant did not deny the allegation. At the trial, before any evidence was taken, the trial court inquired as to what were the issues. Speaking of the paragraphs of the complaint:

"The Court: Just a moment. Four?

"Mr. Gilbert: Four is denied.

"Mr. Drake: Only as to the negligence; the negligence is denied."

It thus appears that the allegation as to the state license number of the automobile involved in the accident was not in issue.

[5, 6] The appellant contends that there was no negligence in operating the automobile bus. It cites some of the record to support the contention. The respondent replies that there was evidence showing negligence. A most cursory examination of the record discloses that the most that can be said in behalf of the appellant is that the evidence was conflicting. The accident occurred in the city of Los Angeles on the night of the 13th of February, 1921. The decedent, his wife, and their children had made a call in one of the outlying districts. Some time after dark in the company of their host they went to the intersection of Stephenson avenue and Bonnie Beach street to take a street car going west. Some of the witnesses stated that it had been raining. Other witnesses stated that it had not been raining, but that it was foggy. The intending passengers reached the northeast corner of the intersection of the streets above named. Later a street car approached from the east and the decedent went out into the street to stop the car. His host, Mr. Natuski, went with him. The rest of the group did not go, or, if they attempted to go, returned to the corner. Mr. Natuski stated that he saw the street car approaching from the east and that he saw the automobile bus approaching from the west. They were on the north side of the street car track. There is no evidence in the record that there were any other vehicles in that portion of the street at the time that the accident occurred. The motorman on the street car saw the bus coming in the opposite direction and also saw the persons assembled at the crossing. He testified that two were standing right out and four or five women coming out. That the two men he saw standing out in the street were between 3 and 4 feet from the north-bound rail of the car track; north from it—just about straight out where the car would have stopped. When he first saw the autobus, the witness was 75 or 80 feet from his stopping place. The autobus was traveling near the center of the street between the north rail and the curb. There was a light on Bonnie Beach in the intersection. When the bus got in about 25 or 30 feet, it swung towards the south—towards the north rail of the car track. Just as it got right down in front, the bus hit the deceased—hit him, and the other fellow, to save himself, jumped right out in front of the witness' car within a foot of the north rail. The motorman made an emergency stop to keep from hitting him. After the bus struck the man, it swerved back in towards the center of the street. Before the accident the deceased moved a little closer to the car. He moved from the position he was in towards the track. He did not move back out in the line of the machine; he moved the other way. Some witnesses testified that the autobus approached the spot traveling "very fast"; others said it was traveling 12 to 14 miles an hour. Several witnesses testified that no whistle or horn was sounded. If the trial court believed the foregoing testimony, and in support of its findings we must assume that it did, it cannot be held as a matter of law that there was no evidence of negligence, nor that the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

76 Cal. App. 347

Ex parte OSWALD. (Cr. 1285.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 1, 1926.)

Constitutional law §83(3)—Master and servant §69—St. 1919, p. 294, § 6, providing for imprisonment where employer willfully and with wrongful intent refuses payment when able, held not unconstitutional (St. 1911, pp. 1268, 1269; Const. art. 1, § 15, and article 20, § 17½).

St. 1919, p. 294, § 6, passed as substitute for St. 1911, pp. 1268, 1269, which had been declared unconstitutional, and providing imprisonment penalty for willful refusal of employer or agent, having ability, to pay wages, held, in view of Const. art. 20, § 17½, not violative of article 1, § 15, prohibiting imprisonment for debt, and which applies only to civil action for debt and not imprisonment for misdemeanor.

Application of George H. Oswald for a writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles, to secure the release of petitioner from custody on a charge of violating an act to regulate the payment of wages (St. 1919, p. 294). Writ denied.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The petitioner is in custody pursuant to a judgment of conviction of a misdemeanor, in that, after having become indebted to a laborer for wages amounting to $300, then due and payable, the petitioner, although having the ability to pay, did willfully and unlawfully refuse, neglect, and omit to pay the same, and did then and there willfully and unlawfully and falsely deny the amount and validity of said indebtedness, with the intent to secure a discount for himself, and with the intent to annoy, harass, oppress, hinder, delay, and defraud his employee of said sum and indebtedness. The offense charged was an act in violation of the provisions of section 6 of an act to regulate the payment of wages, etc., approved May 6, 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 294; Deering's General Laws, 1923 Ed., Act 4743).

The sole point relied upon by petitioner is stated in his contention that the statute is unconstitutional, in that it provides for imprisonment for debt, contrary to the provisions of article 1, § 15, of the Constitution of California, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be imprisoned for debt in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud, nor in civil actions for torts, except in cases of willful injury to person or property; and no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace."

Prior to said act of 1919 the Legislature had adopted "an act providing for the time of payment of wages," which purported to make it a misdemeanor for an employer to violate the provisions of section 1 of the act, which section provided that the earned and unpaid wages of an employee when discharged should become due and payable immediately, and also provided that when an employee, not having a contract for a definite period, quit or resigned his employment, his wages earned and unpaid should become due and payable five days thereafter. Stats. 1911, pp. 1268, 1269. In the case of In re Crane, 145 P. 733, 26 Cal. App. 22, it was held that the act was unconstitutional, in that it in effect permitted imprisonment on mesne process for debt. The court declared that, under the constitutional provision, which we have quoted, imprisonment for debt is prohibited in this state except in cases "where it is made to appear that the indebtedness was fraudulently contracted, or that there has been an attempted fraudulent disposition of the property of the debtor with the intent to delay or defeat the payment of the debt."

The statute of 1919 apparently is the result of a legislative effort to substitute for the act of 1911 a law which would not result in imprisonment for mere nonpayment of debt, but would only impose that penalty where the employer or his agent, having the ability to pay, willfully refuses payment with a certain wrongful intent, described as follows:

"With intent to secure for himself, his employer or other person, any discount upon such indebtedness, or with intent to annoy, harass, or oppress, or hinder, or delay, or defraud, the person to whom such indebtedness is due. * * *" Section 6.

In the first place, it should be noticed that section 15 of article 1 of the Constitution, above quoted, does not in terms apply to criminal actions, but only provides against imprisonment for debt in civil actions. The decision in the case of In re Crane, supra, is based upon the assumption that the act there under review was an attempt to accomplish the prohibited purpose under the guise of punishment as for misdemeanor, but that in reality it was a method of enforcing, by imprisonment, the payment of debts. Without entering into a discussion of that decision it will suffice to compare it with the case In re Nowak, 195 P. 402, 184 Cal. 701. That case related to an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, for the violation of which the petitioner was charged with the crime of misdemeanor. For the commission of this offense the petitioner was imprisoned. The court said:

"This imprisonment does not violate his constitutional right not to be arrested for debt. Imprisonment for debt, as such imprisonment is defined in our constitutional guaranties, is necessarily imprisonment in a civil action for debt. As such imprisonment existed in the English common law, it was a provisional remedy strictly analogous to the present-day remedy of attachment of goods. It is against such attachments that the constitutional guarantees against imprisonment for debt are directed. They have no application whatever to imprisonment for crime, and legislative bodies are free to provide for punishment by imprisonment of offenders who commit acts denominated by the said legislative bodies as offenses against the public, provided, of course, that other constitutional limitations are not violated."

Conceding that the foregoing statement by the Supreme Court was obiter dictum (as petitioner herein contends that it was), yet we believe that it is a correct statement of the law. We further concede that at a date later than that of the Nowak decision the provisions of article 1, § 15, of the Constitution, were again applied by a District Court of Appeal in like manner as was done in the Crane Case, and that in the later case the Supreme Court denied a petition for rehearing. People v. Holder, 199 P. 832, 53 Cal. App. 45.

Are any other constitutional limitations violated by the provisions of the statute under which the petitioner has been convicted? So far as we know there is no direct decision upon the validity of this statute. There is a decision from which, by reasoning from analogy, an inference may be drawn. We refer to In re Ballestra, 161 P. 120, 173 Cal. 657. Petitioner there was in custody upon a charge of having violated the provisions of a statute which prohibited employers from issuing to their employees certain kinds of evidence of indebtedness in lieu of money. Sustaining the validity of the statute, the court said that the right to make contracts, like other personal and property rights, is subject to reasonable regulation, designed and calculated to promote the general convenience, prosperity and welfare.

"Laws having a reasonable tendency to accomplish these results, and not imposing unreasonable burdens upon individuals, are valid. The provisions of the statute in question do not transgress this rule. As applied to ordinary transactions between employers and employees, of the kind embraced within its terms, the statute is, in our opinion, valid and constitutional."

In addition to what was said in the Ballestra Case it will be appropriate to observe that the people of California have directly recognized that the relations between employer and employee are a proper subject for legislative regulation. Section 17½ of article 20 of the state Constitution (section adopted November 3, 1914) reads in part as follows:

"The Legislature may, by appropriate legislation, provide for the establishment of a minimum wage for women and minors and may provide for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of any and all employees."

It is reasonable to presume, in support of the legislative enactment now questioned in this case, that some employers in this state in times past have willfully refused to pay the wages due and payable to their employees, although they were able to pay, and have so refused with intent to secure some discount upon the indebtedness, or with intent to annoy, harass, oppress, hinder, delay, or defraud the employees to whom such indebtedness was due. As the Supreme Court said in the Ballestra Case, referring to the subject-matter of the statute there under review, "The purpose of the statute evidently is to prevent the evils which the Legislature believed had arisen from such practices." So here, considering the condition which presumably the Legislature had found to exist, and considering the terms of the statute which it enacted, we cannot say that imprisonment for the misdemeanor described in this statute is imprisonment merely for failure to pay a debt. It is imprisonment for the willful failure to pay the debt under circumstances which show an intent to oppress or otherwise defraud the employee. We are persuaded that the public has an interest in the prevention of wrongs of this character, just as much as it is interested in the prevention of some other of those wrongs against property or wrongs against persons which are commonly regarded as being properly within the scope of operation of criminal law.

The petitioner is remanded to custody.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 409

METZGER et al. v. VESTAL et al.
(Civ. 2788.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 3, 1926. Opinion modified and Rehearing Denied March 5, 1926.)

1. Executors and administrators ⚡314(4)—Statute requiring clerk to set time for hearing on petition for decree of distribution held sufficiently complied with (Code Civ. Proc. § 1668).

Where court set day for hearing petition for final decree of distribution, and ordered clerk to give notice thereof, clerk's notice with filing and posting thereof held sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1668, requiring clerk to set time for hearing.

2. Executors and administrators ⚡315(6).

Decree of distribution, having become final, cannot be attacked on ground that court erroneously interpreted terms of will or law applicable thereto.

3. Executors and administrators ⚡315(5)—Assignee of wife's interest under will held entitled to sue for property after final decree of distribution, particularly in view of omnibus clause.

Where omnibus clause of decree of distribution, which granted equal division of shares of stock in corporation to wife and son of deceased, was sufficient to pass title to property omitted from particular description therein, assignees of wife's interest could maintain action to establish claim to additional property on ground that deceased owned all the stock of the corporation, or that such stock was community property.

4. Appeal and error ⚡236(2)—Plaintiffs held entitled to review of order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend, though no leave to amend was sought in advance of ruling.

Plaintiffs, against whom judgment was entered on same day that demurrer to complaint was sustained without leave to amend, held entitled to review, though they did not ask leave to amend in advance of ruling on demurrer.

5. Appeal and error ⚡238(6)—Plaintiffs held entitled to review of order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend, though they did not attempt to have judgment entered on same day vacated.

Where plaintiffs had no opportunity to ask leave to amend prior to entry of judgment on order sustaining demurrer to complaint without leave to amend, they were not required to move to vacate judgment for purpose of permitting them to amend in order to have ruling reviewed on appeal.

6. Pleading ⚡225(1).

Plaintiff, desiring to amend after demurrer sustained, should be allowed reasonable opportunity to do so, where such procedure would obviate objections made thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Suit by D. J. Metzger and another against Rolla Vestal and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

James T. Matlock, of Red Bluff (Jackson Hatch, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

W. A. Fish, of Red Bluff, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The trial court sustained demurrers to the complaint without leave to amend and thereupon entered judgment in favor of the defendants. This appeal is from the judgment.

It appears from the complaint that George W. Vestal died in the county of Tehama on the 9th day of April, 1918, leaving a valuable estate consisting of the capital stock of the defendant corporation; that he left a last will in which he named defendant Rolla Vestal, a son, as executor, and by the terms of which, after making certain bequests of money, he gave the remainder of his property to his surviving wife, Clara Vestal, and his son, Rolla Vestal, share and share alike; that the will was admitted to probate and Rolla Vestal was appointed executor and acted as such throughout the administration of the estate; that all bequests have been paid: that on the 29th day of March, 1920, a final decree of distribution was entered, distributing the remainder of the estate to Clara Vestal and Rolla Vestal in equal shares; that the decree recites that 475 shares of the capital stock of the corporation are a part of such remainder; that on the 21st day of November, 1922, Clara Vestal transferred her half of the 475 shares of stock to the plaintiffs; that thereafter the plaintiffs conveyed the same to defendant Schafer; and that on the 8th day of November, 1922, Clara Vestal—

"did for a valuable consideration convey and set over and sell unto these plaintiffs all of her right, title, and interest of every kind in and to all the property, real, personal, and mixed, of the estate of the said George W. Vestal, deceased, and all her said community property, and all other rights and interests of every kind therein acquired by her by the decree of final distribution."

The prayer of the complaint is, in substance, for a decree adjudging that Clara Vestal, upon the death of George W. Vestal succeeded to one-half of the capital stock of the corporation as her share of the community property, and that she took one-half of the remainder under the will; that the plaintiffs are the owners of 467½ shares of the capital stock by reason of their purchase thereof from Clara Vestal; that an accounting of the "business, properties, and transactions" of the corporation be had; and that "plaintiffs have such other and further relief as they may be entitled to have in equity."

All of the defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The defendant Rolla Vestal demurred upon the further grounds that "plaintiffs have no legal capacity to sue"; that there is a misjoinder of parties and of causes of action; that the complaint is uncertain in specified particulars; that it contains several causes of action which are not separately stated; and that the alleged cause of action to cancel the certificate of stock for 475 shares originally issued to him is barred by the statute of limitations.

The complaint covers 40 typewritten pages, and is therefore too long to be set out at length. Parts thereof will be stated in connection with the discussion of questions relating thereto.

[1] Appellants contend that the decree of distribution is void because no legal notice of hearing the petition therefor was given, in that the court rather than the clerk fixed the time for such hearing. Upon the filing of the final account of the executor and his petition for distribution, the court, on the 3d day of March, 1920, made the following order:

"It is hereby ordered that Monday, the 22d day of March, A. D. 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m., be and the same is hereby appointed for the settlement of the said account and for hearing said petition for distribution, and that the clerk of this court give notice thereof by causing notice to be posted in at least three public places in said Tehama county, at least ten days before said 22d day of March, A. D. 1920, according to law."

The clerk gave notice of the hearing as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that Rolla Vestal, the executor of the estate of George W. Vestal, deceased, has rendered and presented for settlement, and filed in said court his final account of his administration of said estate, and a petition for the distribution of the residue thereof, and that Monday, the 22d day of March, 1920, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the courtroom of said court at the courthouse in the town of Red Bluff, in said Tehama county, has been duly appointed by the said court for the settlement of said final account and hearing said petition for distribution, at which time and place any person interested in said estate may appear and file his exceptions in writing to said account and petition, and contest the same.

"Dated: March 4, 1920. H. G. Kuhn, "Clerk.
"[Seal.] By C. A. Luning,
"Deputy Clerk."

Section 1668 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that—

"The clerk of the court must set the petition for hearing by the court, and give notice thereof, * * * setting forth the name of the estate, the executor or administrator, and the time appointed for the hearing of the petition."

The foregoing notice of the hearing, signed by the clerk, was filed in his office on the day it bears date, together with proof of posting copies thereof as required by law. If it be conceded that the order of the court was ineffective, the clerk's notice, together with the filing and posting thereof, was a sufficient compliance with the statute. As stated in the opinion of the trial court:

"All these acts on the part of the clerk amounted to the appointment by him of a day for the hearing and it was all on March 4, 1920, made a matter of record in his office. The time fixed for the hearing was appointed both by the court and the clerk, acting in harmony and in unison, and there was no effect in the notices given for the hearing of the petition for distribution."

The decree of distribution provides:

"That the whole of the residue of said estate hereinafter particularly described, and any other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to said estate, or in which the said estate may have any interest, be, and the same is hereby distributed as follows: To Clara Vestal, surviving widow of said decedent, and Rolla Vestal, a son, the whole of said residue in equal shares, that is to say, share and share alike. The following is a particular description of the said residue of said estate referred to in this decree, and of which distribution is now ordered as aforesaid: * * * Four hundred and seventy-five shares of the corporate stock of the said George Vestal Company, a corporation."

[2] Appellants contend that the decree is erroneous, in that it distributes to Clara Vestal only half of the property, whereas she was entitled to have three-fourths thereof distributed to her. The allegations of the complaint in this connection are to the effect that the court erroneously interpreted either the terms of the will or the law applicable thereto. Since the decree has become final, it is clear that it cannot be attacked on such grounds.

The allegations of the complaint tending in any degree to show extrinsic fraud in procuring the decree of distribution are so meager and the theory upon which plaintiffs seek relief by reason of such fraud is so uncertain that it would be ill advised, in advance of appropriate pleadings, to discuss the theories upon which plaintiffs may or may not be entitled to judgment on the ground of fraud. It is sufficient to say that the complaint is insufficient to warrant a judgment in favor of plaintiffs on the ground of fraud upon any theory. Simonton v. Los Angeles T. & S. Bank, 221 P. 368, 192 Cal. 651, 659.

[3] There is a feature of the case, however, which does not involve an attack upon the decree of distribution, and which evidently was not called to the attention of the trial court, since it is not referred to in the opinion of the court. The omnibus clause of the decree is sufficient to pass title to property of the decedent omitted from the particular description contained therein. Smith v. Biscailuz,

21 P. 15, 23 P. 314, 83 Cal. 344, 359; Humphrey v. Protestant, etc., Church, 97 P. 187, 154 Cal. 170, 172; Victoria Hospital Ass'n v. All Persons, 147 P. 124, 169 Cal. 455, 458; Heydenfeldt v. Osmont, 175 P. 1, 178 Cal. 768, 773. Standing upon the very terms of the decree, therefore, and their purchase of the property distributed to Clara Vestal, the plaintiffs have the right to maintain an action to establish their claim that all of the capital stock of the corporation was the property of George W. Vestal at the time of his death and that they acquired a half interest therein by their purchase thereof from Clara Vestal after the same had been distributed to her. Additional allegations of the complaint which are material to the particular question under discussion will be stated generally in substance only:

"Many years before the beginning of this action * * * George W. Vestal and * * * Clara Vestal intermarried * * * and lived together as husband and wife from that time continuously up to the date of the death of said George W. Vestal." Neither of them had any property at the time of their marriage and "whatever property or estate they acquired during their marriage relationship was acquired by them and each of them by their mutual undertakings and efforts and not otherwise," and all of said property was at all times and "at the time of the death of said George W. Vestal, community property of said George W. Vestal and said Clara Vestal." On the 10th day of February, 1904, "George W. Vestal caused to be prepared and executed, and caused to be filed, * * * articles of incorporation of" the defendant corporation. It is stated therein that "the amount of the capital stock of this corporation shall be $20,000, divided into 1,000 shares of the par value of $20 each"; that "the amount of said capital stock which has been actually subscribed is $20,000, and the following are the names of the persons by whom the same has been subscribed:

Names of Subscribers.	No. Shares.	Amount.
George W. Vestal.....	475	$9,500 00
Rolla Vestal.....	475	9,500 00
Clara Vestal	45	900 00
Ethel Gist.....	4	80 00
Robert Gist.....	1	20 00

The articles of incorporation were signed and acknowledged by all of the subscribers. "At the time of the incorporation of the defendant corporation herein, it was well understood, acknowledged, and agreed by and between said George W. Vestal and said Clara Vestal that all the properties which were to be, and that were in fact, conveyed to said defendant corporation, were * * * to be in fact their community property, * * * and that * * * such properties and interests should be and remain the community property of said George W. Vestal and said Clara Vestal, and * * * said Clara Vestal never did at any time * * * waive * * * her community interest in the said property, or in any of said property. * * * Said corporation was so organized and established only for the purpose of conveniently and properly controlling and handling said community properties, and for no other purpose or purposes." Clara Vestal "never did at any time or in any manner whatever enter into any agreement * * * concerning the issues of the shares of the stock of the defendant corporation to the persons named in the articles of incorporation, * * * or as to the amount or number of shares of said corporate stock to be fixed or that was fixed in said articles of incorporation, and that the organization of the said defendant corporation was the act solely of said George W. Vestal, and that said distribution of the shares of the stock of said defendant corporation was made and carried into execution by said George W. Vestal, without any consideration of, or acquiescence in, or consent to, the same by said Clara Vestal, and * * * she never did agree or consent to said distribution of said corporate stock." The shares of stock of the corporation "represented in fact and in truth all the said community property of said George W. Vestal and said Clara Vestal, and * * * said corporation was so incorporated by said George W. Vestal with the object and for the purpose of carrying on the business which, before its organization he had been carrying on, and for the purpose of dealing only with all said properties * * * at that time owned by said George W. Vestal and said Clara Vestal, as community property." George W. Vestal, "without any consent whatever of said Clara Vestal, made, executed, and delivered to said defendant corporation assignments and transfers of all said community properties and delivered to said defendant corporation full possession and control of all said community properties, * * * and * * * said defendant corporation has never had at any time, or acquired in any way, any properties of any kind, * * * save and except those so delivered to it by said George W. Vestal, and the rents, issues, and profits and accumulations thereof." At the time of the organization of the corporation, "no money whatever was paid" to it for the shares of stock issued to the subscribers, and the "amounts stated in said articles of incorporation to have been subscribed * * * were not then, and never were, paid, or expected to be paid, by said subscribers, and * * * no money whatever was ever paid into the corporation by any of the subscribers thereof, and * * * it was never understood or agreed that any money should be paid for said stock, and * * * the purpose of said George W. Vestal in causing to be organized the said defendant corporation never contemplated the actual ownership of said subscribers of the shares they subscribed for."

The complaint does not allege that the stock was issued to the persons named in the articles of incorporation without consideration. Neither does it appear whether the alleged community property was acquired before or after the amendment of 1891 to section 172 of the Civil Code (St. 1891, p. 425) to the effect that the husband cannot make a gift of the community property, or convey the same without a valuable consideration, unless the wife consent thereto in writing. Rolla Vestal, Ethel Gist, and Robert Gist still hold the shares of stock originally issued to them.

The general allegations, that all the stock of the corporation was community property at the time of decedent's death, that one-half thereof was distributed to Clara Vestal, that she transferred her interest therein to plaintiffs, and that some of the defendants hold certain shares thereof under invalid claims of ownership, state a cause of action, even though some of the particular facts alleged detract somewhat from the force of such general allegations and thereby render the complaint uncertain. If the capital stock was issued to the persons named in the articles of incorporation, without consideration, and pursuant to an agreement or understanding with them that they were not to become the owners thereof, but were to hold the mere legal title for the sole purpose of enabling them to participate in the management of the corporation's business, then all of such stock was the community property of George W. Vestal and his wife, and by the terms of decedent's will, as interpreted by the court, the whole thereof was given to Clara Vestal and Rolla Vestal in equal shares. If the facts be as so stated, then Clara Vestal did not receive all the shares of stock which were distributed to her, and she had the right to sue for the remainder thereof. Being the owner of such additional shares, her transfer thereof to plaintiffs, under the authorities cited, gave them the same right which she had to sue for their recovery.

[4, 5] Plaintiffs did not make application for leave to amend. Respondents contend that, therefore, the plaintiffs are not in a position to complain of the order denying them leave to amend, citing Bailey Trading Co. v. Levy (Cal. App.) 237 P. 408, 412, and the cases therein referred to. In the case cited, the record shows that the demurrer was interposed to an amended complaint; that it was argued by counsel for the respective parties at 10 o'clock a. m. on the 14th day of January, 1924, and taken under advisement by the court; that on the same day, at 2 o'clock p. m., the court entered an order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend; and that judgment in favor of the defendant was given and entered on the 28th day of January, 1924. The plaintiff in that case, therefore, had 14 days within which to apply for leave to amend. In this case, the demurrers were argued on the 26th day of February, 1923, and taken under advisement by the court. On the 25th day of June, 1923, the court ordered the demurrers sustained without leave to amend and on the same day entered judgment against plaintiffs. Plaintiffs had no knowledge or notice that the demurrers had been sustained until after the judgment had been entered. Respondents say:

"Counsel had ample time while the demurrer was under advisement to ask leave to file an amended complaint. Furthermore, after the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and gave judgment, the plaintiffs could have made application to the lower court to set aside the judgment, under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure in order that they might file an amended complaint."

Plaintiffs were not required, in order to have the point reviewed on appeal, to ask leave to amend in advance of the ruling upon the demurrers or to move to vacate the judgment for the purpose of permitting them to amend. Schaake v. Eagle, etc., Can Co., 63 P. 1025, 67 P. 759, 135 Cal. 472, 480; James v. Steifer Mining Co., 171 P. 117, 35 Cal. App. 778, 788. The rule that a party, against whom an order has been entered sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, must ask leave to amend in order to have the ruling reviewed on appeal, presupposes that the complaining party had an opportunity to ask such leave prior to the time of entry of judgment on the order. To hold otherwise would be to carry a technical rule to the extreme of absurdity.

[6] The complaint in question was the original complaint, it never having been amended. While the demurrers were properly sustained, at least upon some of the special grounds urged, the plaintiffs ought to be permitted to amend in order that the case may be decided upon the merits rather than upon technical rules of pleading.

"Unless it be clear to a trial court that a defective complaint cannot be amended so as to obviate the objections made thereto, a plaintiff desiring it should be allowed reasonable opportunity to so amend." Payne v. Baehr, 95 P. 895, 897, 153 Cal. 441, 447.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the trial court to grant the plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 445

VAN CAMP SEA FOOD CO., Inc., v. NEWBERT et al. (Civ. 5224.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1926. Rehearing Denied March 5, 1926.)

1. Fish $\S$ 12—Order of commission determining capacity of fish cannery must be based on equipment actually installed (St. 1925, p. 597, § 5, subd. [a]).

Under St. 1925, p. 597, § 5, subd. (a), game and fish commission's determination of capacity of fish cannery must be based on equipment actually installed, and not on future expectations, and order made by commission based on equipment to be installed is void.

2. Fish $\S$ 12—Commission cannot be required to determine capacity of fish cannery and make order not within its powers (St. 1925, p. 597, § 5, subd. [a]).

Fish and game commission cannot by mandamus be required to make determination of capacity of fish cannery, where such act is not within its power under St. 1925, p. 597, § 5, subd. (a).

3. Fish $\S$ 9—Statute making allowance of sardines for use in reduction plant only to fish cannery using one-pound oval cans held unconstitutional as discriminating against other kinds of packers, and unjustly favoring cannery using one-pound oval cans (St. 1925, p. 595).

St. 1925, p. 595, making certain monthly allowance of sardines for use in reduction plant only to cannery using one-pound oval cans, held unconstitutional as unlawfully discriminating in favor of cannery of sardines as against other kinds of packers, and unjustly favoring cannery using one-pound oval cans.

4. Constitutional law $\S$ 211—Statutes $\S$ 71—Classification other than constitutional, natural, or intrinsic will fail to meet requirements for validity when attacked for lack of uniformity and as being discriminative.

Classification other than constitutional, natural, or intrinsic will fail to meet requirements for validity of statute, when attacked on ground that it lacks uniformity and is discriminative.

5. Constitutional law $\S$ 48.

Where no reason for attempted discrimination appears, general rule that Legislature is presumed to have investigated facts and that its conclusion must be respected cannot prevail.

6. Constitutional law $\S$ 42—Fish and game commission may question constitutionality of law affecting use of sardines in reduction plants, in mandamus proceeding against it (St. 1925, p. 595).

Fish and game commission may question constitutionality of part of St. 1925, p. 595, allowing only cannery of sardines in one-pound oval cans sardines for reduction purposes, in mandamus proceeding against commission.

7. Constitutional law $\S$ 43(2)—Fish and game commission held not estopped from questioning constitutionality of statute affecting use of sardines in reduction plant, by reason of its having made determination of capacity and allowance of sardines for such use (St. 1925, p. 595).

Fish and game commission held not estopped from questioning constitutionality of St. 1925, p. 595, affecting use of sardines in reduction plants because it at first recognized validity and acted thereon, by making determination of capacity and allowance of sardines for reduction, in absence of showing that some injury or injustice has resulted by reason thereof.

Original application by Van Camp Sea Food Company, Inc., for mandamus against F. M. Newbert and others, members of the Fish and Game Commission, to compel them to determine capacity of packing plant. Demurrer sustained, and writ discharged.

William A. Alderson and Fredericks & Hanna, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

B. D. Marx Greene, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is a petition for a writ of mandate to be directed to the respondents in their capacity as the Fish and Game Commission of the state of California, commanding them to make—"a determination and order determining that the capacity of the packing plant of petitioner for canning sardines is 18,000 tons per month, and allowing petitioner 4,500 tons of sardines per month to be used in its reduction plant, being 25 per cent. of the said capacity of the packing plant of petitioner, without condition or qualification."

From the petition it appears that for several years last past petitioner has been actually engaged in the business of packing sardines; that at the time of filing the petition herein petitioner had installed in its packing plant 30 can-closing machines for one-pound oval cans of sardines and other equipment necessary for canning sardines to the capacity of said closing machines; that some time prior to the filing of the petition herein, to wit, on the 29th day of August, 1925, petitioner filed with respondents, as members of the fish and game commission of the state of California, an application under the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 5 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to conserve the fish supply in California by empowering the fish and game commission to regulate and control the handling of fish or other fishery products for the purpose of preventing deterioration or waste,'" etc. (Stats. 1925, p. 595); that by the terms of said application petitioner represented that it was and had been prior thereto actually engaged in packing sardines, and that it would be so actually engaged during the season for packing sardines of 1925—

26; that during the said season petitioner would have installed in its said packing plant 30 can-closing machines for one-pound oval cans of sardines intended to be used in said packing plant during the said season, and other equipment necessary for canning said sardines to the capacity of said closing machines, installed and ready for operation, and intended to be operated during said season; that the monthly capacity of the packing plant of petitioner for canning sardines was and would be during the season of 1925-26 18,000 tons of sardines; that petitioner requested that it be allowed, to be used in its reduction plant, 4,500 tons of sardines for each calendar month, being 25 per cent. of the monthly capacity of said packing plant; that thereafter, and following a hearing upon said application, the respondents, as such fish and game commission, made an order determining the capacity of the canning plant of petitioner by which there was made to petitioner, "while actually engaged in packing sardines, a monthly allowance of sardines to be used in its reduction plant of 4,500 tons for each calendar month, based upon its aforesaid canning capacity of 18,000 tons per month, and being 25 per cent. of the monthly capacity of the packing plant. "This order is made subject to the regulations required by the Fish and Game Commission's General Order No. 1, which order is made a part of this order."

"General order No. 1," referred to by the said order of determination by the respondent, fish and game commission, contained, among other things, the following:

"In order to determine whether a packer is actually engaged in packing sardines, this commission will require that for each ton of sardines received by a packer during a calendar month he shall produce 15 cases of one-pound ovals (48 cans to the case), or the equivalent, if other size cans are used."

It is from the conditions contained in "general order No. 1," and especially that part thereof which has just been quoted herein, that petitioner seeks relief. Its contention is that in the hearing before the respondents as such fish and game commission, to which reference has been had, respondents have and had authority to determine the capacity only of the plant of petitioner, and that the conditions attached thereto, known as "general order No. 1," were in excess of the authority conferred by the terms of the act upon respondents as such fish and game commission.

The respondents, however, have demurred to the petition on the grounds that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or sufficient to authorize the issuance of a writ of mandate in said matter.

The act authorizes the fish and game commission to determine the monthly capacity of any packer of sardines by taking into consideration and basing its findings upon:

"The number of can-closing machines for one-pound oval cans of sardines actually installed in said plant and ready for and intended to be used therein during the season immediately following the making of the application hereinafter mentioned; provided, that the other equipment of said plant necessary for canning to the capacity of said closing machines is likewise installed and ready for operation. For each closing machine so installed the fish and game commission shall make a monthly allowance of sardines to be used in the reduction plant of one hundred fifty tons for each calendar month."

Respondents direct attention to the fact that the application by the petitioner to the respondents for the order determining the monthly capacity of the packing plant belonging to the petitioner, contained, not a statement of "the number of can-closing machines for one-pound oval cans of sardines actually installed in said plant and ready for and intended to be used therein during the season immediately following the making of the application," but, to the contrary, that petitioner contented itself with a representation merely of the number of can-closing machines which it expected would be ready for operation at the time the season for canning sardines would open. Furthermore, in the same connection, respondents point to the order made by the commission which contains the findings:

"1. That applicant will have installed in its said plant thirty (30) can-closing machines for one-pound oval cans of sardines intended to be used therein during the season 1925-26.

"2. That the other equipment of said plant necessary for canning to the capacity of said closing machines will likewise be installed and ready for operation."

[1, 2] It is clear that the powers of the fish and game commission in the premises are derived solely from the provisions of the act under consideration. Its authority to determine the capacity of any fish canning plant is found within the terms of that portion of the act heretofore quoted herein, that "the fish and game commission must take into consideration and base its findings upon the following facts, namely: The number of can-closing machines * * * actually installed * * * and ready for and intended to be used" in the packing plant of the petitioner during the season immediately following the application for the order fixing the capacity of the petitioner. With reference to the packing capacity of a petitioner, no authority is vested in the commission to determine what reasonably may be expected to happen in the future. It may "take into consideration and base its findings" solely upon what actually exists at the time the application is made. Were it otherwise, an unscrupulous packer might make unwarranted representations regarding his future expectations in the way of what machinery he expected to install, and thereby procure an order determining the monthly capacity of his packing plant far in excess of that which it would be possible for him otherwise to obtain, which result would be out of harmony with the evident purpose of the statute. By recognizing the authority of the commission under the facts of the instant case to fix the packing capacity of an applicant upon its representation of what it reasonably expected would be its equipment at the beginning of the canning season, would be a misconstruction of the plain language of the act and a precedent for the exercise of unlimited discretionary power in the commission in that regard. The words of the statute are so precise that there can be no misunderstanding of their meaning. They authorize a certain finding by the commission, based upon certain existing material facts, and none other. An order made by the commission which does not rest upon such authority is manifestly a nullity; and, it appearing by the representations contained within the petition of the applicant, as well as in the order made by the commission, that the order in the premises was not founded upon such facts as the commission was authorized to consider, it follows that the order in question was and is void and of no effect. Consequently the commission cannot be required by order of this court to perform an act not prescribed by the statute as being within its powers.

[3] The act under consideration contains no provision giving to any packer of sardines other than one packing his product in one-pound oval cans the right to have the packing capacity of his plant determined by the commission, to the end that the monthly allowance of sardines to be used in a reduction plant for fertilizer purposes may be fixed by order of the commission. Because of such alleged discrimination, it is contended by respondents that that portion of the act which gives to packers of sardines in one-pound oval cans the special privilege of using sardines for reduction purposes is unconstitutional.

Section 4 (b) of the act defines a packer as—

"Any person, firm, association or corporation using fish by canning, or preserving by the common method of drying, salting or smoking."

And section 5 (a), in part provides:

"It shall be lawful for a packer of sardines, actually engaged in packing sardines, to take and use in a reduction plant in each calendar month, sardines to the amount of twenty-five per cent. of the monthly capacity of the packing plant. * * *

Then follows in the act the provision heretofore quoted herein by which the commission is authorized to determine the packing capacity of the plant of any packer by taking into consideration the number of can-closing machines for one-pound oval cans of sardines actually installed and ready for and intended to be used in said plant, etc.

It will be noted that the act specifically provides for several different kinds of packers, namely: The canner, the dryer, the salter, and the smoker. Evidence received by the referee appointed by this court discloses the additional fact that there are at least five different sized cans used by the canner of sardines, to wit, the one-pound oval, the half-pound oval, the half-pound square, the quarter-pound square, and the six-ounce tall cans. Of the several kinds of packers of sardines, the canner is the only one who is permitted to have the packing capacity of his plant determined in order that the monthly allowance of sardines to be used in a reduction plant may be fixed by the commission; and of the canners, the only one who is given that right is the packer using one-pound oval cans for his product.

[4] So much heretofore has been written on the question of uniformity as applied to the persons upon whom a given statute will act or be effective that it is considered unnecessary to devote any attention to any elaboration. It may suffice, therefore, to note that in principle a classification other than constitutional, natural, or intrinsic will fail to meet the generally accepted requirements for the validity of a statute which is attackable upon the ground that it lacks uniformity and that it is discriminative in its operation. Considering, then, the several essential prerequisites in the attempted classification contained within the provisions of the statute under consideration, it may be said that no claim is made that a classification of a canner of sardines, as distinguished from either a dryer, a salter, or a smoker of such fish, is to be found within any of the provisions of the Constitution of this state, which implied concession leaves for determination whether the statutory segregation is one which for the purposes of the act is either natural or intrinsic.

The evidence produced before the referee of this court shows that in the conduct of his packing plant each of the several kinds of packers, as defined by the statute, has a very considerable amount of offal and other otherwise waste material derived from the ordinary operation of his business which is fit for reduction purposes only, from the sale of which, together with certain by-products thereof, is afforded the principal source of revenue and profit to the packer. There is, however, no natural distinguishing feature between the several businesses of the different kinds of packers so far as the reduction end of the industry is concerned. Each of the packers produces practically the same quantity of offal from an equal quantity of sardines, and the number or poundage of fish unfitted for any reason for the use of the canner for human consumption would be practically identical with those likewise unsuitable for the use of either the dryer, the salter, or the smoker of sardines. Any individual packer, of whatever kind, for the purpose of producing fertilizer from the operation of his packing plant, must necessarily depend upon a source of supply identical in all respects with that relied upon by each of the other several kinds of packers defined by the statute. There is, then, neither a natural nor an intrinsic distinction or difference between any one kind of packer and any other kind of packer, so far as the operation of the statute as affecting the reduction of sardines in a fish-packing plant is concerned. The effect must be that the statute unlawfully discriminates in favor of the canner of sardines as against each of the other kinds of packers of such fish.

In addition to such general discrimination, the statute is likewise objectionable for the reason that it unjustly favors the canner of sardines using one-pound oval cans for his product as against each of the cannery who may use any or all the other sizes of cans for canning his fish. No reason has been suggested why a canner using the half-pound oval can, or the half-pound square, or the quarter-pound square, or the six-ounce tall can should be deprived of the right to have the capacity of his packing plant determined by the commission, to the end that he, too, may be given the right to manufacture fertilizer from the offal of the fish which he cans, and likewise use such other fish for reduction purposes as may not be fit for other practical use.

[5] No reason whatsoever being discoverable for the attempted discrimination, the general rule that the Legislature is presumed to have investigated the facts upon which it acts, and that its conclusion as impliedly expressed in the statute must be respected by the courts, cannot prevail.

[6] The contention by petitioner that, because respondent is not an aggrieved party to the proceeding it is in no position to question the constitutionality of that part of the statute under consideration is untenable. In the case of Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 192 P. 1021, 184 Cal. 26, 12 A. L. R. 1190, it is held that the rule suggested by petitioner here is subject to the exception that, where no member of the class against whom the discrimination exists is in a position to raise the constitutionality of the statute, any person affected by the application of the statute may urge its unconstitutionality. The purpose of the act in question, as partly expressed in its title, is "to regulate and control the handling of fish or other fishery products." By its terms, "no person shall use any fish except fish offal in a reduction plant, except of the species, in the manner and to the amount allowed by the provisions of this act." It would thus appear that, except as to the use of fish offal for reduction purposes, no packer of fish would be permitted to lawfully operate a reduction plant in any manner other than as is provided by the statute, the essential provision of which being as heretofore quoted herein. It is therefore apparent that, if at the instance of a packer of sardines, other than a canner using one-pound oval cans, the unconstitutionality of the supposedly objectionable provisions of the statute should be established, the result would be of no benefit to such packer. His act would merely bring about the destruction of the discriminatory provisions of the statute, but at the same time would gain the packer no advantage. In the case to which reference has just been had (192 P. 1021, 184 Cal. 26, 31, 12 A. L. R. 1190), in speaking of the effect of a situation somewhat similar to the facts here presented, the court quoted with approval from the case of Greene v. State, 119 N. W. 6, 83 Neb. 84, 131 Am. St. Rep. 626, wherein, among other things, it is said:

"If we apply to such a law the rule that its constitutionality would only be considered when the objection was made by a party discriminated against, there could be no objection to its validity. When such a law is sought to be enforced against any person, whether belonging to the classes discriminated against or not, it should be declared void."

The additional point advanced by petitioner is that, because respondents, as such fish and game commission, have heretofore recognized the validity of the statute and have acted upon a provision therein by adopting its requirements with reference to giving notice of a hearing on the question of a determination of the capacity of the packing plant of the petitioner, and in connection therewith have issued an order fixing the packing capacity of petitioner, respondents are estopped from attacking the statute on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

In the case of Allen v. Hance, 118 P. 527, 529, 161 Cal. 189, 196, it is said:

"Whatever may have worked the estoppel, whether the estoppel rests in judgment, deed, contract, or in pais, in its essence it amounts to but this, that a man is forbidden to show the existence of a fact because by his past conduct, his declarations, his agreement, his deed or a judgment, it would work an injustice and an injury to his adversary to permit him to do so."

See, also, Frank v. Crescent Wharf, etc., Co., 195 P. 79, 50 Cal. App. 272.

[7] In establishing the claimed estoppel of respondents, it should appear that some injustice or some injury has resulted to petitioner by reason of the fact that, based upon an application initiated by petitioner, respondents set a time for hearing the application, and thereafter made an order determining the packing capacity of the business of petitioner. Petitioner at least impliedly requested that respondents do the things which they did, and it is not apparent in what manner petitioner has been prejudiced by such conduct on the part of the respondents. But if any injury or injustice has resulted to petitioner by reason of the acts of respondent ents in the premises, such injury was brought about at the instigation of petitioner, and in such circumstances it should not be heard to complain.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the writ discharged.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 288

YATES v. DYER et al. (Civ. 3031.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error — 1011(1).

Court's finding on conflicting evidence as to whether appellant signed certain note held conclusive on appeal.

2. Bills and notes — 487—Court properly permitted complaint to be amended to show maker's mark in copy of note set out therein.

Where copy of note set out in complaint failed to include mark of one of makers, which appeared after his name in original note, court properly permitted complaint to be amended by inserting mark in proper place in note.

3. Bills and notes — 54.

Where maker's name on note was signed by another at maker's direction, it was sufficient, in view of Civ. Code, § 3100, without maker's mark.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by J. A. Yates against H. E. Dyer and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant James Edwards appeals. Affirmed.

J. T. Sharp, of Alturas, for appellant.

Oscar Gibbons, of Alturas, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the amount of a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the defendants. The answer admits that defendants Dyer and St. John executed the note, but denies that the defendant Edwards executed the same. The court found that all of the defendants executed the note and entered judgment against all of them for the amount due thereon. The defendant Edwards has appealed from the judgment.

[1] The plaintiff testified as follows:

"Q. Do you know who signed the name of James Edwards there on this note? A. Mr. Dyer signed it by direction of Mr. James Edwards.

"Q. Do you know who made the cross there at the end of the name of Mr. Edwards on this note? A. Mr. Edwards made it.

"Q. Were all three of these defendants present when these names were signed on this note? A. They were.

"Q. Was the note read over in the presence of Mr. James Edwards and the other defendants? A. It was.

"Q. Was this cross made before or after the name of James Edwards was signed by Mr. Dyer? A. I told Mr. Edwards to hold his hand on the pen while Mr. Dyer signed it, as that would make it legal that way, and so he did; and, after the signature was completed, then I says, 'Now you take your pen and make your cross there,' and so he did that."

Dyer denied that he signed Edwards' name to the note. Edwards and St. John also denied plaintiff's statements as to the signature of Edwards. Dyer wrote his own name and that of Edwards in the presence of the court for the purpose of comparison. The court's finding on this conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[2] On the copy of the note set out in the complaint no cross appeared after Edwards' signature. The court permitted the complaint to be amended by inserting a cross after Edwards' signature. It was not error to permit the amendment.

[3] While Dyer signed his own name as one of the makers of the note, he did not sign it as a witness to Edwards' signature. Appellant contends that "this omission is fatal to the contention that the note was legally executed by mark." The signature was sufficient without the mark. Civ. Code § 3100; 19 Cal. Jur. 822; 36 Cyc. 451; Hilborn v. Alford, 22 Cal. 482; Harris v. Harris, 59 Cal. 620; In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 42 P. 815, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104; Phillips v. Sanger Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 431, 62 P. 749; Curtin v. Salmon River, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 308, 74 P. 851, 99 Am. St. Rep. 75; In re Holloway's Estate (Cal. Sup.) 235 P. 1012; Pitney v. Pitney, 55 Cal. App. 22, 202 P. 940; note 22 L. R. A. 297.

The judgment is affirmed.

76 Cal. App. 331

NEWMAN v. MENNE et al. (Civ. 3001.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 28, 1926.)

1. Judgment  143(7) — Judgment against plaintiff should not be set aside because his attorneys withdrew as such before trial and he had not been required to appoint others or to appear in person.

Plaintiff's affidavit that his attorneys withdrew as such on day before trial and that he had not been required to appoint another or to appear in person held insufficient to support order vacating judgment entered against him when he failed to appear, and recalling and returning execution issued thereon without service.

2. Appeal and error  436—Appeal from order vacating judgment held not to have effect of staying proceedings in trial.

Trial court may order commission to take depositions of witnesses in another state after defendant's appeal from prior order vacating judgment which was entered against plaintiff when he failed to appear at trial; such appeal not having effect of staying proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by C. N. Newman against Charles A. Menne, doing business under the name and style of the Electric Utilities Company, and others. Judgment for defendants, and they appeal from an order vacating judgment and recalling execution, and from an order directing commission to issue to take testimony. Order vacating judgment and recalling execution reversed; order directing that commission issue to take testimony affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellants.

A. V. Scanlan, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. There are two appeals in this case, on a single transcript. The first is from an order vacating the judgment entered in the action in favor of the defendant and recalling the execution issued thereunder. The second is from a subsequent order directing the issuance of a commission to take the depositions of certain witnesses residing in another state. The second order was made after the defendant had given notice of appeal from the first.

[1] The action came on regularly for trial on the 4th day of February, 1925. "The plaintiff neglected and failed to appear in said court and cause, or to offer any evidence in his own behalf, and thereupon judgment was entered * * * against the said plaintiff, and in favor of the defendants," for their costs. Thereafter, on the 22d day of April, 1925, plaintiff served and filed notice of motion for an order vacating the judgment and recalling the execution which had been issued thereon, on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment. In support of the motion the plaintiff made affidavit as follows:

"C. N. Newman, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That he now is, and at all times herein mentioned was, the plaintiff in the above-entitled action; that Foltz, Rendon & Wallace were attorneys for said plaintiff prior to the 3d day of February, 1925; that on said 3d day of February, 1925, said Foltz, Rendon & Wallace served a notice of withdrawal as such attorneys on said plaintiff; and that said attorneys forthwith ceased to act as attorneys for said plaintiff on said 3d day of February, 1925, and ever since said date have not acted as such attorneys for said plaintiff in the above entitled action; that said plaintiff has not, at any time heretofore, been required by the adverse party appearing herein, to wit, the defendant Charles A. Menne, or by any other person or persons, by written notice or otherwise, to appoint another attorney, or to appear in person."

The court granted the motion, and "ordered that * * * the said judgment is hereby vacated, set aside, annulled and canceled, and that the said execution be recalled and returned without service." The affidavit does not state facts sufficient to support the order. De Recat Corporation v. Dunn (Cal. Sup.) 242 P. 936.

[2] In view of the necessity of reversing the first order, the appeal from the second order becomes unimportant. Appellants contend that the effect of the appeal from the first order was to stay all proceedings in the trial court, and that therefore the court was without "jurisdiction to order a commission to take testimony." The Supreme Court has held to the contrary. S. F. Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 30, 99 P. 359, 17 Ann. Cas. 933.

The order vacating the judgment and recalling execution is reversed and the trial court is directed to deny the motion therefor.

The order directing the issuance of a commission to take the depositions of witnesses outside of the state is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 489

GOLDBERG v. DAVIS. (Civ. 5283.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District Division 1, California. Feb. 10, 1926.)

Appeal and error  628(1)—Failure to file transcript in time held excusable, where occasioned by failure to provide undertaking for costs, and theretofore appellant's attorney had been accorded courtesy of paying costs on completion (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 953b).

Where appellant was acting in good faith and had meritorious cause for appeal, failure to file transcript within time required by Code Civ. Proc., § 473, held excusable, where delay was occasioned by failure to provide undertaking for costs, as required by section 953b, and theretofore appellant's attorney had been accorded courtesy of paying for transcript when completed.

Action by Nathan Goldberg against Thelma H. Davis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss. Motion denied.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Burnett Wolfson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. A motion to dismiss the appeal herein has been presented by the respondent on the ground that there was a failure to file the transcript within the time required by law. Without conceding the fact that the transcript was not filed within the time prescribed by the rules of this court, under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, appellant has prayed to be relieved from any default on the ground that it arose through mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect.

Appellant represents that the reason for her failure to file the transcript on appeal within the required time was because, although the attorney who represented her on said appeal gave the order to the clerk of the trial court to prepare the transcript on appeal, such transcript was not prepared and made ready for certification and approval by the trial judge in accordance with the provisions of the statute, solely because of a misunderstanding by her attorney of an arrangement for such matters in general existing between him and such clerk.

Section 953b of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in substance that at the time the notice of appeal is filed with the clerk the appellant shall also file an undertaking by which the appellant shall become bound to pay to the clerk the cost of preparing the transcript, or that the appellant may arrange personally with the stenographic reporter for his compensation.

Counsel for appellant has filed an affidavit herein, by which it appears that in each of five different cases arising in the superior court, and in which appeals were taken by him for his several respective clients in such matters in the same manner as was the appeal taken in the instant case, he filed his notice of appeal, made his demand for the clerk's transcript in accordance with the provisions of the statute, and in each case, after the transcript had been prepared and the bill for the cost of the preparation thereof presented to counsel representing the appellant, he had paid the same; that in the instant case he followed the same course and fully believed that the transcript would be prepared and the bill therefor thereafter presented as had been done in each of the other cases to which reference was had and did not deem it necessary to make any arrangement different from that theretofore made in those cases. Furthermore, that six days before the notice of the motion for the dismissal of the appeal herein was served and filed with the clerk of this court he had written a letter to the clerk of the trial court inclosing a check in payment of the cost of the transcript on appeal in another case, and in the same communication had requested the clerk to inform him if the transcript on appeal were ready in the instant case. On the other hand, a deputy clerk in charge of the "transcript department" in the office of the clerk of the trial court made affidavit in substance that, after the notice of appeal herein had been filed, said deputy clerk left a message at the office of the attorney for appellant to the effect that arrangements should be made with the clerk of the trial court looking toward the payment or guaranteeing the payment of the costs for preparing the transcript on appeal; that no response was received from such message; and that on each of at least two other occasions the deputy clerk had telephoned the office of said attorney and had left a message to the same effect as the first message, and with the same result. In reply to such affidavit the attorney for appellant has filed his affidavit that no such message was ever received by him. In addition thereto, the clerk and stenographer in the office of the said attorney makes affidavit that it was her duty to receive all telephone calls in said office during regular office hours, and that no telephone message, such as was described in the affidavit of the deputy clerk, was ever received in such office.

From such contradictory statements it is difficult (if possible) to determine which of the affiants is mistaken. The fact, which is undisputed, that the attorney for appellant had customarily been accorded the courtesy by the clerk of the trial court of permitting him to order his transcripts on appeal and on completion of each of such transcripts to pay the cost thereof without theretofore furnishing an undertaking in the matter, together with the fact that under such arrangement, a few days before the notice of the motion for the dismissal of the appeal herein was filed with the clerk of this court, the attorney for appellant had paid the costs of the transcript of another appeal and at the same time had requested information from said clerk as to when the transcript in the instant case would be ready, would indicate that, so far as the attorney for appellant was concerned, he had relied upon the custom as to the payment of costs of preparing transcripts on appeal theretofore existing between him and the clerk of the trial court, and had had no intimation that such arrangement had been changed. Although the transcript on appeal may not have been filed within the time required by law, it is apparent that appellant, through her attorney, was acting in good faith. The delay occasioned by the default of the appellant did not occasion any alleged hardship on the respondent. Within a few days after the notice of motion herein was filed the transcript was prepared and made ready for presentation to the trial judge for his certification and approval as required by law, and the affidavit of the attorney for appellant shows that the appeal is meritorious and that it is prosecuted in good faith. In such circumstances, assuming (without deciding) that at the time when the notice of motion herein was filed, the time allowed by law for filing the transcript on appeal had expired we are of the opinion that the appellant should be relieved from her default and that the motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied.

It is so ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 366

WOODARD v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 5273.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 2, 1926.)

1. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 42—Submitting proposed amendments to bill of exceptions held not to waive reserved objections to failure to serve bill in time allowed.

Submitting proposed amendments to bills of exception and at same time specifically reserving all objections to failure to serve bill within time allowed by law held not to waive such objections.

2. Exceptions, bill of $\S$ 42—Where objections to failure to serve bill of exceptions within time allowed were reserved in proposing amendments to bill, acknowledgment of receipt of copy of notice that bill and amendments would be taken up for settlement without again specifying reservation of objections held not to waive objections.

Where objections to failure to serve bill of exceptions within time allowed were specifically reserved in proposing amendments, acknowledgment of receipt of copy of notice that proposed bill and amendments would be taken up for settlement without again specifying insistence upon objections reserved held not to waive objections, where, on following day, notice of motion to dismiss proceedings upon ground stated was given.

Petition by Willis Woodard for writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court in and for County of Los Angeles and Hon. Charles S. Burnell, Judge thereof, to compel settlement of bill of exceptions. Writ denied.

D. A. Knapp, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Charles W. Fournl, of Los Angeles, and H. P. Babson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. Mandate. In this proceeding petitioner seeks an order directing the respondent superior court and a judge thereof to settle a bill of exceptions.

It is conceded that the proposed bill of exceptions was not served within the time allowed by law, and that the determining question is whether there was a waiver of that fact.

Stripped of all unnecessary detail, it appears that the plaintiff in the action presented to the defendant therein, but not within the time prescribed by law, a proposed bill of exceptions; that thereupon the defendant presented to the plaintiff and filed with the clerk of the court his proposed amendments to the proposed bill of exceptions, and at the same time served the plaintiff with a notice, copy of which being as follows:

"You will please take notice that the following amendments are proposed on the part of defendant K. Eustace to the bill of exceptions or transcript on appeal proposed by plaintiff, and that said amendments are proposed and submitted by said defendant without waiving any exceptions or objections which said defendant has or may have to the said proposed bill of exceptions or transcript on appeal, or the service thereof, or the filing thereof, or the settlement of same, and without waiving objection to said bill of exceptions or transcript on appeal, upon the ground that said bill of exceptions or transcript on appeal was not served within the time allowed by law, stipulation of counsel, or order of court."

[1, 2] At all times after said notice was served, the defendant reserved all objections and exceptions to said bill of exceptions and continually claimed and insisted that the plaintiff's proposed bill of exceptions was not served on the defendant within the time fixed by the statute. It is true that on December 3, 1925, on being served with notice that the proposed bill and amendments would be taken up for settlement on December 9th, the attorney for defendant signed an acknowledgment of receipt of copy of the notice, without further specifying that he continued to insist upon the objections which he had reserved. But on the following day, December 4th, he served upon plaintiff's attorney notice that on December 9th he would move to dismiss the proceedings for settlement, upon stated grounds which were the same as those which had been reserved as above stated. It is therefore clear that no waiver of the objections had been expressed, or implied, or intended.

In the case of Hicks v. Masten, 36 P. 130, 101 Cal. 651, a proposed bill of exceptions was served on opposing counsel after the time for performing such act as provided by the statute had expired. Amendments to the bill as presented were proposed by opposing counsel and served upon the attorneys representing the losing party in the action. The bill of exceptions and the proposed amendments thereto were then left with the trial judge. Shortly thereafter, in open court, attorneys on either side being present, counsel representing the party presenting the bill of exceptions requested the court to fix a time for its settlement. The time having been fixed by the court, the attorney representing the party presenting the proposed amendments to the bill of exceptions stated that he would be "on hand." When the matter of the settlement of the bill of exceptions came on for hearing, objection for the first time was made thereto on the ground that the proposed bill of exceptions was not prepared and served in time. It was held that the objection came too late, and as a result thereof that the failure to serve the proposed bill of exceptions within the time fixed by the statute had been waived.

In Bollinger v. Bollinger, 94 P. 770, 153 Cal. 190, where the facts were somewhat similar to those narrated in the foregoing citation, including the fact that no objection was made until at a meeting suggested by the trial judge between the attorneys representing the opposing parties to the action, held for the purpose of agreeing upon a settlement of the bill of exceptions, it was also ruled that the later objection in open court to the settlement of the bill of exceptions, on the ground that the proposed bill of exceptions had not been served within the time prescribed by the statute, was too tardily made.

In Howell v. Pedersen, 181 P. 674, 41 Cal.

App. 45, where a bill of exceptions was not served in time, and where the party upon whom it was served requested and received time additional to that provided by law, but at the same time, as well as within the admission of service upon such party of the proposed bill, reserved the right to "make any objections to the proposed bill of exceptions," it was held that the right of objecting to the bill had been fully preserved, and that no waiver had resulted.

In Silverman v. Thompson (Cal. Sup.) 238 P. 684, although for the first time an objection that the bill of exceptions had not been filed in time was expressly reserved at the time the proposed amendments were served, it was held that obtaining an order from the court extending the time within which to prepare and serve such proposed amendments to the bill of exceptions without at the time reserving such rights, constituted a waiver of the objection.

The case of Mulcahy v. Young, 208 P. 321, 58 Cal. App. 382, would seem to be determinative of the question herein involved. The facts in that case are in close resemblance to those in the case at bar, in that the proposed bill of exceptions was not filed within the time permitted by the statute for the performance of such act, and that the opposing party submitted proposed amendments to such bill at the same time "without waiving objection * * * to said [proposed] bill of exceptions, on the ground that said bill of exceptions was not served within the time allowed by law, stipulation of counsel or order of court." The proposed bill of exceptions not having been served in time, it was held that no ratification or acquiescence in such delay or failure was manifested by the action of the opposing party in proposing amendments to the proposed bill of exceptions and at the same time reserving his rights to object to the bill of exceptions on the ground that it had not been served within the time allowed by law. A petition to have the matter heard by the Supreme Court after decision by the District Court of Appeal was denied by the Supreme Court.

In view of the foregoing decisions, it is ordered that the application for a writ of mandate be and it is denied.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 338

HEINE et ux. v. WRIGHT et al.

SAME v. ANGLO-AMERICAN LAND
CO. et al.

(Civ. 5003.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 1, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1926.)

1. Attachment $\S$ 364—Defendant's agreement to secure release of attachment on real property by depositing money to be attached held not a "consent" to attachment, precluding recovery of damages (Civ. Code $\S$ 3515).

Defendant's agreement that, if plaintiff would release attachment on real property, they would deposit money which plaintiff might attach in its stead held not a "consent," under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3515, to attachment so as to bar their recovery for damages resulting from attachment; "consent" being an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Consent.]

2. Attachment $\S$ 331—Attachment undertaking constitutes an original, independent, and absolute contract on part of sureties.

Attachment undertaking, providing that, in event of a judgment in favor of attachment defendants, obligors would become liable for damages, constitutes an original, independent, and absolute contract on part of the sureties in action thereon by attachment defendants against sureties.

3. Estoppel $\S$ 32(4)—Voluntary sureties on attachment undertaking held estopped, in absence of fraud, collusion, or mistake, to deny validity of attachment.

Sureties on attachment undertaking, providing without qualification that, if defendants recovered judgment, sureties would be liable, and purpose of attachment having been accomplished to damage of defendants and sureties, having become such voluntarily without dealings of any kind with attachment defendant, were, in absence of charges of fraud, collusion, or mistake, estopped to deny validity of attachment.

4. Attachment $\S$ 351.

In an action on an attachment undertaking, where real property is attached, only nominal damages, at most, are recoverable.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1241—Consent of attachment defendants to attachment held not available to obligors on appeal bond.

"Consent" of attachment defendants to attachment of bank deposit held not available to obligors on appeal bond; such consent not extending beyond period of lien created by attachment which ended on entry of judgment in defendant's favor.

6. Attachment $\S$ 364—Attachment defendants, substituting security for attached property, held not estopped to enforce liability for damages resulting from attachment, in absence of claim of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1962).

Attachment defendants, agreeing that, if plaintiff would release attachment on real property, they would deposit money which plaintiff might attach in its stead, held not estopped to enforce liability for damages resulting from attachment, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1962, where it was not claimed that any fraud or deceit was practiced, nor that any misrepresentations were made by defendants in substituting security for attachment, and it did not appear that attachment creditor was influenced or induced to accept such substituted security.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Separate actions by Frederick F. Heine and wife against A. L. Wright and another and against the Anglo-American Land Company and others. Judgments for plaintiffs in each action, and defendants appeal. Judgments affirmed.

Gerald C. Halsey and Frederick T. Leo, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. These two actions were commenced by respondents Frederick F. Heine and wife to recover damages resulting from an attachment of a bank deposit belonging to them. The first action was brought against the sureties on the attachment undertaking; the second against the principal and sureties on the undertaking given on appeal to continue the attachment lien in force pending appeal. The causes were heard and determined by the trial court upon the same evidence. Judgment in each action was given in favor of Heine and wife. The defendants therein have appealed, and present their appeals in one record.

The facts are that in 1917 the Anglo-American Land Company, a corporation, brought an action in the county of Sonoma against Heine and wife, in which certain real property belonging to the latter, in San Francisco, was attached. That action was based upon an alleged indebtedness of $6,000 claimed to be due as a deficiency after sale of real property under a deed of trust given to secure a promissory note. The sureties on the attachment undertaking were C. W. Wright and John P. Rock. After the attachment had been levied, an opportunity was afforded Heine and wife to exchange said property for other real property, but they were unable to consummate the exchange because of the existence of said attachment. Thereupon one Hooper, acting for Heine and wife in the matter of the proposed exchange of properties, conferred with the land company's attorney for the purpose of having said attachment released. Said attorney first demanded the execution of the usual bond on release of attachment, but Heine and wife declined to furnish such a bond upon the ground that it would require them to deposit a sum of money as collateral with the bonding company, upon which they would lose interest during the period of the deposit. Hooper then suggested that Heine and wife would be willing to deposit the sum of $7,000, at interest, in a savings bank until the action was determined. In response to this proposition said attorney stated, according to his testimony:

"I told Mr. Hooper that that would be satisfactory to myself and my clients, and Mr. Hooper then said that he would have Mr. Heine at once deposit for himself and wife the sum of $7,000 in the savings department of that bank at Santa Rosa, and that they would arrange with the bank to notify me in writing just as soon as that money was on deposit there, so we could proceed to make arrangements to attach it, and that as soon as the attachment was placed on the money that I would deliver the release of the real property. * * *"

Said money was deposited accordingly, but the clerk of the court in which the attachment was obtained refused to issue a new writ, unless a new affidavit and undertaking were given; whereupon said land company filed a new affidavit and another undertaking with appellants A. L. and G. A. M. Wright as sureties thereon, and caused to be issued a second writ of attachment, by virtue of which said bank deposit was levied upon; thereafter the attachment on said real property was released, and the exchange of said property was consummated. Upon trial of the action against Heine and wife judgment was rendered in their favor. Said land company appealed, and gave a bond with Annie L. and C. W. Wright as sureties thereon, for the purpose of continuing said second attachment in force pending appeal. On appeal the judgment in favor of Heine and wife was affirmed (Anglo-American Land Co. v. Heine, 198 P. 1009, 52 Cal. App. 472), the court holding that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that the indebtedness sued upon by said land company had been, as claimed by Heine and wife, fully paid and discharged. Thereupon Heine and wife brought these two suits for damages, one against A. L. and G. A. M. Wright as sureties on the second attachment bond, and recovered a judgment therein for the sum of $239.20, which represented the accrued interest on said sum of $7,000 at the legal rate, from the date of the levy of said attachment thereon until the entry of judgment, less the amount of interest paid Heine and wife by the bank on said deposit for the same period of time at the rate of 4 per cent. The other was commenced against the Anglo-American Land Company, as principal, and Annie L. and C. W. Wright, as sureties on the appeal bond, which was given to continue said second attachment in force pending appeal, and a judgment therein was given in favor of Heine and wife for the sum of $485.60 and costs, which represented the accrued interest on said bank deposit, at legal rate, from the date of the entry of judgment in the trial court to the date of the affirmance on appeal, less the amount of interest paid on said deposit by the bank.

In the second affirmative defense pleaded in the answer in each action it was alleged that respondents consented to the attachment of said bank deposit. The trial court negatived those allegations by a general finding, but further found in regard thereto that, in order to enable respondents to consummate the exchange of the attached real property, they deposited $7,000 in a bank in Santa Rosa, and requested that the attachment be placed upon said bank deposit "instead of upon said real property."

Regarding the appeal prosecuted by the sureties on the attachment bond, the main contention urged for reversal of the judgment is that the conduct of respondents in depositing said money under the circumstances above related amounted to a consent on their part to the attachment being made, which consent precluded them from afterwards claiming damage resulting from said attachment. This contention is based primarily upon the maxim of jurisprudence that "he who consents to an act is not wronged by it." Civ. Code, § 3515.

[1] Even though it be assumed that consent by a defendant to an attachment being made upon his property does operate as a bar to the subsequent enforcement of the obligation arising from the attachment undertaking, the evidence in the instant case fails to show the exercise of such freedom of action on the part of respondents in regard to said attachment as would bring their conduct within the purview of the maxim of jurisprudence relied upon by appellant. The word "consent" means, in a legal sense, "capable, deliberate, and voluntary assent or agreement to, or concurrence in, some act or purpose, implying physical and mutual power and free action" (Webster's Dictionary); or, as stated in the case of Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457, which was an action for damages for the tortious taking of personal property, wherein it was claimed that the owner consented to the taking:

"Consent, in law, is more than a mere formal act of the mind. It is an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake."

The evidence here shows without dispute that the Anglo-American Land Company was insisting at all times upon maintaining an attachment lien on respondents' property to secure the payment of the alleged debt upon which it was suing, and refused to release the attachment on said real property until satisfactory substitution of security was effected; on the other hand, respondents from the beginning claimed that the suit upon which the attachment proceeding was based was groundless; and it was never intimated by them that they would waive, or refrain from pursuing, the remedy afforded by law for the recovery of such damages as might accrue from a wrongful or malicious attachment. The placing of said money on deposit in the bank under those circumstances cannot be said to be the result of the exercise of a free and voluntary act on the part of respondents such as would deprive them of their right to afterwards complain of the attachment, but was in effect a situation brought about by a coercive attitude manifested on the part of said land company in view of the pending exchange of said real property, whereby it refused to release the attachment on said real property until ample security was given in its place; in other words, the placing of said money in the bank was, in substance, a compliance with the demand of said land company for substituted security for an attachment already levied, acceded to by respondents only for the purpose of obtaining the release of said real estate, and thus obviating further and greater damages from being caused by the breaking up of the contemplated exchange of said property; and, having deposited the money under those conditions, we believe the trial court was correct in holding that respondents were not precluded from seeking recovery against the sureties on the attachment undertaking.

[2, 3] Furthermore, said land company, with whom these transactions regarding the bank deposit were had, is not a party to this particular action. The controversy here lies between the attachment defendants and the obligors on the attachment undertaking; the action being based solely upon said attachment undertaking. In such an action the undertaking, to all intents and purposes, constitutes an original, independent, and absolute contract on the part of sureties. Frankel v. Stern, 44 Cal. 168; Pieper v. Peers, 32 P. 700, 98 Cal. 42. It is not claimed by the appellants on this particular appeal that respondents induced them to become sureties on said undertaking, or made any request whatever of them in regard to the attachment of said bank deposit, or the release of the attachment on the real property; in fact, neither respondents nor their agent, Hooper, ever had any dealings with them, they having come into the case for the first time when they became sureties on the attachment undertaking. The undertaking sued upon was entered into by them voluntarily, in consideration of the issuance of said writ of attachment, and for the purpose of having the respondents' property seized. The purpose sought was accomplished to the damage of respondents. Said undertaking provided without qualification that, in the event of respondents recovering a judgment in the action, appellants would become liable for damages caused thereby. Under those circumstances, and in the absence of any charges of fraud, collusion, or mistake, we are of the opinion that the contention urged by the appellants in regard to the matter of consent amounts to an attempted impeachment of the attachment, the validity of which they are, as such sureties, estopped to deny. Tormey v. McIntosh, 184 P. 1012, 43 Cal. App. 411; 2 Ruling Case Law, p. 890, citing cases; McLean v. Wright, 35 So. 45, 137 Ala. 644, 97 Am. St. Rep. 67; Brown v. Tidrick, 85 N. W. 185, 14 S. D. 249, 86 Am. St. Rep. 754.

[4] In reference to the appeal from the judgment given in the matter of the appeal bond, the land company, in addition to making the contention regarding respondents' consent, claims that, by releasing the attachment on the real estate and making the levy on the bank deposit, it was "led to change its position for the worse," and that therefore respondents are estopped from demanding or receiving any damages from these particular appellants, under the appeal bond, resulting from the attachment of said money. This claim is based upon the theory that, if the attachment on the real estate had continued to remain in force instead of being superseded by the attachment of the money, these appellants, as parties to the appeal bond, would not have been liable for the payment of damages, because, at most, only nominal damages are recoverable in an action brought upon an attachment undertaking where real property is attached. Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 410; Elder v. Kutner, 32 P. 563, 97 Cal. 490.

[5] We believe that the matter of respondents' conduct in relation to the attachment of the bank deposit, whatever it may have been, can have no effect upon the status of the obligors of the appeal bond, for the reason that the lien created by the attachment of the bank deposit, which it is contended was consented to by respondents, ended with the entry of judgment in the action in favor of respondents, and the liability of the obligors on the appeal bond arose from a transaction entered into by them after the entry of that judgment, and involves an obligation entirely distinct from the one in regard to which the conduct of respondents has been called into question. The conduct of respondents, therefore, in reference to the attachment of the bank deposit, cannot be held to extend beyond the period of the lien created by that attachment nor to operate to the advantage of these appellants.

[6] Moreover, the doctrine of estoppel cannot be held to apply against the respondents, because none of the essential elements of that doctrine has been established. It is not claimed that any fraud or deceit was practiced, nor that any misrepresentations were made by respondents in substituting the security for the attachment; nor that any "intentional or deliberate act" on their part led said land company "to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 625); nor does the evidence show that said land company was influenced or induced to accept said substituted security. It acted in the matter of its own accord, and in order to obtain a more efficacious lien to secure the debt sued upon; and, having concluded the transaction through its attorney, must be presumed to have known of the legal consequences which might follow therefrom. But, even though it could be fairly inferred from the evidence that the substitution of security was effectuated through the inducement of respondents, it cannot be said with any degree of certainty that the land company's position was made worse thereby, for the reason that, if the attachment on the real property had continued in force, respondents, upon rendition of judgment in that action in their favor, would not have been restricted to nominal damages obtainable in an action against the sureties on the attachment undertaking, but would have been allowed, under the law, to proceed against the land company alone for malicious attachment (Vesper v. Crane Co., 130 P. 876, 165 Cal. 36, L. R. A. 1915A, 541); and in such an action there is no fixed rule as to the amount of damages which might be recovered, it being proper to take into consideration all the circumstances attending the transaction, including the character and position of the parties, and which may carry the amount of damages beyond mere compensatory relief. (Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 462; Weaver v. Page, 6 Cal. 681; 6 Cor. Jur. 539).

The case of Baines v. Ullmann, Lewis & Co., 9 S. W. 543, 71 Tex. 529, cited by appellants, is not in point as to either appeal. The controversy there concerned a second attachment, and it was proved that the first attachment, which was defective, was made with the consent of the attachment defendant. The court therefore held, merely, in reference to the question of consent, that the attachment defendant, having consented to his goods being attached, "it ought to be understood that he consented an attachment should be made that would hold the goods, and, if the first was informal, that the informality might be cured by the second."

It is our opinion that the judgment in each action should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 321

CALIFORNIA CREDIT & COLLECTION CORPORATION v. RANDALL.
(Civ. 2956.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 27, 1926.)

1. Corporations ⇐80(8).

False representations as to amount of dividends being paid by corporation inducing execution of note in payment of stock subscription held sufficient defense to action on note.

2. Corporations ⇐80(12)—In action on stock subscription note, that corporation may have been earning 12 per cent. held no answer to defense of fraudulent representations that it was paying dividends in such amount.

In action on stock subscription note, defended on ground of fraudulent representations that company was paying 12 per cent. dividends, that stock may have been worth what defendant agreed to pay, and that corporation may have been earning enough to pay dividends as represented, held no answer to defense.

3. Corporations ⇐80(10) — Proof of fraudulent representations inducing execution of stock subscription note held not precluded by subscription agreement that verbal agreements with subscriber would not be recognized.

In action on stock subscription note, proof of fraudulent representations inducing execution held not precluded by subscription agreement that corporation will not recognize verbal agreements between agent and subscriber.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by the California Credit & Collection Corporation against Walter M. Randall upon a promissory note. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Cunyngnam, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fred W. McConnell, of Healdsburg, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff brought this action to recover on a promissory note, payable six months after date, given by the defendant to the Virden Packing Company, a corporation, and by that company assigned, after maturity, to the plaintiff for collection. The defendant entered into an agreement with the packing company to purchase 10 shares of its capital stock, at $100 a share, the par value thereof. He paid $250 on the purchase price, and gave the note in suit for the remainder thereof. The agreement contained the following provisions:

"It is expressly agreed that no stock is to be issued until the amount of this subscription and note or notes given therefor are paid in full in cash. * * * The subscription contract * * * contains the entire contract between the subscriber and the company and no agent or representative of the company, or any other person, has any power to change or alter the terms of this subscription. * * * Verbal or other agreements between agents and applicants contrary to the terms of this contract are not authorized, and will not be recognized by the company."

The answer sets up as an affirmative defense that the defendant was induced to enter into the contract and to give the note by false representations made by the company's selling agent, E. J. Warner. The only alleged misrepresentation which is material to the questions raised by appellant is "that said stock * * * was then paying * * * twelve per cent. dividends." The court found in accordance with the allegations of the affirmative defense, and entered judgment in favor of defendant for the cancellation of the agreement and the promissory note and for costs of suit. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

The 10 shares of stock were never delivered to defendant, and he did not pay any part of the note or receive any dividend upon his stock. The parties stipulated at the trial that, without the defendant's knowledge or consent, the company credited upon the note the amount of a dividend declared by it; the amount of such dividend not being stated in the stipulation. Relative to the alleged representations of the selling agent, the defendant testified as follows:

"Q. How did you come to subscribe for that stock? A. On account of the representations they made regarding the value of it and what it paid.

"Q. Well, what did Mr. Warner state to you about this stock before you subscribed for it? A. Oh, I met him I guess, several times, and he spoke about the investment, and said it was paying 12 per cent. I guess I saw him two or three times before I took the stock.

"Q. He told you the stock was then paying 12 per cent. dividend? A. That it had. * * *

"Q. Did he say anything about what it was paying then? A. As I understood him, he said it was paying then 12 per cent. * * *

"Q. Did you have any knowledge of stocks? A. I did not.

"Q. Or of the Virden Packing Company, a corporation? A. No.

"Q. Or what they owned? A. No.

"Q. Or anything about the formation of the company? A. Only what they told me.

"Q. Did you have any information of any kind as to the value of this stock? * * * A. No, I did not.

"Q. Did you have any knowledge of any facts relating to the resources of the Virden Packing company except what you got from Mr. Warner? A. That is all I knew. * * * I didn't know any such company existed. * * *

"Q. Mr. Randall, did you believe the statements that Mr. Warner made to you about this matter? A. I did. * * *

"Q. Did you rely on them? A. He was introduced to me by a friend of mine, and I depended on his statement on that account.

"Q. Would you have made this note and signed this stock subscription except for those representations? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. * * * Was that stock ever issued to you? A. No, sir.

"Q. Was it ever tendered to you? A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. * * * About the time it became due, did the company make any demand on you for the payment of the note? A. Yes, sir; they did.

"Q. Did you answer them? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Have you that letter; have you a copy of the letter you sent them? A. No.

"Q. What did you write them, Mr. Randall? A. I wrote to them that the stock was not what it was represented, had not paid the dividends, and I refused to pay the note. And on that ground they wrote back and said they were not responsible for the action of the salesman."

About 20 months after the note was executed, and prior to the commencement of this action, defendant's attorney wrote the company, requesting the return of the note, and stating that defendant "will give you any such formal release as you may desire." Relative to dividends declared by the Virden Packing Company, counsel for plaintiff stipulated at the trial as follows:

"I cannot stipulate as to the earning; I cannot stipulate to that. But I will stipulate that they have not paid or declared a dividend of 12 per cent, or half of 12 per cent. Now, I will make it good and strong, the fact of the matter is, I think they paid 2 per cent. dividends before that time, and I do not think they have ever paid more than 2 per cent."

The defendant is the only witness who testified at the trial, and his testimony, therefore, stands uncontradicted.

[1] It appears without conflict that the defendant was induced to execute the agreement and the note by the false representation that the packing company had paid, and was paying, dividends of 12 per cent. Such fraudulent representation is a sufficient defense. Dox v. R. E. Lomax Co., 29 Cal. App. 718, 156 P. 874; 6 Cal. Jur. 770.

Appellant contends:

"The judgment of the court should be reversed: First, because a rescission of the contract had not been properly alleged, and there is a total failure of the evidence to support a rescission. Second, the defendant does not plead that he has been damaged in any sum whatsoever, neither is there any evidence of injury."

In Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 382, 63 P. 692, 693, it is said, quoting from Toby v. Oregon, etc., R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 498, 33 P. 550:

"There are three methods by which, in cases like the present, a party defrauded may obtain relief: (1) Cancellation or rescission, etc.; * * * (2) affirmative relief by an action to recover compensation for the injury sustained by the fraud of the defendant; * * * (3) defensive relief, whereby the fraud is set up by way of defense to defeat an action brought to enforce an apparent obligation or liability."

"Where no affirmative relief is sought, it is not necessary for him to have exercised an existing right to rescind." 12 Cal. Jur. 786; Simon Newman Co. v. Lassing, 141 Cal. 174, 74 P. 761.

"So long as the plaintiff is permitted to come into court seeking to enforce the agreement, the defendant may allege and prove fraud as a defense. In short, it is not incumbent upon one who has thus been defrauded to go into court and ask relief, but he may abide his time, and when enforcement is sought against him excuse himself from performance by proof of the fraud." Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 141, 204 P. 583, 587.

[2] The evidence does not show that the earnings of the company were not equal to 12 per cent. upon its capital stock or that the stock is not worth the price which defendant agreed to pay for the 10 shares thereof. The false representation alleged is, not that the company was earning 12 per cent. but that it was "paying * * * 12 per cent dividends." There is a material difference in value, in the estimation of small investors at least, between the stock of a corporation which is actually paying dividends and that of one which is merely earning equivalent profits. The one yields an available income to the owner thereof while the other does not. In a case such as this, where the defendant does not seek to recover damages, "the exact amount of damage need not be shown, provided it be in an 'appreciable' sum." Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, 219, 190 P. 808, 813. The fact that the stock may have been worth what the defendant agreed to pay for it is not conclusive upon the question of damages. Where one is induced to buy property by false representations made to him by the owner thereof, the purchaser is "entitled to the benefit of his bargain, and hence should recover the difference between what the purchased property was actually worth and what it would have been worth had the false representations as to its value been true, regardless of the price paid." MacDonald v. Roeth, 179 Cal. 194, 201, 176 P. 38, 41; Wood v. Niemeyer, 185 Cal. 526, 532, 197 P. 795.

[3] The statement in the subscription agreement that "verbal or other agreements between agents and applicants contrary to the terms of this contract are not authorized and will not be recognized by the company" does not preclude proof of fraudulent representations by which the defendant was induced to execute the agreement and the promissory note. Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 82, 195 P. 922; Whiting v. Squeglla (Cal. App.) 232 P. 986, 988.

The judgment is affirmed.

198 Cal. 290

RABE et al. v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. et al. (L. A. 7944.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨927(3).

In determining propriety of nonsuit, appellate court must consider every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from evidence adduced as proved in favor of plaintiff.

2. Appeal and error ⇨927(3).

In determining propriety of nonsuit, where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or one of several inferences may reasonably be made, appellate court must take view most favorable to plaintiff.

3. Appeal and error ⇨927(3).

In considering propriety of nonsuit, appellate court must discard evidence contrary to plaintiff's.

4. Appeal and error ⇨927(3).

In considering propriety of nonsuit, plaintiff must be given benefit of every piece of evidence tending to sustain his averments, and such evidence must be weighed most favorably to his claim.

5. Appeal and error ⇨927(3).

In considering propriety of nonsuit, all relevant testimony must be given its full probative strength, whether erroneously admitted or not.

6. Appeal and error ⇨927(3).

In determining propriety of nonsuit, any questions arising from fact of variation between evidence of witnesses cannot be raised or considered on appeal.

7. Trial ⇨139(1), 165.

In considering nonsuit, evidence must be taken most strongly against defendant; and, if plaintiff's proof makes out prima facie case, motion should be denied.

8. Negligence ⇨121(1).

Negligence cannot be presumed, but must be proved.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨705(4).

Operating bicycle without front or rear lamps or reflex mirror, required by Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd. (b), later than half hour after sundown, held negligence per se.

10. Municipal corporations ⇨705(4)—Street lamps lighting area of approximately 30 feet held not to satisfy mandate of Motor Vehicle Law requiring bicycle to carry lighted lamp visible 300 feet (Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd [b]; St. 1919, p. 207).

On question of negligence of bicycle rider who struck deceased, that street lamps lighted area approximately 30 feet or more in circumference where injury occurred held not to satisfy mandate of Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd. (b), requiring bicycles on public highway to carry lighted lamp visible 300 feet.

11. Negligence ⇨6.

Negligence is relative to situation and is not always foreclosed or concluded by compliance with regulatory statute.

12. Municipal corporations ⇨706(6)—Negligence of bicycle rider passing regular stopping place of street car held for jury.

In action for death of deceased struck by bicycle said to be "whizzing" past street car receiving and discharging passengers, negligence of rider held for jury.

13. Death ⇨18(1).

Heirs, sustaining no substantial pecuniary loss by death, cannot recover substantial damages.

14. Pleading ⇨229.

Motions to amend pleadings to end that justice may be promoted are to be liberally granted, especially where amendment would not state new or different cause of action.

15. Limitation of actions ⇨124—Refusal to permit heirs suing for negligence causing death to amend so as to include omitted heirs as parties held error (Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, and sections 377, 389).

In action for death, where two of decedent's heirs were not joined as parties by mistake, and to allow them brought in would cause no prejudice nor make new cause of action, refusal to allow trial amendment held error, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 3, and sections 377, 389.

16. Limitation of actions ⇨124—Trial amendment to bring in heirs not named in original action for death held not to state new and distinct cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 377).

In action under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, for death, trial amendment to bring in parties not named in complaint as heirs of decedent held not to substitute new and distinct cause of action.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by Emil Rabe and others against the Western Union Telegraph Company and another. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Martin Forrest, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Beverly L. Hodghead, of San Francisco (Francis R. Stark, of New York City, of counsel), for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken upon a bill of exceptions from an order granting defendants' motion for a nonsuit. The plaintiffs, being respectively the husband and married daughters of the decedent, Anna Bishop Rabe, joined in the above-entitled action to recover damages for the alleged wrongful death of said Anna Bishop Rabe, which occurred April 22, 1922, as a result of injuries inflicted upon her April 3, 1922, by being struck by a bicycle which one Nick Sanseverino, an employee of the respondent Western Union Telegraph Company, a corporation, was riding and directing while engaged in his discharge of his duties as a deliverer of telegraphic messages for said respondent corporation.

The complaint, which contains an allegation that "the said plaintiffs are the only heirs of said deceased," was drawn, and the action was maintained, upon the authority of section 377, Code of Civil Procedure, providing:

"When the death of a person not being a minor is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, or if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, then also against such other person. In every action under this and the preceding section, such damages may be given as under all the circumstances of the case may be just."

[1-7] In our consideration of the evidence as to its sufficiency to pass a motion for a nonsuit, it must be borne in mind that we are required to conform to the well-established rules frequently announced by this court. Gregg v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 223 P. 553, 193 Cal. 212, contains quotations taken from a number of our previous decisions. We quote:

"Every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence adduced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the plaintiff. Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if one of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiff. If contradictory evidence has been given it must be discarded. Estate of Arnold [82 P. 253] 147 Cal. 533. The plaintiff must be given the benefit of every piece of evidence which tends to sustain his averments and such evidence must be weighed in a light most favorable to plaintiff's claim. Anderson v. Wickliffe [172 P. 381] 178 Cal. 120. Evidence whether erroneously admitted or not, if relevant to the issues joined, must be given the credit and benefit of its full probative strength, and any question arising from the fact of variation between the evidence of the witnesses cannot be raised or considered. The evidence must be taken most strongly against the defendant, and, if the plaintiff has introduced proof sufficient to make out a prima facie case under the allegations of his complaint, the motion, if made upon the close of the case, should be denied."

The following citations are appended: Bush v. Wood, 97 P. 709, 8 Cal. App. 647; In re Daly, 114 P. 787, 15 Cal. App. 329; Wassermann v. Sloss, 49 P. 566, 117 Cal. 425, 38 L. R. A. 176, 59 Am. St. Rep. 209; Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 112 P. 53, 158 Cal. 596; Lassen v. Southern Pac. Co., 159 P. 143, 173 Cal. 71; Kleist v. Priem, 196

P. 72, 51 Cal. App. 32; Berger v. Lane, 213 P. 45, 190 Cal. 443.

[8-12] With the foregoing rules in mind, we proceed to a statement of the facts as disclosed by the record. The decedent was a woman 62 years of age and in normal health. She was visited on April 3, 1922, at the home of herself and husband in the city of Los Angeles, by her daughter, Mrs. Alexia Valentine, and the latter's 3 year old child. The daughter upon taking her departure was accompanied by the mother to the northwest corner of Kohler and Seventh streets, at which point the former was to board a west-bound Kohler street car and the mother was to return to her home. Seventh street extends in an easterly and westerly direction and Kohler street extends in a northerly and southerly direction. The latter street does not continue across Seventh on a direct line at its point of entrance from a southerly direction. The easterly boundary line of Kohler street south of Seventh street, if projected northerly in its continuation, would form the westerly boundary line of Kohler street north of Seventh street; in other words, the exterior lines of the northerly and southerly sections of Kohler street, as each enters Seventh street, are out of line and form what is commonly called a "jog." The mother and daughter, in going from the former's home to the point where the latter was to take the street car, traveled upon the westerly side of Kohler street and crossed Seventh street at an angle to the northwest corner of said street; it being the place where the street cars discharged and received passengers. The mother, daughter, and child remained upon the sidewalk for some 10 or 12 minutes before a car arrived. As it approached, the daughter and her said child went into the street to board it. What period of time the mother, who had to recross Seventh street in order to return to her home, remained upon the sidewalk after the daughter started to board the street car, was not told by any witness, and it can only be approximated by physical facts and the sequence of events. Mrs. Valentine, who was also accompanied by her child, in crossing from the sidewalk to board the street car, was "brushed" by the passing bicycle shortly before she reached the car. It passed her going at a swift rate of speed and the wheel brushed her dress in passing between her and the sidewalk. Her testimony is that it "whizzed" by her as fast as it could go. She was not aware that the mother had been struck or run into by the bicycle until a few seconds later when her child saw the mother lying in the gutter near the north curb line not far from where she had left her standing. The mother was picked up in an unconscious state and did not regain full consciousness at any time thereafter. She sustained a fracture of the skull which resulted in death.

On the evening of the injury the sun set at 6:15. There is evidence in the record which would require us to hold, under the rules above announced, that decedent was struck as late as 7:15. There is no question but that it was later than 7 o'clock. The bicycle carried neither front nor rear light nor lamps nor reflex mirror of any kind as required by the provisions of section 13, subd. (b), of the state Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 191), to be carried by a bicycle one-half hour after sunset and the messenger was clearly guilty of a violation of the mandates of said act in this respect. The meteorologist in the United States Weather Bureau at Los Angeles testified that at the time the injuries were inflicted the sky at and in the vicinity of Los Angeles was entirely overcast with stratus clouds—low clouds. It was not a foggy night so as to obstruct the view of the street if the lamps were burning, but an ordinary cloudy condition prevailed. The deceased when first observed upon the street was approximately 30 feet westerly from the northwest corner of Seventh and Kohler streets, lying in the gutter near the outer edge of the sidewalk. No negligent act on her part was testified to by any one, nor can such be inferred from any fact or circumstance disclosed by the record. Negligence cannot be presumed but must be proved. On the other hand, the employee and agent of the respondent corporation was guilty of negligence per se (Mora v. Pavilla, 199 P. 17, 186 Cal. 199; Dewhurst v. Leopold, 229 P. 30, 194 Cal. 424) in failing to comply with those sections of the state Motor Vehicle Act which provided that—

"Every bicycle while on the public highway shall carry a lighted lamp visible under normal atmospheric conditions at least 300 feet in the direction toward which such bicycle is faced," etc., within one-half hour after sunset.

The absence of a rear light or reflex mirror is not material to the instant case, as the failure to comply with the act in that particular could not have been, so far as we are able to discern, responsible for the injury. But the same argument cannot be made in defense of the absence of a light which the law required to be visible at least 300 feet in the direction in which the bicycle was moving. The law was enacted to prevent the kind of a catastrophe which were happened. Who may say, but the triers of fact, that if the law had been observed the injury would nevertheless have happened, or that the failure to comply with the law did not contribute proximately to the injury. There is testimony to the effect that certain street lamps in the vicinity sufficiently lighted an area approximately 30 feet or more in circumference. The lights of the street lamps did not satisfy the mandate of the law. The statute required a light to be carried that would be seen, under ordinary atmospheric conditions, at least a distance not less than 300 feet. Besides, a light carried by an automobile or a bicycle has a distinct value to travelers that a street light does not possess. The public is accustomed to determine the safety of a situation with reference to the signal lights which the law requires vehicles must carry. Such warning or signal lights have an attractiveness not possessed by the ordinary overhead light. No one appeared in the instant case who claimed to have seen the bicycle before it struck the decedent, or at least before it "brushed" Mrs. Valentine's clothing in its swift passage. This incident must have been practically simultaneous with the collision of the bicycle with the decedent. It was proper, further, for the jury to consider the question of care exercised by the rider of the bicycle and the rate of speed at which he passed the street car which had stopped at a regular stopping place where people gather for the purpose of entering cars and are discharged therefrom. Negligence is relative to a given situation as it exists at the time injuries are inflicted. Negligence must be considered in relation to the facts and circumstances of the situation and the determination of the question is not always foreclosed or concluded by compliance with a regulatory statute. Reaugh v. Oudahy Packing Co., 208 P. 125, 189 Cal. 335, 340. It was also proper for the jury to consider the agency or instrumentality by which the injury was caused, to wit, an unlighted bicycle, and the ease or difficulty by which it may be discerned upon a street lighted as the evidence shows the street in the instant case to have been lighted and the readiness by which a bicycle may be quickly and suddenly deflected from its course, together with other facts pertinent to the injury. We are of the opinion that the evidence was sufficient to establish a prima facie case of negligence.

[13-15] The second branch of the case calls for a consideration of the proceedings and the final ruling which followed a motion made by plaintiff for leave to amend the complaint by bringing in two heirs of the decedent who had been omitted from the action. These omitted heirs were grandchildren; one a son of a deceased son, and the other a son of a deceased daughter. The father and mother of said children, respectively, had predeceased Anna Bishop Rabe by many years. Said deceased daughter left surviving a son, who had not been heard from for a period of more than 4 years, and none of the other children of decedent or members of the family knew whether or not he was then living. The other heir was in all probability living. Both of said grandchildren of decedent, if living, would have passed their majority at the time of the grandmother's demise. It appears that neither was at any time dependent upon or had at any time enjoyed the bounty of decedent, or had ever been a member of her household. The existence of any other heirs than those joined in the action was drawn out on the cross-examination of appellant Alexia Valentine early in the trial. No action whatever was taken or objection made by defendants as to the nonjoinder of said two grandchildren. Some time after the facts had been elicited, as above stated, plaintiff asked leave to amend by bringing them in as plaintiffs, and it was against the granting of their motion that defendants entered their protest. Defendants confined themselves solely to objecting to the motion to bring in said heirs. The court reserved its ruling on the motion until all of plaintiffs' evidence had been put in. It thereupon denied the motion to amend and granted the motion for a nonsuit. The omitted heirs were according to the rules of consanguinity, one degree further removed from the common ancestor than the surviving daughters, and the parents of each of said omitted heirs had been dead for many years prior to the decedent's death, and the family contact and association as between the decedent and them had long since become severed. It is not strikingly strange that such an oversight should have occurred. No claim is made that said heirs were fraudulently omitted or that plaintiffs were guilty of bad faith in any sense by reason of said omission. The evidence in the record tends to show that said omitted heirs did not sustain any substantial pecuniary loss by the death of the decedent, and, if this is so, there could have been no substantial recovery in favor of either. In the Matter of the Estate of Ricconi, 197 P. 97, 185 Cal. 458, 14 A. L. R. 509; Burk v. Arcata, etc., Ry. Co., 57 P. 1065, 125 Cal. 364, 73 Am. St. Rep. 52; Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 115 P. 320, 159 Cal. 494. The denial of a motion to amend a complaint by bringing in omitted heirs would work an exceptional hardship under section 377, Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as it would in effect deprive the plaintiff, who had moved diligently, the right to enjoy the benefit of the section if it should develop that certain heirs, who, for any reason—accident, misfortune, or mistake, however excusable—had been omitted as parties to the action in the original complaint, and the bar of section 340, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure, had run as to said omitted heirs between the time the action was commenced and the time the discovery of the neglect or mistake was made. Such a denial would be exceptionally disastrous in view of the law that a recovery in one action is a bar to subsequent actions by some other heir or heirs of whose existence the plaintiff had no knowledge at the time the action was instituted. This would be inconsistent with the cases which hold that, had the action gone to judgment, the omitted heirs would be bound thereby, and the only possible effect of such omission would be to diminish rather than enhance the defendant's liability, for the reason that so far as the heirs are concerned a single joint action is given. They could not be subjected to a second recovery in a subsequent action by any other heir or heirs. Salmon v. Rathjens, 92 P. 733, 152 Cal. 290.

Nothing is said in Salmon v. Rathjens, supra, or in the other cited cases, which may be taken as an intimation by this court that an heir, who, through mistake, misfortune, or neglect, has been omitted as a party from the original complaint, cannot, under any circumstance, thereafter be brought in by amendment. That case emphasizes, as do others, the fact that the action permitted under section 377, Code of Civil Procedure, is statutory and a single cause of action is given and the action should be brought in the names of the persons to whom the right of action is given by the statute. But in none of the decisions is there an intimation to the effect that a complaint which omits heirs is not amendable. Such of our decisions as touch the question at all take it as a matter of fact that the complaint is subject to amendment under the same general rules which govern pleadings generally. It is the settled law of this state that motions to amend pleadings to the end that justice may be promoted are to be liberally granted. Especially should liberality be exercised in favor of allowing the amendment where, as in the instant case, the amendment would not state a new or different cause of action from that attempted to be stated in the original complaint. Barr v. Southern California Edison Co., 140 P. 47, 24 Cal. App. 22. "Where there is no attempt to state a new cause of action in an amended complaint, but merely the addition of matters essential to make the original cause of action complete, the amendment, though made after the expiration of the period of limitation, relates back to the time of the commencement of the action." Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas, etc., Co., 128 P. 330, 164 Cal. 188. No issue would have been changed by the amendment. Defendants would have suffered no prejudice by bringing in the absent heirs, as no issue would have been changed thereby. The evidence making it appear necessary to bring in other parties was elicited by the defendants. Great liberality is indulged in such cases to the end that justice will be subserved. "This is especially true where evidence has been received without objection, and the amendment is made to conform thereto, or where the filing of the amended complaint will save a claim from the bar of the statute of limitations." 21 Cal. Jur. 191, 192. The testimony in the instant case as to other heirs was brought out by the defendants and all that plaintiffs asked was to make the amendment conform to the evidence elicited by them. "When a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must then order them to be brought in, and to that end may order amended and supplemental pleadings, or a cross-complaint to be filed, and summons thereon to be issued and served." Section 389, Code Civ. Proc. It is unnecessary to illustrate by further citations of authority, or Code sections, the spirit of liberality that is to be indulged by courts to the end that there may be a complete and just determination of civil actions.

[16] There is no merit in the contention that the amendment would have substituted a new and distinct cause of action for the one pleaded. This contention has been put at rest by many decisions of this state, a few of which are Cox v. San Joaquin Light Co., 166 P. 578, 33 Cal. App. 522; Frost v. Witter, 64 P. 705, 132 Cal. 421, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Barr v. Southern California Edison Co., 140 P. 47, 24 Cal. App. 22; Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas, etc., Co., supra.

For the foregoing reasons, the order granting the nonsuit is reversed, with directions that the plaintiffs be allowed to amend their complaint by bringing in the omitted heirs, either as plaintiffs or as defendants, as they may be advised.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.

198 Cal. 333

DODD v. TEBBETTS et al. (L. A. 8030.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1926. Rehearing Denied April 22, 1926.)

1. Attorney and client §72—Where two defendants appeared by same attorney, presumption is that relation continued, where record fails to show it terminated, and his acts and stipulations are for both.

Where two defendants appeared by the same attorney, and the record fails to show that attorney ever ceased to be such for both defendants, it is presumed he continued such, and his acts and stipulations in all stages of the case, both trial and appeal, bind both defendants, though, after appearing for both, he signed himself attorney for one defendant.

2. Appeal and error §415—Where attorney appeared for two defendants, but appealed for one, appeal will not be considered from the judgment roll alone, because other defendant, claimed adverse in interest to appealing defendant, was not served with notice of appeal, but appeal is proper for hearing on the record.

Where attorney appeared for two defendants, and appealed for one only, the appeal will not be considered from the judgment roll alone, because the other defendant, claimed adverse in interest to the appealing defendant, was not served with notice of appeal, or other notices, but the appeal is proper for hearing on the record including the bill of exceptions, as the attorney is presumed to represent the defendant not appealing, as well as appealing defendant.

3. Partnership §213(1)—Plaintiff, who relies on estoppel under statutory provision that one permitting himself to be represented as a partner is liable to third person who gives credit to the partnership on the faith thereof, must plead facts establishing estoppel (Civ. Code, § 2444).

Plaintiff, relying on equitable estoppel under Civ. Code, § 2444, providing that one permitting himself to be represented as a partner is liable as such to persons who, on the faith thereof, give credit to the partnership, must plead facts establishing such estoppel, in order to prove it, or support judgment based thereon.

4. Partnership §216(2)—Where defendant represented himself to be partner, on which representation plaintiff relied, plaintiff may plead that defendant is partner and liable as such, and, where denied, facts constituting estoppel may be shown without pleading further (Civ. Code, § 2444).

Where party represented self to be a partner with another, on which representation plaintiff relied, plaintiff may plead party is a partner and liable as such and, where the answer denies it, may prove facts constituting estoppel under Civ. Code, § 2444, without further pleading, and have judgment thereon.

5. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Where evidence in support of findings of court, hearing case without jury, is in substantial conflict, findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

Where evidence in support of findings of the court, hearing a case without a jury, is in substantial conflict, the findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Action by William J. Dodd against William F. Tebbetts and Ruth Tebbetts on a promissory note. From the judgment for plaintiff, defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

A. W. Sorenson, of Los Angeles, and Maurice E. Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Lawler & Degnan and Lloyd W. Moultrie, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and respondent for the principal sum of $10,100, with interest and attorney's fees amounting to $2,296. The action was in the nature of a suit in equity arising out of a transaction wherein, as the plaintiff in his complaint alleged, he placed certain securities in the hands of a certain copartnership doing business under the name of William F. Tebbetts & Co., and composed of said defendants, which said firm, upon the date thereof, executed their promissory note to the California Bank for the sum of $12,500, due 180 days after date, and deposited said securities with said bank as security for the payment of their said promissory note, and thereupon received from said bank the sum represented by said note; that upon the maturity of said note the makers thereof failed, neglected, and refused to pay the sum due thereon, and that said plaintiff, in order to prevent the loss to him of said securities, was obliged to pay said note, with the interest then due thereon, and thereby became subrogated to the rights of said bank in and to said note and in and to the enforcement thereof; wherefore this action to recover from said defendants and each of them the amount of said note, with interest and counsel fees as aforesaid. The defendants answered, denying that they were or ever had been copartners, and alleging that the defendant William F. Tebbetts was the only person interested in said firm or doing business under the name of William F. Tebbetts & Co. They further denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the securities in question and in that behalf alleged that at the time of the transaction referred to in plaintiff's complaint the said plaintiff sold and assigned to the defendant William F. Tebbetts all of his right, title, and interest in said securities and that said William F. Tebbetts has ever since been and still is the owner thereof. The defendants admit the execution of the note in question by William F. Tebbetts personally and under the firm name of William F. Tebbetts & Co., but deny that the defendant Ruth Tebbetts ever executed the same, either personally or as a member of the firm of William F. Tebbetts & Co. The defendants deny that said plaintiff was compelled to pay said bank the amount due upon said note or any other sum in order to prevent a loss to him of said securities, and deny that he was subrogated or had any right to be subrogated to the rights of said bank by virtue of any payment by him of said note, and deny that they or either of them are indebted to said plaintiff in any sum whatsoever on account of said transaction. The defendants also presented a cross-complaint against said plaintiff, setting forth certain facts not necessary to be here detailed, whereby the plaintiff had become and was indebted to said William F. Tebbetts, doing business under the firm name of William F. Tebbetts & Co., in the sum of $10,133.14, with interest from and after a certain date, and for which said sum defendant William F. Tebbetts demands judgment by way of affirmative relief. The answer and cross-complaint is signed "A. W. Sorenson, Attorney for Defendants." The plaintiff answered the said cross-complaint, denying specifically the averments thereof. The cause went to trial before the court without a jury upon the issues as thus framed. Upon the submission thereof the trial court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law. In its said findings the court recited the fact that upon the coming on of the cause for trial Messrs. Lawler & Degnan and Lloyd W. Moultrie appeared as attorneys for plaintiff, J. W. McAlpine, Esq., appeared as attorney for William F. Tebbetts, and Messrs. A. W. Sorenson and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove appeared as attorneys for Ruth B. Tebbetts. The findings were indorsed as having been received by "A. W. Sorenson, by G. C., Attorney for Defendants." By its conclusions of law the trial court found that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the defendants William F. Tebbetts and Ruth Tebbetts, "doing business under the firm name of William F. Tebbetts & Co., and each of them," for the sum of $10,100, together with interest and also for the sum of $1,000 attorney's fees and costs. The judgment followed accordingly. The appeal therefrom was taken by Ruth Tebbetts only, and the notice thereof is signed "A. W. Sorenson, Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, Attorneys for Defendant Ruth Tebbetts." Thereafter a bill of exceptions was presented to the trial judge for certification. It recites that—

"Evidence was introduced sustaining and which does sustain each and all of the findings of fact numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 7."

It then proceeds to set forth certain testimony evidently intended to render intelligible six numbered exceptions noted therein and embraced in four specifications of error. There then follow five specifications of the particulars in which the findings are contrary to and are not supported by the evidence. These relate altogether to finding numbered 3. Then follow certain specifications wherein the decision of the court is asserted to be against law. These are followed by the stipulation of the parties by their respective counsel to the effect that the foregoing bill of exceptions was prepared within the time allowed by law and by the order of the court and correctly sets forth all of the proceedings had during the trial, except the proceedings had and evidence introduced sustaining findings 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and which proceedings and evidence are sufficient to sustain said enumerated findings. This stipulation is signed by A. W. Sorenson and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, attorneys for defendant R. B. Tebbetts, and by Lawler & Degnan and Lloyd W. Moultrie, attorneys for plaintiff. Then follows the certification of the trial judge to the correctness of said bill of exceptions and which embraces the matters covered by the said stipulation. The clerk's certificate follows in the usual form, and this is finally followed by the printed stipulation of the same counsel as to the correctness of the printed transcript on appeal. The appellant's opening brief presented upon this appeal is signed by "A. W. Sorenson and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, Attorneys for Appellant."

In the respondent's brief filed in response thereto it is for the first time urged that this appeal must be considered and treated as an appeal upon the judgment roll alone, for the alleged reason that the defendant William F. Tebbetts, against whom the judgment herein was also rendered, nowhere in the record herein appears to have been served with a draft of the bill of exceptions or to have been given any notice of the delivery of said bill of exceptions to the judge or of the time fixed for the settlement of the same or to have been present or to have participated in person or by counsel at the settlement thereof. It is also urged that the record herein fails to show that the notice of appeal and notice of intention to move for a new trial were, or that either of them was, ever served upon said William F. Tebbetts, nor that the stipulations to the bill of exceptions or the transcript were ever signed by said William F. Tebbetts or his counsel, all of which were essential for the reason, as the respondent urges, that said William F. Tebbetts was an adverse party to Ruth B. Tebbetts, his codefendant, upon this her appeal.

[1, 2] There is no merit in the respondent's contention in the foregoing regard. When the defendants first appeared in this action with their demurrer and answer and cross-complaint, they so appeared by their attorney of record, A. W. Sorenson. The record herein fails to show that said Sorenson has ever ceased to be the attorney of record for both of the defendants herein. It is true that there are certain recitals in the findings of the court to the effect that other counsel appeared at the trial representing one or the other of these defendants, but there is no showing of any substitution of these attorneys as attorneys of record for one or the other of these defendants in the place and stead of said A. W. Sorenson, their original attorney of record herein. We must therefore assume that A. W. Sorenson continued throughout and still continues to be the attorney of record for both of said defendants. This being so, there was no necessity for any service of the notice of appeal or of intention to move for a new trial or of the bill of exceptions or of the various notices of the presentation and time of settlement thereof upon William F. Tebbetts, since he was, during all of these proceedings, represented by his attorney of record, A. W. Sorenson, whose acts and whose stipulations were, at all stages of this case upon both trial and appeal, binding upon both of said defendants. We therefore hold that this appeal is properly before this court for hearing upon the record presented herein, including the bill of exceptions prepared and presented in the manner above set forth.

This brings us to the merits of this appeal. The several contentions of the appellant herein are confined to an attack upon paragraph 3 of the findings of the trial court as to its sufficiency, both as to what it finds and what it fails to find, to support the judgment herein in so far as it is sought thereby to bind the appellant herein as a partner in the firm of William F. Tebbetts & Co. The said finding is as follows:

"That the defendant William F. Tebbetts, for the purpose of procuring said loan from said bank, stated to said bank that the defendant Ruth Tebbetts was a partner in the firm of William F. Tebbetts & Co.; that the defendant Ruth Tebbetts signed a written statement representing herself to be a partner in said firm, which statement was delivered to said bank, and she thereby permitted herself to be represented to said bank as a partner in said firm, and thereupon, and on the faith thereof, said bank gave credit to said William F. Tebbetts & Co. and loaned said sum of $12,500 to said firm and took said stock and securities as collateral security therefor and paid said sum to William F. Tebbetts & Co."

It must be conceded that the issue as to whether or not the appellant herein was a copartner of her codefendant, William F. Tebbetts, or was at any time whatever a member of the firm of William F. Tebbetts & Co., was squarely presented by the pleadings of the respective parties herein. It must also be conceded that the essential basis of any judgment which the trial court could render against the defendant Ruth Tebbetts herein must consist either in the fact that she was a copartner of William F. Tebbetts and a member of the firm of William F. Tebbetts & Co. at the time the transactions were engaged in and which form the foundation of the present action, or in the fact that she represented or permitted herself to be represented as such partner in the transaction with said bank, and that it, on the faith thereof, gave the credit in question to said firm. By no stretch of interpretation could it be held that the foregoing finding of the trial court amounted to a finding that Ruth Tebbetts was ever actually a member of the firm of William F. Tebbetts & Co. The utmost that can be claimed for it is that it is a finding that Ruth Tebbetts represented herself to said bank to be a partner in said firm and that upon the faith of such representation said bank gave the credit in question to said firm. Said finding was drafted upon the model furnished by section 2444 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Any one permitting himself to be represented as a partner, general or special, is liable, as such, to third persons to whom such representation is communicated, and who, on the faith thereof, give credit to the partnership."

[3-5] In the case of Nofsinger v. Goldman, 55 P. 425, 122 Cal. 609, 614, it was held that the rule of responsibility and liability declared in section 2444 of the Civil Code is founded upon the equitable doctrine of estoppel. Invoking this doctrine the appellant argues that a plaintiff, who relies upon the equitable doctrine of estoppel as declared in said section of the Civil Code, must plead the facts establishing such estoppel, in order to be entitled to make proof of the same, or to have the benefit of a finding predicated upon said section of the Code, and hence sufficient to support a judgment against one who, while not an actual partner, has estopped herself to deny that she is not so by her representations made in that behalf and by the reliance of the creditor of the firm thereon. Such is the well-settled law. Clarke v. Huber, 25 Cal. 593; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 39, 85 Am. Dec. 157; Etcheborne v. Auzeais, 45 Cal. 121; Newhall v. Hatch, 66 P. 266, 134 Cal. 269, 55 L. R. A. 673; Burk v. City of Santa Cruz, 127 P. 154, 163 Cal. 807; Fritz v. Mills, 106 P. 725, 12 Cal. App. 113, 117. The difficulty in this case lies in the application of the foregoing rule to it. The plaintiff herein did not in the first instance rely upon an estoppel, but upon the defendant's written admission that she was a member of the firm of Wm. F. Tebbetts & Co. He was entitled to so rely, and hence to plead in his complaint the existence of such partnership and the liability of the appellant as a member thereof. When the said appellant for the first time in her answer denied that she was such partner, the plaintiff, without any further pleading than that which the law by way of replication interposes, was entitled to prove the facts which would constitute an estoppel and to have a finding corresponding to his proof in that regard, and upon such finding to predicate a judgment in his favor under the terms of section 2444 of the Civil Code. The judgment in this case is such a judgment, and it is supported by the pleadings and the findings in this case. As to the evidence in support of such findings we find it to be in substantial conflict, and hence, under the well-settled rule, the finding of the trial court will not be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

198 Cal. 341

McELWEE et al. v. BECKWITH et al.
(L. A. 8234.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26,
1926. Rehearing Denied April 22, 1926.)

1. Specific performance §114(4) — Cross-complaint to compel conveyance of land held sufficient, as against general demurrer, to show redeposit and retender of money required to be deposited under escrow agreement.

In cross-action to compel conveyance, allegation that money deposited, pursuant to escrow agreement, had been withdrawn, but that prior to institution of plaintiff's suit to quiet title defendant procured the money and is ready, willing, and able to pay, held sufficient, as against a general demurrer, to show that money had been redeposited and retendered.

2. Vendor and purchaser §170—To keep tender alive under vendor's agreement to convey perfect title, it is unnecessary to maintain purchase money in escrow during period when purchaser cannot secure certificate of title.

Where vendor, having agreed to convey a perfect title, deposited deed in escrow and purchaser deposited price in escrow within time fixed but later withdrew it, held that, during period that trust company refused to issue purchaser certificate of title because of contest over title, it was unnecessary to maintain the deposit to keep the tender alive.

3. Specific performance §101—As respects right to enforce conveyance, held that during inability to convey perfect title provided for in agreement to convey, vendor cannot put purchaser in default even if latter was unable to make payment during such time (Civ. Code, § 1439).

While vendor's administrators were unable to deliver perfect title, or abstract showing clear title, as called for in vendor's option agreement, they could not put purchaser in default, as respects right to enforce performance, even if during such time he could not make payment, in view of Civ. Code, § 1439.

4. Executors and administrators §348—Decree ordering conveyance by administrator and fixing time for payment held not modification of order fixing no time, as reasonable time is to be inferred (Civ. Code, § 1657).

A decree ordering administrators to convey, and giving purchaser 30 days in which to make payment after notification of their readiness to convey, held not a modification of a prior probate court order that they convey, because, where no time is specified, a reasonable time in which to perform is to be inferred under Civ. Code, § 1657.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Walter T. McElwee and another, as special administrators, of the estate of Sila O. Law, deceased, against R. E. Beckwith and another, to quiet title, in which R. E. Beckwith filed an answer amounting to a cross-complaint for specific performance. From a judgment in favor of defendant R. E. Beckwith, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, L. M. Chapman, and Chapman & Chapman, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. P. Adams, Seymour, Silverton, and Duke Stone, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. The plaintiffs in this action are the special administrators of the estate of Sila O. Law, deceased. In that capacity they instituted this action against the defendant to quiet title to certain real property described in the complaint. The defendant Beckwith, answering the plaintiffs' complaint, and, in effect, by way of cross-complaint, pleaded the following facts: Prior to her death and on or about the 20th day of April, 1922, Sila O. Law, the deceased, executed an option for the purchase of the land in controversy, under the terms of which Mrs. Beckwith was granted the right to purchase the property in controversy for the sum of $13,000 in case it should be paid within 60 days from the date of the option. Said option provided the title to be given the defendant was to be "perfect," and that defendant should have an abstract showing "clear title." The defendant further pleaded that a deed was executed and deposited in escrow on the 3d day of May, 1922, by the deceased, who shortly thereafter died, and that within the time expressed in the option the defendant deposited in escrow the sum of $14,000 to cover the purchase price of the property and incidental expenses in connection with the transaction. Owing to the death of the deceased, the answer avers, it became necessary for the defendant to petition the probate court for an order directing the special administrators to convey the land in controversy in accordance with the option agreement, and an order so directing was made by the probate court. Thereafter one of the special administrators refused to join in the execution and delivery of a deed to the property to the defendant Beckwith, and the defendant accordingly prays in this action for a decree, directing the special administrators to execute and deliver a deed to the property in controversy here upon the payment of the agreed purchase price.

It is further alleged in the answer that, pending the delay in the perfection of the title to the property in controversy, the money deposited as a tender under the terms of the option agreement having been borrowed money, under a 30 days' time limit, was withdrawn pending the determination by the probate court of a contest of the last will and testament of the deceased based upon the ground that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the will, which was executed on the same day as the deed deposited in escrow by the decedent, and that prior to the institution of the present action the defendant Beckwith procured the money required to be deposited under the terms of the option agreement, and is ready, willing, and able to pay the moneys to said special administrators.

The court below rendered judgment denying relief to the plaintiffs and decreeing that the defendant Beckwith was entitled to a deed to the property involved, and ordering the administrators to execute and deliver the deed, and that "within 30 days after plaintiffs notify her [Beckwith] in writing of their ability and readiness to convey such title and to deliver such deed, the defendant R. E. Beckwith shall pay to the plaintiffs the sum of $13,000." It was further decreed that if the defendant Beckwith failed to pay the plaintiffs the moneys provided for in the decree, such failure, in the absence of good cause, would entitle the plaintiffs to quiet title against her.

[1] There is no merit in the contention that the answer of the defendant does not state a cause of action for the relief prayed for therein. While the answer may be ambiguous in the particular as to whether or not the money required to be deposited under the terms of the escrow agreement having been withdrawn after its deposit in the first instance was again redeposited to meet the terms of the escrow agreement, nevertheless the answer was good in this particular as against a general demurrer. Moreover, the action was tried and adjudicated upon the theory that the escrow money had been redeposited and retendered prior to the commencement of this action.

[2, 3] We find no merit in plaintiffs' contention that the evidence does not support the finding of the trial court "that the defendant R. E. Beckwith has always been ready, willing, and able to pay said purchase price, and is now ready, willing, and able to do so in accordance with the terms of said option, and that the delay in this connection has been caused by the plaintiffs." It is true that the money originally deposited in escrow by the defendant was withdrawn on the 21st day of July, 1922, and that the allegation of defendant's answer is to the effect that from and after the 23d day of May, 1923, defendant has been ready and willing and able to pay said moneys. Defendant, however, was excused from keeping said tender alive during the interim of time existing between the dates above mentioned by reason of the fact that during that time the title company would not issue a certificate of title to the defendant because a contest of the will of Sila O. Law, had been filed by one of the heirs, in which it was in substance alleged that Sila O. Law was at the date of her death, to wit, May 4, 1922, and for some time prior thereto, insane. It was the theory of the title company that a determination of insanity of the decedent upon the 3d day of May, 1922, would necessarily affect the validity of the deed executed by the deceased upon the same day. An adjudication by the court of this point in favor of the sanity of the decedent was not made until June, 1923. Regardless of the correctness of the title company's position, the fact remained that the title company did refuse to issue a certificate of title. The plaintiffs were not able to deliver to the defendant a clear title, nor an abstract showing clear title, as called for in the option agreement, and could not, therefore, put the defendant in default even if it be conceded that she was during that time unable to make the payment. Civ. Code, § 1439.

[4] Plaintiffs complain that the judgment in this cause contained terms that the court had no power to impose, for the reason that the defendant in this action was given 30 days after notice from the plaintiffs of their readiness to convey in which to pay the money. To permit the defendant 30 days in which to make the payment would, according to plaintiffs, change and modify the original order of sale of the court in the probate proceedings to the effect that the payment of the purchase price should be concurrent with the delivery of the deed. It will be noted, however, that the original order of the probate court directing the delivery of the deed and the payment of the money did not fix the time within which such delivery and payment should be made. No time having been specified, a reasonable time within which to perform is to be inferred. Civ. Code, § 1657. Evidently the lower court, when fixing the time of performance, deemed 30 days to be a reasonable time.

We need not discuss the question of the effect of the claim contempt proceedings had subsequent to the decree of the court, commanding the administrators to execute the deed to the defendant of the land in controversy. The record before us does not disclose the proceedings had nor the scope and effect of the judgment, if any, in said alleged contempt proceedings.

The trial court found in accordance with the allegations of the defendant's answer, and we are satisfied, from a perusal of the record, that the evidence adduced upon the whole case fully supports these findings and that the findings in turn fully support the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

176 Cal. App. 558

PEOPLE v. JENSEN. (Cr. 1279.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Feb. 19, 1926.
Rehearing Denied March 17, 1926.)

1. Criminal law — § 881(4)—Verdict of guilty of attempt to commit crime against nature held not precluded by acquittal of assault to commit.

Where accused was charged with assault to commit the infamous crime against nature, since an attempt might be made to commit the crime without assault on intended victim, verdict of guilty of an attempt to commit was not erroneous on theory that acquittal of assault was implied acquittal of attempt.

2. Criminal law — § 507(7)—If jury believed testimony of complaining witness that assault was without his consent, question of corroboration was unavailable to defendant (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for infamous crime against nature, if jury believed testimony of complaining witness that alleged assault was committed against his will and without his consent, question of corroboration, under Pen. Code, § 1111, was unavailable to defendant.

3. Sodomy — § 6—Testimony of complaining witness as to commission of crime against nature held sufficiently corroborated by testimony of arresting officers (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for infamous crime against nature, testimony of complaining witness as to commission of the offense held sufficiently corroborated, within Pen. Code, § 1111, by testimony of arresting officers.

4. Sodomy — § 6—Admitting in evidence lascivious photographs found on defendant's person at time of arrest held not error.

In prosecution for infamous crime against nature, admission in evidence of obscene photographs found on defendant's person at time of arrest, and evidence that they had been passed around among boys so that complaining witness saw them, with defendant's implied consent, held not error.

5. Criminal law — § 1037(2)—Prejudicial misconduct cannot be predicated on improper questions as to defendant's general reputation, where court was not requested to admonish or instruct with reference thereto.

Though reputation of defendant was not in issue, prejudicial misconduct cannot be predicated on questions asked witnesses as to general reputation of defendant for chastity and morality, where no assignment of misconduct was made, except as to one witness; nor was court requested to admonish or instruct jury with reference thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Chris Jensen was convicted of attempt to commit the infamous crime against nature, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar E. Houston and Perky & McConnell, all of Long Beach, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit the infamous crime against nature. The jury returned a verdict by which defendant was found guilty of the lesser offense of an attempt to commit the said crime. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The first point, as suggested by appellant, is that, because an attempt to commit the offense with which defendant was charged might be less than the crime of an assault with intent to commit it (People v. Akens, 143 P. 795, 25 Cal. App. 373), the verdict of guilty of an attempt would be tantamount to an acquittal of an assault; and, inversely, that defendant having been acquitted of an assault, the verdict necessarily carried with it an implied acquittal of an attempt.

It is clear that an attempt might be made to commit a crime of the nature of that involved in the charge made against defendant without going so far as actually to commit an assault upon the intended victim. Of the two offenses, manifestly the attempt is the lesser and is necessarily contained within the greater offense of an assault with intent to commit it.

The principle for which appellant argues is ruled adversely to his contention in the case of People v. Dong Pok Yip, 127 P. 1031, 164 Cal. 143, wherein, as here, the defendant was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit the infamous crime against nature, but was convicted of simple assault. In that case, among other things, the court said:

"Where the evidence clearly would support a verdict for a higher offense, the conviction of a lesser crime necessarily included therein will not be set aside. People v. Muhlner [47 P. 128] 115 Cal. 306. The only acquittal in this case was of the major crime charged, but this, as the Attorney General says in his brief, did not 'include an acquittal of an intent to take indecent liberties or to practice other lewd and lascivious acts or to commit any other unlawful act such as may constitute an assault.' We conclude, therefore, that the conviction of simple assault must be sustained under the evidence in this case."

In another case (People v. Oates, 75 P. 337, 142 Cal. 12), where the defendant was likewise accused by the information as was the defendant in the case at bar, and where the defendant was likewise convicted of an attempt to commit the crime charged, the court was called upon to consider a specification of error that the defendant had been prejudicially affected by an instruction to the jury to the effect that one who attempted to commit a crime, but who either failed in its execution, or who was prevented from, or intercepted in, the perpetration thereof, was, nevertheless, punishable for making the attempt. The court said:

"It is contended that sections 663 and 664 of the Penal Code 'apply exclusively to prosecutions for attempts to commit crime, and not for the crime itself,' and that the court erred in instructing the jury that 'a person who attempts to commit a crime, but fails, or is prevented or intercepted in the perpetration thereof, is punishable for said attempt.' The instruction is in the language of the Code (section 664), and the case falls within one of the classes of offenses mentioned therein; namely, an offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison. The instruction was not error. * * *

"The instructions asked by defendant and refused were based upon the erroneous assumption that defendant could not be convicted of an attempt to commit the crime charged."

[2] It is next urged by appellant that, the victim of defendant's alleged assault being an accomplice, no conviction could be had on the testimony of such accomplice, unless he was corroborated by other evidence which tended to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and that corroboration which merely showed the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof would be insufficient. Section 1111, Pen. Code.

[3] Defendant testified that he neither assaulted the complaining witness, as alleged in the information, nor made any attempt to commit the crime of which he was accused. The complaining witness testified to the commission of the act by the defendant, but steadfastly maintained that the alleged assault was committed against his will and without his consent. If the jury believed the testimony of the complaining witness (and the verdict would indicate that such was the case), the question of corroboration is not available to the appellant. People v. Howell (Cal. App.) 230 P. 991. But, even if it might be conceded that the appellant is entitled to raise the question, the testimony given by the two arresting officers was such that it was sufficient to completely cover appellant's objection. Each of the officers testified to finding the defendant and the prosecuting witness on a dark street, in the defendant's automobile, with its lights turned off; the only buildings in the vicinity being two warehouses. One of the officers testified that when he flashed his light in the defendant's car the defendant was in his shirt sleeves, and just getting into the driver's seat; his trousers were "unbuttoned up the front all the way * * *"; he was trying to hold them together with one hand," but that his private parts were exposed to view. Each of the officers testified that at the same time the prosecuting witness was lying on the floor of the tonneau of the automobile, with his overalls and underclothing off, which were also lying on the floor of the automobile. Each of the officers also testified to the finding of several obscene photographs in the pocket of a vest belonging to the defendant. In addition thereto, the statement made by the prosecuting witness in the presence of the defendant, and which statement was not denied by the defendant, in so many words was a charge that defendant had committed the offense of which he was accused.

As is laid down in the case of People v. Klopfer, 214 P. 878, 881, 61 Cal. App. 291, 296:

"If the [corroborative] evidence, however slight, tends in and of itself to connect the accused with the commission of the offense, it is sufficient."

And see People v. McLean, 24 P. 32, 84 Cal. 482; People v. Barker, 46 P. 601, 114 Cal. 620; People v. Robbins, 154 P. 317, 171 Cal. 479; People v. Garwood, 106 P. 113, 11 Cal. App. 665; People v. Martin, 125 P. 919, 19 Cal. App. 295; People v. Flood, 182 P. 766, 41 Cal. App. 377; People v. Taylor (Cal. App.) 232 P. 998.

In the case of Dong Pok Yip, 127 P. 1031, 164 Cal. 143, heretofore cited, the intended victim testified "that the defendant had not attempted to do anything to him." The total evidence against the defendant in that case was not stronger than the so-called corroboration of the prosecuting witness in the instant case, and yet the verdict of conviction and the judgment thereon were upheld by the Supreme Court. In the circumstances here presented, it would follow that appellant's contention cannot be sustained.

[4] Appellant specifies as error the admission in evidence, over defendant's objection, of certain obscene pictures or photographs which were found in the vest of the defendant at the time of his arrest. Some evidence was also introduced to the effect that, while defendant did not personally show the photographs to the prosecuting witness, defendant had shown them to "the other boys and the other boys passed them around," so that at least with defendant's implied consent the prosecuting witness saw them. The authorities do not sustain appellant in his contention.

In the case of People v. Bose, 153 P. 965, 28 Cal. App. 743, defendant was convicted of the crime of lewd and lascivious conduct with a minor child. On appeal error was predicated on the action of the trial court in admitting in evidence testimony to the effect that prior to the commission of the offense the defendant had exhibited to the child a photograph of a naked woman. In ruling upon the question of the alleged error, the appellate court said:

"But the evidence was admissible under various decisions of the appellate courts of this state. People v. Scott [141 P. 945] 24 Cal. App. 440; People v. Ah Leo [151 P. 748] 28 Cal. App. 164. In the latter case it is said by the second district court of appeal: 'The testimony is admitted as corroborative of the main charge and as tending to show the disposition of the accused and his proneness to commit the crime of the particular nature involved.'"

[5] Misconduct by the deputy district attorney in charge of the prosecution is specified by appellant as a reason why the judgment against defendant should be reversed and a new trial granted.

An examination of the transcript of the proceedings had on the trial of the action discloses that the alleged misconduct consisted in part in asking questions of witnesses as to the general reputation of defendant for chastity and morality in the community in which he resided. It also appears that at no time had the reputation of defendant been put directly in issue. The remaining specification of misconduct on the part of the deputy district attorney consisted in his asking one of the witnesses, also the defendant, whether, some time before the offense for which defendant was on trial was committed, defendant had not put his mouth on the private parts of the witness who was being interrogated.

As to each of the questions relating to the general reputation of defendant for chastity and morality and the question asked of the witness to whom reference had just been had, the court sustained defendant's objection. To the particular question asked defendant, no objection was made. No assignment of misconduct of the deputy district attorney was made by the defendant, except as to one question asked one of the witnesses regarding defendant's general reputation for chastity and morality; nor was the court ever requested by defendant to admonish or instruct the jury with reference thereto. The jury, however, was instructed that—

"If any evidence has been admitted and afterwards stricken out, you must disregard the matter so stricken out, entirely; and, if any counsel has intimated, by questions which the court has not permitted to be answered, that certain things are, or are not, true, you must disregard such questions and refrain from any inferences based upon them."

In the case of People v. Fodera, 164 P. 22, 33 Cal. App. 8, misconduct of the district attorney was one of the grounds relied upon by the appellant for a reversal of the judgment. The alleged misconduct was similar to that heretofore described herein. In effect it was ruled that, although error had been committed by the district attorney in asking one of the character witnesses for the defendant whether he knew of certain arrests of defendant for unlawful speeding of his automobile and his pleas of guilty thereto; also of other witnesses whether they had heard that the defendant was under investigation by the police for the selling of several stolen automobiles; also of another witness whether he had ever heard discussed that defendant had been a visitor at the home of a person who had been arrested as a member of the Black Hand Society—in view of the fact that there had been no assignment by defendant as to misconduct of the district attorney in asking the several questions, no request for admonition or instruction to the jury to disregard any insinuation which might be contained in any of the questions, and the further fact that the entire matter was adequately covered by a general instruction of the court to the jury—the defendant had not been prejudicially injured.

In the case at bar it is plain that the deputy district attorney was guilty of misconduct in asking each of the questions to which reference has been had; but, taking into consideration the facts as heretofore set forth herein in connection therewith, it is equally clear that, judged by the authorities heretofore cited herein, defendant is in no position to complain.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 354

PEOPLE ex rel. LOS ANGELES BAR ASS'N
v. CALIFORNIA PROTECTIVE CORPORATION. (Civ. 4607.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 1, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 936(1)—Where appeal is taken from order denying motion to retax costs, but record fails to show whether motion was made before or after judgment, appellate court will assume it was made after judgment.

Where record does not show whether order denying motion to retax costs was made before or after entry of judgment, and appeal has been taken from order, appellate court will assume that order was made after judgment, so as to be appealable.

2. Attorney and client $\S$ 52.

Complaint, showing corporation was engaged in rendering legal services by employing attorneys for its patrons at a yearly rate, held to state cause of action for exclusion of defendant from practice of law.

3. Corporations $\S$ 377½.

Corporation, contracting with patrons to furnish legal services for one year on payment of certain fee, held in "practice of law."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Practice of Law.]

4. Corporations $\S$ 377½ — Corporation can neither practice law nor hire lawyers to carry on business of practicing law for it (Civ. Code, § 286).

Corporation can neither practice law nor hire lawyers to carry on business of practicing law for it, notwithstanding members forming it are authorized to practice law, and though Civ. Code, § 286, permits formation of corporations for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves.

5. Quo warranto $\S$ 16, 19.

Quo warranto held proper remedy to exclude corporation from practicing law and to oust its franchise.

6. Quo warranto $\S$ 32—Quo warranto, on relation of Los Angeles Bar Association, to oust corporation of assumed right to practice law is not private action by association open to objection that association had no capacity to sue.

Proceeding in nature of quo warranto to oust corporation of its assumed right to practice law, brought on relation of Los Angeles Bar Association, is not a private action by the association, and therefore not subject to complaint that association had no capacity to bring it.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 761.

Assertions of error for which no reasons or authorities are given will not merit notice by appellate court.

8. Appeal and error $\S$ 907(3).

Where appeal is taken on judgment roll alone, without bill of exceptions, judgment will be deemed supported by necessary evidence properly adduced.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(1).

Every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with record on appeal must be indulged in favor of judgment of superior court.

10. Corporations $\S$ 377½—Corporation, "willfully" usurping privilege of practicing law, held properly fined, though its members thought privilege was authorized under charter (Code Civ. Proc. § 809).

Corporation, willfully usurping privilege of practicing law, held properly fined, under Code Civ. Proc. § 809, though its members had no intent to violate law, but thought acts were authorized under charter; "willfully" implying simply purpose or willingness to commit the act which is in fact unlawful.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Willful—Willfully.]

11. Corporations $\S$ 370(3)—General laws under which corporation is formed, and not its articles of incorporation, must determine what powers have been lawfully granted.

General laws under which corporation is formed, and not its articles of incorporation, must determine what powers have been lawfully granted, and assumption by incorporators of power or privilege not permitted by laws is unauthorized and void, even though corporation be valid entity.

12. Appeal and error $\S$ 709 — On appeal from judgment roll alone, denial of motion to retax costs cannot be reviewed, unless record is prepared, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq., in absence of showing of improper items on face of record.

On appeal from judgment roll alone, which does not include memorandum of costs, denial of motion to retax costs cannot be reviewed, where record is not prepared, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq., in absence of anything on face of judgment to show allowance of improper items.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Quo warranto by the People of the State of California, on the relation of the Los Angeles Bar Association, against the California Protective Corporation, to exclude the latter from the practice of law, oust it from all corporate franchises, and fine it $5,000. From the judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying motion to retax costs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles G. Young, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Leon French, of San Francisco, and Kenyon F. Lee, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is a proceeding in quo warranto brought by the Attorney General, in the name of the people, upon the information and complaint of the Los Angeles Bar Association, to exclude defendant from the practice of law, to oust it from all corporate franchises, and to fine it in the sum of $5,000.

[1] Defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. An answer was then filed which denied some, but not all, of the allegations of the complaint. In its answer defendant undertook again to demur to the complaint. The first demurrer was both general and special. It specified, as the sole ground for special demurrer, that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. The second demurrer was like the first, except that it added, as an additional ground of special demurrer, that there is a defect of parties defendant. The action came on for trial August 8, 1923, and, defendant failing to appear, the court, after overruling the second demurrer, filed findings of fact in favor of plaintiff and entered a judgment which restrained the corporation from the practice of law in this state, excluded it from the exercise of all corporate franchises in California, and imposed upon it a fine of $1,000. The judgment also provides that plaintiff shall recover costs, taxed in the sum of $84.05. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion to retax costs. The appeal comes to us upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions. Whether the order denying defendant's motion to retax was made before or after the entry of the judgment does not appear from any duly authenticated record before us; but since such an order is appealable only when made after the entry of judgment (7 Cal. Jur. 298, 299), we shall assume, an appeal having been taken from that order, that it was made after judgment, and that, therefore, the appeal is from an appealable order.

Briefly, the case as alleged in the complaint is this: The Los Angeles Bar Association is an unincorporated association of attorneys at law. The defendant, a corporation having its principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles, was incorporated under the laws of this state in November, 1921. The purposes for which it was incorporated, as set forth in its articles of incorporation, are:

"To collect debts due to its members or clients, to employ attorneys for its said members or clients, and to pay for such legal services for and on behalf of its said members or clients."

Defendant has been, and still is, entering into contracts of employment with its "patrons" in the manner following: Each patron is required to sign an instrument entitled "Application for Contract," which document, omitting its caption and certain nonessentials, reads:

"The undersigned herein agrees to take service contract with California Protective Corporation, Inc., for one year and to pay for same $24.00. Said California Protective Corporation, Inc., is authorized as agent to employ attorney for the undersigned for one year. With this application is paid to representative the sum of _____. Signed _____. Make all checks payable to the corporation. Cash or checks to accompany application."

Upon the execution of this document by the patron and the payment by him of $24 to defendant, the latter delivers to the applicant an instrument entitled "Service Certificate." That instrument, omitting the caption and other nonessentials, reads:

"This certifies that _____ has paid for one year from date hereof, and is entitled to the following service: Special yearly agreement with high class attorney whose name appears below and who will render the following legal services unlimited: Legal advice and consultation on all business, personal and private matters at the attorney's office. No charge. Legal papers—notes, mortgages, deeds, bills, leases, contracts, wills, partnership agreements, liens, attachments, notices, foreclosures, etc., drawn up or examined. No charge. (Stenographic fee only.) Court Work—Attorney will represent you in all civil or criminal actions in police or justice of the peace courts, of this city, without charge. Information and advice on new state laws and city ordinances, swindling schemes, counterfeits, fake charities, etc. Business rules, forms and business letters. No charge. * * * Application approved and contract issued this _____ day of _____ 192—."

The answer admits the allegations which constitute the basis for the foregoing statement of the case shown by the complaint.

[2-4] We think it clear that a cause of action is alleged in the complaint, and that the general demurrer was properly overruled. It is manifest from the statement of the purposes for which appellant was incorporated, as set forth in its articles of incorporation, coupled with the terms and provisions of the contracts of employment which it has been and still is making with its patrons, members, or clients, that appellant is engaged in rendering legal services to any and all persons who are willing to pay it the sum of $24 for one year's service. Without doubt, the services which its patrons are entitled to receive from the attorneys in its employ constitute the "practice of law," as that term is generally understood alike by judges, lawyers, and laymen. People v. Merchants' Protective Corp., 209 P. 363, 189 Cal. 531—particularly page 535, and cases there cited. Equally clear is it that these attorneys are employed by appellant and paid by it. In its articles of incorporation it is declared that one of the purposes for which it is incorporated is:

"To employ attorneys for its said members and clients, and to pay for such legal services for and on behalf of its said members and clients."

In the written applications which are signed by its patrons it is provided that appellant "is authorized as agent to employ attorney for the undersigned for one year." In the so-called "Service Certificate" which appellant signs and delivers to each of its patrons, it is declared that there shall be no charge to the patron for any of the legal services performed by the attorney. The $24 which the patron pays to the corporation is the only consideration which he gives for the legal services he is to receive. It thus appears that the attorneys retained and paid by the corporation are its agents, and that their acts are its acts. It follows, therefore from the admitted allegations of the complaint, that appellant was engaged in the practice of law. People v. Merchants' Protective Corporation, supra; State ex rel. v. Merchants' Protective Corporation, 177 P. 694, 105 Wash. 12; In re Co-operative Law Co., 92 N. E. 15, 198 N. Y. 479, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 55, 139 Am. St. Rep. 839, 19 Ann. Cas. 879. A corporation can neither practice law nor hire lawyers to carry on the business of practicing law for it. In Ruling Case Law (quoted in People v. Merchants' Protective Corporation, supra) it is said:

"Since, as has been seen, the practice of law is not a lawful business except for members of the bar who have complied with all the conditions required by statute and the rules of the courts, and, as these conditions cannot be performed by a corporation, it follows that the practice of law is not a lawful business for a corporation to engage in. As it cannot practice law directly, it cannot do so indirectly, by employing competent attorneys to practice for it, as that would be an evasion which the law will not tolerate." 2 R. C. L. 946.

The fact that the Legislature has authorized the formation of corporations for any purpose for which individuals may "lawfully" associate themselves (section 286, Civ. Code) does not make it lawful for appellant to practice law. It is true that individuals who are duly licensed members of the bar may "lawfully" associate themselves in any unincorporated form of association, such as a partnership, for the practice of law; but such individuals may not associate themselves for the practice of law under the ægis of a corporation. Though all the directors and officers of the corporation be duly licensed members of the legal profession, the practice of law by the corporation would be illegal nevertheless. At any time those directors and officers, by death or by the transfer of their shares, might be succeeded by laymen, none of whom possessed the right to practice law. As was said by the Washington Supreme Court in State ex rel. Lundin v. Merchants' Protective Corporation, supra:

"The right to practice law attaches to the individual and dies with him. It cannot be made a subject of business to be sheltered under the cloak of a corporation having marketable shares descendible under the laws of inheritance."

[5] A proceeding in the nature of quo warranto is the proper remedy in this case. The right to practice law "is in the nature of a franchise from the state," says the court in Re Co-operative Law Co., supra. When a corporation is assuming to exercise a privilege or franchise which it is unlawful for it to exercise, a proceeding in quo warranto lies to secure a judgment of ouster and seizure of its franchises. In People v. Dasha-way Ass'n, 24 P. 278, 84 Cal. 117, 12 L. R. A. 117, it is said that—

When corporations "do acts which are not authorized or are forbidden them to do, the state may forfeit their franchises and dissolve them by an information in the nature of a quo warranto."

See, also, People v. Milk Producers' Ass'n, 212 P. 957, 60 Cal. App. 439.

[6] In support of its contention that respondent has no legal capacity to sue, appellant says that "the relator," the Los Angeles Bar Association, "is not a corporation, and therefore has no standing in court to sue in the name of the association." This contention betrays an inexplicable misunderstanding of the nature of this proceeding and of the relation thereto of the "people" as plaintiff. The wrong of which complaint is made is of public, not private, concern. The only connection of the bar association with the case is shown by the opening of the complaint, wherein it is recited that the "people," by their Attorney General, "upon the information and complaint of the Los Angeles Bar Association," complain of defendant and allege the cause of action. The addition of the name of the bar association to the complaint did not make this a private action. It, doubtless, is true that the arm of the law moved as the result of information given to the Attorney General by the bar association; but that did not make the association the plaintiff in the action. In People v. Sutter Street Ry. Co., 49 P. 737, 117 Cal. 612, the court says:

"When the proceeding is in the interest of private persons, in whole or in part, they are said to be by relation, and, under the provisions of the Code, the relator may be required to give security for costs. * * * If the proceeding is one in which a private person can have no interest, the proceeding is not properly by relation. But the Attorney General had the power to institute the proceeding, and in either form it is by him. If unnecessarily he has added that it is by relation of a named person, that does no harm. It does not convert the proceeding into a private action."

See, also, People v. Milk Producers' Ass'n supra, and People ex rel. v. Garrett (Cal. App.) 237 P. 829.

[7] What we thus far have said disposes of all the points presented by the first demurrer. Appellant makes no attempt to point out wherein the ruling on the second demurrer is erroneous. All that is said in appellant's brief upon this subject is:

That "the court erred as a matter of law in overruling the demurrer filed with defendant's answer."

No authority is cited and no reason is assigned in support of appellant's bald assertion that the court erred.

"It is due to this court from the members of the bar to point out clearly and concisely the rulings complained of as erroneous and the reasons why they are so, with reference to authorities, if any. In case counsel will not take the trouble to do so, we shall deem the matter as of not sufficient importance to merit notice in an opinion." People v. McLean, 67 P. 771, 135 Cal. 309.

[8, 9] Appellant claims that the trial court erred in rendering judgment without receiving any evidence in support of the complaint. Unfortunately for this contention there is nothing in the record to sustain it. As the appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions, it necessarily is admitted that all evidence necessary to support the judgment was properly adduced. Every intendment and presumption, not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal, must be indulged in favor of judgments of the superior court. 2 Cal. Jur. 852. This presumption is further fortified in this case by a clause in the judgment expressly reciting that evidence "was introduced in support of the petition." Moreover, as we already have pointed out, respondent was entitled to judgment upon the uncontradicted allegations of the complaint.

[10] There is no merit in the claim that the court erred in imposing a fine of $1,000. It is not contended that in proceedings of this character the corporation is not subject to a fine under section 809 of the Code of Civil Procedure. What appellant does claim is: (1) That no evidence was introduced to justify the fine; and (2) that it did not willfully usurp the franchise or privilege of practicing law, since it did only that which its articles of incorporation purport to authorize. The claim that no evidence was introduced to warrant the fine has been disposed of by what has already been said. Equally without merit is the claim that appellant did not "willfully" usurp the privilege of practicing law. What it did was done by it knowingly and intentionally, though its officers may not have realized that its acts were unlawful. It is enough that through its governing body it did the unlawful acts purposefully and willingly. In this class of cases the fine is imposed as a punishment; and in so far as the infliction of this punishment is concerned the case bears a criminal aspect. "The judgment of fine," says the court, in People v. Sutter Street Ry. Co., 62 P. 104, 129 Cal. 545, 79 Am. St. Rep. 137—

"was solely for the purpose of punishment, and was not based on any evidence of loss or damage. * * * It would, we think, be more proper to speak of it as a sentence or judgment imposed on the defendant than to say it was a judgment recovered against him. * * * The fine could be inflicted upon defendant only on its being 'adjudged guilty of usurping,' etc. (Code Civ. Proc. § 809); which further illustrates that the case has a criminal aspect as to this feature of it."

The word "willfully," as used in the criminal law, implies simply the purpose or willingness to commit the unlawful act. It does not require any intent to violate law or to injure another. When the law forbids an act to be done, and it is done intentionally, guilty intent is conclusively presumed, although the offender was honestly mistaken as to the meaning of the law. People v. McCalla, 220 P. 436, 63 Cal. App. 783. The fact that appellant mistakenly supposed that its articles of incorporation gave it the right to practice law could be taken into consideration by the trial court, as it doubtless was, in fixing the amount of the fine; but appellant's belief that its conduct was lawful supplied no legal justification for its acts, nor did it afford a reason why its unlawful usurpation of the privilege of practicing law should go unpunished.

[11] It is argued that under its articles of incorporation a franchise to practice law was "granted" appellant by the state, and that, the franchise having thus been "granted," appellant should be allowed to exercise it "without being subjected to fine for doing so." The notion that the state "granted" a franchise to practice law involves a palpably mistaken conception of the principles governing this class of cases. While it is true that appellant usurped, or unlawfully exercised, the privilege or franchise of practicing law, it is not true that such privilege or franchise was "granted" to it. The practice of law by a corporation is, as we have seen, unlawful. The statute did not authorize appellant's incorporators to call it into being for an unlawful purpose. Mr. Fletcher, in his monumental work on Private Corporations, says:

"In most of the states, perhaps in all, statutes expressly require that the purpose for which corporations are formed shall be lawful, or that they shall not be 'inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the state.' Indeed, this would be implied in the absence of any express provision [italics ours], and it may therefore be laid down as the rule in all the states that a corporation cannot be organized for a purpose which renders it contrary to the common or statute law of the state, or contrary to public policy." 1 Fletcher's Cyclopedia of Corporations, § 114.

Where a corporation is formed under general laws, the law of the sovereign state from which its powers are derived, and not its articles of incorporation, must determine what powers have been lawfully granted. If the incorporators under a general statute, in drawing their articles, assume to embody therein a power or a privilege which the laws of the state do not permit, such assumed power or privilege is unauthorized and void; and though the corporation may be a valid corporate entity, and as such authorized to exercise its lawful powers, all acts done by it in the exercise of its assumption of unauthorized and illegal power are invalid and unlawful. The rule is thus stated in Corpus Juris:

"There is no valid incorporation if the purposes or powers specified in the charter, certificate or articles of incorporation are illegal or unauthorized by the statute, even though they have been approved by the court or officer, or have been filed; but it is established by a number of cases that if the incorporators under a general statute, in drawing their articles, certificate or charter, incorporate therein a grant or assumption of greater powers or privileges than the governing statute allows, this will not necessarily prevent them from becoming incorporated since the law will reject the excessive powers or privileges as surplusage. In such a case the illegal or unauthorized matter is void, and all acts done in pursuance thereof will be invalid." 14 C. J. 139. (Italics ours.)

[12] We cannot review the order denying appellant's motion to retax costs, because of the insufficiency of the record on appeal. That record was prepared under the original method, and not under the alternative method sanctioned by section 953a et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. As we stated earlier in this opinion, there is no bill of exceptions in the record before us. The memorandum of costs is no part of the judgment roll, and there is nothing on the face of the judgment to show that the trial court allowed any improper item of costs. If the costs were not regularly taxed, it was incumbent upon appellant to bring up the memorandum of costs, the motion to retax, and the affidavits, if any, presented therewith, in a bill of exceptions certified as settled by the trial judge, or else bring them up in the manner provided for by the alternative method.

Appellant having failed in this regard, there is nothing before this court which we may consider. Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192. Neither the certificate of the clerk nor the stipulation of the attorneys found at the end of the printed transcript on appeal can take the place of the judge's certificate, so as to constitute the transcript a sufficient record under section 953a. Pouchan v. Godeau, 131 P. 879, 21 Cal. App. 365. See, also, Leasure v. Hutton, 199 P. 549, 52 Cal. App. 711.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

245 PACIFIC REPORTER

2. Municipal corporations  294(2) — Notice necessary to confer on council jurisdiction to order work (Street Opening Act 1903, §§ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

Proceeding for street assessments being in invitum must, to charge property of owner, be based upon compliance with provisions of statute authorizing work, and hence giving of notice required by Street Opening Act 1903, §§ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567, is one of steps necessary to confer on council jurisdiction to order work done.

3. Municipal corporations  293(2) — Ordinance of intention must describe improvement with reasonable certainty (Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566).

Ordinance of intention required by Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, must briefly describe improvement proposed with reasonable certainty so that a person of ordinary understanding may know what is proposed to be done, and description of the improvement must not be so ambiguous as to be misleading.

4. Municipal corporations  293(1), 294(2) — Passage of ordinance of intention and publication of notice essential to confer jurisdiction to order street improvements (Street Opening Act 1903, § 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

In view of section 3, Street Opening Act, as amended by St. 1921, p. 567, failure of board of public work to post notices along line of proposed improvement no longer affects jurisdiction of council to order work under Street Opening Act, but passage of proper ordinance of intention and publication of sufficient notice of public work are under Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, essential to confer jurisdiction upon council to order improvements.

5. Municipal corporations  293(2) — Official name of street affected by improvement must be correctly given (Street Opening Act 1903, §§ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

Under Street Opening Act 1903, §§ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567, names of streets affected by proposed improvement must be correctly given in the description, and none other than official name may be employed; a street having but one name in contemplation of law, that being its official name.

6. Municipal corporations  293(2), 294(4) — Ordinance of intention and notice held fatally defective, where description of improvement incorrectly designated street and failed to describe opening of proposed street (Street Opening Act 1903, §§ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

Ordinance of intention passed pursuant to Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, and notice of public work given pursuant to section 3 thereof, held fatally misleading and defective, where description therein incorrectly designated streets affected and failed to describe the opening of proposed new street.

198 Cal. 308

O. T. JOHNSON CORPORATION et al. v.
CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.
(L. A. 8724.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1926.)

I. Pleading 129(1), 214(1).

Material allegations of complaint are admitted to be true by demurrer and refusal of defendants to answer.

7. Municipal corporations $\S$ 293(2), 294(4)—Phrase "to extend" street, as used in ordinance of intention and notice, could not be used to convey idea of opening entirely new street paralleling street officially named (Street Opening Act, $\S$ 2, 3, as amended St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

The phrase "to extend," as used in description in ordinance intention and notice of public work under sections 2 and 3 of Street Opening Act as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567, could not be used to convey the idea of opening an entirely new street paralleling the street officially named and described as the one to be opened, widened, and extended; the words "to extend" being used in conjunction with the words "to open," and "to widen" meaning prolongation of street from one of its termini and in the same general direction.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Extend—Extension.]

8. Municipal corporations $\S$ 294(4) — When description is misleading, notice of improvement is insufficient to sustain assessment (Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

Where description in ordinance of intention and notice of public work under sections 2 and 3, Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567, is so defective as to be misleading, the notice of improvement is insufficient and assessment proceedings will not be sustained.

9. Municipal corporations $\S$ 294(4)—Notice of improvement naming street to be opened, widened, and extended, but not new street, held not substantial compliance with statute (Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

Where ordinance of intention and notice of public work under sections 2 and 3, Street Opening Act, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567, designated an officially named street in the description as one to be opened, widened, and extended, but proposed work contemplated the opening of entirely new street paralleling the one designated, there was not substantial compliance with such provision of the statute requiring a brief description of improvement to be given.

10. Municipal corporations $\S$ 294(4)—Notice containing no intimation of improvement of new street did not comply with statute because it referred to "further particulars" in ordinance of intention (Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 3, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567).

Notice of public work under section 3, Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, pp. 566, 567, which contained no hint or intimation in its description of proposed improvement of new and unnamed street, did not comply with the statute, because it referred to further particulars in ordinance of intention; phrase "further particulars," as used in statute providing for reference to ordinance of intention, contemplating "some" particulars of the proposed improvement be given in description in order that property owners may be charged by reference with the further particulars.

11. Municipal corporations $\S$ 294(4)—Under notice to open, widen, and extend officially named street, attempt to open new street paralleling officially named street was unauthorized (Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566).

Under notice pursuant to section 2, Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, to open, widen, and extend an officially named street, attempt to open new street paralleling such officially designated street for four-fifths of a mile, and failing to improve officially named street, was contrary to law.

12. Municipal corporations $\S$ 266.

City electing to proceed under Street Opening Act 1903, p. 376, was bound by terms of act.

13. Municipal corporations $\S$ 294(4)—Property owners are entitled to have frontage which is given right of protest made certain of ascertainment (Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, and section 4 as amended by St. 1913, p. 431).

Property owners along streets sought to be improved under Street Opening Act of 1903 are entitled to have the frontage which is given the right of protest under section 4, as amended by St. 1913, p. 431, made certain of ascertainment, and hence Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, as amended St. 1921, p. 566, requiring percentage of city's portion of expense to be designated, must be complied with; for, unless that percentage be definitely stated, there is no way of ascertaining the total frontage, and therefore no basis for determining the sufficiency of protest on which council may legally act.

14. Municipal corporations $\S$ 293(1)—When city is to pay portion of cost of improvement, percentage of cost and name of fund should be stated in ordinance of intention (Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566).

When city is to pay portion of the cost of improvement, Street Opening Act 1903, $\S$ 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, requires definite percentage of the total cost and the name of the fund from which the payment is to be made to be stated in the ordinance of intention, and, these requirements being jurisdictional, an ordinance which failed to comply therewith was defective.

15. Statutes $\S$ 105(1)—Constitutional provision requiring subject of act to be embraced in its title must be liberally construed, being met by reasonably intelligent reference to subject to which legislation is to be addressed (Const. art. 4, $\S$ 24).

The requirement of Const. art. 4, $\S$ 24, requiring the subject of act to be embraced in its title, must be liberally construed, and constitutional requirement is met where there is a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation is to be addressed.

16. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 123(7)—Title of Street Opening Act providing in general terms for condemnation of property necessary for improvement held to sufficiently embrace subject of amendment providing for payment of portion of cost by city (Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, p. 565; Const. art. 4, § 24).

The title of Street Opening Act 1903, p. 376, which provides in general terms for the condemnation of property necessary or convenient for the laying out, opening, widening, and extending of public streets within municipalities, held sufficiently broad to embrace subject of amendment St. 1921, p. 565, providing for payment of portion of the costs by the city, and hence amendment was not violative of Const. art. 4, § 24.

17. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 871—Appropriation for proposed street improvement held not gift of public money, contrary to Constitution (Const. art. 4, § 24; St. 1903, p. 376, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566).

Where city, in ordinance of intention passed pursuant to section 2, Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, provided for appropriation of $1,500,000 as its portion of cost of such improvement, held, that such attempted appropriation did not constitute a gift of public money, contrary to Const. art. 4, § 24, as against contention that proposed improvement was of benefit only to property owners in district and not generally to the public.

18. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 293(1)—Declaration in ordinance of intention that property shall be assessed for improvement held to be read with provision for payment of portion of cost's (Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566).

Declaration in ordinance of intention passed pursuant to section 2, Street Opening Act 1903, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, providing that property in district shall be assessed to pay cost of improvement, held not to mean payment of whole cost, but was to be read in connection with provisions of ordinance for payment of portion of cost of improvement.

19. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 321(1)—Opening, widening, and extending street question of legislative determination, which will not be inquired into in absence of fraud.

It must be assumed that the opening, widening, and extending of a public street within city is matter of general public concern, extent of such interest and concern being a question of legislative determination which will not be inquired into in absence of fraud.

20. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 867(1)—Ordinance of intention proposing to pay city's portion of cost of street improvement held not to violate Constitution as incurring debt without consent of electors (Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566; Const. art. 11, § 18).

Mere fact that ordinance of intention passed pursuant to Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, provided for payment of $1,500,000 as its portion of cost of proposed improvement, did not violate Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibiting city from incurring indebtedness or liability in any year exceeding the revenue or income of such year without consent of two-thirds of qualified electors inasmuch as it was mere declaration of purpose not amounting to covenant which could be then enforced.

21. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 112(1)—Ordinance of intention under Street Opening Act held not required to be entitled (Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566; Pol. Code, § 4459).

Ordinance of intention passed pursuant to Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, held not required to be entitled as required by Pol. Code, § 4459, providing that official advertising when published must be preceded by words "describing or expressing in general terms character of notice intended to be given."

22. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 78.

Manner of enacting ordinances is municipal affair.

23. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 79—Legislative requirement of Political Code could not be imposed on city with respect to entitling ordinances, in view of Constitution (Pol. Code, § 4459; Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended in 1914).

Legislative requirement of Pol. Code, § 4459, relative to entitling of official advertising when published, could not be imposed upon city with respect to entitling of ordinances, in view of amendment of 1914 to Const. art. 11, § 6.

24. Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 297(1)—Charter provision postponing effective date of ordinances held to have no effect on ordinance of intention passed pursuant to Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566; City Charter, § 198g.

City Charter, § 198g, postponing effective date of ordinances until 30 days after publication, held to have no effect upon ordinance of intention under Street Opening Act 1903, § 2, as amended by St. 1921, p. 566, later being within charter exception relating to opening, widening, extending, or straightening of streets, and hence since such ordinance was effective at publication, hearing of protests conceded to be made after last day for filing protests, if such was the effective date of the ordinance, were properly refused.

25. Constitutional law $\Leftrightarrow$ 290(3)—Municipal corporations $\Leftrightarrow$ 266—Street Opening Act held to meet requirements of Constitution as to notice (St. 1903, p. 376).

Street Opening Act of 1903 held to meet requirements of due process with respect to notice and opportunity to be heard.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by the O. T. Johnson Corporation and others against the City of Los Angeles and others to enjoin street improvement proceedings. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. R. Young and C. E. Spencer, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This action was brought to enjoin the defendants the City of Los Angeles and certain of its officers from expending any money in furtherance of a proceeding initiated under the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376), including the cost of the prosecution of a pending action in condemnation. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled. The defendants stood on their demurrer and declined to answer, whereupon a judgment of injunction was entered as prayed. From this judgment the defendants appeal.

On January 22, 1923, the council of said city adopted an ordinance entitled:

"An ordinance declaring the intention of the city of Los Angeles to order the opening, widening and extending of Mines avenue between the easterly boundary of the city of Los Angeles and a point distant three hundred feet, more or less, westerly of Lorena street, and Ninth street between Lorena street and San Julian street, and of Tenth street between San Pedro street and Burck place, and of Country Club drive between Burck place and a point one hundred twenty-five feet westerly from said Burck place, in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California."

This ordinance was approved by the mayor and published on February 1, 1923. In and by said ordinance it was ordained in section 1 thereof that the public interest and convenience required, and it was the intention of the council to order, that the streets therein named (described precisely as set forth in the title) be opened, widened, and extended. Section 2 described more particularly the lands to be taken. This description is a technical description by courses and distances of the exterior boundaries of the proposed improvements, covering 18 pages of printed transcript. A series of maps prepared by the city engineer in August, 1923, for use in connection with the condemnation proceeding, was submitted at the oral argument for our enlightenment upon this appeal. From these maps, but not from the technical description in the ordinance, it is ascertained that the proposed improvement contemplates a street of uniform width extending from the easterly to the westerly boundaries of the city. Section 3 of the ordinance contains a description of the assessment district by courses and distances, covering 40 pages of printed transcript. Section 4, among other things, directs the board of public works to post notices of the improvement as required by law. Section 5 ordains that improvement bonds may issue to represent assessments as provided by the Improvement Bond Act of April 27, 1911. Section 6 provides as follows:

"It is further ordered and declared by said city council of the city of Los Angeles that a percentage of the expense of said improvement, in section 1 of this ordinance described, to wit: That percentage which the sum of $1,500,000 bears to the entire expense of said improvement shall be paid by the city of Los Angeles out of such fund as said city council may designate."

Thereafter, on February 2 and 5, 1923, the board of public works caused notices of public work to be posted. These notices described the proposed improvement precisely as described in the title of the ordinance of intention and not otherwise. The same form of notice was published in the official newspaper on February 7 and 8, 1923.

Within 30 days after March 4, 1923, the alleged effective date of the ordinance of intention, written protests against the proposed improvement were filed. The council heard protests filed on and prior to March 9, 1923, but refused to hear or consider protests filed after that date. Thereafter the council on June 28, 1923, adopted the final ordinance ordering the opening, widening, and extending of said streets, describing the same in the identical language used in the title and in section 1 of the ordinance of intention and in the notices of public work as posted and published. The city attorney then instituted an action in the superior court to condemn the lands alleged to be necessary for the improvement claimed by the city to have been authorized by the proceedings preliminary thereto, but the said action has not proceeded to judgment. The plaintiffs are the owners of lands within the assessment district which are subject to assessment on account of said improvement if the same be carried to completion as proposed.

[1] Because of the demurrer and the refusal of the defendants to answer, all of the material allegations of the complaint are, of course, admitted to be true. From these allegations and the record before us, it appears that Mines avenue is a public street extending from the easterly boundary of the city in a general westerly direction to a point where it meets the easterly terminus of Ninth street, approximately 150 feet westerly from Lorena street, which is an intersecting north and south street; that Ninth street extends westerly from its easterly terminus for a distance of about 8 miles; that Tenth street extends from its easterly terminus at its intersection with Central avenue in a general westerly direction and approximately parallel with Ninth street a distance of about 2,600 feet to its intersection with San Pedro street, which is a north and south street intersecting both Ninth and Tenth streets; that from San Pedro street to San Julian street, a distance of one block, Tenth street is not open; that Tenth street from San Julian street to Main street is, for a distance of some 1,800 feet, an open public street approximately paralleling Ninth street between the same intersecting streets; that both Ninth and Tenth streets for many years have been open, improved, and used public streets of the city and commonly known by their respective names; that it is not contemplated in the proposed proceeding to open, widen, or extend Tenth street between San Pedro and Main streets, but the proposed improvement contemplates the opening of an entirely new street through private improved property diagonally from the intersection of Ninth and San Pedro streets to the intersection of Tenth and Main streets. The situation may be better understood by reference to the accompanying diagram:

In section 2 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 as amended (Stats. 1921, p. 566), it is provided that before ordering any improvement therein authorized the city council shall pass an ordinance declaring its intention so to do, which ordinance "shall briefly describe the improvement and the land necessary or convenient to be taken therefor." Section 3 requires that a "notice of public work," shall be posted along the line of the proposed improvement and be published by an insertion in a newspaper designated by the city council for that purpose, which notice shall "briefly describe the improvement proposed, and refer to said ordinance of intention for a description of the assessment district and for further particulars."

[2-4] The respondents first attack the proceedings on the ground that the improvement actually intended and sought to be carried out by the condemnation proceeding and the improvement described in the ordinance of intention and notices of public work are fatally at variance, in that the improvement described in the ordinance of intention and notices includes the opening and widening of Tenth street between San Pedro street and Main street and the improvement as actually attempted to be carried out between San Pedro street and Main street consists of the opening of an entirely new and unnamed street between Ninth and San Pedro streets and Tenth and Main streets, and that therefore the property owners within the assessment district were not charged with notice of the proposed improvement as required by law. We think this contention must be sustained. The proceeding is in invitum. It is conceded by counsel for appellants that in such a proceeding the property owner "is entitled to an accurate compliance with those specific requirements of the statute which the Legislature deems important to safeguard his interests. These are the mandatory and jurisdictional provisions of the statute." This statement is in line with the well-established rule that the requirements of the statute essential to jurisdiction must be complied with. Flynn v. Chiappari, 215 P. 682, 191 Cal. 139; 19 Cal. Jur. 166, 167, 168, and cases cited. An ordinance of intention properly affording notice is essential to the jurisdiction of the council to order the improvement. Pacific Paving Co. v. Verso, 107 P. 590, 12 Cal. App. 362. The act requires that the ordinance "briefly describe the improvement proposed," and it has been held that the description of the work as required by the statute is a jurisdictional prerequisite. Fay v. Reed, 60 P. 927, 128 Cal. 357; 19 Cal. Jur. 237, and cases cited. "Unquestionably the giving of the notice required by the act is one of the steps necessary to confer upon the council jurisdiction to order the work done. 'Proceedings for street assessments, being in invitum, must, in order to charge the property of the owner, be based upon a compliance with the provisions of the statute authorizing the assessment, in so far, at least, as those provisions have to do with the giving of notice or other steps precedent to the jurisdiction of the board to order the work done.'" Ferri v. City of Long Beach, 169 P. 385, 176 Cal. 645. The ordinance of intention must briefly describe the improvement proposed with reasonable certainty so that a person of ordinary understanding may know what is proposed to be done (19 Cal. Jur. 239, and cases cited), and the description of the improvement must not be so ambiguous as to be misleading. Piedmont Paving Co. v. Allman, 68 P. 493, 136 Cal. 88. Because of the concluding paragraph of section 3 of the act as amended in 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 567), the failure of the board of public works to post the notices no longer affects the jurisdiction of the council to order the work, but the passage of a proper ordinance of intention and the publication of a sufficient notice of public work are, under the statute, steps necessary to confer jurisdiction. Ferri v. City of Long Beach, supra; 19 Cal. Jur. 214.

[5, 6] With the foregoing considerations in mind, the question is: Does the description in the ordinance of intention and in the notice of public work as published meet the requirements of the law? It is to be observed that said description specifies Tenth street between San Pedro street and Burck place as one of the streets to be opened, widened, and extended. Reference to the map discloses that Burck place is many blocks west of Main street. It also appears that Tenth street approaches and extends to San Pedro street from the east and proceeds westerly from San Julian street. Between San Pedro street and San Julian street Tenth street is not open. When the ordinance of intention proposed to open, widen, and extend Tenth street from San Pedro street to a point westerly from Main street, the only reasonable inference or conclusion to be drawn from the language employed in the description was that it was contemplated to open Tenth street from the point of its intersection with San Pedro street westerly therefrom where at the time it was not then open, and thus provide a through street. But instead of carrying out the improvement as so described the appellants admittedly propose to open an entirely new and unnamed street from the intersection of Ninth and San Pedro streets to Tenth and Main streets. It is conceded by the appellants that "the names of streets affected by the improvement must be correctly given, and none other than the official name may be employed, for in contemplation of law a street has but one name—its official name." Peck v. Stassforth, 103 P. 918, 156 Cal. 201. It appears without question that Tenth street is officially named as such easterly from San Pedro street and westerly from San Julian street. Tenth street westerly from its intersection with San Pedro street was definitely and specifically named as one of the streets affected and to be improved, but that portion of Tenth street between San Pedro street and Main street, by the admission of the appellants, is not to be opened, widened, extended, or otherwise improved, and a new street some 1,800 feet in length and not referred to in the brief description of the proposed improvement is to be opened through private improved property. As to the improvement attempted to be carried out, the description employed incorrectly designates the streets affected and also fails to describe the opening of the proposed new street. There is therefore not only a failure of description, but a misdescription of the proposed improvement, and the ordinance of intention and the notice of public work were fatally misleading and defective.

[7, 8] It is insisted by the appellants that the opening of the new street from Ninth and San Pedro streets to Tenth and Main streets should, considering the improvement as a whole, be deemed an extension of Tenth street from San Pedro street to Burck place. It is urged and it may be assumed that, in a comprehensive and unrestricted sense, the phrase "to extend" means to enlarge or to expand in any direction. But when used in conjunction with the phrases "to open" and "to widen," they can only mean a prolongation of the street from one of its termini and in its same general direction. Mayor of Monroe v. Ouachita Parish, 17 So. 498, 47 La. Ann. 1061; Owen v. Chicago, 53 Ill. 95. Certainly it may not be said that the phrase "to extend" may thus be used to convey the idea of opening an entirely new street paralleling for some 1,800 feet a street officially named and described as the one to be opened, widened, and extended. It has been held that, when the description is so defective as to be misleading, the notice of the improvement is insufficient and the assessment proceedings will not be sustained. McNutt v. City of Los Angeles, 201 P. 592, 187 Cal. 245; Park v. Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co., 173 P. 615, 37 Cal. App. 112; Sanger v. Chicago, 48 N. E. 309, 169 Ill. 286; Fry v. Salem, 164 P. 715, 84 Or. 184.

[9] Appellants again insist that, in view of the magnitude of the project, a substantial compliance with the statute has taken place. The record may not be so construed. If, under the notice given in this case, the city may not only fail to improve the street noticed for improvement for a distance of 1,800 feet, but also open a new street parallel therewith for that distance and not noticed for improvement, it might be urged with equal assurance that a new and unnamed and unmentioned street could be opened paralleling the street described in the notice for a mile or more—a proposition not possible of approbation under our street laws.

[10] It is also insisted by the appellants that, as section 3 of the act as amended provides for a reference in the notice of public work to the ordinance of intention for a description of the assessment district "and for further particulars," and as the notice in this case contained such reference, and as the 18-page description by courses and distances in section 2 of the ordinance of intention was, from an engineering standpoint, a correct description of the land to be taken, therefore the notice was sufficient. But the phrase "further particulars" contemplates that the brief description contains some particulars of the essential parts of the proposed improvement, in order that the property owner be charged by reference with the further particulars (White v. Harris, 48 P. 382, 116 Cal. 470), and there is no hint or intimation in the brief description of the proposed improvement of the new and unnamed street. Our conclusion on this point would not require that the brief description be greatly extended. It would seem to be a simple matter to have included therein a reference to "a new street from Ninth and San Pedro streets to Tenth and Main streets" with, of course, the omission of any reference to Tenth street between San Pedro and Main streets, if, as is admitted here, that portion of Tenth street was not to be improved.

[11] A similar defective and omitted description is alleged by respondents to have occurred as to the proposed opening of a new and unnamed street approximately 900 feet in length westerly from Lake street to Hoover street, whereas Tenth street westerly from Lake street and running in the same general direction as the proposed new street and being easterly from Burck place is not to be improved. Respondents likewise question the right of the city to open a new street, approximately 1,400 feet in length, from Crenshaw boulevard westerly to Burck place under a notice to open, widen, and extend Tenth street, when, as a matter of fact, Tenth street is, and was at the time of said notice, a public street known as such by the official name of Tenth street and running in the same general direction between the said termini and is not to be improved. Other defects in the description are alleged but need not be noted. But from those referred to, it will be seen that, under a notice to open, widen, and extend Tenth street between San Pedro street and Burck place, the respondents are attempting to open about four-fifths of a mile of new street through private property when the same territory is traversed by a street officially known as Tenth street and running in the same general direction and which is not to be improved. Further argument should not be required to support the conclusion that such a proceeding is contrary to law.

The case of McGarry v. Ellis, 202 P. 463, 54 Cal. App. 622, cited and relied on by appellants, does not sustain their position. In that case, the language of the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) was involved wherein the notice was required "to briefly describe the work or the assessment district or both" and to refer to the ordinance of intention for further particulars. The notice in that case described the work and also the assessment district as including the entire city, but did not state that certain lots were excepted from the district. Said notice was properly held sufficient because the property owner was given notice that his property was included in the district, and the omission to state that certain lots were excepted was declared immaterial.

[12] A serious objection is also urged by the respondents to the sufficiency under the statute of the provisions of section 6 of the ordinance of intention. The city had the option to proceed under the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Hayes v. Handley, 187 P. 952, 182 Cal. 273; Barber v. City of Los Angeles, 215 P. 897, 191 Cal. 253), and when it elected to proceed thereunder it was bound by the terms of the act (Osburn v. Stone, 150 P. 367, 170 Cal. 480; 19 Cal. Jur. 410, and cases cited). Section 2 of that act as amended in 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 566) appears to contain the only authority for the city to pay a portion of the cost of an assessment proceeding taken under the act. It is there provided:

"Said city council may, in its discretion, order and declare that the whole or any percentage of the expense of said improvement be paid out of the treasury of the municipality from such fund as the council may designate, in which case it shall be so stated in said ordinance of intention."

It is the contention of the respondents that as neither the percentage of the cost of the improvement to be borne by the city nor the fund from which such expenditure was to be made were ordered, declared, or designated in the ordinance of intention, the failure to follow the terms of the act in those respects resulted in a lack of jurisdiction to proceed. Section 4 of the act of 1903 as amended by Stats. 1913, p. 431, provides that protests against the improvement on the part of the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property fronting on the streets within the assessment district shall effectually bar all further proceedings under said ordinance of intention. Said section further provides:

"For the purpose of passing upon and determining the sufficiency of such protests in cases where by a resolution of intention it is declared that the city shall pay a percentage of the expense of the improvement, the city shall be deemed to be the owner of frontage within the assessment district bearing the same proportion to the whole frontage therein as the proportion of the expense which it is to pay, and the actual frontage of property within such district shall be increased by the addition of such amount as is necessary to produce said result, and the amount of frontage as so increased shall be the total frontage to be used in determining whether a protest is signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property fronting on streets or parts of streets within said assessment district."

[13] It will be noted that in section 6 of said ordinance, the city did not declare the amount of the city's proportion of the cost of the improvement in definite terms of percentage, but only "that percentage which the sum of $1,500,000 bears to the entire expense of said improvement." From this declaration it is impossible to determine whether the amount to be paid by the city is 5, 10, 50, or any other percentage of the entire cost of the improvement. In the absence of a definite percentage of the entire cost to be borne by the city, it is likewise impossible to determine to what extent the frontage in the district is to be enlarged for the purpose of ascertaining protest frontage. It is no answer to this contention to say that, if a definite percentage be not declared, there would be no consequent enlargement of the frontage and no prejudice to the protestants. In order that the statute be given effect, there must be an enlargement of the frontage in proportion to the percentage of the contribution of the city. Unless that percentage be definite there is no way of ascertaining the total frontage and therefore no basis for determining the sufficiency of protests and no basis on which the council may legally act on protests. The property owners are entitled to have the frontage which is given the right of protest made certain of ascertainment, and the statute in such matters must be followed. Dehail v. Morford, 30 P. 593, 95 Cal. 457; Beck v. Ransome-Crummey Co., 184 P. 431, 42 Cal. App. 674.

[14] Respondents contend that there was also a fatal noncompliance with the statute when the ordinance of intention failed to designate the fund from which the city's portion of the expense was to be paid. Appellants in reply state that it is no concern of the property owner from what fund the city's portion is to be paid and that the language of the act is reasonably susceptible of the construction that the ordinance shall state merely that the city's portion shall be paid "out of such fund as the city council may designate." We think the proper construction of the language of the act requires that the fund be designated in the ordinance of intention and that such designation is for the benefit of the property owner and jurisdictional. The appellants concede the correctness of the rule laid down in Dehail v. Morford, supra, wherein this court said that "every requirement of the statute which has a semblance of benefit to the owner must be observed, in order to give the municipal jurisdiction in the premises." If the fund be designated as the general fund or the reserve fund or the unappropriated balance, the property owner might be satisfied with the expenditure from that source as entailing no additional burden on his part, but if the fund be designated as a fund to be derived from a general bond issue to be thereafter authorized and to satisfy which his property would be subject to an additional tax, or a fund from which the payment of the city's portion could for some reason not legally be made, he would know or be charged with knowledge of the additional burden to be borne by him and be governed accordingly in deciding whether or not he would protest. We therefore hold that the statute requires that when the city is to pay a portion of the cost of the improvement, a definite percentage of the total cost and the name of the fund from which the payment is to be made be stated in the ordinance of intention, and that these statutory requirements are jurisdictional.

[15, 16] The respondents attack the said proceeding on additional grounds which are treated rather extensively in the briefs. Some consideration of these further objections is deemed essential to a proper disposition of the case. It is insisted by them that the amendment to the Street Opening Act of 1903 authorizing the municipality to pay a portion of the cost of improvement is void for the reason, so it is claimed, that the title of the act does not embrace the subject of the amendment and is therefore legislation contrary to the provision of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution. Estate of Melone, 74 P. 991, 141 Cal. 331, is relied upon. In that case the specific enumeration of subjects in the title of the act in question was held to be exclusive. Here the title is general and does not assume to be an index of the particular matters embraced in the act. In general terms it provides for the condemnation of property necessary or convenient for the laying out, opening, widening, and extending of public streets within municipalities. The constitutional provisions requiring the subject of the act to be embraced in its title must be liberally construed, and "all that is required to be contained therein in order to meet the constitutional requirement is a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation is to be addressed." Estate of Wellings, 221 P. 628, 634, 192 Cal. 506, 519; McClure v. Riley (Cal. Sup.) 243 P. 429. When so construed, it is obvious that the payment by the city of a portion of the cost of the improvement might be properly provided for under the designation in the title of the general purposes of the act. Davies v. City of Los Angeles, 24 P. 771, 86 Cal. 37.

[17-19] Again, it is contended that the attempted appropriation of $1,500,000 by the city constitutes a gift of public money contrary to section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution. It is argued that, inasmuch as the city council has declared that the property within the assessment district is to be benefited by the proposed improvement, it must therefore follow that the improvement is of benefit to the property in the district and is of no benefit to the general public over and above that ordinarily received by the general public from all streets. It is further argued that, as the ordinance of intention provides that the property in the district shall be assessed to pay the cost of the improvement, such declaration means the payment of the whole cost. We think the declaration referred to must be read in connection with the provisions of section 6 of the same ordinance, which provides for the payment of a portion of the cost of the improvement. It must be assumed that the opening, widening, and extending of a public street within a city is a matter of general public interest and concern (Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 528), and the question of the extent of such general public interest and concern is primarily one of legislative determination, and in the absence of fraud, and none is here suggested, such determination may not be inquired into (City of Oakland v. Garrison, 228 P. 433, 194 Cal. 298).

[20] It is alleged in the complaint that at the time of the adoption of the ordinance of intention there was not, nor was there at any time during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, in the city treasury of Los Angeles any sum or amount sufficient to enable the city to pay the $1,500,000 proposed to be paid, and that the electors had not authorized the said indebtedness. As this allegation was admitted, it is insisted that the indebtedness thus attempted to be incurred was unauthorized and contrary to the provisions of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, which provides that no city shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any year exceeding the income and revenue provided for such year without the consent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose. We think the order and declaration of the council as embodied in section 6 of said ordinance do not constitute the incurring of an indebtedness as contemplated by the section of the Constitution referred to. The mere declaration of a purpose is there evidenced which does not amount to a covenant which could then be enforced. The proceedings may be abandoned or the improvement may be delayed for many years. Notwithstanding the facts as alleged and as admitted, such a state of the city's finances may not be in existence at the time the appropriation is actually to be made.

[21-23] It is contended that the ordinance of intention was not properly entitled as required by section 4459 of the Political Code. It is therein provided that official advertising when published, must be preceded by words "describing or expressing in general terms the purport or character of the notice intended to be given." This section was added to the Political Code in 1903. In 1908 it was said by this court in Ex parte Young, 97 P. 822, 154 Cal. 317, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 330, that there was at that time no statute which required ordinances of boards of supervisors to be entitled. In the same year the District Court of Appeal made the same declaration in Ex parte Yung, 94 P. 594, 7 Cal. App. 440. It is true that in each of those cases Ex parte Haskell, 44 P. 725, 112 Cal. 412, 32 L. R. A. 527, decided in 1896, was cited as authority for the declaration; but then again in Re Johnson, 190 P. 852, 47 Cal. App. 465, decided in May, 1920, it was said that a title was not an indispensable part of a city ordinance. The section of the Political Code referred to does not appear to have been considered in any of those decisions, but it is significant that since their rendition the section has not been amended. Moreover, if that section be deemed to require that ordinances of boards of supervisors and of cities operating under general law be entitled, it would not necessarily follow that they would impose a like requirement on ordinances of a city operating under a freeholders' charter. The manner of enacting city ordinances is a municipal affair. In re Pfahler, 88 P. 270, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911; Morton v. Broderick, 50 P. 644, 118 Cal. 474. The charter of the city of Los Angeles at the time of the passage of the ordinance of intention contained provisions relating to the enactment of ordinances, and although it does not appear that there was then any regulation that ordinances be entitled or that they need not be entitled, it is clear that since the amendment in 1914 of section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution the legislative requirement of section 4459 of the Political Code could not be imposed on the city. Civic Center Ass'n v. Railroad Commission, 166 P. 351, 175 Cal. 441; Morgan v. City of Los Angeles, 187 P. 1050, 182 Cal. 301; 18 Cal. Jur. 784, and cases cited.

[24] At the time of the adoption of the ordinance of intention, section 198g of the City Charter provided that an ordinance making or authorizing any contract should not go into effect until the expiration of thirty days from its publication, with certain exceptions, including contracts that require the payment by the city of less than $25,000, and it is urged that the ordinance in question authorized a contract for an expenditure in excess of $25,000 and therefore was not within the exception. But said section 198g at that time also contained a provision excepting from the 30-day restriction "an ordinance * * * relating to * * * the opening, widening, straightening or extension of streets." The ordinance of intention appears to be in this excepted classification and the 30-day postponement provision had no effect upon it. It is not disputed that if the ordinance of intention was in effect on the date of its publication, then March 9 was the last day for the filing of protests. The city council therefore proceeded correctly in refusing to consider or pass upon protests filed after that date.

[25] Finally, it is insisted that the act of 1903 does not provide for a hearing to be had on the question of the respective portions of the general public and local benefits, and therefore due process of law is not accorded the property owners on that question. Without prolonging the discussion, it is sufficient to say that we think the said act provides for all the notice and opportunity to be heard essential in that connection to the requirements of due process.

From what has been said as to the failure of the appellants to observe jurisdictional requirements, it necessarily follows that the demurrer was properly overruled, and that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 327

Viola BOGUE and Herminia Badham, Plaintiffs and Respondents, v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES (a Municipal Corporation), Boyle Workman, Ralph L. Criswell, Edwin Baker, Fred Wheeler, Walter Mallard, W. C. Mushet, Miles Gregory, Robert M. Allen, and W. J. Sanborn, as Members of and Constituting the City Council of the City of Los Angeles; John S. Myers, City Auditor of said City; Ned T. Powell, City Treasurer of said City; Edward J. Delorey, Arthur Eldridge and Hugh J. McGuire, as Members of and Constituting the Board of Public Works of said City, Defendants and Appellants. (L. A. 8725.)

(Supreme Court of California, March 24, 1926.)

In bank.

Appeal by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hartley Shaw, Judge, in an action to enjoin street improvement proceedings. Affirmed.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty. and Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. R. Young and O. E. Spencer, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. The purpose of this action is to enjoin the city of Los Angeles and the other defendants, officers of said city, from carrying forward to completion improvement proceedings initiated under the Street Improvement Act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376). Following an order overruling a general demurrer to the complaint, the defendants refused to answer, whereupon a judgment of injunction was entered against them as prayed. From said judgment the defendants appeal.

The improvement proceedings and the issues involved herein are the same as those involved in the case of O. T. Johnson Corporation et al. v. City of Los Angeles et al. (L. A. No. 8724) 245 P. 164, this day decided, with the exception that the plaintiffs herein, who are the owners of property proposed to be taken for the opening of the new street from Ninth and San Pedro streets to Tenth to Main streets, in addition to the matters set out in the complaint in the other action, charge the defendants herein with knowingly proceeding under a misleading ordinance of intention and notice of public work with the intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiffs, and that they, the plaintiffs, were deceived thereby to their damage. They allege that they knew of the adoption of said ordinance and of the notice of public work and relied thereon, believing that the improvement contemplated by the description therein contained was the opening, widening, and extending of the streets named therein, including the opening of Tenth street from San Pedro to San Julian streets and the widening of Tenth street from San Julian street westerly therefrom, and that because of their reliance on said description they did not protest against the said improvement and did not discover the fact that the city proposed to take their lands for the purpose of opening a new street not described until the time for protest had expired. The defendants argue that their admission of the said allegations does not amount to an acknowledgment of fraud for the reason, so they contend, that said description and notice were sufficient, and therefore the plaintiffs could not be misled; but inasmuch as the judgment herein must be affirmed because of the failure of the defendants to observe jurisdictional requirements, as set forth in the opinion in the other case, we deem it unnecessary to enter upon a discussion of the effect of these additional admissions in the pleadings, even though we should hold, as plaintiffs contend, that they in themselves are sufficient to sustain the action of the trial court.

On the authority of the case above referred to and this day decided, it is ordered that the judgment herein be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 301

SMITH v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BARNES CITY et al. (L. A. 9188.)

(Supreme Court of California, March 22, 1926.)

1. Municipal corporations ~~§~~ 149(2)—Trustees of city of sixth class, elected at special incorporation election, hold office only until next general municipal election (Municipal Corporations Act [St. 1883, p. 93] §§ 1-3, inclusive; section 352, as amended by St. 1919, p. 19; section 3 as amended by St. 1923, p. 103, § 2).

Trustees of city of sixth class, incorporated under Municipal Corporations Act, §§ 1-3, inclusive, elected at special incorporation election, hold office under section 3 as amended by St. 1923, p. 103, § 2, only until next general municipal election, the amendment to section 3 providing for their holding for such term as hereinafter provided, not referring to four and two year terms of such officers, under section 352, as amended by St. 1919, p. 19.

2. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 230—Section of statute, after amendment, should be construed as original legislation, giving effect to each part consistent with entire statute.

Section of statute after amendment should be construed in the same light as an entirely new and original piece of legislation, giving to each part, if possible, some effect consistent with the entire statute.

3. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 207—Provision of act more in harmony with fundamental purpose of statute should be given effect in case of irreconcilable conflict with another provision without regard to its order of position.

Where different provisions of act are in irreconcilable conflict, the provision which is more in harmony with the fundamental purpose of the statute should prevail without regard to whether it comes first or last in order of position.

4. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 207—Though change in language is sometimes warranted to give effect to legislative intent, such is not justifiable to change clear import of word in one provision to give effect to provision of uncertain and doubtful meaning, which is inimical to general purpose and intent of statute as well as irreconcilably inconsistent with associated provision harmonizing with legislative intent.

Though change in language is sometimes warranted to give effect to legislative intent, such is not justifiable to change clear import of word in one provision in order to give force and effect to entirely different provision that is of uncertain and doubtful meaning, and inimical to general purpose and intent of statute as well as irreconcilably inconsistent with associated provision harmonizing with legislative intent.

In Bank.

Original mandamus by Leslie E. Smith against the Board of Trustees of Barnes City and others to compel respondents to call and provide for holding of an election of city officers. Peremptory writ issued.

Frederick Baker, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Geo. DeLany Blair, of Los Angeles, and C. A. Lindeman, of Yuma, Ariz., for respondents.

FINLAYSON, Justice pro tem. This is a proceeding in mandamus brought by an elector of Barnes City to compel respondents to call and provide for the holding of an election of city officers on the second Monday in April, 1926.

On February 13, 1926, pursuant to a special election held on the 3d day of that month (hereinafter referred to as the incorporation election), Barnes City was incorporated as a city of the sixth class under the provisions of sections 1 to 3 inclusive, of the Municipal Corporations Act (St. 1883, p. 93). The respondent trustees and the other elective officers enumerated in section 852 of the act were elected at the incorporation election, and are now acting as such officers. Petitioner has demanded that the respondent trustees call a general municipal election to be held on the second Monday in April next, for the choice of successors to themselves and to the other elective officers of the municipality. Respondents neglected to comply with this demand, and, therefore, this proceeding was initiated. The case turns upon the construction to be placed upon a certain provision in section 3 as amended in 1923. All the parties to the proceeding seem to be animated solely by a desire to secure an authoritative construction of the statutory provision in question.

Prior to its amendment in 1923, section 3 of the Municipal Corporations Act provided that the officers chosen at the incorporation election should hold their respective offices "only until the next general municipal election to be held in such city or town, and until their successors are elected and qualified." In 1923 the Legislature so amended the section that it now provides that the officers chosen at the incorporation election shall hold their respective offices "only until the next general municipal election to be held in such city or town, or for such term as shall be hereinafter provided for officers of cities of the class to which the same may belong, and until their successors are elected and qualified." Stats. 1923, p. 103. We have italicized the new matter added by the amendment.

Section 852, which has been amended at three different sessions of the Legislature, has always contained a provision to the effect that the elective officers of cities of the sixth class shall be chosen "at a general municipal election" to be held "on the second Monday in April in each even-numbered year." As that section now reads (Stats. 1919, p. 19), it is further provided that the elective officers, i. e., the members of the board of trustees, the clerk, and the treasurer, "shall hold office for the period of four years from and after the Monday next succeeding the day of such election, and until their successors are elected and qualified." The section also provides that the "respective terms of the members of the first board of trustees elected under the provisions of this section shall be determined as follows: The two members elected by the highest number of votes shall hold office for four years, and the three members elected by the lowest number of votes shall hold office for two years."

[1] If section 3 of the act read now as it did prior to the amendment of 1923, it is obvious that the respondent trustees and the other elective officers chosen at the incorporation election would hold their respective offices only until the election and qualification of successors to be voted for at a general municipal election held on the second Monday in April next. But it is claimed that, because the amendment of 1923 added to section

3 the words "or for such term as shall be hereinafter provided for officers of cities of the class to which the same may belong," the respondent trustees and the other elective officers chosen at the incorporation election are entitled to hold their respective offices until the election and qualification of successors to be elected not earlier than the second Monday in April, 1928.

The amendment cannot be given the effect claimed for it. Under the language added by the amendment such officers as may come within its purview, if any there be, are to hold for such "term" as shall be provided for officers of cities of the class to which they belong. If it were held that this new provision refers to officers in cities of the sixth class, it would be necessary to hold that the "term" referred to by the amendment is the same "term" which is provided for by section 852 of the act—that being the only section of the statute which purports to fix the term of office in cities of the sixth class. Section 852 provides for a general term of four years—running from the Monday next succeeding the general municipal election at which the officers are elected—and likewise for a special term of two years for three of the members of the first board of trustees chosen at the general municipal election following the incorporation of the city.

It cannot be that the word "term" in the clause added to section 3 by the amendment was intended to include the general four-year term mentioned in section 852. Had that been the legislative intent it would have been easy to say so in plain and unambiguous language. Moreover, the four-year term provided for in section 852 commences on the Monday next succeeding the second Monday in April in the year in which the general municipal election is held. If the officers elected at the incorporation election held for a four-year term—and that is the only term provided for officers of cities of the sixth class, if we except the special two-year term provided for certain of those officers—then that four-year term must either commence at the time when the certificates of election are filed in the office of the secretary of state as provided by section 3 or it must commence on the next succeeding third Monday of an even-numbered year. If a four-year term for such officers commenced with the filing of their certificates of election in the office of the secretary of state, it might expire almost two years before the election and qualification of their successors, as would be the case if the incorporation election were held shortly after the second Monday in April of an even-numbered year. In that event the officers chosen at the incorporation election would have to hold over their four-year term until their successors had been elected and had qualified, in which case their total tenure of office would be little short of six years. The same result would follow if a four-year term were tacked on to the period intermediate the filing of the certificates of election with the secretary of state and the ensuing third Monday of an even-numbered year. It follows, therefore, that a construction of the word "term," as used in section 3, which would give to that word such a scope and meaning that it would include the four-year term provided for by section 852, would be entirely out of harmony with the general purpose and intent of the statute, for the general design of the act contemplates the creation of self-governing municipalities, the electors whereof, at least in so far as cities of the sixth class are concerned, shall be accorded the privilege of voting for their city officers as often as once in every two years.

[2, 3] Moreover, any construction of the word "term," as used in section 3, which would cause it to include the four-year term provided for by section 852, would bring this part of section 3 into irreconcilable conflict with the immediately preceding legislative declaration that the officers chosen at the incorporation election shall hold their respective offices "only until the next general municipal election to be held in such city or town." In construing the two seemingly inconsistent provisions in that part of section 3 which is now under consideration we must not lose sight of the fact that the first of those provisions—the one which declares that the officers chosen at the incorporation election shall hold office "only until the next general municipal election"—was re-enacted at the time of the amendment. It cannot be assumed that the intention to enact and to publish the new portion was any more clear and direct than was the intention to re-enact and to republish the old portion of the section. The whole section, since its amendment, should be construed in the same light that an entirely new and original piece of legislation would be viewed, giving to each part, if possible—the old as well as the new—some effect consistent with the entire statute. Donlon v. Jewett, 26 P. 370, 88 Cal. 530. Nor does it necessarily follow, merely because the old words are placed before the new ones which the 1923 amendment added, that therefore the former are supplanted by the latter if there is any irreconcilable inconsistency between them. True, it has sometimes been stated as a rule of construction that, where there is an irreconcilable conflict between different provisions of a statute, that provision which is last in order of position will prevail as being the latest expression of the legislative will. But this purely arbitrary rule of construction, which, if it exists at all, springs from the necessity for some rule in peculiar cases, is not to be applied when the provision standing first in the act is the one which is more in harmony with the general purpose of the statute. 25 R. C. L. p. 1012. In the present instance it is clear that the provision which comes first in the order of position—the one to the effect that the officers chosen at the incorporation election shall hold “only until the next general municipal election”—is the one which is more in harmony with the fundamental purpose of this statute, for, when the act is considered in its entirety, it is at once apparent that it was enacted for the creation and organization of self-governing municipalities, the electors whereof should be accorded the privilege of voting for their respective municipal officers at least as often as once in every two years.

[4] If the word “term,” as used in the added clause of section 3, were held to include the special two-year term provided for in section 852, and that is precisely what respondents claim, then it would be possible, in certain cases, for the officers elected at the incorporation election to hold office for a period just short of four years, as, for example, where the incorporation election was held shortly after the second Monday in April of an even-numbered year. The reasons already stated for holding that the word “term” in section 3 should not be construed as including the four-year term provided for by section 852 apply with equal cogency to any construction which would cause that word to include the special two-year term provided for by section 852. And there is this further objection: That part of section 852 which relates to the special two-year term reads: “The respective terms of the members of the first board of trustees elected under the provisions of this section shall be determined as follows,” etc. In order to give the word “term,” as used in section 3, the meaning contended for by respondents, it would be necessary to construe this part of section 852 as though it read: “The respective terms of the members of the first board of trustees elected under the provisions of this act shall be determined,” etc.; thus substituting the word “act” for the word “section.” It may be conceded that the canons of construction sometimes warrant a change in the language of a statute where it is necessary to do so in order to give effect to the manifest intention of the Legislature. But this license of construction is not justifiable, where, as here, it is sought to change the clear import of a word in one provision in order to give force and effect to an entirely different provision that is of uncertain and doubtful meaning and is inimical to the general purpose and intent of the statute as well as irreconcilably inconsistent with an associated provision which does harmonize with the general legislative purpose and intent.

Summarizing our views, we may say: In order to give to the clause added to section 3 by the amendment of 1923 the meaning claimed for it by respondents, two drastic acts of judicial legislation would be necessary. First, it would be necessary to cut down and to entirely extirpate the provision in section 3 which declares that officers elected as respondents were shall hold office “only until the next general municipal election”; and, secondly, it would be necessary to substitute in section 852 the word “act” for the word “section.” For the reasons stated we think any such invasion of the legislative function is wholly without warrant. It follows, therefore, that it is the duty of respondents to call, and to provide for the holding of, a general municipal election on the 12th day of April next.

Let the peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

198 Cal. 329

In re SPENCER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 11539.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1926.)

1. Domicile ⇨8—No presumption is indulged that unmarried man, whose employment suggests no permanency of abode, would continue to live for any length of time in place where he last voted.

No presumption is indulged that unmarried man, whose employment suggests no permanency of abode, would continue to live for any great length of time in place where he voted.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨29(3) — Finding that deceased was resident of county held sustained by evidence and conclusive on motion to dismiss proceedings.

Finding that deceased was resident of county held sustained by evidence and conclusive on collateral attack five years after issuance of letters of administration by motion to dismiss proceedings.

3. Courts ⇨475(2, 3)—Superior court, where petition for letters of administration is first filed, has exclusive jurisdiction to determine question of decedent's residence.

Court in which petition for letters of administration is first filed has exclusive jurisdiction to determine question of decedent's residence, and its determination is reviewable only by appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; George Samuels, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of J. Marshall Spencer, deceased. From an order of the Superior court of Alameda county denying a motion to dismiss probate proceedings, the Public Administrator of the County of Sacramento appeals. Order affirmed.

W. Rigby, of Sacramento, Fabian H. Hillebrandt, of San Francisco, and Hugh H. Sydenham, of Sacramento, for appellant.

David J. Clark, of Oakland, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal was taken from an order made February 2, 1925, by the superior court of the county of Alameda, denying appellant's motion as public administrator of the county of Sacramento, for an order dismissing the probate proceedings in the above-entitled matter inaugurated in said county of Alameda, April 20, 1920, wherein letters of administration were regularly issued to respondent by said superior court upon the estate of the decedent, J. M. Spencer, on the 13th day of May, 1920. No proceedings for the administration of said estate were pending in any other court of this state. The sole ground of the motion, as stated in the notice, was that said court did not have "jurisdiction of the proceedings." Said notice of motion constituted the first and only objection made by appellant, or by any other person, to the issuance of letters of administration to respondent, and it was not made until the expiration of a period of almost five years following the day upon which said letters were issued.

The jurisdictional defects were not specifically pointed out in the notice of motion, but were attempted to be shown by the evidence taken at the hearing of the motion, and were grounded upon the claim that the domicile of the decedent at the time of death was in the county of Sacramento, and not in the county of Alameda, as found by the probate court of the latter county. The evidence presented at the hearing upon which the court was called upon to determine the question of the domicile or place of residence of said decedent at the time of his death was very meager. Decedent was a native of the state of Illinois, and unmarried. Respondent, Gordon A. Dize, his cousin, was his only known relative residing within this state, or elsewhere, so far as the record shows. The earliest account by any one that knew decedent as a resident of this state commenced with the year 1913. During that year he registered as an elector of the city of Sacramento, and gave as his occupation, "carpenter" and the city of Sacramento as his place of residence. In 1916 he registered as a resident of Natoma, county of Sacramento, and gave as his occupation "dredgeman." He became attached to the American forces in the World War some time thereafter, and received wounds or injuries while in the line of duty from which he died at Lincoln, England, in 1918. There is evidence in the record to the effect that at the time of his enlistment, or shortly prior thereto, he was residing at the city of Berkeley, Cal., where he kept his trunk and his personal effects. Just prior to entering the service he made his cousin, respondent, the custodian of his trunk and personal effects. Said personal property was appraised at the value of $50. He also had on deposit with a bank in the city of Sacramento approximately the sum of $300. He obtained from the government a war risk insurance policy in the sum of $10,000, which constituted by far the greater part of his estate.

There is no room for serious controversy as to the correctness of the statement of facts as above outlined. On the other hand, however, a former acquaintance of the decedent, who was a resident of the county of Sacramento at all the times decedent was a resident thereof, testified that the latter was a resident of said county continuously from 1913 to the day he became attached to the American forces, while his cousin, respondent, testified that decedent was a resident of the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, during the particular period in dispute. There was proof arising from inferences, and also supported by direct evidence, tending to sustain the finding that decedent was a resident of Berkeley, county of Alameda, at and immediately prior to the time he was enlisted for active service. He had no other property, personal or real, than said personal effects which were left with the respondent, at his Oakland home, and moneys on deposit mentioned above. The first person to be informed of the decedent's death was respondent, to whom letters of administration were issued May 13, 1920. A bond in the sum of $510, covering the deposit in bank at Sacramento and the personal property in the county of Alameda, was executed, and respondent entered upon the administration of the estate. The estate has been kept open for the purpose of collecting the proceeds of the $10,000 war risk policy issued aforesaid.

[1-3] It has been heretofore held by this court that the mere fact that one is registered in a certain place and has voted therein is not conclusive evidence upon the question of his domicile. Bradley v. Davis, 104 P. 302, 156 Cal. 267; Quinn v. Nevills, 93 P. 1055, 7 Cal. App. 231. Such a circumstance would be proportionately weakened as evidence if it should be shown that the person, whose residence is the subject of inquiry, was an unmarried man, unattached by domestic or family ties, and was not engaged in any business or employment that would suggest permanency as to a place of abode, and, further, that such person, as shown here, had actually changed both his residence and occupation at least once within a period of three years. No presumption could be indulged that a person so circumstanced would continue to live for any great period of time in the place in which he was last registered. The rule that prohibits interference on the part of an appellate court with the orders or findings of the trial court in case of a conflict of evidence as to the establishment of probative facts would alone compel an affirmation of the order. The proceeding before us amounts to nothing more or less than a collateral attack upon a judgment made nearly five years after its entry. The issuable fact as to the residence of the decedent was before the court, and upon proofs directed to that point—there being no objection or opposition thereto—the court determined that the decedent was a resident of the county of Alameda at the time of his demise. It cannot be claimed that the judgment or order is void upon its face or that any one connected with its procurement was guilty of practicing extrinsic fraud in any manner whatsoever. It has many times been held by this court that the superior court of the county in which the petition for letters of administration is first filed has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the question as to the residence of the decedent, and the courts of other counties must abide the determination of that court, which is reviewable only upon appeal. Surely the court had jurisdiction to weigh the evidence and consider its sufficiency to establish the residence of the decedent, and, if it erred in that respect, the proper remedy was by appeal within the time allowed by law. In the instant case no appeal was taken. In the absence of a claim of fraud as to the procurement of the order, and no such claim is made, and there being no reasonable ground to support the claim that the order is void upon its face, it stands impregnable to the belated attack made upon it. Estate of Griffith, 23 P. 528, 24 P. 381, 84 Cal. 107; Estate of Latour, 73 P. 1070, 74 P. 441, 140 Cal. 414; Estate of Damke, 65 P. 888, 133 Cal. 433; Dungan v. Superior Court, 84 P. 767, 149 Cal. 103, 117 Am. St. Rep. 119; Miller v. Superior Court, 199 P. 805, 186 Cal. 453; Hill v. Superior Court, 205 P. 430, 188 Cal. 352; 11 Cal. Jur. 355.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

198 Cal. 278

MARR v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GAS CO. et al.

FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK et al. v. MARR.

(L. A. 8223.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⚡544(3).

On appeal from judgment prosecuted on judgment roll alone, only error appearing on face of judgment roll may be considered.

2. Appeal and error ⚡907(2)—In absence of evidence, finding of trial court that special assessment district was entirely within boundaries of city will be presumed to be supported by evidence.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement bonds, where description of assessment district contained in ordinance of intention was technical, making it impossible to determine whether territory of improvement district was entirely within limits of city, in absence of evidence presented to trial court, it will be presumed on appeal that finding of trial court that all district was within city was supported by evidence.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡450(2)—Statement of court in conclusions of law description of boundaries of improvement district as shown on map controlled description in ordinance of intention to form district, and ordinance calling bond election held not finding variance existed (St. 1915, p. 100, § 2, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 671, § 3).

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement bonds, statement of trial court in conclusions of law that description of boundaries of district shown on map on file in office of city clerk controlled description of boundaries as set forth in city ordinance of intention to form district, and ordinance calling election to authorize bonds, in so far as there was any variance between description on map and in ordinance, was but declaration of law contained in St. 1919, p. 671, § 3, amending St. 1915, p. 100, § 2, subd. 4, and was not finding that such variance actually existed.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡450(4)—Refund of special assessment on land outside district held not to affect proceedings to organize improvement district.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special assessment district bonds in which trial court found that refund of tax to certain person was because his land was not within district, such refund did not affect proceedings for organization of district or for issuance of bonds and did not render tax levy on lands within district invalid.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡513(7)—Denial of complaint to enjoin levy of taxes in improvement district held to present issue of omission of property from levy.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special assessment district bonds and for other relief, denial of allegation of complaint that city council threatened to omit from tax levy three parcels of land within district, by at least one of opposing parties, was sufficient to present such issue.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡513(8)—Finding levy of taxes was made on all property within improvement district, and council would in future, unless restrained, levy taxes on all taxable property, held sufficient.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special assessment district bonds, finding that levy of certain year was made on all property within district, and that city council would in future, unless restrained, levy taxes on all taxable property within district to pay principal and interest on bonds, was sufficient.

7. Municipal corporations ⚡917(1)—Failure of ordinance and bonds to refer to statute as amended held not to invalidate bonds (St. 1915, p. 99; St. 1919, p. 670).

That ordinance authorizing issuance of special improvement district bonds recited that proceedings for such authorization were in pursuance of St. 1915, p. 99, and bonds as issued and sold refer to such act without referring to it as amended by St. 1919, p. 670, did not render bonds void.

8. Evidence ⚡83(2)—Employment of attorney by council, in bond issue proceeding, presumed regular (Glendale City Charter, art. 8, § 4 [St. 1921, p. 2218]).

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special assessment district bonds, in absence of showing to contrary, it will be assumed that city council regularly pursued authority under its charter (Glendale City Charter, art. 8, § 4), in employing attorney in bond issue proceeding.

9. Municipal corporations ⚡513(8)—Right to compensation for services of attorney, not party to suit to enjoin levy of taxes in improvement district, could not be adjudicated.

Rights of attorney, not made party to suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement district bonds, to compensation for services in bond issue proceeding, could not be adjudicated therein.

10. Municipal corporations ⚡513(8)—Injunction cannot issue to restrain expenditure of money already paid to attorney by improvement district for services in bond issue proceedings.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement district bonds, injunction could not be issued to restrain expenditure of money already paid out to attorney for services in bond issue proceedings.

11. Municipal corporations ⚡887—Expenditure of money on warrants drawn on bond fund to credit of fund of other city departments on account of "incidental expenses" in connection with improvement held proper (St. 1915, p. 100, § 2, subd. 3).

In special improvement district bond proceedings, transferring from bond fund, on warrants duly issued, money to credit of funds of other city departments as payment on account of expenses of city generally, presumably for engineering work and drafting, was proper, as coming within "incidental expenses" in connection with improvement proceedings, under St. 1915, p. 100, § 2, subd. 3.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Incidental Expenses.]

12. Municipal corporations ⚡886—Paying interest received from bond fund deposits pending determination of controversy as to validity of bonds into general funds of city held proper (Glendale City Charter, art. 11, § 14 [St. 1921, p. 2224]).

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special assessment improvement district bonds, paying interest from bond fund deposits pending determination of controversy into general funds of city instead of into bond fund was proper, under Glendale City Charter, art. 11, § 14, creating general budget fund and providing that revenues from various enumerated sources including interest on bank deposits should be credited to such fund.

13. Municipal corporations ⚡886.

Provision of Glendale City Charter, art. 11, § 14 (St. 1921, p. 2224), that revenues including interest on bank deposits should be credited to general budget fund, held proper.

14. Municipal corporations ⚡513(8)—Judgment, in suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay improvement district bonds, directing deficiency tax levy, held proper.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay bonds of special improvement district, in which complaint in intervention on behalf of bondholders sought to compel city authorities to levy tax to pay principal and interest on bonds accrued and to become due, were ordinance authorizing bond issue and provision of bonds themselves as sold and delivered made $12,000 principal and interest due August 1, 1923, and $2,000 principal and $2,460 interest due August 1, 1924, and tax levy of 1922 and 1923 provided for aggregate of only $7,500, judgment which directed deficiency tax levy of $8,960 was proper.

15. Appeal and error ⚡694(1)—Finding that allegation that much property of special improvement district had been sold and other taxable property had been removed therefrom was not true held not subject to attack on appeal, in absence of evidence.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement district bonds, finding that allegation that much property had been sold and other taxable property removed from district, relied on to show that certain deficiency levies constituted taking property without due process of law, was not true, in absence of evidence, was not subject to attack on appeal, and, even if it had been true, would not have defeated levies necessary to provide interest and principal of bonds.

16. Constitutional law ⚡290(1)—Levy to pay special improvement district bonds held not to constitute taking of property without due process of law, because district was formed after first Monday in March in year in which levy was made (St. 1915, p. 99, as amended by St. 1919, p. 670).

Where, before first Monday in March, city, municipal corporation, was in existence, with power to tax property within improvement district, and to enforce lien as of such date, and there was in existence at such time property within district, under St. 1915, p. 99, as amended by St. 1919, p. 670, levy for 1922 to pay special assessment bonds and interest did not constitute taking property without due process of law because district was formed after first Monday in March, 1922.

17. Taxation ⚡301(1)—If property is subject to lien of tax as of first Monday in March, when political subdivision or other governmental entity of state vested with power to tax also exists, if not prohibited by statute or otherwise by law, tax may be levied to meet debts incurred after such date and before tax levy is fixed.

Where property is in existence and subject to lien of tax as of first Monday in March, when there is also in existence political subdivision or other governmental entity vested with power of imposing tax, when not prohibited by statute or otherwise by law, tax may be levied to discharge financial obligations incurred after first Monday in March and before tax levy is fixed.

18. Municipal corporations ⚡943(3)—Improvement district and taxpayer held estopped to set up defects or irregularities against bona fide purchasers.

In suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement district bonds and for other relief, finding that bonds were negotiable instruments, and that, by reason of recitals and promise of city contained therein, special improvement district and any taxpayer therein were estopped to set up any alleged defects or any irregularities against bondholders, bona fide purchasers for value before maturity and without notice of defects, was proper.

19. Municipal corporations ⚡935—Bonds of improvement district held validated by statute (St. 1923, p. 272; St. 1915, p. 99; St. 1919, p. 670).

Under St. 1923, p. 272, validating bond issues under St. 1915, p. 99, or as amended (St. 1919, p. 670), where bonds of special improvement district were authorized by more than two-thirds qualified electors voting at election at which they were authorized and were sold at par and at a premium, alleged irregularities subsequent to formation of district which, even if proved, were not of jurisdictional nature, would have been wiped out.

20. Evidence ⚡29—Court takes judicial notice of passage of statutes (St. 1923, p. 272; St. 1915, p. 99; St. 1919, p. 670).

Court takes judicial notice of passage of statutes, and fact that St. 1923, p. 272, validating bond issue under St. 1915, p. 99, or such act as amended (St. 1919, p. 670), was not pleaded and proved in suit to enjoin levy of taxes to pay special improvement district bonds, would not prevent its being considered.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Suit by Winifred F. Marr against the Southern California Gas Company and others, in which the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank and others intervened to have proceedings for formation of a special improvement district and the issue of bonds declared null and void, and to enjoin a levy of taxes to pay such bonds. From a judgment for defendants and interveners, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Winifred F. Marr, in pro. per.

Thos. J. Reynolds, Musick, Burr & Pinney, O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & Macniel, Paul E. Schwab, Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and J. N. O'Connor, Asst. County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, and Ray L. Morrow, of Glendale, for respondents.

SHENK, J. Commencing May 10, 1922, proceedings were taken under the statute (Stats. 1915, p. 99, as amended Stats. 1919, p. 670) for the formation of municipal improvement district No. 6 in the city of Glendale and for the issuance of $50,000 in bonds of the district to acquire or construct works for supplying the people of the district with gas. The proceedings were completed and the bonds were authorized, issued, and sold to the respondent William R. Staats Company and were by them resold to the interveners prior to the commencement of this action. The appellant, a resident and taxpayer within the district, brought this action for the purpose of having it judicially declared that the proceedings for the formation of the district and for the issuance and sale of said bonds were null and void and to enjoin the city authorities from levying and collecting taxes on the property within the district to discharge the obligation represented by said bonds. In her amended complaint as amended and in her supplemental, second supplemental, and third supplemental complaints the appellant alleged numerous grounds of irregularity and illegality in said proceedings. All of the material allegations contained in these pleadings were put in issue by the answers of the defendants named therein or by some one of them. A complaint in intervention was filed on behalf of the holders of said bonds, wherein it was sought to have the proceedings declared valid and to have the city authorities compelled to levy a tax to pay the principal and interest of said bonds accrued and to become due.

[1] After trial on the merits the court found and concluded that the proceedings were regular and valid in all respects, and that the said bonds were binding obligations on the property of said district and rendered judgment accordingly. It also rendered judgment in favor of the respondent interveners directing the council of said city to levy and collect a tax each year upon the taxable property of said district sufficient to pay the principal of and interest on said bonds as the same should become due and to levy and collect an additional sum to make up a deficiency in the levies of 1922 and 1923 on account of said bonds. This appeal from the judgment is prosecuted on the judgment roll alone. We are therefore confined to a consideration of alleged errors appearing on the face of said judgment roll. Neale v. Morrow, 161 P. 1165, 174 Cal. 49; 2 Cal. Jur. 525. The record is certified by the clerk and contains some 550 printed pages. The contentions of the appellant on that record will first be considered and as far as may be in the order of their presentation.

[2] 1. It is contended that a portion of the district is outside of the boundaries of the city of Glendale and that the proceedings for the formation of the district are therefore void on the authority of Mulville v. City of San Diego, 192 P. 702, 183 Cal. 734. The appellant's pleadings alleged that a portion of the district was outside of the city and the answer of at least one of the respondents denied that allegation. The court found that Ordinance No. 578, being the ordinance of intention to form the district, contained a correct description of the exterior boundaries of the proposed district and referred to a map on file in the office of the city clerk for all details as to the extent of the district and that the exterior boundaries of said district were entirely within the exterior boundaries of the city of Glendale. The district embraces several square miles of territory and the description contained in the ordinance of intention is a technical one covering about five printed pages. From a reading of this description it is impossible to determine whether or not said territory is or is not entirely within the limits of said city, and, as the evidence is not before us, the finding of the trial court will be presumed to speak the truth and be supported by the evidence. Estate of Shirley, 138 P. 994, 167 Cal. 193; 2 Cal. Jur. 525, and cases cited.

[3] 2. Ordinance No. 590, being the ordinance calling the election at which the bonds were authorized, also contained a detailed description of the boundaries of the district. It is claimed by the appellant that this description particularly shows that a portion of the district is outside the city. There is nothing in this description, however, from which it is possible, without the aid of evidence, to determine that such is the case. For like reasons it must also be concluded that there is nothing in that ordinance which would render the findings unsupported. It is not contended that the map on file in the office of the city clerk did not properly delineate the boundaries of the district as entirely within the city limits, but it is insisted that the statement of the trial court found in the conclusions of law to the effect that the description of the boundaries of the district as shown on said map control over any description of said boundaries as set forth in said Ordinances Nos. 578 and 590, "in so far as there may be any variance between the descriptions on said map and in said ordinances," is in effect a finding that there was such variance, and that therefore the council had no jurisdiction over the district with boundaries at variance with the description set forth on said map. The statement of the court cannot be taken either as a finding or a conclusion that such variance actually existed, but only that if such variance did exist the map should control. Said statement is but a declaration of the law as contained in the amendment of subdivision 4 of section 2 of the act that "said map shall govern for all details as to the extent of the said district." Stats. 1919, p. 671.

[4] 3. It is contended that the record shows that it was intended by the city council to tax only a portion of the territory within the district for the payment of said bonds. In this connection it was alleged in the supplemental complaint that the lands of G. B. Woodberry were within the district and that the council had refunded to him the tax on his land resulting from the levy of 1923. The refund was admitted by the city, but it was denied that said land was within said district. The court found that said tax was refunded for the reason that the land of Woodberry was not within the boundaries of said district. It is not pointed out how this refund could affect the proceedings for the organization of the district or for the issuance of said bonds and it may not be said that such refund affords any ground for the conclusion that the tax levy on the lands within the district was invalid. The finding of the court on the issue squarely raised as to the location of said land is a conclusive answer to the contention.

[5, 6] 4. In her second supplemental complaint the appellant alleged in effect that the city council threatened to levy a tax and thereafter to continue to levy taxes within said district to satisfy said bonded indebtedness, but threatens to omit from said levy three parcels of land within the district. The claim is made that the allegation was not sufficiently denied. It was, however, denied by at least one of the respondents and this denial was sufficient to present the issue. It is also asserted that the court failed to find upon the issues presented. The court did find that the levy of 1922 was made upon all the property within the district and that the council would in the future, unless restrained by the court, levy taxes upon all the taxable property within the district to pay the principal and interest on said bonds. This finding was unquestionably sufficient.

[7] 5. The ordinance authorizing the issuance of said bonds recited that the proceedings for such authorization were in pursuance of the act approved April 20, 1915, and the bonds as issued and sold contained the provision that—

"Under and by virtue of an act of the Legislature of the state of California entitled [quoting title], approved April 20, 1915, municipal improvement district No. 6 of the city of Glendale, state of California, by its governing body, the mayor and city council, promises out of the fund hereinafter described, to pay to the bearer," etc.

The title of the act was amended in 1919 by striking out the word "therein." Stats. 1919, p. 670. Neither the ordinance nor the bonds, in referring to the act under which the proceedings were taken, referred to the act "as amended," and it is claimed that for that reason the said bonds are a nullity. There is no merit in the contention. Reference to the act was merely for the purpose of identifying the proceedings as taken under a particular enabling act and was but a declaration that the proceedings were had and the bonds issued under said act as it existed when the proceedings were taken and the bonds were issued. Steele v. Village of River Forest, 30 N. E. 1034, 141 Ill. 302.

[8-11] 6. The court found that at the time of the trial there was in the treasury of the city of Glendale to the credit of municipal improvement district No. 6 bond fund the sum of $49,081.57. The difference between that sum and the entire proceeds from the sale of said bonds the appellant alleged was illegally expended by the city. One item consisted of the payment of $750 to an attorney for legal services rendered in connection with said proceedings, including those for the issuance of said bonds. The court found that this attorney was neither an officer nor an employee of the city and that the expenditure had been made on the 14th of September, 1922. No specific finding is made with reference to the alleged illegality of said expenditure, but it is found and concluded generally that the challenged acts and proceedings of the city were regular and valid. The city council had the power to engage an attorney to assist the city attorney in connection with proceedings in which the city was interested. Charter (Stats. 1921, p. 2218). In the absence of a showing to the contrary, and none is shown, it will be assumed that the council regularly pursued its authority. Furthermore, the said attorney was not made a party to this action and the expenditure was made prior to the commencement of this action. Under such circumstances the rights of said attorney to the money received could not be adjudicated in said action nor could an injunction be issued to restrain the expenditure of money already paid out. There was also transferred from said bond fund, on warrants duly issued, the sum of $171.38 to the credit of funds of other city departments as payment on account of expenses of the city generally, presumably for engineering work, drafting, etc. Objection is made to this expenditure from the bond fund, but appellant has advanced no reason, and we have discovered none, why the said expenditures should not rightly be made as "incidental expenses in connection" with the improvement district proceedings as mentioned in subdivision 3 of section 2 of the act. Stats. 1915, p. 100.

[12, 13] 7. Pending the final determination of this controversy, the city placed the moneys in said bond fund on deposit at interest in certain banks. The interest received from these deposits was paid into the general funds of the city. The appellant insists that the said interest should accrue to the bond fund and that the city should be enjoined from paying said interest into its general fund. Section 14 of article 11 of the city charter (Stats. 1921, p. 2224) would seem to be full authority for the course followed by the city. That section of the charter creates the "general budget fund" and provides that revenues from various enumerated sources, including interest on bank deposits, shall be credited to said fund. There appears to be no reason why the charter may not properly so provide.

[14] 8. Appellant contends that the findings do not support that portion of the judgment which directed a deficiency tax levy of $8,960. According to the ordinance authorizing the issuance of the bonds and the provisions of the bonds themselves as sold and delivered, $9,000 principal and $3,000 interest were to become due on August 1, 1923; also $2,000 principal and $2,460 interest were to become due August 1, 1924. The tax levies of 1922 and 1923 provided for an aggregate of only $7,500. Mathematical computation discloses that the amount of the deficiency was correctly figured and provided for in the judgment.

[15] 9. It is further contended that the deficiency levies for 1922 and 1923 constitute the taking of appellant's property without due process of law. She predicates her contention on the assumption that since the levy of 1922 much property of the district has been sold and other taxable property been removed from the district. This allegation was denied and the court found that the allegation was not true. Whatever may be the fact as disclosed by the evidence, the finding, in the absence of evidence, is not subject to attack. It may also be said that, even if the allegation be true, no reason appears why the change in the status of the taxable property in the district could defeat the levies necessary to provide for the interest and principal of said bonds. See Berkey v. Board of Commissioners, etc., 110 P. 197, 48 Colo. 104, 20 Ann. Cas. 1109.

[16] 10. Appellant next contends that the levy of 1922 was further in violation of the constitutional guaranty that property shall not be taken without due process of law because the district was formed after the first Monday in March, 1922. She cites and relies on the case of East Bay Municipal U. Dist. v. Garrison, 218 P. 43, 191 Cal. 680. In that case the act under which the petitioning district elected to avail itself of the assessments made by the county assessors as a basis for the district taxation provided:

That the board of directors of the district "shall declare its said election by ordinance and file a certified copy of the same with the auditor or auditors of the county or counties in which the district is situated, on or before the first Monday in February of each year."

The petitioning district was not organized until May 22, 1923, and on the 31st day of the same month the board of directors adopted an ordinance electing to avail itself of the assessments made by the assessors of the counties of Alameda and Contra Costa for the purpose of district taxation to be assessed, levied, and collected for the year 1923, and filed a certified copy of said ordinance with the auditor of each of said counties and demanded that the proper officers of said counties compute and enter in the assessment books the assessments for the sums to be paid as a district tax upon the property within the East Bay municipal utility district. Upon their refusal the proceeding was commenced to compel them to do so. It was therein properly held that the time provision of the statute was mandatory and that, since the required ordinance had not been adopted prior to the first Monday of February of that year, no duty devolved upon the respondent county officers to levy and collect the district tax as demanded by the petitioner. As an additional reason why the writ should be denied in that case it was stated in effect that inasmuch as the East Bay municipal utility district was not in existence on the first Monday in March, 1923, the property in said district was not subject to the lien of the tax as of that date for the support and maintenance of the district for that year; in other words, the governmental body under whose authority the tax was to be levied and the governmental entity for whose support and maintenance the funds were required were not in existence on the first Monday in March, 1923, consequently there was no legal obligation on the part of the taxpayers in the district and no legal purposes of the district for which a lien for any tax could attach on the first Monday in March, 1923. That case, when examined in the light of the facts there presented, is not authority for plaintiff's position.

[17] When the property is in existence and is subject to the lien of the tax as of the first Monday in March, and there is also on that date in existence a political subdivision or other governmental entity of the state vested with power to impose the tax, it is obvious that, when not prohibited by statute or otherwise by law, a tax may be levied to discharge financial obligations incurred after the first Monday in March and before the tax levy is fixed. In the present case there was in existence on the first Monday in March, 1922, the city of Glendale, a municipal corporation, vested with power to tax the property within municipal improvement district No. 6 and to enforce the lien as of that date. There was also in existence at that time the property within the district which was subject to taxation and there was also in effect the act of 1915 through the medium of which the obligation of said bonds could be incurred and the payment thereof provided for. No statute or decision has been referred to which would indicate that the tax under such circumstances could not be levied.

[18] 11. The court found and concluded that the said bonds were negotiable instruments and that all of the purchasers thereof, interveners and respondents herein, were bona fide purchasers for value before maturity and without notice of any defects. It also found and concluded that, by reason of the recitals and the promise of the city contained in said bonds, the district and any taxpayer in the district were estopped to set up any alleged defects or irregularities against the bondholders. These findings are supported by the record and the conclusions are legally sound. Baxter v. Vineland Irr. Dist., 63 P. 601, 136 Cal. 185; Miller v. Perris Irr. Dist. (C. C.) 99 F. 143; Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Shepard, 22 S. Ct. 531, 185 U. S. 1, 46 L. Ed. 773.

[19] The Legislature of 1923 adopted a validating act wherein it was provided that in all cases where the legislative branch of any municipality had called an election under the act approved April 20, 1915, or under said act as amended, for the purpose of forming a municipal improvement district thereunder and the incurring of an indebtedness by the issuance of bonds of the district, and where at such election two-thirds of the electors voting thereat should vote in favor of incurring such indebtedness—

"the power to issue such bonds and all the acts and proceedings of said municipality leading up to and including the issuance and sale or the proposed issuance and sale of such bonds are hereby legalized, ratified, confirmed and declared valid to all intents and purposes." Stats. 1923, pp. 272, 273.

That act contains a proviso to the effect that the said act shall not operate to legalize any bonds of any municipal improvement district of a municipality that have not at the time of the passage of the act been authorized by a vote of not less than two-thirds of the qualified electors in such improvement district voting at any such election or any bonds that have been sold for less than their par value. It was alleged and found herein and is not disputed that the said bonds received a favorable vote of more than two-thirds of the qualified electors voting at the election at which the bonds were authorized and that the said bonds were sold at par and at a premium. It therefore appears that the bond issue here in question was properly included within the conditions of said ratifying act. Assuming that irregularities alleged by the appellant subsequent to the formation of the district had been proved, they were not jurisdictional and the curative act would have wiped them out. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Hamilton, 169 P. 118, 177 Cal. 119; 23 Cal. Jur. 611, and cases cited.

[20] There is no merit in the contention of the appellant that the said ratifying act may not be considered because it was not pleaded and proved by the respondents. The court takes judicial notice of the passage of that statute. 23 Cal. Jur. 664, 665.

Other points made by the appellant do not require discussion, and, in view of the foregoing determinations, it is unnecessary to pass upon other contentions made by the respondents.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LENNON, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

198 Cal. 365

GENERAL MOTORS ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION v. DALLAS, Sheriff of Stanislaus County. (Sac. 3835.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1926.
Rehearing Denied April 29, 1926.)

1. Trover and conversion *§*16.

Plaintiff in conversion must prove either ownership and right of possession or actual possession at time of conversion.

2. Appeal and error *§*173(5)—Defendant in conversion held entitled to set up Motor Vehicle Act for first time on appeal, to show that plaintiff failed to meet burden of proving ownership and right of possession to automobiles at time of conversion (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 8, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7).

In action for conversion of automobiles, of which plaintiff was not in actual possession at time of conversion, since burden was on plaintiff to prove ownership and right of possession in itself, defendant, for first time on appeal, was entitled to set up Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 8, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7, to sustain contention that plaintiff failed to meet burden of proof resting on it.

3. Automobiles *§*19—One suing for conversion of automobiles, not having had actual possession, must prove compliance with Motor Vehicle Act (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 8, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7).

One suing for conversion of automobiles of which it did not have actual possession at time of conversion is required to prove that it complied with Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 8, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7.

4. Automobiles *§*19—Assignee of conditional sales contract, suing for conversion of automobiles, held to have failed to meet burden of proof, where it failed to show compliance with Motor Vehicle Act (Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 8, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7).

One suing as assignee of conditional sales contract, for conversion of automobiles of which it did not have actual possession at time of alleged conversion, by failing to prove compliance with Motor Vehicle Act 1915, § 8, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7, at time conditional sales contracts were signed to it held to have failed to meet burden of proving ownership and right of possession.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action of conversion by the General Motors Acceptance Corporation against Robert L. Dallas, as Sheriff of Stanislaus County. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles W. Haswell, of San Francisco (Cecil A. Borden, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

J. W. Hawkins, of Modesto, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an action by the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, a corporation, against Robert L. Dallas, as sheriff of the county of Stanislaus, for damages resulting from an alleged wrongful conversion of two automobiles under a writ of attachment levied upon said automobiles by the sheriff on February 15, 1922, and issued in an action against the Modesto Motor Company, a corporation, plaintiff's predecessor in interest. The General Motors Acceptance Corporation alleges that it was the owner and entitled to the possession of the automobiles in question at the time the sheriff levied upon them. Judgment was entered by the trial court in favor of the sheriff whereupon the General Motors Acceptance Corporation appealed. The District Court of Appeal reversed the judgment.

It appears that the appellant's claim of ownership to said automobiles is based upon written assignments to it, dated, respectively, April 9, 1921, and July 20, 1921, by the Modesto Motor Company, for a cash consideration, of two conditional sales contracts purporting to have been entered into between the Modesto Motor Company and the purchasers named in said conditional sales contracts, wherein the respective titles to said automobiles were reserved in the seller until the purchase prices were fully paid. Subsequent to the purported assignment of the conditional sales contracts to the appellant, and at the time of the levy on the automobiles in question, they were left in the possession of the Modesto Motor Company, assignor, as, so appellant states, the agent of the assignee, appellant here. The trial court, among other things, found that the appellant was not the owner of the automobiles in question at the time of the alleged conversion by the sheriff. This finding was apparently, based upon the theory that the appellant had failed to prove the existence of valid conditional sales contracts covering the said automobiles, and therefore acquired nothing by the assignment to it of the purported contracts. However, on the appeal, the respondent refers to certain provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, c. 147, p. 191) as supporting his contention that appellant had failed, in the trial court, to prove title in itself.

Section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1915, as amended by St. 1919, p. 199, § 7, reads, in part:

"Upon the transfer of ownership of any motor vehicle, the person in whose name such vehicle is registered and the person to whom ownership of such vehicle is to be transferred shall forthwith join in a statement of said transfer indorsed upon the reverse side of the certificate of registration of said motor vehicle in the space provided for said purpose, which statement shall be signed by the transferor and the legal owner in the manner and form of his signature contained on the face of said certificate and which statement shall likewise be signed by the transferee, who shall also set forth below his signature his post office address. Said statement shall include an application by the transferee for registration of said vehicle in his name. Said certificate so indorsed and bearing upon the reverse side thereof the signatures of the transferor and transferee, shall be forwarded by the transferee within ten days to the department together with proper fee of one dollar required by section seven of this act. The department shall file said certificate so jointly indorsed by transferor and transferee and upon receipt of the proper fee as above provided, the department, if satisfied of the genuineness and regularity of said transfer, shall register said motor vehicle in the name of said transferee.

"Upon such registration the department shall issue and forward to the applicant without further charge than as provided in section seven of this act, a new registration certificate in the manner and form as hereinabove provided for original registration. Until said transferee has received said certificate of registration and has written his name upon the face thereof in the blank space provided for said purpose by the department, delivery of said motor vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title thereto shall be deemed not to have passed and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose. * * *

The 1923 act (Stats. 1923, c. 266, p. 517, § 45) is identical in substance, but provides also for a "certificate of ownership" which is to be signed by the parties to a transfer and forwarded to the motor vehicle department.

It is contended by the sheriff that:

"This being an action in conversion, the burden was upon the plaintiff [appellant] to prove its own title, and it was compelled to recover on the strength of its own title and not on the weakness of its adversary. * * * We maintain that the Motor Vehicle Act of 1919 * * * provides for the exclusive method of the transfer of title and right of possession of a motor vehicle. Said act provides that upon the transfer of ownership of a motor vehicle certain acts shall be done by the purchaser and the seller concerning the registration of the automobiles in question. * * * So in the instant case, appellant having failed to conform with the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act, the lien created by reason of the levy of the attachment was superior to any interest acquired by the appellant. The title to the automobiles never passed, and * * * the title was still vested in the Modesto Motor Company, Inc. The sheriff had the right, and it was his duty, to attach that interest. If such were not the law, a sheriff could never attach property of one person while it was in the possession of a third party. It is a complete defense to an action in conversion to show title in a third person. Seymour v. Peters, 35 N. W. 62, 67 Mich. 415. * * * Appellant must base its right of recovery on the assignments alone. It did not comply with the requirements of the statute, and therefore the 'intended transfer' is not valid or effective for any purpose."

On the other hand, the appellant urges:

"It is elementary that an attaching creditor only acquires by virtue of his levy such interest as the creditor has at the time of the levy. This being so, it is inconceivable that the attaching creditor could acquire any greater title in the automobiles than the Modesto Motor Company had. It is admitted that the Modesto Motor Company had, at the time of the levy of the attachment, absolutely no title to the automobiles, they having divested themselves of every interest that they might have had by virtue of the assignment to the plaintiff, and, further, there is in evidence the contract of bailment showing the conditions under which the automobiles were held by the Modesto Motor Company. * * *

"We will now discuss the point * * * whether or not, under sections 7 and 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1919, the appellant was required to prove in the lower court that he [it] had complied with this section before he [it] could maintain an action in conversion. It is to be noted that this question is raised for the first time upon appeal. There is not one iota of evidence nor was there any question raised in the trial court as to whether the General Motors Acceptance Corporation [appellant] was or was not the legal or registered owner of this property under this section of the act. * * * Not one iota of evidence was introduced by the respondent to show that the plaintiff had failed to comply with section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act, nor was the act ever mentioned. This point is disposed of in Cal. Juris. § 393, vol. 2, where it is held that matters raised for the first time on appeal will be given no consideration. Likewise it has been repeatedly held by this honorable court that it is not necessary to have legal title in a motor vehicle in order to maintain an action in conversion or replevin. * * * In other words, we contend that a prima facie case is made up when we prove an equitable interest in and to the property, or a special interest which is sufficient to maintain a conversion action, and we are not required to prove that we have the legal title of the property by exhibiting any legal ownership certificates issued by the motor vehicle department."

We do not think the principle advanced by the appellant—that matters raised for the first time on appeal will not be considered by the reviewing court—can have application to the instant case. Though the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act were not advanced or relied upon by the sheriff at the trial or before the District Court of Appeal, and were, for the first time, referred to on rehearing before the latter tribunal, we are of the opinion that this court may properly consider their bearing on the ultimate fact in the case, namely, the ownership of the two automobiles at the time of the alleged conversion.

[1, 2] As this is an action in conversion, and not one in replevin, as assumed by the District Court of Appeal, it was incumbent upon the appellant to sustain the affirmative of the issue and prove either ownership and the right of possession or actual possession of said automobiles in itself at the time of the alleged conversion thereof. Green v. Burr, 63 P. 360, 131 Cal. 236, 238; Zaro v. Dakan, 18 P. 680, 76 Cal. 565, 566, and 567; Moody v. Goodwin, 200 P. 733, 53 Cal. App. 693, 694; Brinkley-Douglas Fruit Co. v. Silman, 166 P. 371, 33 Cal. App. 643, 651; 24 Cal. Jur. pp. 1025 and 1043. If the appellant failed to prove either that it was the owner of the automobiles and entitled to their possession or that it was in the actual possession thereof when the alleged conversion took place, judgment was properly entered against it. The evidence clearly shows, as already indicated, that the appellant was not in the actual possession of the automobiles at the time of the asserted conversion. The burden therefore rested upon it of proving ownership and the right of possession in itself. To adopt appellant's contention that the sheriff should have introduced evidence at the trial to show a want of ownership in appellant within the meaning of the Motor Vehicle Act, and having failed so to do is now precluded from relying on that act, would, in effect, be to shift the burden of proof to the sheriff and make it necessary for him to prove a want of ownership in the appellant. It is plain, therefore, that the sheriff, at this time, may have recourse to the Motor Vehicle Act, or any other law, to sustain his contention that the appellant, in the absence of actual possession, utterly failed to meet the burden of proof resting upon it to show ownership and right of possession in itself at the time of the asserted conversion.

[3, 4] Only one question remains, and that is whether or not the appellant, in the absence of such actual possession, did prove ownership and the right of possession in itself. The recent case of Parke v. Francis, 228 P. 435, 194 Cal. 284, involved a consideration of section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act. Though that case concerned an action in claim and delivery—a mere possessory action in which it is not essential to prove ownership in the plaintiff—certain of the court's language is pertinent and may be referred to here. In that case the conditional sale vendor, in whom title had been retained, assigned the conditional sale contract to the plaintiffs, but did not deliver the registration certificate to the assignees, nor was the automobile ever registered in the names of the assignees. Subsequently the vendee under the conditional sale contract sold the automobile to the defendant Francis, in whose name the car was then registered.

Upon being informed of this latter sale, the assignees of the conditional sale contract brought an action in claim and delivery, alleging they were the owners and entitled to the immediate and exclusive possession of the automobile in question. The court stated in part:

"The first question presented is whether the failure to comply with the requirements of section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 191), as to the transfer of ownership in motor vehicles which are registered under the act, precludes the passage of the title to such vehicle. * * * The provision in question declares that, until the transferee of the 'ownership' in the car has received the original certificate of registration, and has written his name upon the face thereof in the blank space provided for that purpose by the department, the delivery of said motor vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title not to have passed, and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose. * * * The failure of the transferee of the 'ownership' in the car to procure the registration certificate properly indorsed does not make the sale void ab initio, but in the terms of the statute it is incomplete. * * * In the case at bar it is clear that the certificate of registration, which serves the purpose of the certificate of ownership and the certificate of registration provided for in the act of 1923, must have been properly indorsed upon the reverse side thereof by the transferee of the 'ownership' or title or interest in the car, filed with the motor vehicle department, and a new certificate of registration issued in the name of appellants, before title was completely vested in them, and before the transfer could be effective or valid for any purpose. * * * Appellants are the transferees of the 'ownership' of the automobile within the meaning of the third paragraph of section 8. Therefore the failure of appellants to obtain the certificate of registration, properly indorsed by themselves and McNabb, and to forward it, together with an application for re-registration, to the department within 10 days renders their title invalid as against the respondent. We have shown, in answer to the first proposition, that compliance with section 8 is essential to the transfer of title. * * *

The court then reiterates that the action was one in claim and delivery—a mere possessory action—and that in such an action it is not essential to plaintiff's recovery that he establish ownership in himself. However, it was concluded by the court, from the existence of circumstances peculiar to that case, that an estoppel precluded a recovery even in such a possessory action.

It is readily apparent from this recent interpretation of section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act that re-registration in the name of the transferee of an automobile, within the time prescribed, "is a prerequisite to the passing of title." This being so, and, in the absence of actual possession by the appellant at the time of the alleged conversion, it was, in our view, incumbent upon the appellant at the trial to prove that it had complied with the provisions of this section. The appellant, however, though more than the 10 days had elapsed between the dates of the assignments to it of the conditional sales contracts and the date of the levy by the sheriff, utterly failed to offer any evidence that it had fulfilled the requirements of the act, and it cannot be held, therefore, that the burden of proof resting upon it of establishing ownership and the right of possession in itself has been met. The judgment of the trial court in favor of the sheriff, though apparently based upon a different theory, will nevertheless have to be sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; LENNON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

193 Cal. 346

LAND DEVELOPMENT CO. et al. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State. (S. F. 11733.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1926.)

Corporations §62—Refusal of secretary of state to accept for filing articles of incorporation providing for entire issue of nonpar stock held improper (Const. art. 12, §§ 3, 12; Civ. Code, §§ 290b, 290e, 307, 322).

Refusal of secretary of state to accept for filing articles of incorporation providing for an entire issue of nonpar stock, under Civ. Code, §§ 290b, 290e, was improper under Const. art. 12, §§ 3, 12; Civ. Code, §§ 307, 322, inasmuch as the constitutional requirements are complied with when each share of a corporation represents the same interest as every other share, and there is a unity of liability as between all the shares.

In Bank.

Application for mandamus by the Land Development Company and others to be directed to Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State, to compel him to file articles of incorporation providing for the issuance of stock without par value. Peremptory writ granted.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. Petition for a writ of mandate. It appears from the petition of the Land Development Company, H. Grecian, M. D. Steen, and Frederic C. Benner that on the 7th day of August, 1925, they presented to the respondent secretary of state certain articles of incorporation, accompanied by the requisite filing fees, with the request that said articles be filed. The secretary of state did then and there refuse, and ever since has refused and declined, to file the said corporate articles, and advanced the following reasons for such refusal: (1) That this court, in Del Monte Light & Power Co. v. Jordan, 238 P. 710, has held section 290b of the Civil Code unconstitutional in so far as it purported to authorize the issuance of par and nonpar stock by the same corporation; and (2) that the proposed articles of incorporation violate sections 3 and 12 of article 12 of the Constitution, which require corporations to have shares of a "single par value."

The articles of incorporation presented to the secretary of state for filing provide for an entire nonpar issue of stock. The question then is whether or not such entire issue of nonpar stock by a corporation would be in conflict with the principles announced in Del Monte Light & Power Co. v. Jordan, supra, and in violation of sections 3 and 12 of article 12 of the Constitution.

It will aid in the solution of the question presented to set forth the respective contentions at some length.

Petitioners urge—

"that the requirements of sections 290 and 362 of the Civil Code requiring the preferred and common shares to be of the same par value can only have application to the stock structure of a corporation composed of more than one class of stock. It is evident that the only thought in the mind of the Legislature at the time of the enactment of this statute was to prevent a mixture in a corporation, a certain par value for the preferred stock, and a different par value for the common stock. And this because of the difficulties such a mixture would lead to, as pointed out in the case of Film Producers, Inc., v. Jordan, 154 P. 605, 171 Cal. 664. * * *

"The whole idea of the nonpar value stock statute is to abolish (a) capital stock, (b) divided into shares; for a capital stock stated in terms of dollars compel the capital stock to be divided into shares stated also in terms of dollars. In corporations having all nonpar value stock the participation is not to be expressed in dollars, but in an aliquot part of the assets of the corporation.

"By reason of the fact that each share of stock in the proposed corporation represents the same aliquot part of the assets of the corporation, it is manifest that all of the shares have the same par value.

"The proposed articles of incorporation do not violate section 12 of article 12 of the state Constitution or section 307 of the Civil Code. * * *

"Each share, representing the same aliquot part of the net value of the corporation's property, is given exactly the same voting power. * * *

"None of the objections pointed out in the Film Producers' v. Del Monte Light & Power Cases are present in the instant case.

"The proposed articles of incorporation do not violate section 3 of article 12 of the Constitution or section 322, Civil Code. * * *

"The nonpar stock statute makes no provision for capital stock and therefore the provision in section 3 of article 12 of the Constitution which makes a stockholder liable in the proportion that the (monetary) amount of stock owned by him bears to the whole subscribed (monetary) capital stock has no application.

"Section 290e of the Civil Code expressly provides that the liability is as the number of shares owned by the stockholders bears to the whole number of shares.

"Again we find that the conclusions of the Supreme Court in the Film Producers' and Del Monte Light & Power Cases have no application to the case at bar. In each of those cases the stock structure of the corporation was composed of two classes of stock with different par values and therefore it became impossible to determine the liability of the respective stockholders."

On the other hand, it is contended by the Attorney General on behalf of the secretary of state that—

"while in such a case [involving an entire issue of nonpar stock] the shares have the same voting right, and represent equal interests, there is no way of determining the liability of each share, not because it is not possible to do so by applying the constitutional formula upon the numerical basis, but because the Constitution requires that formula to be applied upon a monetary basis, and, as there is no monetary basis upon which it can be applied, the shares being all of no par value, the stockholder's liability cannot be attached in the manner required by the Constitution, and hence such corporate stock structure is not permissible to a California corporation."

Continuing, the Attorney General states:

"It is not our contention that California corporations must have a capital stock—we fully recognize the power of the Legislature to provide for corporations without capital stock, as it has done, for example, in sections 653 et seq. of the Civil Code. We do, however, contend that in authorizing the formation of corporations with a capital stock the Legislature must recognize the demands of section 3 of article 12, and must require that the shares of stock shall have a monetary value, and that it cannot sanction a stock structure which will not permit of the application of that constitutional provision upon a monetary basis.

"* * * We submit, therefore, that the true construction of the language of that section in the light of its history and the intent of its framers requires that the formula therein declared be applied upon a monetary basis."

As to the petitioners' final point that section 12 of article 12 of the Constitution is not violated by the creation of a corporation having all nonpar stock, it is answered by the Attorney General that—

"We may admit that section 12 may be given due application if such stock otherwise satisfies the provisions of section 3."

Before passing on the main question it will be well to make clear that the opinion of this court in Del Monte Light & Power Co. v. Jordan, supra, did not decide or attempt to decide whether or not the Constitution requires all corporate shares to have a par value, for that question was not presented. Indeed, the Attorney General apparently appreciates this fact, as evidenced by the following quotation from his brief:

"Counsel for petitioners states in his brief that the case of Del Monte Light & Power Co. v. Jordan does not hold that all corporate shares must have a par value. While it is true that in the opinion in that case the court used the expression 'single par value,' and subsequently at the oral argument in the present case the Chief Justice stated in effect that it was not thereby intended to lay stress upon the word 'par,' but rather thereby to signify the requirement of one value, yet it certainly was not held in that case, nor suggested at the oral argument in this case, that the shares need not have a stated monetary value."

We quote portions of sections 3 and 12 of article 12 of the Constitution:

"Sec. 3. Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint-stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred, during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association. * * *

"Sec. 12. In all elections for directors or managers of corporations every stockholder shall have the right to vote, in person or by proxy, the number of shares of stock owned by him, for as many persons as there are directors or managers to be elected, or to cumulate said shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock shall equal, or to distribute them, on the same principle, among as many candidates as he shall think fit. * * *

We find nothing in section 12 to support a claim that its terms would be violated by an entire issue of nonpar stock by a corporation. The provisions of said section may be given effect in a corporation having all nonpar stock. As already indicated, this seems to be conceded by the Attorney General, for he states that—

"We may admit that section 12 may be given due application if such stock otherwise satisfies the provisions of section 3."

The issue would then seem to reduce itself to the proposition whether or not the provisions of section 3 of article 12 of the Constitution would be violated by an entire issue of nonpar stock.

We are not in accord with the Attorney General's interpretation of this latter section. In our view, the terms of the section do not require that the individual liability of stockholders to creditors of the corporation be ascertained and computed solely on a monetary basis. It may be computed on either a monetary or share basis. The requirements of this constitutional section are complied with when each share of a corporation represents the same interest as every other share and there is a unity of liability as between all the shares.

MAHONEY v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO.

(L. A. 8839.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1926.)

If the entire issue of a corporation is non-par, each share will carry with it an equality of interest, and each stockholder thereof will be liable to the creditors of the corporation as the number of shares held by him bore to the whole number of shares outstanding when the debt was contracted by said corporation. Obviously no inequality of liability would result from such a computation. There would, unquestionably, be a unity of liability as between the outstanding shares.

In our view, the very language of section 3 suggests an alternative method of computing a stockholder's liability, and does not attempt to confine such computation to a monetary basis. A stockholder is liable to the creditors of the corporation "as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares * * *." It would seem from the quoted portion of the section that both a monetary and a numerical or "share basis" method of computation of stockholder's liability are authorized.

The Attorney General admits "that, when all the shares are of no par value, it is mathematically possible to apply the formula on the numerical basis and produce a proportionate liability for each share while at the same time maintaining an equality of interest, voting right and liability, * * *" but contends "it is not possible to apply the formula upon a monetary basis when the shares have no par value." In view of our construction that the constitutional section is complied with when each share represents an identical interest, and there is a unity of liability as between the shares, this latter contention of the Attorney General would seem to be without merit. The method of computation is secondary so long as there exists a unity of liability.

Neither Film Producers, Inc., v. Jordan, supra, nor Del Monte Light & Power Co. v. Jordan, supra, is in conflict with this view. Those cases, in effect, merely hold that in this state every share of a corporation must be of the same value in order to represent that equality of interest and to give rise to that unity of liability required by the Constitution. As already stated, the decisions in those cases did not pass upon the point whether the shares must all be of the same par value or whether they might all be nonpar shares.

For the foregoing reasons, the writ of mandate is made peremptory. Let such writ accordingly issue.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 973 — Assessor's discretion as to valuations of property will not be interfered with by court in absence of showing of fraud or bad faith (Const. art. 13, $\S$ 1, 2; Pol. Code, $\S$ 3617, 3627, 3650; San Diego Charter, art. 6, c. 1, $\S$ 3, 6).

In exercise of powers conferred by Const. art. 13, $\S$ 1, 2, Pol. Code, $\S$ 3617, 3627, 3650, and San Diego Charter, art. 6, c. 1, $\S$ 3, 6, city assessor was invested with a large measure of discretion as to valuations to be placed for purposes of taxation on property, which discretion would not be interfered with by courts in absence of showing of fraud or bad faith.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 977 — Fraud on part of assessor in placing valuations on property need not be shown expressly to invalidate assessment, but may arise by implication.

It is not necessary that fraud or bad faith on part of city assessor in placing valuations on property for taxation be expressly shown in order to invalidate assessment, since it may arise by implication in that assessment, when taken as a whole, discloses such a degree of discrimination between properties of same class or different classes, as to clearly evince a willful and systematic disregard of assessor's discretionary powers.

3. Taxation $\S$ 40(8) — Essential question in determining validity of assessment is whether Constitution and statutory provisions as to uniformity and equality have been conformed to.

In determining validity of assessment of property for taxation, essential question is whether provisions of Constitution regarding uniformity in valuations, and laws declaring how uniformity and equality in distribution of burdens of taxation are to be ascertained and applied, have been fairly conformed to, or systematically, and intentionally and grossly disregarded.

4. Taxation $\S$ 412 — Constitution and statute only require valuations of property fixed by assessor to be separately stated by him in his assessment books (Const. art. 13, $\S$ 2; Pol. Code, $\S$ 3627).

Const. art. 13, $\S$ 2, and Pol. Code, $\S$ 3627, requiring that land and improvements thereon shall be separately assessed, do not refer to valuations to be placed upon such two classes of taxable property, but merely that valuations thereof fixed by assessor shall be separately stated by him in his assessment books.

5. Taxation $\S$ 40(8) — Assessment by city assessor of improvements on real estate, based on removal or wreckage value, and disregarding elements ordinarily determining values, held invalid where actual discrimination resulted.

Assessment made by city assessor in accordance with systematically and intentionally adopted theory in placing valuation of improvements upon real estate, at its removal or wreckage value, and disregarding elements of age, state of repair, location, cost of construction or of replacement, held invalid, where actual discrimination resulted from such assessment.

6. Taxation ☞40(8)—Assessor's good faith in making assessment will not validate assessment, which is discriminatory and lacking in uniformity.

Assessor's good faith in assessment of property at its cash value will not validate an assessment, where it is discriminatory and lacking in uniformity and owners are entitled to invalidate it when they pursue proper statutory method to recover taxes thus improperly imposed.

7. Taxation ☞459—Acts of board of equalization in perpetuating discriminatory assessments by assessor held subject to review.

Acts of board of equalization in perpetuating arbitrary and discriminatory assessment of property by assessor for purposes of taxation held subject to review on application by taxpayers for relief.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by B. Franklin Mahoney against the City of San Diego, a municipal corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Higgins, Arthur F. H. Wright, and Frank M. Downer, Jr., all of San Diego, for appellant.

Ralph Jenney, Wright & McKee, and Sloane & Sloane, all of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff herein sought by his amended complaint herein the recovery from the defendant, a municipal corporation, of the sum of $1,663.93, with interest, which said sum he alleged he had been compelled to pay and did pay to said municipality under protest as taxes illegally imposed upon his property within said municipality and by its officials charged under its charter and the general laws with the levy and collection of taxes in and for said city. In his said amended complaint he alleges that during all the times mentioned therein he was the owner of the particular parcels of real property described therein, together with the improvements thereon; that the city of San Diego is and during all of said times was a municipal corporation organized and operating under a freeholders' charter and having among its officials a city assessor possessing the powers enumerated in said charter and in the general laws; that the said property of the plaintiff was assessed for the fiscal year 1923, and that in so assessing the same the said assessor assessed the several lots or parcels of land so described separately from the improvements thereon; that the said several lots or parcels of land were thus assessed at a total valuation of $84,900, which sum was equal to the full cash value thereof; and that the amount of taxes thereafter levied and charged against said lots and parcels of land was levied at the regular tax rate of $2 upon each $100 of said valuation. The plaintiff then proceeds to allege that said assessment and tax levy were and each of them was and is unlawful for the reason "that the said city assessor of said city of San Diego, in assessing all the property within said city for city taxes for the fiscal year of 1923, adopted and pursued a systematic, arbitrary, willful, and intentional scheme and method for such assessment which was contrary to law, in that in pursuance of said scheme and method he assessed all land within the said city at from 80 to 100 per cent. of its full cash value, and assessed all taxable improvements on land at not to exceed 25 per cent. of their cash value, and assessed personal property at not to exceed 60 per cent. of its cash value. That such arbitrary, systematic, willful, and intentional scheme and method was deliberately adopted and pursued by the said city assessor with the intent and purpose of discriminating against one class of property, to wit, land, as distinguished from the improvements thereon, and as distinguished from personal property, and in discrimination against the owners of said land, and that such arbitrary, systematic, willful, and intentional scheme and method was adopted and pursued by the said city assessor contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and Constitution and laws of the state of California and of the charter of said city of San Diego, which require that all property shall be assessed and taxed in proportion to its value. That such scheme and method was pursued for the avowed purpose of carrying into effect the unauthorized policy and belief of said city assessor that the revenue for the maintenance of the city government should be derived mainly from an unequal and discriminating tax on land, and that such method was adopted and followed in fixing said taxes upon the above-described property.

The plaintiff further proceeds to allege that the improvements upon said several lots or parcels of land do not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $10,350, but the same were assessed by said assessor in said year at a total valuation of $2,570, which was not to exceed 25 per cent. of their full cash value; and that not only were the said improvements upon the plaintiff's said real estate thus assessed at a valuation not in excess of 25 per cent. of the full cash value thereof, but that all taxable improvements situate upon all of the lots and lands throughout the entire city of San Diego were also assessed at not to exceed 25 per cent. of their full cash value; and that in so assessing the same the said assessor acted in accordance with an arbitrary, systematic, willful, and intentional scheme and method, and that as a result thereof the tax fixed and levied upon plaintiff's said lots and lands is invalid and unjust and imposes upon said plaintiff and upon his said lands the burden of paying a greater amount of taxation thereon in proportion to its cash value than was assessed and imposed upon other kinds of property subject to taxation for municipal purposes within said city. The plaintiff then proceeds to allege that after making the assessments of the plaintiff's said properties as above alleged and in the manner above set forth, the said assessor transmitted the assessment roll embracing his said assessments to the city clerk for the use of the board of equalization of said city in the performance of its functions as prescribed in the charter of said city, and that the said board of equalization in regular session had and held a hearing thereon whereat the plaintiff herein appeared before said board and presented to said board all of the facts in his complaint herein alleged as to the irregularity and invalidity of said assessment and demanded the correction and equalization of the same, but that the said board at said hearing denied said plaintiff said relief, and that said action was taken by said board with full knowledge of all of the facts pleaded herein and was taken arbitrarily and capriciously and without regard to said facts and in disregard of the evidence then before said board showing said facts, which evidence was without conflict or contradiction; and that the said action of said board was taken in ratification and indorsement of the unlawful scheme and method of assessment adopted and pursued by said assessor. The plaintiff further and finally alleged the demand made upon him for the payment of the taxes so illegally assessed and exacted and his payment of the same under protest as provided in section 3819 of the Political Code; and his demand upon said defendant thereafter and in due course and form for the repayment of the same, and of the refusal of the said defendant to comply with said demand.

In its answer to the plaintiff's amended complaint, the defendant municipality specifically denied that the said assessment or any part or portion thereof was or is unlawful or invalid or unfair or that its said assessor adopted or pursued any such systematic or arbitrary or willful or intentional or unlawful scheme or method as is set forth in said complaint; and denies that his assessment of the improvements upon the plaintiff's said lots and parcels of land was at other than the full cash value thereof; and denies that his assessment of the taxable improvements upon lots and lands within said city was at a valuation of not to exceed 25 per cent. of the full cash value thereof, or was at other than their full cash value; and denies that in their action upon the plaintiff's demand for an adjustment and equalization of the assessment upon the plaintiff's said properties or upon the valuations of any and all other of the taxable properties within said city the board of equalization acted either arbitrarily or capriciously or without due regard for the facts or the evidence before it, or that the action of said board was taken in ratification or indorsement of any unlawful scheme or method adopted or pursued by said assessor; and denies that any refund of taxes to said plaintiff should be made. The cause came on for hearing, together with certain other causes involving similar actions brought by other protesting taxpayers and presenting identical pleadings and which it was stipulated should be heard together.

The evidence of the respective parties having been presented, the several causes were submitted to the court for decision, and the court thereafter made and filed its findings and conclusions thereon. In its said findings of fact the trial court found the facts to be substantially as set forth in the plaintiff's amended complaint and practically in the identical language thereof, and as its conclusions of law based upon said findings of fact decided that the assessments in question upon the properties of the several plaintiffs in said consolidated cases were and each of them was illegal and void, and accordingly ordered and adjudged a repayment of the taxes as sued for in each of said actions. Judgment having been so entered, the defendant in each of said actions has taken, and now prosecutes, its several appeals.

The questions presented upon each of these consolidated appeals are of great importance, involving, as they do, not only the powers and duties of the assessor and of the board of equalization of this particular appellant, but involving also the powers and duties generally of the like officials of municipal corporations and political subdivisions of the state of California in the matter of the assessment and equalization of taxes upon real estate and the improvements thereon. The Constitution of the State of California provides, in section 1 of article 13 thereof, that—

"All property in the state except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, * * * as provided by law, or as hereinafter provided."

By section 2 of article 13 of the Constitution it is provided that—

"Land, and the improvements thereon, shall be separately assessed. Cultivated and uncultivated land, of the same quality, and similarly situated, shall be assessed at the same value."

Section 3627 of the Political Code provides that—

"All taxable property must be assessed at its full cash value. Land and improvements thereon shall be separately assessed. Cultivated and uncultivated land, of the same quality, and similarly situated, shall be assessed at the same value."

While section 3617 of the Political Code, under the subject of definitions, provides that—

"The terms 'value' and 'full cash value' mean the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor."

Section 3650 of the same Code provides for assessment books in which must be listed all taxable property and showing "the improvements to be assessed against the particular section, tract or lot of land upon which they are located," and the cash value thereof. Subject to the foregoing provisions of the Constitution and of the statutes of the state, the general laws thereof, the charters of the several municipal corporations operating under the same contain provisions for the assessment, equalization, and collection of taxes upon real and personal property. These are in the main similar, and in the case of chartered cities the provisions of their organic laws relating to the powers and duties of their officials who are charged with the assessment and collection of local taxes are usually drawn in harmony with or in subordination to the general laws. Such is the case with the city of San Diego by the charter of which city it is provided in article 6, chapter I, section 3 thereof, as follows:

"Except as in this charter otherwise provided, the assessment of property taxable in the city for municipal purposes, the equalization and assessment of taxes, and sale of property for unpaid taxes, and the redemption of property sold for taxes shall be made in the same manner and with like effect as now or may be hereafter provided by law for the assessment of property, equalization of assessments, levy and collection of taxes, and the sale of property for unpaid taxes for state and county purposes and the redemption thereof; and all provisions of law applicable to such assessments, equalization, levy, collection and sale for state and county purposes, are hereby applied to and shall be the law governing such assessment, equalization, levy, collection and sale for municipal purposes; and the respective officers of the city shall have, possess and perform the same powers and duties in all matters concerning revenue and taxation for municipal purposes as are or may be by law conferred or imposed upon county officers in matters concerning revenue and taxation for state and county purposes."

[1-6] It is provided in section 6 of the same article of said charter that—

"The terms 'real' and 'personal property' as used in this charter shall have the same meaning as the same terms used in the revenue laws of this state; and all property subject to taxation aforesaid shall be assessed at its full cash value which in the judgment of the assessor it has at 12 o'clock m. on the first day of January and the lien of the annual city tax levy shall attach at said hour."

By section 8 of the same article in said charter it is provided that—

"A committee of the common council selected as in this charter provided, shall constitute a board of equalization, and shall, after the assessor shall have completed and handed in his assessment roll to the city clerk, and after five days' notice published in the official newspaper of this city, hold meetings to hear and determine all complaints respecting the valuation of property as fixed by the assessor in such roll; provided, however, that before raising any assessment, the board shall notify the person interested by letter deposited in the post office or express, post paid, and addressed to such person at least three days before action taken, of the day fixed when the matter will be investigated. Any member of said board shall have power to administer oaths, and affirmations in the matters before said board, and the sessions of said board shall be held from time to time, as in its notice specified, for the period of two weeks, and no longer."

These various provisions of the Constitution, the statutes, and the city charter determine and define the powers, duties, and functions of the city assessor and the board of equalization of the city of San Diego. In the exercise of the foregoing powers and functions assessors, both by the general laws and by the charters of those municipalities in respect to the properties within which the duties of their offices are to be performed, are invested with a large measure of discretion in the exercise of their judgment as to the valuations to be placed for purposes of taxation upon the several kinds of such property subject to such taxation; and it has been generally held that when this judgment and discretion of assessing officers has been exercised, even though erroneously, within the limitations imposed by the foregoing provisions of the Constitution and of the laws under which they operate, such judgment and discretion will not, as to the results reached by their exercise, be interfered with by the courts in the absence of a showing of fraud or bad faith. It is not, however, necessary that such fraud or bad faith on the part of the official shall be expressly shown; it may arise by implication out of the fact that the assessment when taken as a whole and viewed with respect to the assessable values of the various kinds of taxable properties within the province of his office discloses such a degree of discrimination between properties of the same class or properties of different classes as to clearly evince a willful and systematic disregard of the requirements of the Constitution and of the provisions of the statute or charter governing and limiting the exercise of the assessor's discretionary powers. This court had occasion to so declare in the case of Los Angeles G. & Elec. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 121 P. 384, 162 Cal. 164, 168, 9 A. L. R. 1277, which was a case wherein the action of the assessor and of the board of equalization sustaining the same was upheld as not having been clearly or satisfactorily brought within the foregoing principles, the application of which would have been essential to the overthrow of the assessment. It was likewise so held by this court in the case of Southern Pacific Land Co. v. San Diego Co., 191 P. 931, 183 Cal. 543, wherein it appeared from the averments of the plaintiff's complaint that a systematic, willful, and intentional undervaluation of lands of the same class as those belonging to plaintiff, but belonging to persons other than the plaintiff, was adopted and carried into effect by both the county assessor and county board of equalization, while plaintiff's lands of the same class had been, with like systematic and willful intent, overvalued. In upholding the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint, this court quoted approvingly its language in the case of Los Angeles G. & Elec. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, and further proceeded to hold, in conformity with the ruling in that case, that while it was not claimed that there was any actual fraud or corrupt intent on the part of the officials making and sustaining the assessment in question, there was, nevertheless, such a violation of plain duty on the part of such officials as to constitute "fraud" or "something equivalent to fraud," within the meaning of those terms as used in the decisions relative to the review of the action of assessing officers, entirely regardless of the motive actuating them in the matter of such an assessment. The foregoing principles, while applied in the case last decided to property of the same class, would be in our opinion equally applicable to assessable properties of different classes where the proofs were plain. The essential question with respect to the assessment of properties of the same or different classes to be determined is as to whether the provisions of the Constitution regarding uniformity in valuations and of the laws declaring how uniformity and equality in the distribution of the burdens of taxation are to be ascertained and applied have been fairly conformed to or systematically, and intentionally and grossly disregarded.

The declaration of these principles brings us to the immediate assessment under review upon these several appeals. With respect to the several classes of assessable property in the City of San Diego in its fiscal year of 1923 there is no dispute; nor is there any material dispute as to the plan or method adopted and put into operation by the assessor of said city with regard to the respective valuations placed upon these several classes of property, nor as to the actual effect thereof upon the assessment of property values as a whole. The assessor was called upon to deal with three main classes of property in the course of the performance of his official duties. These were (a) real estate; (b) improvements upon real estate; and (c) personal property. With respect to the valuations placed by him upon all assessable real estate within said city considered separately from the improvements or want of improvements thereon, no substantial question is raised as to the fairness of his assessment thereof; nor is there any sufficiently tangible objection made to the valuation placed by him upon personal property. It is with reference to the said assessor's method and basis of valuation of improvements upon the real estate situate within said city that the main issue in these cases arises. Upon that subject the plaintiffs have alleged, and the trial court has found, as hereinabove in this opinion fully set forth. The question is whether the evidence sustains said findings in accord with the averments of said complaint. That evidence is also practically uncontradicted and is embraced in the testimony of the assessor himself as a witness in his own behalf before the board of equalization and before the trial court. The assessor testified that in entering upon his assessment of improvements upon real estate for the fiscal year 1923 he found that the Constitution (art. 13, § 2) required that "Land, and the improvements thereon, shall be separately assessed," and that the statute (Pol. Code, § 3627) contained practically the same requirement; and that he obeyed these requirements in making his valuations of improvements upon real estate. The fundamental error of the assessor, however, consisted in his misinterpretation of the meaning of these requirements of the Constitution and of the statute. The foregoing provisions of the Constitution and of the statute do not refer to the valuations to be placed upon these two classes of taxable property, but merely to the fact that the valuations thereof fixed by the assessor in conformity with the other provisions of the Constitution and statutes relating to the basis of the assessment of property values shall be separately stated by him in his assessment books. The context of both the constitutional and the statutory provisions would seem to make this sufficiently obvious, since in immediate juxtaposition to the above requirement is to be found the requirement that "cultivated and uncultivated land shall be assessed at the same value." In order to make effectual this, as well as the other requirements of the law, that improved and unimproved real estate shall have a uniform basis of valuation, it was essential that the valuations to be placed upon land and upon the improvements thereon, whether in the form of buildings or crops or trees, should be separately set forth in the making of assessments thereon. But this assessor, as his evidence conclusively shows, interpreted these provisions of the Constitution and statute to mean that in making his valuations of improvements upon real estate he was required to treat this form of property as though its physical separation from the real estate upon which it stood was contemplated by the framers of the organic law, and that the valuation to be thus arrived at was to be such as that class of property would be taken at by a creditor in payment of a solvent debt with the idea of its removal from the real estate upon which it was affixed. In a word, the testimony of this assessor sufficiently shows that the basis adopted by him for his valuation of improvements upon real estate in the city of San Diego was, when reduced to its last analysis, its removal or wreckage value. That this was the assessor's concept of his duty, for whatever purpose he may have had in view, is ineluctable when his testimony is read as a whole. He says:

"The methods employed in the assessment of the improvements was that I found that under the law I was to separately assess the improvements from the real estate, and that I should use the same definition of value that was prescribed by law in fixing a value of the property; and that I used every method I was able to use to determine what would be the full cash value of an improvement on real estate, separated from the real estate. Now, in doing that I ascertained, first, the production cost of that improvement, or what it would cost to reproduce the building or improvements; and then, separating it from the real estate on which it stood, I arrived at what I concluded and determined was a full cash value of that property. I used the building permits of the city as a basis, general basis, for the values or the price or cost of that improvement. I then took a value that I felt would be a fair cash—or full cash value of that improvement after it was separated from the real estate on which it stood."

Again he says:

"I had to assess the building as to its value separated from the real estate, and as to the elements of value that I considered in determining it to be worth twenty-five per cent., why, you could put any element of value in there, wreckage value, or removal value, or value of a man who wanted the property for some particular purpose, who would buy it for that purpose."

And he still further states:

"In arriving at the initial cost or production price of buildings, as far as percentage was concerned, I assessed old buildings and new buildings the same. They were all taken from the building permits of the city, and there was, I believe, no reduction for depreciation. I arrived as near as I could at the cost of the building and then took a percentage of that for the value of the building."

Finally, and upon cross-examination, he testified:

"We assessed it without taking into consideration the real estate upon which it stood, and while the law says it is a part of the real estate, it is a peculiar proposition, yet it says we must assess it separately. It is either that proposition or that buildings must be assessed and put on the books of the city exactly what it costs to put up, less the depreciation. There are only two constructions, and I took the construction which I thought was best for the entire city of San Diego; the best and most reasonable construction. My firm judgment is that improvements should be encouraged in every possible way.

"Q. Is there any possible value to be put on improvements to property if not taken in connection with the land except a value for removal purposes? A. A nominal value.

"Q. What value would there be except a salvage value? A. Or for leased purposes, or something of that kind.

"Q. That was what you tried to arrive at, removal value? A. Yes. To make it a basis of assessment."

It is true that the assessor also testifies and repeats that he assessed all of the improvements upon real estate at the full cash value, but in practical application, as his evidence taken as a whole abundantly shows, he did no such thing. Take, for example, his testimony wherein he states that after ascertaining the original cost of construction of buildings of the three general classes designated by him as (a) concrete buildings, (b) brick and tile buildings, and (c) frame and stucco buildings, he assessed these several classes of structures entirely regardless of their age or location or depreciation from any cause in the following manner, viz.: He placed an arbitrary valuation upon frame and stucco buildings of 15 per cent. of their cost of construction; upon brick or tile buildings of 20 per cent. of their cost of construction; and upon concrete buildings of 25 per cent. of their cost of construction. He admits that in each instance this was an entirely arbitrary percentage of valuation. His entire departure in so doing from the basic principles laid down in the Constitution and statutes as guaranties of uniformity and equality in the ascertainment and admeasurement of property values for purposes of assessment is made doubly obvious by the specific examples to which reference is made in the testimony of the assessor, wherefrom it appears the elements of age, of state of repair, or availability for productive uses, and of actual productivity, were all eliminated from the assessor's calculation as bases for his estimates of assessment values; and that the elements of original cost of construction or even of present cost of replacement were only taken account of as being points of departure in his arbitrary fixation of valuations at a small percentage of such cost, depending upon the type of structure assessed. The assessor insists that he ought not to take account of the element of location of a building in estimating its assessment valuation as to do so would amount to double taxation, since the real estate upon which such building stands had already been assessed at a valuation depending upon its favorable location. But even in this the assessor is in error, since in common knowledge and experience each of these two classes of property possess in themselves and independent of the other an actual or exchangeable value dependent upon the location; as, for example, a vacant piece of real estate in a favorable location has an assessable value equal to that of other like pieces of real estate of like favorable location whether improved or not. On the other hand, a building upon leased premises has an assessable value dependent upon its favorable location, regardless of the ownership of the land. The fact that the favorable location of such building for business purposes was taken account of by the assessor in laying a suitable burden of taxation upon its owner, and that the same element was also considered in taxing the owner of the land, would not in such case constitute double taxation; no more would it do so if the ownership of the land and of the building were united in the same person. We do not say that in assessing improvements upon real estate the elements of age, state of repair, location, cost of construction, or of replacement are or that any one of them is controlling upon the assessor in the exercise of his judgment and discretion as to what valuations he shall place upon assessable improvements upon real estate; but what we do hold is that an assessment, made by an assessor in accordance with a systematic and intentionally adopted theory for the arrival at valuations to be placed upon that form of property, which omits to take into consideration any of the foregoing elements which in common experience ordinarily determine values, and in place thereof substitutes an arbitrary basis for the fixation of values upon the several classes of such form of property for purposes of assessment upon a percentage plan, from which the foregoing elements for determining values are expressly excluded, will not be upheld when it sufficiently appears that actual discrimination has resulted from an assessment thus arrived at. When the determining principles leading to uniformity in distributing the burdens of taxation have been lost sight of or willfully abandoned in the making of the assessment complained of, the asseveration of the assessor that he assessed the form of property "at its full cash value" will not avail him in the presence of the actual and admitted facts supplied from his own lips; nor will his assertion, even though it be admitted to be true, that he acted honestly and in good faith in making the assessment in question, suffice to compel the upholding of an assessment when the assessor making it, however honest and well-intended, has willfully adopted and deliberately pursued a plan of assessment which is violative of the fundamental principles which should be his guide in the performance of his official duty; and when such an assessment is sufficiently shown to be replete with discrimination and lacking in uniformity in the burdens it imposes upon the owners of assessable property, such assessment will be invalidated at the instance of those property owners who shall pursue the proper statutory method to recover the taxes thus improperly imposed.

[7] We are satisfied that the record in this case discloses that such discrimination and lack of uniformity exists upon the face of the assessment in question. It is true that the plaintiffs herein are the owners respectively of real estate holdings of large value upon which there are in each case improvements of less but yet of considerable value, and that it might well be said that these particular plaintiffs have not been substantially affected or injured by too low an assessment, however arbitrarily imposed upon the improvements upon their real estate which latter form of property they admit has been assessed at its full cash value. But the injury which these plaintiffs have suffered, and of which they have a right to complain with respect to said assessment, is that resulting from a general and systematic undervaluation of all improvements upon real estate within said city, as a result of which an undue and unequal burden of taxation has been laid upon all real estate therein. An equalization upon a proper basis of the valuations of both real estate and the improvements thereon would have resulted in relieving the former of the undue proportion of its burden, and to such measure of relief the owners of real estate, whether improved or unimproved, were entitled upon proper application to the city board of equalization. It is urged by the appellant herein that the plaintiffs herein made such application, and that they and each of them had a full and fair hearing thereon; and that upon such hearing their application for such or any relief was denied; and that the denial of such relief by said board of equalization is final upon the right of said plaintiffs to such relief; and that the determination of said board of equalization thereon is not the proper subject of review by the courts. Conceding the correctness of the principle thus invoked as fully supported by a long and uniform line of decisions, we are again met with the difficulty of giving it application to the facts of the present case, since the trial court has found upon what we deem ample and sufficient evidence that said board of equalization, in its action in upholding the assessor's concept with regard to the assessment complained of, was actuated and controlled by its adherence to the same arbitrary system and plan of evaluation as that systematically pursued by the assessor, and that the rulings of said board in the ratification of the assessor's aforesaid plan and method of assessment had the effect of upholding and perpetuating the same discrimination and want of uniformity in said assessment of which the plaintiffs herein complain. It will suffice to say that there is no other or different immunity available to boards of equalization than those which are available to assessors when the acts of the former are found to be arbitrary and when the proven discriminations and inequalities of the latter in making his assessment are perpetuated thereby; and that the courts will grant relief in the one case as readily as in the other when the record before them justifies the granting of such relief.

In conclusion, it may be stated that we are satisfied that the trial court was justified by the evidence before it in awarding to these particular plaintiffs in these several cases the relief to which they had shown themselves to be entitled by pursuing the remedies against the assessment assailed herein which the statute has provided; and hence that its judgment in each of said cases will be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LENNON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.

198 Cal. 405

LUCE v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO (two cases).

LUCE et al. v. SAME.

(L. A. 8411-8413.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1926.)

Municipal corporations  977—Property owners held not entitled to recover taxes paid under protest, in absence of showing of application to board of equalization for relief from arbitrary valuations. (Pol. Code, § 3819 et seq.)

Property owners held not entitled to recover taxes paid under protest under Pol. Code, § 3819 et seq., in absence of showing that they made due application to city board of equalization for relief from arbitrary and unequal valuations of assessor.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Separate actions by M. A. Luce, Adelaide M. Luce, and another, and M. A. Luce, against the City of San Diego. Judgments for defendant, and plaintiffs separately appeal. Appeals consolidated. Affirmed.

Sloane & Sloane and E. A. Luce, all of San Diego, for appellants.

S. J. Higgins and A. F. H. Wright, both of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. These three appeals, though taken separately, were consolidated for the purposes of their hearing and determination in this court. They involve, with the exception to be hereinafter noted, the identical facts which were presented to this court in the appeals in the cases of B. Franklin Mahoney and certain other plaintiffs against the city of San Diego, which cases were also consolidated for the purposes of hearing and determination in this court and the decision wherein has been this day filed. The exception as to the facts which brought about a decision in the plaintiffs' favor in the last above-named cases and in the defendant's favor in the present cases was this: That the plaintiffs in said former cases duly applied to the board of equalization of the city of San Diego for relief from the alleged unequal assessment involved in both sets of cases, while in the consolidated cases presented upon the present appeals no such application for relief was made. In the absence of such application and of action thereon by the said board of equalization, the trial court in these latter cases held, and we think held correctly, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief demanded in their several complaints, namely, to the repayment of their taxes imposed by said assessment. The plaintiffs, who are the appellants herein, contend that no such application was required to be made; but in this contention we think they are in error. In the early case of Fall v. Marysville, 19 Cal. 391, it was held by this court that an objection to a tax assessment which did not go to the validity of the tax itself, but simply as to its amount, must be made to the proper tribunal for reduction before an action would lie to restrain the collection of such a tax. In the case of Henne v. Los Angeles County, 61 P. 1081, 129 Cal. 297, the foregoing doctrine was extended so as to be given application to an assessment of property which was not assessable, as in that case to the imposition of a tax upon a mortgage held by the University of California and taxed against the owner of the property in question. In the later case, however, of Brenner v. Los Angeles, 116 P. 397, 160 Cal. 72, this court drew the distinction between the wrongful assessment of property not subject to taxation and the wrongful valuation of taxable property, and to the extent only of an attempted assessment of nontaxable property overruled its former decision in the case of Henne v. Los Angeles County, supra; but otherwise indicated that the rule laid down in the earlier cases above referred to was to be upheld in its application to an unequal assessment of taxable properties. We are entirely satisfied that the rule as thus limited has full application to such cases as are presented upon the present appeals, and that, in the absence of a showing that the complaining property owners have made due application to the city board of equalization for relief from the arbitrary and unequal valuations of the assessor, the plaintiffs herein were not entitled to a recovery of the taxes paid, even though they had in each case made such payment under protest as provided in section 3819 et seq. of the Political Code.

It follows that the judgment in each of these cases must be, and is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LENNON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.

198 Cal. 407

In re WITT'S ESTATE.

CARLSON v. LANTZ.

(L. A. 8672.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1926.
Rehearing Denied April 29, 1926.)

1. Wills ⚡310—Court held not required, before submitting will contest to jury, to determine whether or not contestant had any interest entitling him to contest will (Code Civ. Proc. § 1312).

In contest by heir of probate of will devising all testatrix's property to a third party, it was not duty of trial court, before submitting contest to jury, to determine whether contestant had any interest in estate entitling him to contest will because of agreement of testatrix whereby she agreed to will all of her property to sole beneficiary named in will, since court's decision on validity of such agreement would be a determination of question which contestant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1312, is entitled to have jury determine.

2. Wills ⚡324(1)—General motion of proponent for instructed verdict was properly denied, if evidence was sufficient to sustain one or more grounds of contest.

Where proponent's motion in will contest for instructed verdict was a general motion, and ruling was not asked on motion directed to each separate ground of contest, motion was properly denied, if evidence was sufficient to sustain one or more of causes of action.

3. Wills ⚡163(4)—Where attorney was made sole beneficiary in client's will, in will contest burden was on him to overcome presumption of fraud and unfair dealing and not on contestant.

Where attorney was made sole beneficiary under client's will, in suit by heir contesting such will on ground of fraud and undue influence, burden was on attorney to overcome presumption of fraud and unfair dealing and not on contestant, as is usual situation in will contest.

4. Attorney and client ⚡123(1)—Dealings between attorney and client for attorney's benefit are presumptively invalid, which presumption can only be overcome by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence.

All dealings between an attorney and client for benefit of former are presumptively invalid on ground of constructive fraud, which presumption can be overcome only by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence.

5. Wills ⚡163(4)—Proof of existence of confidential relationship between testatrix and beneficiary and activity on latter's part in preparation of will raises presumption of undue influence.

A presumption of undue influence arises from proof of existence of confidential relationship between testatrix and beneficiary, coupled with activity on part of latter in preparation of will.

6. Wills ⚡166(4).

Evidence held to sustain finding of undue influence in execution of will whereby testatrix's attorney was made sole beneficiary.

7. Wills ⚡166(4)—Evidence held to sustain finding that will making testatrix's attorney sole beneficiary was procured through fraud of such attorney.

Evidence held to sustain finding that will whereby testatrix's attorney was made sole beneficiary was procured through fraud of such attorney and sole beneficiary.

8. New trial ⚡57—Failure of clerk of trial court to enter verdict is not ground for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 628).

That clerk failed to enter verdict, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 628, does not warrant granting new trial, as failure of clerk to enter in minutes a court order does not prevent action taken being order of court.

9. Trial ⚡350(1).

Omission of special issues is discretionary on part of trial court.

10. Appeal and error ⚡1170(1)—Specifications of errors not sufficient to warrant reversal of judgment will be disregarded by Supreme Court (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, Supreme Court will disregard specifications of errors which would not suffice to warrant reversal of judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Bertha Schubert Witt, deceased. Proceeding by Charles Lantz to probate decedent's will, in which Harold Carlson filed a contest. Judgment for contestant, and proponent appeals. Affirmed.

Charles Lantz, W. P. Hyatt, and F. C. Huber, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Marshall Stimson and Noel C. Edwards, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal by the sole beneficiary named in the will of Mrs. Bertha Schubert Witt, also known as Mrs. Bertha Carlson, from the judgment rendered by the court below in favor of the contestant, and from the order denying a new trial.

Bertha Schubert Witt, also known as Bertha Carlson, died on the 6th day of February, 1923, in the county of Los Angeles. She was at the time of her death about 62 years of age, and had been a resident of Los Angeles for some 28 years. During that time she had dealt in real estate, and had bought property, subdivided it, and built bungalows thereon. Her affairs, however, got into a very tangled condition, with the result that most, if not all, of her property was covered by mortgages. The record shows that she owned equities in the following property which will prove pertinent to a discussion of the case, and which for convenience in discussion will be grouped in three parcels: Parcel I—Lot 15, block 13, Elysian Heights tract; a five-room cottage, known as No. 2049 Echo Park avenue; a lot known as the westerly 33 feet of lots 8, 9 and 10, Carlson Terrace tract. Parcel II—Agreement of purchase of lot 11 of the Carlson Terrace tract. Parcel III—Lots 8, 9, and 10, except the westerly 33 feet thereof, with three cottages known as 2029, 2033, and 2037 Echo Park avenue, and lots 17 and 19, block 28, Angeleno Heights, fronting on Sunset boulevard.

In August, 1914, Mrs. Witt entered into a contract with one A. J. Borden whereby he agreed to take over all of her equities in the various properties which she owned; give her a promissory note for the purchase price of $6000; and give her as security a blanket second mortgage on all of the property deeded to him. Pursuant to said agreement a note for $5,000 was given by Borden to her. Another note for $1,000 was given to her by Borden, and she in return deeded to him a lot No. 10, Angeleno Heights, not included in the agreement, which lot he turned over to one Spicer, who held an attachment against Mrs. Witt's property, and thereby obtained a release. The arrangement with Mr. Borden did not prove satisfactory to Mrs. Witt, and some difficulty arose over the fact that Mrs. Witt, contrary to Mr. Borden's wishes, recorded her mortgage from him. In February, 1916, an accounting was had between Mr. Borden and Mrs. Witt, whereby Borden deeded back to Mrs. Witt a portion of the property deeded by her to him. This property consisted of the properties heretofore designated as parcel I. Legal title to the property re-deeded to Mrs. Witt by Borden subsequently came into the possession of Mrs. Anna Colkins by deed from Mrs. Witt. Lot 15, block 13, of Elysian Heights tract, had been sold for delinquent taxes and the unrecorded tax deed held by one T. A. Davis, a resident of Goshen, Ind. And on No. 2049 Echo Park avenue a first mortgage was held by one Tucker, and a second mortgage in the sum of $800 was held by another person. Legal title to the remainder of Mrs. Witt's property remained in Borden. In April, 1920, Mrs. Witt called upon Mr. Charles Lantz, an attorney at law, at his office in Los Angeles relative to the unrecorded tax deed held by Mr. T. A. Davis. Mr. Lantz was a cousin of Mr. Davis, and transacted business either for him or in his name in Los Angeles. According to the testimony of Mr. Lantz, Mrs. Witt explained to him the nature of her business difficulties, and he undertook to straighten them out for her. On April 8, 1920, he secured a deed from Mrs. Anna Colkins to all of the property of Mrs. Witt to which she held legal title.

Said deed was made and executed, not to Mrs. Witt, but to Mr. T. A. Davis. Several business conferences were held according to Mr. Lantz, and on April 20, 1920, Mrs. Witt mailed to Mr. Lantz a letter in which she suggested that in return for $20 or $22.50 a month during her lifetime she would turn over to him any and everything she had coming from Borden. The letter was dated "Hamburger's Ladies Rest Room, Los Angeles, Calif.," and on the reverse side thereof, in Mrs. Witt's handwriting, was the following sentence, "I would also be at your side when & where needed." Thereafter several conferences were held, and Mr. Lantz drew up a draft of a plan which he submitted to her. The substance of the plan was that Mrs. Witt was to deed all of her property to Lantz; he would undertake to clear up the title thereto; he would be repaid for the money which he advanced; each party was to be entitled to one-half of the net income; and upon her death all of the property was to belong to him. Several drafts were made, but the final agreement of the parties is evidenced by three separate instruments dated May 17, 1920. The first instrument provided that Lantz was to purchase lot 11 of the Carlson Terrace tract, to which Mrs. Witt held an agreement of purchase, and was to turn it over to any one Mrs. Witt should designate upon the payment to him within two years of the cost of the lot and the expenses incurred thereon, together with interest at 10 per cent. The second instrument provided that one-half of the net profit realized from the handling of the lot, known as the westerly 33 feet of lots 8, 9 and 10 of Carlson Terrace tract, should belong to Charles Lantz, and the one-half to any person Mrs. Witt should designate. The third instrument provided that, in consideration of Lantz taking necessary steps to foreclose the Borden mortgage, Mrs. Witt granted to him a one-half interest in all of the property held by Borden and in the net proceeds of any sale thereof, and that Mr. Lantz should first be repaid for any money which he might have expended upon the recovery of said property. It will be noted that these instruments provided generally for a 50-50 split of the property and net income or proceeds, and made no provision for the taking of the ownership of the property by Mr. Lantz upon the death of Mrs. Witt.

In August, 1920, Mr. Lantz commenced suit in the name of Mr. T. A. Davis, to whom Mrs. Witt had assigned the mortgage against Borden, for the foreclosure of the mortgage. It seems that some time prior thereto Mr. Borden had permitted the first mortgage on a couple of the pieces of property to be foreclosed, and had not redeemed them, and Mrs. Witt was in danger of losing all of her security. Borden, according to his testimony, offered to deed the property back to Mrs. Witt without the prosecution of the suit, but Mr.

Lantz insisted on going on with the foreclosure. During the course of this suit a deposition of Mrs. Witt was taken on December 30, 1920, by Mr. Lantz.

On January 3, 1921, Mrs. Witt wrote to Mr. Lantz a letter wherein she stated that she wished him to prepare a paper whereby she would leave all of her real estate and property to "my beloved, kind friend and protector, Charles Lantz." The letter continued:

"He will during my lifetime never see me in want, take care of me while I live, and my body when I have passed away I like to be buried in Rosedale Cem. I will in case I sell anything, come to him and give an account and the amount of such sale I will hand over to him, or if in need hold or ask part of it, just as I or he sees best for me. I also wish Mr. Lantz to give my two boys, which have me entirely forgotten—give them each the trinkets which are really theirs. Should he see fit to add anything to it he may do so—just as he wills it. Should I live a little longer I will gladly do anything for my friend Mr. Lantz that I am competent to do. All of property which comes through Borden can be transferred at once, and in which I will do my utmost to see that he gets it. Mr. Lantz can also make a statement to the effect he or his successors will see to it—that I will not be in want of necessities of life. Mr. Lantz will know best, how and whatever to write—as I have complete trust and confidence in him. God Bless Him.
"Bertha Schubert Witt."

On January 5, 1921, a will drafted and prepared in the office of Mr. Lantz was executed by Mrs. Witt, wherein she stated that she had been neglected by her two sons, and willed all of her property to Mr. Charles Lantz. The will was witnessed by two employees of Mr. Lantz.

On March 7, 1921, a settlement was arrived at with Borden, and he, according to a written agreement with Mrs. Witt, deeded all of Mrs. Witt's property which had remained in his hands to Mr. Lantz. On March 9, 1921, Mr. T. A. Davis, who held the deed to the property from Mrs. Anna Colkins, deeded the property over to Mr. Lantz. Mr. Lantz also purchased the title to lot 11 as agreed upon in the first instrument of May 17, 1920. The legal title to all of Mrs. Witt's property came, therefore, into the hands of Mr. Lantz.

Mrs. Witt's health during this period was not good. She was very emaciated, weighing scarcely 100 pounds, and on different occasions she had had hemorrhages. She was taken seriously ill in September, 1922, and passed away on February 6, 1923. A doctor and nurse who attended her were paid by Mr. Lantz, and arrangements were made by him to have her buried in Rosedale Cemetery. Mrs. Gage, a friend of the decedent, notified Harold Carlson, a son of the decedent residing in Clarksdale, Ariz., who had not been theretofore informed of his mother's illness, and he came to Los Angeles, and insisted upon taking charge of the funeral arrangements.

A petition for the probate of Mrs. Witt's will was filed by Mr. Lantz wherein he alleged that Mrs. Witt's estate consisted solely of personal property. Harold Carlson, decedent's son, entered a contest of the will executed in Mr. Lantz's office which went to trial upon the issues of whether or not Mrs. Witt was of sound and disposing mind at the time of the execution of the will, and whether said will was procured by the fraud and undue influence of the sole beneficiary, Charles Lantz. Another ground of contest, that a subsequent holographic will had been executed by Mrs. Witt whereby she left all of her property to Mrs. Gage, was abandoned during the trial.

Special interrogatories were given to the jury as follows:

"Was Bertha Carlson of sound or unsound mind on the 5th day of January, 1921? Was the execution of the will dated January 5, 1921, obtained through undue influence of Charles Lantz? and, Was the execution of the will dated January 5, 1921, obtained through fraud of Charles Lantz?"

The jury brought in a verdict in favor of the contestant, and answered the interrogatories to the effect that Bertha Witt, also known as Bertha Carlson, at the date of the execution of the will was of unsound mind, and that the will was procured through the undue influence and fraud of Charles Lantz. Judgment was rendered accordingly, from which judgment defendant appeals.

[1] Preliminarily the point was made by defendant that it was the duty of the trial court, before submitting the contest of the will to the jury, to determine whether or not the contestant had any interest in the estate of the deceased which would entitle him to contest the will. It is defendant's theory that, the testatrix having entered into a valid agreement during her lifetime whereby she agreed to will all of her property to the sole beneficiary named in her will, the estate of the testatrix was entirely absorbed in her lifetime, and nothing remained in which the contestant had any interest, and he had, therefore, no right of appeal. It was not the duty of the trial court to determine in advance of the trial upon the contest of the will whether or not the testatrix had entered into a valid agreement prior to her death whereby she agreed to will all of her property to a person other than contestant. The cases cited by the defendant in support of his contention that an heir at law may have no interest in an estate entitling him to a contest of a will contain the element of estoppel, for they are cases wherein the contestant had an agreement with the testatrix whereby he agreed for a consideration not to contest the will of the testatrix. The court held that by reason of said agreement the contestant was estopped to contest the will. In the instant case the agreement which it is claimed deprived the contestant of any right to contest was an alleged agreement between the testatrix and another person, which agreement, it is alleged by the contestant, was a part of a fraudulent scheme on the part of the beneficiary whereby he sought to secure all of Mrs. Witt's property. No element of estoppel here exists. And a decision by the court that the agreement was or was not valid by reason of the fact that it was or was not procured by fraud or undue influence would be a determination by the court of the question which the contestant, by code provision, is entitled to have determined by a jury. Code Civ. Proc. § 1312.

[2] Appellant's main contention is that the trial court erred in: (1) Denying the defendant's motion for an instructed verdict at the close of the contestant's case; (2) in denying the motion for an instructed verdict at the close of the entire case; and (3) in denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The motion made by appellant for an instructed verdict was a general motion setting forth the reasons or grounds for making the motion. A ruling was not asked upon a motion directed to each separate ground of contest, and if, therefore, the evidence was sufficient to sustain one or more of the causes of action, the motion was properly denied by the trial court. Pacific Vinegar, etc., Works v. Smith, 93 P. 85, 152 Cal. 507, 513; Estate of Relph, 221 P. 361, 192 Cal. 451, 455.

The essential question presented by the above specification of errors is whether or not there was substantial evidence to support the verdict upon either of the three grounds of contest.

After a careful examination of the record, we are satisfied that, although the jury from the evidence adduced upon the entire case may well have arrived at a contrary conclusion, nevertheless there is sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict as to two of the grounds of contest. Inasmuch as weakness of mind may constitute a very important circumstance in the determination of whether or not fraud or undue influence was exercised, we deem it well to first discuss and dispose of the question of the mental capacity of the testatrix to make a valid and effective will.

Contestant contends that evidence in support of the finding of the jury upon this phase of the contest is to be found in the following facts: (1) The will was an unnatural will; (2) the will contained statements which were not true in fact; (3) letters and writings of the decedent contain incoherent and contradictory statements; (4) the decedent failed to understand the nature of her own act and her properties; (5) decedent's physical condition was extremely precarious at the time of the execution of the will; (6) acts and declarations of the decedent were not those of a woman of sound mind; and (7) the opinion of intimate acquaintances was that she was not of sound mind.

Briefly summarized, the proof offered to establish the foregoing facts is as follows: (1) The will was an unnatural will, in that it disinherited the two sons of the decedent, and there is in the record no testimony of any estrangement or ill feeling between the testatrix and her two sons. (2) The statement in the will that her two sons had failed to show any interest in her welfare or communicate with her for a long period of time, although she lived in Los Angeles for 26 years, and her place of residence was known to her two sons, and had by their neglect compelled her to become dependent upon the aid of others, was not true, if considered in conjunction with the testimony of Harold Carlson to the effect that he had previous to his marriage in 1918 sent her sums of money ranging from $25 to $40 per month, and had visited her at least once a year, and had written to her every two or three weeks. (3) The statement in the letter of January 3, 1921, to the effect that "I will in case I sell anything come to him and give him an account of the amount of such sale. I will hand over to him or if in need hold or ask for part of it just as I or he sees best for me," indicates the vague and indefinite grasp of the subject about which she was writing; the peculiar statement on the reverse of the letter dated "Hamburger's Rest Room," "I would also be at your side when & where needed," indicates at the least eccentricity of mind; the deposition taken at the time of the foreclosure of the Borden mortgage shows by its content that Mrs. Witt's mind was not normal. Mrs. Witt, when asked in her deposition to whom she had given a copy of the Borden contract, replied, "The man in the moon," repeating this several times. When asked if she had delayed filing the mortgage until February, 1916, she answered, " * * * Because I am a damn fool a good thing I did too—My God, it was an angel dwelling above me." When asked if she owned the note which was being sued on, she responded, "I live on air and the smell of beef steaks and being sick to death—understand me—now ask again." And another time she interposed, after the question had been asked her whether she had guaranteed certain notes, "It was a thin one." Her answers to many questions were irrelevant and very often vague and indefinite. Mr. Person, attorney for Borden, testified that he determined there was no chance of getting a rational deposition out of her, so he quit. (4) Although the letter of January 3, 1921, purported to call for the disposal by will of all her property and the immediate transfer of the property held by Borden, nevertheless in June, 1921, Mrs. Witt spoke about her property on Echo Park avenue and Baxter street, and stated that she had other property. Another witness testified that in the fall of the same year Mrs. Witt stated that she owned three houses on Echo Park avenue and the Sunset boulevard lot. This occurred after she had signed the written agreement for Borden to transfer the property directly to Mr. Lantz, and indicates that she did not understand the nature of her act when writing the letter of January 3, 1921, claimed by Lantz to have been written just 2 days before the execution of the will. (5) During the years immediately preceding her death and at the time of the transactions here involved the decedent was in a very bad condition physically. She was so emaciated that she seemed to be but skin and bones, and weighed but 100 pounds. She was subject to hemorrhages, and was at times bedridden. (6) There is testimony of witnesses relative to the acts and declarations of the decedent tending to show she was not of sound mind to the effect that Mrs. Witt was afraid to take the medicine prescribed by the doctor for fear it was doped and would kill her; that she ate scarcely anything at all, and neighbors at different times had had to bring in food to her; that she ate grass and flowers; that at the time of the taking of her deposition in the foreclosure of the Borden mortgage she would stop and cry and rest quite a bit before answering, and her answers to questions propounded were at times irrelevant and nonsensical, and many times vague and indefinite; that Mr. Person, attorney for Borden, met her on the street, and she asked him to show her the way to a lecture, as she didn't know which way to go, although she had been there many times; that one afternoon about 2 o'clock she had answered the door with her hair all down and straggly, and with a "half crazy" look in her eyes, and asked the old friend who had called what she meant by coming at that time of the day, and refused to permit her to enter, although a shower had come up and the friend needed shelter. There is testimony that Mrs. Witt was an exceedingly slovenly housekeeper, and lived in a state of fearful disorder and confusion. Photographs were introduced in evidence to more graphically portray to the jury the indescribable disorder of the premises and the condition of the house in which Mrs. Witt had lived for some time. No words could describe the confusion and almost unbelievable disorder of the house, and it was the testimony of an intimate friend that this was the usual condition of the house in which Mrs. Witt lived. It was the testimony of Harold Carlson that subsequent to his mother's death he had found in the house occupied by her an instrument to punch one's body with about a foot long, with about 50 needles in it. (7) It was the opinion of Mr. Roughton, who had offices with Mr. Lantz during all the time that Mrs. Witt called to consult with Lantz, that she was not of sound mind. He based this opinion upon the fact that her conversations with him were of a rambling character. He stated that she would come into his office several times in one afternoon and would talk to him about astrology and fortune telling. She repeatedly asked him for the date of his birth so that she might give him a horoscope. She put her hand on his head, and told him what fine silky hair he had, and told him that he would make a great lover. She kept this up for a period of a year and a half to 2 years. According to this witness, Mrs. Witt did not seem to be capable of carrying on a very intelligent conversation on any particular subject. He testified that "the woman's conversation, the woman's dress, the offensive odor that prevailed when she was around, not being according to the accepted ideas of hygiene, would lead me to believe the woman was of unsound mind; plus her continued wrangling and heckling me as to the kind of a great lover I would make, and putting her hand on the back of my head, and feeling the growth of my hair on the back of my head, and going away 5 or 10 minutes, and coming back and doing it all over again; doing that for about two years. Her conversations at those times was all in pieces, rambling, nothing." Mr. Moll, who qualified as an intimate acquaintance, having lived next door to Mrs. Witt for many years as her neighbor, testified that in his opinion she was not of sound mind. He based his opinion upon the way she would walk around "making funny actions; she would come around like she was in a trance, and acted as if she was really off somewhat." She would come out of the house about 11 or 12 o'clock in the morning with a cup of coffee and a roll and walk around the house and back again. On one occasion she set her cup of coffee down on the front steps and left it there for a week. Things were scattered all around her house, and, when he asked her if she could not keep house a little better, she replied that she was a blue blood, and was not born to housework. On another occasion she pulled weeds out of her garden and threw them on the steps and sidewalks and left them lay there for weeks. She would come out of her house into the yard at times barefooted and dressed in her wrapper, and when she went down town she would dress up with three or four or five strings of beads. Mrs. Ruth Hastings, who became a tenant of Mrs. Witt in May, 1921, testified that she did not seem to be a woman of sound mind; that she was "kind of unbalanced on horoscopes and fortune tellings." Several times a day Mrs. Witt would ask her what day of the month she was born on, and, upon being told, would say, "Well, Mercury is mind, and mind is God, and you are Mercury." In half an hour she would come back and ask her the same thing. This witness testified that at no time that she knew Mrs. Witt was Mrs. Witt perfectly rational. As impeachment of Mr. Lantz' testimony that he believed her to be of sound mind, there was introduced the testimony of Mr. Roughton to the effect that, in reply to a question by him, after Mrs. Witt had been in the office, whether or not Mr. Lantz did not think the old lady was a little peculiar, Mr. Lantz replied, "Well, I don't know as I would pay much attention to what she said. She is kind of flighty."

Conceding, without deciding, that the foregoing narrative of facts and circumstances relied upon to show the mental incompetency of the testatrix at the time the will was executed to be not sufficient as a matter of law for that purpose, nevertheless we deem their narration to be needful and illuminating in the discussion of the points presented upon the other grounds of contest; namely, the issues of fraud and undue influence.

[3, 4] The burden of proof to establish all of the elements of fraud or undue influence was not, in the instant case, upon the contestant, as is the usual situation upon the contest of a will. The burden was upon the defendant, by reason of his relationship of attorney to Mrs. Witt, to overcome the presumption of fraud and unfair dealing which is automatically raised by the law as a protection to a client against the strong influence to which the confidential relation naturally gives rise. All dealings between an attorney and his client for the benefit of the former are not only closely scrutinized, but are presumptively invalid, on the ground of constructive fraud, and such presumption can be overcome only by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence. Not only must the attorney offer clear and satisfactory evidence that the transaction between himself and his client was fair and equitable, and no advantage was taken by him, but he must also offer proof that the client was fully informed of all matters relative to the transaction, and was so placed as to be able to act understandingly and to deal with the attorney at arm's length. Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425, 91 Am. Dec. 644; Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 105 P. 981, 156 Cal. 510; Clark v. Millsap (Cal. Sup.) 242 P. 918.

Clearly, Mr. Lantz was acting as attorney for Mrs. Witt from the time she first negotiated with him concerning the clearing up of the titles to her various properties until some time after her will was drawn. The direct admission of Mr. Lantz himself upon the witness stand that he acted as attorney for Mrs. Witt is sufficient to establish the relationship. And an examination of the transactions between Mr. Lantz and Mrs. Witt leaves no doubt. It cannot be said that the fact that part of the negotiations included the terms of Mr. Lantz' payment is proof that Mr. Lantz and Mrs. Witt were dealing at arm's length, and negatives the confidential relationship. There is abundant evidence that Mrs. Witt was not dealing at arm's length with Mr. Lantz, but relied upon him and trusted him implicitly.

The fact that an advantage was obtained by the attorney is evidenced by the terms of the will itself wherein he was bequeathed all of the property of the testatrix. Defendant insists that there is no proof of any advantage obtained by him by reason of the fact that the will was the result of a fair and equitable contract between himself and the decedent whereby she agreed to will him all of her property in return for an agreement by him to see that she should not during her lifetime be in want. Conceding this, merely for the purpose of argument, it will suffice to say that the evidence adduced by the contestant shows that, having in mind the condition of Mrs. Witt's health, Mr. Lantz stood to gain more by the contract than Mrs. Witt. The prima facie showing of contestant in this particular was, therefore, sufficient to show an advantage obtained by the attorney by virtue of his confidential relationship.

[5] Moreover, the will was drafted and drawn in the office of Mr. Lantz, and was signed by two of his employees as witnesses. Mr. Lantz testified that it was prepared in his office principally by himself. Also one of the subscribing witnesses testified that Mr. Lantz was in the room and talked to Mrs. Witt about the will before she signed it. A presumption of undue influence arises from proof of the existence of a confidential relation between the testatrix and the beneficiary, "coupled with activity on the part of the latter in the preparation of the will." Estate of Higgins, 104 P. 6, 8, 156 Cal. 257, 262; Estate of Baird, 168 P. 561, 176 Cal. 381; Estate of Nutt, 185 P. 393, 181 Cal. 522.

Defendant sought to overcome the presumption of undue influence by establishing the fact that the will was executed pursuant to an agreement, evidenced by the letter of Mrs. Witt of January 3, 1921, and his acceptance thereof, whereby Mrs. Witt agreed to will him all of her property in return for his promise to see that during her lifetime she would not be in want. Defendant insists that this contract was fair and equitable and no advantage was taken of Mrs. Witt. According to defendant, he not only gave his time and services, but he expended from $6,000 to $7,000 in purchasing and redeeming the property from prior liens and the expenses of litigation. He points out that he paid to Mrs. Witt $60 a month, $175 for doctor's bills, $250 for nurse's bills, as well as the taxes upon the property during the 2 years preceding her death. However, if the precarious condition of Mrs. Witt's health be considered, it is evident that, although it was possible for a few years that Lantz would not make a profit from the contract, nevertheless the chances were that within a comparatively short time he would, by the original expenditure of $6,000 or $7,000, obtain as sole owner legal title to property which brought in an income of approximately $1,200 per year. It is true that Mr. Lantz did furnish Mrs. Witt $60 per month, and did permit her the use of one of the houses rent free, but this is not proof that under the agreement he was obligated to furnish this amount and that he might not at his discretion give her considerably less. There was testimony of Mr. Roughton to the effect that Mr. Lantz told him he had an agreement with Mrs. Witt, but that whether or not he gave her anything was a matter of his discretion. In short, the possibilities at the time of the making of the agreement were that the contract would prove decidedly advantageous to Mr. Lantz.

If it be conceded that the first agreement, evidenced by the three instruments of May 17, 1920, was perfectly fair and legitimate, and was not the first step in the consummation of a scheme whereby Mr. Lantz was to gain all of Mrs. Witt's property, nevertheless the contract whereby Mr. Lantz was to secure all of the property in return for his promise to see that Mrs. Witt did not want for necessities was advantageous to him. According to that agreement, he was entitled to one-half of the property and one-half of the proceeds, and Mrs. Witt was entitled to the other half. This half would bring her in an income closely approximating $60 per month, and would entitle her to have one-half of her house rent free. The agreement between Mr. Lantz and Mrs. Witt practically amounted to this: Mr. Lantz obligated himself to provide Mrs. Witt with the necessities of life, which, considering the fact that she was entitled to an income from the property of almost $60 a month, would not obligate him to pay more than $10 per month at the most, and to pay the doctor's and nurse's bills if she became ill. Mrs. Witt, in return for this, obligated herself to will him the one-half interest in the property. Bearing in mind the condition of Mrs. Witt's health, the inference is warrantable that the terms of the contract were apt to prove very advantageous to Mr. Lantz.

To strengthen the presumption of undue influence, the contestant introduced evidence to the effect that Mrs. Witt was advised by Mr. Garroway, an employee of Mr. Lantz, to accept the agreement. And contestant points out that the promise of Mr. Lantz, contained in his letter of acceptance of Mrs. Witt's offer of January 3, 1921, to the effect that he will "see to it that she will not be in want, that she will have substantial, of the necessities of life," and closing with the statement, "in case I die before Mrs. Witt, I desire my son to fulfill this agreement," is a hazy, indefinite proposition, and left a great deal to the discretion in his hands, and imposed no obligation upon his successors. Particularly is this true when considered in conjunction with Mr. Lantz' statement to Mr. Roughton that whether he paid her or not was a matter of his discretion. As further circumstances to strengthen the presumption, there was offered evidence of the active participation of Mr. Lantz in the actual preparation of the will, to be considered in conjunction with the testimony of Mr. Lantz that the will was the product of several conferences, and his admission that the will might have been drafted prior to the letter of instruction of January 3, 1921; evidence that Mr. Lantz took advantage of Mrs. Witt's weakness for horoscopes by writing to her that he was inclosing her a pamphlet on luck and astrology; evidence that, although Mrs. Witt had for years wished upon her death to be cremated, she included in her will the statement that she wished to be buried in Rose-dale Cemetery.

[6] Bearing in mind that the burden was upon the defendant to remove any doubt of the unfairness in his dealings with the decedent whereby she may have been induced to will him her property, and to establish by clear and satisfactory proof that he had acted in the utmost good faith and taken no unfair advantage, it may be safely said we think that the jury, having in mind the testimony adduced as to the mental and physical condition of the decedent, was warranted in arriving at the conclusion that the defendant had not sustained the burden of proof upon him, and, therefore, found that the will was procured by the undue influence of the sole beneficiary.

Upon the issue of fraud in the procurement of the will, much of the evidence which has been set forth in connection with undue influence bears also upon this phase of the case. Thus, to overcome the presumption of fraud, defendant points to the testimony relative to the fairness and equitableness of the contract entered into between himself and the decedent. The testimony pro and con relative to the active participation of the beneficiary in the preparation of the will is also pertinent to the issue of fraud. There is, in addition, however, evidence peculiarly pertinent to the issue of fraud. This consists in evidence of the peculiar manner in which Mr. Lantz dealt with the property of Mrs. Witt. It is contestant's contention that evidence of Mr. Lantz' dealing with Mrs. Witt's property tends to establish the fact that Mr. Lantz concealed from Mrs. Witt the fact that he (Lantz), through Davis, had acquired title to her property, and that, at the time he was making a contract with her based upon the clearing up of the titles, he had in effect title to the property himself, and that she was, by reason of her ignorance of the true state of facts, induced to enter into the contract and to make her will naming him as sole beneficiary.

It will be remembered that on April 8, 1920, almost immediately after Mrs. Witt called at Lantz' office relative to her property, he procured Mrs. Colkins to execute a deed of the property, designated as parcel I, to Mr. T. A. Davis. The first mortgage upon No. 2049 Echo Park avenue—which was included in this parcel—had been foreclosed previously, and Mr. Lantz, by securing the second mortgage, effected a redemption of this property in the name of Mr. T. A. Davis. Davis thereafter assigned to Mr. Lantz the sheriff's certificate of sale, and the sheriff's deed was made to Lantz as grantee. Mr. Lantz had previously purchased in his own name lot 11 of Carlson Terrace tract, designated as parcel II, to which Mrs. Witt held an agreement of purchase. In August, 1920, Mr. Lantz commenced suit for the foreclosure of the Borden mortgage in the name of Mr. Davis; Mr. Lantz, testifying that Mrs. Witt had assigned the Borden note and mortgage to Mr. Davis. And, despite the fact that Borden offered to redeed the property back to Mrs. Witt, Lantz insisted on going on with the foreclosure. On March 7, 1921, Borden deeded all of the property designated as parcel III to Mr. Lantz, and on March 9, 1921, T. A. Davis deeded to Lantz the property previously deeded to him by Mrs. Colkins.

Mr. Lantz testified that Mr. Davis held title to all the property involved in this controversy which stood in his name as trustee for himself (Lantz) and Mrs. Witt. It is insisted by contestant that Mrs. Witt was never informed of the fact that Mr. Davis was acting as trustee for herself and Mr. Lantz, and must therefore have believed that title to the property was held by a stranger; that Mr. Davis was merely a "dummy" for Mr. Lantz, and did not know that he was a trustee of the property. A letter sent by Mr. Davis to Mr. Lantz justified the inference that Mr. Davis was used as a "dummy" of Mr. Lantz and his name used by Mr. Lantz in his own business transactions. There is in the record the testimony of Mr. Person, attorney for Mr. Borden, to the effect that some time in November, 1920, after the deed from Mrs. Colkins to Mr. Davis, he asked Mrs. Witt who Mr. Davis was, and where he lived, and she said she did not know anything about him. There is also testimony to the effect that Mrs. Witt stated that her attorney was getting all her property, and she did not see how he could do that, as she had never deeded any of her property. This testimony indicates that Mrs. Witt did not understand the facts of the trusteeship. Mr. Lantz testified that he took the deed from Mrs. Colkins in the name of T. A. Davis in order that a deficiency judgment outstanding against Mrs. Witt should not be satisfied out of that property. He did not explain, however, why the deed was not taken directly in his name, since the same result could have been reached thereby. There is also some doubt from his testimony whether he actually learned of the deficiency judgment prior to the procurement of the deed from Mrs. Colkins to Davis or not.

Ignorance on the part of Mrs. Witt of the fact of the trusteeship of Mr. Davis for herself and Mr. Lantz—conceding that the testimony that Davis was holding the property as trustee for them is true—and a belief by her that title to part of her property was in the hands of strangers, could not but have prevented Mrs. Witt from dealing understandingly with her property. It was the duty of Mr. Lantz as her attorney to make full disclosure of all facts in order that his client might act understandingly and at arm's length from himself.

The testimony by Mr. Lantz that the property was held by Mr. Davis as trustee is somewhat weakened by the fact that in the petition for the probate of the will of Mrs. Witt Mr. Lantz stated that no real property was left by Mrs. Witt; her entire estate consisting of personal property of the value of about $250. If Davis had acted as trustee, Mrs. Witt's equitable interest in the property included in parcel I had never been divested, and should have been included in the statement of her estate. Some support to the inference that the facts were not fully and freely disclosed is to be found in evidence that instruments involved in the transactions were not recorded for a considerable time after they had been executed.

Contestant also points out that in several instances direct testimony on the part of Mr. Lantz which, if true, would have strengthened his case materially was upon cross-examination changed or considerably weakened. For example, Mr. Lantz testified that the will was executed subsequent to the letter of instructions of January 3, 1921, but upon cross-examination admitted that it might have been drafted previously, and that several conferences were held relative to it. Relative to the fact that Mrs. Witt was informed of who Mr. Davis was, Mr. Lantz testified at one time that he informed her at the time of the negotiations about the Colkins deed of April 8, 1920, and at another time he testified that he told her when the suit was filed by Davis for the foreclosure of the Borden mortgage in August, 1920. Also Mr. Lantz testified that the last two pages of Mrs. Witt's deposition which were clear and lucid were given at the time of the taking of her deposition, whereas Mr. Hyatt testified that she came in later and brought them. Contestant points out that the testimony upon these various points dealt, not with inconsequential matters, but matters of vital interest in the case.

Testimony was introduced by the defendant tending to show a plausible explanation for the manner in which the property had been handled and seeking to negative the circumstances tending to support the presumption of fraud. The jury were, however, the judges of the credibility of the witnesses, and were not bound to accept as true the testimony so offered. They may have, in their discretion, eliminated it entirely from their consideration. At the most, it merely created a conflict.

[7] We are of the opinion that, bearing in mind that the burden of proof was upon the defendant, there is sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion of the jury that the procurement of the will was the result of fraud on the part of the sole beneficiary.

[8] We find no merit in the contention that a new trial should have been granted, for the reason that the verdict was not entered by the clerk, as required by section 628, Code of Civil Procedure. Section 628 is directed to the duties of the clerk, and the failure of the clerk to enter in the minutes a court order does not prevent the action taken being the order of the court. Von Schmidt v. Widber, 34 P. 109, 99 Cal. 511.

[9] The special verdicts were not inconsistent with the general verdict, and there was no error by the court in refusing to submit to the jury the special interrogatories prepared by the defendant. Submission of special issues is discretionary on the part of the trial court. Oberholzer v. Hubbell, 171 P. 436, 36 Cal. App. 16, 19.

[10] With regard to the other specifications of errors, we are satisfied that they would not suffice to warrant a reversal of the judgment. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

76 Cal. App. 486

WENTZ v. LINTHICUM. (Civ. 5376.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 9, 1926.)

1. Replevin ⇨57—Complaint to recover stock deposited with defendant for sale or its value held to state a cause of action.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff deposited with defendant, at his request, for purpose of sale, stock covered by certificate which also covered stock owned by defendant, and that defendant refused, after a reasonable time, upon demand, to return it or its equivalent in cash, stated a cause of action for return of stock or its value.

2. Pleading ⇨49—Plaintiff need only state his cause of action, in suit to recover property or its value, in ordinary and concise language.

As the Code abolishes distinction between common-law actions and provides for a single action, it is only necessary for plaintiff, in suit to recover property or its value, to state his cause of action in ordinary and concise language, without stating character of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by John T. Wentz against Ex. E. Linthicum. From an order sustaining a de-murrer to his complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John T. Wentz, of San Leandro, in pro. per.

J. E. Hood, of Oakland, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This is an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to a second amended complaint. The action was one brought to recover possession of certain shares of stock in a corporation. The complaint alleges in substance that on or about the 10th day of October, 1923, plaintiff was the owner of five shares of the common capital stock of the Firestone Rubber Company, a corporation, such stock being of the par value of $100 per share included in a certain certificate representing ten shares of said common stock; that defendant herein was the owner of the other five shares represented by such certificate. It is then alleged that on the date last mentioned plaintiff was in the possession of such certificate, and at the request of said defendant he deposited it with him for the purpose of having it sold and turned into cash. Further allegations are to the effect that on or about the 7th day of January, and at various other times, plaintiff demanded his five shares of stock from defendant, or the value thereof, but that defendant refused and still refuses to return to plaintiff the stock or its equivalent. The value is then alleged to be of the sum of $500. The prayer is for the return of the five shares or their value and for general relief.

To this complaint a demurrer was interposed upon the grounds that it did not state a cause of action, and that it was uncertain, in that it could not be ascertained therefrom whether plaintiff is suing in replevin, or claim and delivery, or trover. The demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff refused to further amend. Judgment was entered in defendant's favor.

In support of the judgment respondent claims that the allegations of the complaint show conclusively that plaintiff and defendant are either joint tenants or tenants in common of the one certificate representing the ten shares of stock, and, this being so, plaintiff is not entitled to sue for the recovery of the same, as both parties are equally entitled to the possession thereof.

[1] Assuming that an action of replevin or claim and delivery is not maintainable by one tenant in common against another where the property is indivisible, there is no attempt here by the pleader to assert a right to the possession of the entire certificate, but only to one-half of the shares represented thereby. The property is divisible, and could be surrendered to the company that issued it, and two certificates of five shares each could be issued in lieu thereof to the rightful owners. To the objection that the complaint is uncertain, in that it fails to state the character of the action, it is sufficient to say that in this state there is but one form of action. The cause of action here declared upon is based upon a contract of bailment, and is an ordinary one to recover personal property or its value. The auxiliary remedy of possession of the entire certificate is not sought. Plaintiff having deposited his shares of stock with defendant to sell and account for, he is entitled to the proceeds of such sale or the return of his property, which he alleges consists of five shares of stock. He asks for nothing else.

[2] Whatever the form of this action at common law might have been designated, whether debt, detinue, trover or conversion, is a question of no moment here. Our Code abolishes the distinction between the different common-law forms and provides for a single action. The provisions thereof do away with all the merely formal and technical distinctions between the different common-law actions, making every civil action in form substantially a special action on the case, thus avoiding the effects under the old practice of mistakes as to the proper form in particular cases. Under our reformed procedure it is only necessary for a plaintiff to state his cause of action in ordinary and concise language.

Here, as above indicated, plaintiff alleged that he deposited his stock, describing it, with defendant, at his request, for the purpose of sale. He charged that defendant refused, after a reasonable time, upon demand, to return it or its equivalent in cash. These allegations entitle plaintiff to the relief sought for, and they state a cause of action. Faulkner v. First Nat. Bank, 62 P. 463, 130 Cal. 258; Corey v. Struve, 149 P. 48, 170 Cal. 172.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 460

FARREN et al. v. WILLARD. (Civ. 2721.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 5, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 5, 1926.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨158—Contract by landlord to drive wells and install pumps to irrigate land held to require performance early enough to enable tenant to use water when required.

Contract by which landlord agreed to drive wells and install pumps with which to irrigate land leased held to require performance early enough to enable tenant to use water when required, notwithstanding lack of covenant providing for rebate of rent on account of any failure of landlord to comply with his covenant.

2. Sales ⇨81(4)—Contract for sale of water pumps, excusing seller for certain delays, held not to relieve it from its own negligence and unexplained delay in executing order promptly.

Contract for sale of water pumps, excusing seller for delays occasioned by strikes, civil or military, or other hindrances or calamities beyond its control, held not to relieve seller from its own negligence and unexplained delay in executing order for pumps promptly.

3. Sales ⇨81(3)—Contract providing by written clause that shipment should be made at once held to manifest intention for immediate delivery, notwithstanding contrary printed portion of contract (Civ. Code, §§ 1649, 1651, 1652).

Contract for sale of water pumps providing by written clause that shipment of pumps would be made at once, held to manifest intention, for delivery at once, in view of Civ. Code §§ 1649, 1651, 1652, notwithstanding printed portion of contract excusing seller from delays occasioned by strikes or other hindrances, or calamities beyond its control.

4. Sales ⇨418(18)—Giving of credit by landlord to tenant on rent on failure to irrigate land in accordance with contract, without awaiting suit, held not a "voluntary payment," precluding landlord from recovering against seller for breach of contract to furnish water pumps.

Under contract requiring landlord to furnish tenant with water to irrigate his land, giving of credit by landlord to tenant of a sum equal to rent covenanted to be paid, without awaiting suit, on failure to furnish water to portion of lands, due to seller's failure to ship water pumps in accordance with contract, held not a "voluntary payment," precluding landlord from recovering therefor in suit against seller for breach of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Voluntary Payment.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; H. C. Bell, Judge.

Action by R. C. Farren and another against E. E. Willard, wherein defendant filed cross-complaint. From a judgment granting a nonsuit as to defendant's cross-complaint and directing judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Judgment reversed, and order granting nonsuit set aside.

Claude F. Purkitt, of Willows, and Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for appellant.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On the 30th day of January, 1920, the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, whereby the plaintiff agreed to furnish certain pumps, motors, and equipment and the defendant agreed to pay therefor the sum specified in said contract. This action is for a balance alleged to be due on account of the unpaid portion of the purchase price of said equipment. The defendant, by cross-complaint, alleged damages for failure on the part of the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, to furnish the pumps, motors, and equipments according to the terms of said contract; the damages sought to be recovered being damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of such delay on the part of said plaintiff in fulfilling its contract. Upon the conclusion of the testimony, the court granted a nonsuit as to defendant's cross-complaint, and directed judgment for the plaintiff for the unpaid portion of the amount agreed to be paid by the defendant for the pumps, motors, etc. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

It appears from the testimony in this case that, preceding the execution of the contract between the said Western Well Works, Incorporated, and the defendant Willard, certain agents of said plaintiff called upon said Willard, and negotiations were had leading up to the execution of the contract for the purchase of the machinery and equipment mentioned therein; that the defendant refused to sign the printed form of the contract submitted to him by the agents of the plaintiff, unless provision were made therein for the immediate delivery of the articles about to be ordered. It further appears that the agent, not being authorized to make any change in the written form of the contract tendered to the defendant, communicated with the plaintiff at its home office, and was instructed and authorized to arrange for delivery as required by the defendant, and thereupon there was inserted in said contract the following written clause: "Delivery: Shipment to be made of all three pumps at once." It appears that the reason for desiring immediate delivery was that certain lands rented by the defendant were to be seeded to rice, and that the pumps and equipment should be installed and in working order by the 1st day of May of the year 1920. The contract referred to contained, among other things, that the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, would install the pumping machinery, and other conditions which we need not mention, and also had therein the following printed clause:

"Responsibility: The time of delivery named above is contingent upon delays occasioned by strikes, civil or military authority, or other hindrance or calamities beyond our control, nor do we assume any liability for damage on account of delays, or for defective material furnished other than to make good such defects as may be proved to have existed when said material was furnished."

The transcript further shows that the Western Well Works, Inc., did not have on hand and was not a manufacturer of electrical motors, but these facts were not disclosed to the defendant. It also appears that, notwithstanding the written portion of the contract to make delivery at once, the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, did not order or make any effort to secure the electrical motors contracted to be delivered until on or about the 14th day of April, 1920, 73 days after the date of the contract first herein referred to. The answer of the plaintiff Western Well Works, Inc., admits that 60 days was a reasonable time within which to furnish the machinery contracted to be delivered. It also appears that the motors ordered by the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, on the 14th day of April, 1920, were delivered within 60 days of the date of the order given therefor. No explanation appears of why 73 days were allowed to elapse between the date of receiving the order signed by the defendant and the date when the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, ordered the motors in question contracted to be delivered by them.

[1] It appears from the transcript that the defendant Willard had leased some 2,500 acres of land to a tenant by the name of Marr, to be seeded to rice; that all but 200 acres of land were subject to irrigation by waters obtained from a canal company; that 200 acres of the land in question were of such elevation that irrigation could not be had by water furnished through the canals of the irrigation district, and therefore in the lease executed by the defendant to his tenant, Marr, there was inserted the following covenant:

"It is further understood and agreed between the parties hereto that the party of the first part (the defendant herein) will at his own proper charge and expense drive down wells and install pumping plants or units in sufficient numbers with which to irrigate all that portion of land which lies above or is too high to be irrigated from the main or central canal, etc."

The lease in question also contained the following subdivision:

"It being understood and agreed, however, between the parties hereto, that the party of the first part does not become the guarantor or the insurer that the whole or any amount of said water shall be furnished at any time during the term of this lease, or any year thereof, or that water will be furnished to said land that can be irrigated from said main canal, etc."

Provision was further made in the lease for a rebate of rent upon failure of water furnished by the irrigation district through its canals. There does not appear in the lease any provision for rebate of rent on account of any failure of the lessor, Willard, to comply with his covenant. The lack of such a covenant, however, does not relieve him from the legal liability to perform his covenants as contained in the lease, and the argument to the contrary does not seem to us to require any consideration further than to state that performance within a reasonable time and at a time early enough to enable his tenant to use the water when required is necessarily inferred from the covenant to sink the wells, install the pumps and machinery necessary to operate the same. It may be true that he did not guarantee that the wells would furnish sufficient water, but that does not in any wise relieve the lessor from the performance of his part of the covenants contained in the lease. It further appears from the transcript that the rental agreed to be paid for the leased land was the sum of $40 per acre, and that promissory notes were executed therefor; that upon failure to furnish water for the 200 acres in question, and which were not seeded by the tenant on account of the water not being furnished, the defendant Willard, as lessor, gave his tenant credit for the sum of $8,000, the rent covenanted to be paid for the 200 acres in question. The testimony further shows that in order to properly cultivate the rice the water should have been furnished by the 1st day of May; that the water was not furnished by reason of the failure of the plaintiff Western Water Well Works, Incorporated, to furnish the equipment contracted for promptly, as specified in the agreement.

[2] As a defense to this action on appeal, the respondent calls our attention to the responsibility clause printed in the contract, and argues that the Western Well Works, Incorporated, incurred no responsibility by reason of its failure when ordering the machinery until 73 days had elapsed after receiving its contract and order from the defendant Willard. While other reasons which will be stated hereafter are sufficient to show that the so-called responsibility clause has no bearing whatever upon this case, it may be well to call attention to the fact that a reasonable interpretation of that clause leads to the conclusion that the plaintiff Western Well Works, Incorporated, is not excused for any negligence on its part in performing its contract according to the terms and time therein specified, but is only excused by delays occasioned by strikes, civil or military, or other hindrances or calamities beyond its control. The whole clause, we think, must be read together, and two or three words contained therein cannot be extracted therefrom and given a meaning different from the predicate or basis upon which the release from liability is founded. We do not think that there can be incorporated into this provision of the contract, as we have set it forth, the idea that the Western Well Works, Incorporated, is contracting to be relieved from its own negligence and unexplained delay in executing the order for the machinery promptly, as covenanted by it in the agreement.

There is another principle of law, as we have said, which is applicable and controlling here (section 1651, Civ. Code):

"Where a contract is partly written and partly printed, or where part of it is written or printed under the special directions of the parties, and with a special view to their intention, and the remainder is copied from a form originally prepared without special reference to the particular parties and the particular contract in question, the written parts control the printed parts, and the parts which are purely original control those which are copied from a form. And if the two are absolutely repugnant, the latter must be so far disregarded."

This gives precedence to the written clause to which we have hereinbefore referred, and, if there is any repugnancy between it and the printed responsibility clause contained in the contract, the written provision is controlling. Thus, if by any possible construction the responsibility clause being printed can be held to excuse the Western Well Works, Incorporated, from its own inexcused delay, the written provision to which we have referred would be repugnant thereto, and would be the one by which this contract is governed. Again, section 1652 of the Civil Code provides for an interpretation which will give effect to all of the clauses of the contract. By the interpretation which we have adopted, effect is given to all of the clauses of the contract, when the responsibility clause is limited to the basis or predicate upon which it is founded, to wit, strikes, civil or military authority, hindrances or calamities beyond the control of the contracting party. If the contract is ambiguous in any respect, it must be interpreted in the sense in which the promisor believed at the time of making it that the promisee understood it. Section 1649, Civ. Code.

[3] The transcript shows beyond question that the parties to the contract were contracting for delivery at once. While it does not seem necessary to cite any authorities to support the application of the sections of the Civil Code in the present case, yet we will refer to the following: Henne v. Summers, 116 P. 86, 16 Cal. App. 67, on pages 70 and 71, refers to the sections which we are considering, and sets forth the law governing contracts where there is a written and a printed portion, just as we have above stated. In the case of Bonslett v. Butte, etc., Canal Co., 122 P. 821, 18 Cal. App. 149, this court, speaking through Presiding Justice Chipman, referring to the sections which we are considering, says:

"Where a contract is partly written and partly printed, or is written or printed under special directions of the parties to meet their intention, and the remainder is copied from a form originally prepared without special reference to the particular parties or contract in question, the written controls the printed portions. If the two are absolutely repugnant, the printed part must be disregarded."

Other cases might be cited supporting the rule above quoted, but so doing would only unnecessarily extend the length of this opinion.

[4] It is finally argued by the respondent that the defendant Willard has suffered no damage by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to promptly perform its part of the contract according to the agreement therein contained. It is argued that the giving of credit on the promissory note executed by the defendant Marr of the sum of $8,000, being equivalent to the rental covenanted to be paid for the lands that were not seeded to rice, or upon which rice was not grown, was purely voluntary; that if the defendant Willard was liable to Marr for any item of damages, it is not alone for the rent covenanted to be paid, but also for the profits that might have been realized from the rice that could have been grown upon the premises had water been furnished. This is only an argument as to the amount of the defendant Willard's liability to his tenant by reason of the failure of the lessor Willard to comply with the terms of his lease, and does not go to the question of liability. Nor do we think the credit on the promissory note can be construed in the light of a voluntary action on the part of the defendant Willard. Willard was under the legal liability of recompensing his tenant for all damages suffered by the latter by reason of Willard's failure to install pumps, etc., as agreed to by him, and the fact that Willard acknowledged his liability and sought to make amends before awaiting suit upon his contract does not alter the situation as to the damages suffered by the defendant Willard by reason of the plaintiff's negligence to comply with the terms of its contract. The amount of damages is entirely outside the question of liability. The giving of credit by Willard to his tenant of a sum equal to the rent covenanted to be paid without awaiting suit, in law, is no more a voluntary payment than would be the discharge of a lien upon one's premises without waiting for foreclosure proceedings.

It is next argued that if the lands had been seeded to rice it is probable that no crop would have been harvested therefrom by reason of the fact that certain portions constituting the lower lands of the 2,500-acre tract included in the lease were not harvested by reason of being flooded during the harvest time. We find no merit in this contention.

It follows from what has been said that the judgment appealed from must be reversed and the order granting a nonsuit as to the defendant's cross-complaint set aside, and it is so ordered.

76 Cal. App. 519

NEVADA-CALIFORNIA POWER CO. et al. v. BORLAND. (Civ. 3058.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 15, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1926.)

1. Taxation ⇨156—Gross receipts tax held inapplicable to corporation engaged in generation of electric power to be devoted to a public use exclusively in state of Nevada (Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. [a]; St. 1911, p. 536, § 8, subd. 3); "public utility."

Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. (a), providing for gross receipts tax on corporations engaged in transmission or sale of gas or electricity, which tax shall be in lieu of all other taxes, held inapplicable to corporation generating electric power to be devoted to a public use exclusively in state of Nevada; such corporation not being a "public utility" within meaning of Constitution, and hence was taxable under St. 1911, p. 536, § 8, subd. 3, it being immaterial that corporation is public utility in state of Nevada.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Utility.]

2. Taxation ⇨156—Whether statute imposing gross receipts tax on corporation is applicable depends on character of service performed by corporation in this state (Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. [a]).

Whether Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. (a), imposing gross receipts tax on companies engaged in transmission or sale of electricity, in lieu of all other taxes, is applicable, is to be determined by character of service which corporation, seeking its benefits, performs in this state.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mono County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Nevada-California Power Company and another against James Borland, individually, and as Tax Collector in and for the County of Mono, State of California, to enjoin the execution of a tax deed. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

I. B. Potter and Henry W. Coil, both of Riverside, for appellants.

Charles L. Hayes, of Bridgeport, and Platt & Sanford, of Carson City, Nev., for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiffs brought this action to enjoin the execution of a deed after the sale of their property for nonpayment of county taxes thereon. Defendants were given judgment, and the plaintiffs have appealed therefrom. "The plaintiffs herein were and are of the same character, and have at all times during their respective ownerships operated the properties in the same manner and for the same purposes and in the same business." No distinction, therefore, need be made between them and they, or either of them, will be referred to as plaintiffs or appellants.

"The property involved herein embraces a complete hydroelectric generating plant consisting of power house, pipe line, penstock, dam, reservoir, and appurtenant machinery and structures, and the land on which the same are situated, together with water and water rights for the operation of said plant; also an electrical transmission line 22 miles in length, extending from said power house to the Nevada state line, and a second transmission line 55 miles in length, extending from said power house to the south boundary of Mono county." It was stipulated at the trial that the plaintiffs have at all times generated electricity at their plant in Mono county and transmitted it thence "through the state of California into the state of Nevada"; that they did not "generate, transmit, or sell * * * electric power for use in the state of California," but "sold and distributed" the same "exclusively in the state of Nevada"; that each of the plaintiffs "operated as a public service corporation in Nevada, and as such was under the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission of Nevada"; and that neither of them was at any time "a public service company nor a public utility in the state of California." The articles of incorporation of the plaintiffs, after describing their powers and purposes, provide "that the foregoing objects shall be limited so that the corporation shall not do a public utility business in the state of California or serve the public in any way within the territorial limits of said state," and that the business of the corporation shall be carried on in the state of Nevada and also in the state of California, subject, however, to the limitation that they shall not do a "public utility business in California."

"Complying or attempting to comply with the provisions of section 14 of article 13 of the Constitution and the acts of the Legislature passed pursuant thereto, * * * plaintiff companies did, * * * on the 15th day of March, 1916, file with the state board of equalization duly verified reports * * * showing in detail all of the information required by said constitutional and statutory provisions. * * * These reports contained the express statement that 'no business in the sale of electricity was transacted in California during the year 1915.' * * * The companies, however, did not file any duplicate of these reports with the tax assessor of Mono county, at the time of filing the reports with the state board, * * * and the copies were not received by the tax assessor until about the 29th or 30th day of June, 1916. * * * The state board of equalization * * * assessed taxes for said year 1916 upon the basis of said report. * * * The plaintiffs in due time paid the state treasurer the amount of the taxes so levied and assessed for state purposes. * * * The county assessor of Mono county also assessed the above-described property on the county assessment rolls and listed the same in the tax assessment book of said county. * * * No part of this tax has been paid." The properties "were advertised in the delinquent tax list for the year 1917, and at the June sale of that year declared 'sold to the state' for the taxes for the year 1916. At the expiration of 5 years—that is, at the June, 1922, sale—it would become the duty of the tax collector to issue a deed therefor to the state or to such other person as might bid in the property. This action was commenced prior to the date for the issue of such deed." The foregoing quotations are taken from appellants' opening brief, which contains a fair statement of the facts involved in the case.

Respondents contend that the failure of appellants to file with the county assessor a copy of their report to the state board estops them from attacking the county assessment, citing Great Western P. Co. v. City of Oakland, 209 P. 553, 189 Cal. 649, and Pacific Electric Ry. Co. v. Rolkin, 128 P. 20, 164 Cal. 154. The contention need not be considered, however, because the grounds urged by appellants for a reversal of the judgment are untenable.

Article 13, § 14, subd. (a), of the Constitution, provides:

"All companies engaged in the transmission or sale of gas or electricity shall annually pay to the state a tax upon their franchises, roadways, roadbeds, rails, rolling stock, poles, wires, pipes, canals, conduits, rights of way, and other property, or any part thereof used exclusively in the operation of their business in this state, computed as follows: Said tax shall be equal to the percentages hereinafter fixed upon the gross receipts from operation of such companies, and each thereof within this state. When such companies are operating partly within and partly without this state, the gross receipts within this state shall be deemed to be all receipts on business beginning and ending within the state, and a proportion, based upon the proportion of the mileage within this state to the entire mileage over which such business is done, of receipts on all business passing through, into, or out of this state. * * * Such taxes shall be in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, state, county and municipal, upon the property above enumerated of such companies except as otherwise in this section provided."

Chapter 335, § 8, subd. 3, of the Statutes of 1911, in force at the time of the assessments involved herein, provided:

"When any property in this state belonging to a company of the classes named in this section is rendering no service to the public in this state, even though it may be rendering service to the public in some other state or states, such property shall not be considered as operative property, and shall be subject to assessment and taxation for county, municipal, and district purposes." Stats. 1911, p. 536.

Appellants contend that the foregoing statutory definition of "operative property" is in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution herein quoted, citing Lake Tahoe Ry., etc., Co. v. Roberts, 143 P. 786, 168 Cal. 551, 556, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1196, and San Diego, etc., Ry. Co. v. State Board, 132 P. 1044, 1047, 165 Cal. 560, 565. In the latter case it is said:

"It may be doubted whether any statutory definition of operative property would be valid if it was in conflict with the Constitution."

And in the former:

"If the definition is in harmony with the language of the Constitution, it does not affect the discussion hereinbefore had. If the definition does violence to the language of the Constitution to that extent it cannot be upheld for the definition of the Constitution itself must prevail."

The statute under discussion was enacted immediately after the adoption of the constitutional amendment relating to the taxation of corporations, and is therefore to be given consideration as a contemporaneous legislative construction of the amendment, although not binding upon the courts. The decisions of the courts, however, are in harmony with such legislative construction.

In Story v. Richardson, 198 P. 1057, 1059, 186 Cal. 162, 166 (18 A. L. R. 750), it is said:

"It is clear, both from the report of the commission proposing the amendment and the arguments advanced to those voting upon the adoption of the amendment, as well as from the nature of the amendment, that the provision for taxation in proportion to gross receipts is applicable only to public utilities. * * * 'Even a constitutional declaration cannot transform a private enterprise or a part thereof into a public utility and thus take property for public use without condemnation and payment.' Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman [140 P. 591, 948], 167 Cal. 666, 680. Consequently, it has been held that the definitions of public utilities contained in the Public Utilities Act must be construed as applying only to such properties as have in fact been devoted to a public use, and not as an effort to impress with a public use properties which have not been devoted thereto."

In Transcontinental Tel. Co. v. Neylan, 167 P. 541, 542, 34 Cal. App. 379, 382, it is said:

"It is only when such a corporation is operating within this state and rendering public service within this state, because of which operation and business it earns gross proceeds upon which the percentage tax can be based, that such a tax so paid is in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, state, county, and municipal."

[1,2] The plaintiffs rendered no public service wholly within the state or "partly within and partly without this state," and hence the constitutional amendment is not applicable to the taxation of their property. It is clear that they are not public utilities within the meaning of that amendment. They have devoted no property to a public use in this state. Even the constitutional definition of a public utility "must be construed as applying only to such properties as have in fact been devoted to a public use." Allen v. Railroad Commission, 175 P. 466, 474, 179 Cal. 68, 89 (8 A. L. R. 249). The fact that the plaintiffs are public utilities in the state of Nevada is immaterial as affecting the character of the service they perform in this state. Thayer v. California Development Co., 128 P. 21, 164 Cal. 117, 133. The applicability of the constitutional amendment must be determined by the character of service performed in this state. Their business in this state is of a private character, the generation of electric power to be devoted to a public use exclusively in the state of Nevada. The case of Grover Irrigation, etc., Co. v. Lovella Ditch, etc., Co., 131 P. 43, 21 Wyo. 204, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1207, L. R. A. 1916C, 1275, involved the question of a corporation's right to condemn land in Wyoming for the location and maintenance of a headgate and part of an irrigating canal for the irrigation of lands situated wholly within the state of Colorado. The court said:

"It is a familiar elementary principle that the laws of a state have no extraterritorial effect. And it is not necessary for a state statute to contain words expressly confining its operation within the state. That it is so confined is generally understood. It is therefore not a strained construction of the statute conferring authority to appropriate and condemn land for a right of way for a ditch for agricultural purposes, that it is intended to be confined not only to a right of way within the state, but as well to agricultural purposes within the state."

The subject is so fully considered in the opinion and in the notes following it that no further discussion thereof is deemed necessary. Of course, if the corporation had sought to condemn a right of way for the purpose of performing a public service in both states, an essentially different question would have been presented. Since the constitutional amendment is applicable only to public utilities, and the plaintiffs are not public utilities in this state, the provisions of the amendment have no application to the taxation of their property.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 419

LINDSLEY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR HUMBOLDT COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3046.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 3, 1926.)

1. Contempt $\S$ 54(4)—Affidavit, setting forth circulation of newspaper in county, after drawing of names for trial of criminal libel case, wherein motives in respect to prosecution were impugned, held sufficient to show contemptuous acts charged and to give court jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1209, subd. 9).

Affidavit in proceeding for contempt, alleging circulating newspaper in county, after drawing names of jury for trial of criminal libel case, wherein motives in respect to said prosecution were impugned, held sufficient to show contemptuous acts charged of publishing and circulating certain articles in newspaper in violation of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1209, subd. 9, and to give court jurisdiction thereof.

2. Contempt $\S$ 63(1)—Judgment of contempt held proper, where contemner made no answer, notwithstanding no evidence was introduced with exception of affidavit in proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1211, 1212, 1217, 1218; Pen. Code, $\S$ 1011).

Judgment for contempt in proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1211, 1212, held proper, under sections 1217, 1218, and Pen. Code, $\S$ 1011, where contemner made no answer, notwithstanding no evidence was introduced with exception of affidavit in the proceedings.

3. Contempt $\S$ 54(4)—Affidavit on which order to show cause in contempt proceeding is based must set forth facts constituting contempt to give court jurisdiction.

Affidavit in contempt proceedings on which order to show cause is based must set forth facts constituting contempt to give court jurisdiction, as differing from information or indictment, and is evidentiary in character.

4. Contempt $\S$ 61(1)—On filing answer in case of constructive contempt denying allegations of affidavit, issue is presented and witnesses are called, and trial had as in other cases.

In case of constructive contempt, where an answer has been filed denying allegations of affidavit, issue is presented and witnesses are called and examined, and trial had as in other cases.

5. Contempt $\S$ 61(1)—Court need not look outside record evidence presented to it in contempt proceedings to determine truthfulness of matters alleged, but may investigate charge by examining affidavit submitted without further evidence (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1217).

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1217, providing court may examine witnesses for or against person alleged in contempt, and requiring court to investigate charge, does not mean that court must necessarily look outside of record evidence presented to it to determine accuracy or truthfulness of matters alleged which are uncon-tradicted, but court may investigate charge by examining affidavit submitted without further evidence.

6. Contempt $\S$ 9—Prospective jurors need not have read article published in county after drawing jury, reflecting on criminal prosecution, to constitute contempt thereof.

To establish contempt for publication in county of articles reflecting on criminal prosecution, after drawing jury, it is not necessary to show that prospective jurors actually read article so published.

7. Contempt $\S$ 67—Evidence, as applied to merits of case, cannot be reviewed on certiorari to review judgment for contempt, but can be considered only to ascertain if there was proof of jurisdictional facts alleged in affidavit.

On proceedings in certiorari to review judgment for contempt, evidence, as applied to merits of case, cannot be reviewed, but can be considered only for purpose of ascertaining if there was proof of jurisdictional facts alleged in affidavit.

8. Contempt $\S$ 66(7)—Defendant in contempt proceedings, who, after motion to quash and demurrer were overruled, rested case without putting anything before court, cannot complain on appeal because no evidence was introduced.

Where defendant in contempt proceeding, in response to an order to show cause, filed motion to quash and demurrer, and, after adverse ruling thereto, rested case without putting anything before court, every constitutional right guaranteed to him was preserved, and he cannot complain on appeal because of judgment of contempt without introduction of evidence.

9. Contempt $\S$ 9—Publishing different articles in newspaper on different days relative to criminal prosecution pending within county constitutes separate contempts (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1209, subd. 9).

Publication of different articles in newspaper on different dates relative to criminal prosecution pending within county, in violation of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1209, subd. 9, constitutes separate acts of contempt.

10. Contempt $\S$ 63(1)—Court is authorized to pronounce judgment on each contempt charged separately and in different counts of affidavit constituting different and distinct offenses (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1209, subd. 9).

Where publication of certain articles in violation of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1209, subd. 9, on different dates, was charged separately and in different counts of affidavit constituting separate and distinct offenses, court was authorized to pronounce judgment on each offense.

11. Contempt $\S$ 66(7)—Court of Appeals is not authorized to hold aggregate amount of fines for separate contempts excessive, where fines imposed were not in excess of amount authorized by statute (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1218).

Court of Appeals is not authorized to hold aggregate amount of fines for contempts excessive, where fines were not in excess of amount authorized under Code Civ. Proc. § 1218.

Application by Alfred Lindsley for certiorari against the Superior Court of Humboldt County, and Denver Sevier, Judge, to review an order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. Writ denied.

See, also, 241 P. 934.

Metzler & Mitchell, of Eureka, for petitioner.

Arthur W. Hill, Dist. Atty., of Eureka, and Paul B. Gibson, Deputy Dist. Atty., of San Francisco, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. [1] This is an application for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the superior court of Humboldt county adjudging the defendant guilty of four separate and distinct contempts of court and imposing sentence therefor. The petitioner was adjudged guilty of four distinct contempts of court, and sentenced to pay a fine for each separate contempt, or, in default thereof, to be imprisoned in the county jail. The petitioner is charged in the affidavit with having on four different occasions committed contempt of court by reason of printing, publishing, and circulating certain articles in a newspaper known as the Humboldt News, in the county of Humboldt, violative of subdivision 9 of section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The charge is in four separate and distinct counts, and judgment was pronounced upon each count. The petitioner alleges that the affidavit upon which the proceeding is based is insufficient, and that no proof of the facts stated in the affidavit was produced at the hearing; that no hearing, in fact, was had. It appears from the affidavit that an action against the petitioner for criminal libel was pending in the superior court of Humboldt county; that the cause had been set for trial on the 26th day of October, 1925; that the names of 60 persons had been drawn from the trial jury box from which to impanel the jury; that the petitioner is editor of the newspaper above mentioned, printed, published, and circulated in the city of Eureka and county of Humboldt; that said newspaper has a large number of subscribers in said county; that, after the drawing of said names from the said jury box, in four separate issues of said newspaper the petitioner published therein certain statements, which are set forth at length in this proceeding, attacking the district attorney of the county, impugning his motives in respect to the prosecution of said criminal action, and reflecting upon the character and veracity of the prosecuting witnesses therein; that said articles were respectively published and circulated for the purpose and with the intent of creating public sympathy for the defendant, the petitioner herein, and for the purpose and with the intent of influencing the judgment and opinion of witnesses who may have been or might be summoned to act as jurors in the trial of said action, and also to intimidate witnesses against testifying for the prosecution therein and to embarrass the judge of said court in the trial thereof, and to interfere with the administration of justice. The statements so published referred to the prosecuting witness as a former admitted stool pigeon, a man who had presented a perjured expense bill against the county, and later stolen the same from the supervisors' files. As shown by the return herein, the articles published are too numerous and lengthy to be set out in this opinion, but were all calculated to hold up to ridicule and opprobrium the proceedings then pending against petitioner in the superior court of Humboldt county, to cast reflection upon, and question the honesty of purpose of the prosecuting officers and of the witnesses that would appear at the trial of said action. These matters are all specifically set forth in the affidavit which was filed in the contempt proceedings, and the affidavit further set forth that the petitioner knew of the pendency of said action, of the prosecuting witness therein, whom the petitioner had named in the articles referred to, and that the articles so printed and published and circulated in the county of Humboldt were for the purpose of embarrassing the court and unduly influencing jurors and witnesses. Without further review of the evidence, we may conclude our review to this part of the cause by stating that the facts set forth in the affidavit are sufficient to show the contemptuous acts charged against the petitioner in each count therein, and it contains all of the necessary allegations and recital of the things constituting the alleged contempt necessary to give the court jurisdiction to proceed.

After the making and filing of the affidavit just herein referred to and the presentation of the same to the court, the court made and entered its order reciting that, upon reading and filing of the affidavit, and good cause appearing therefor, it was ordered that the said Alfred Lindsley be and appear before said court at 10 o'clock on the 30th day of October, 1925, then and there to show cause, if any he had, why an order and judgment of the court should not be made adjudging him guilty of contempt. This order and affidavit were served upon the petitioner. At the time set in the order to show cause the petitioner appeared with his counsel, and, upon the calling of the case, first filed a motion to quash each of the four counts set forth in the affidavit, specifying a number of grounds therefor: (1) That the court had no jurisdiction to issue the order to show cause, etc.; (2) that the acts, facts, and things specified did not constitute a contempt of court. Upon the denial of this motion the defendant and petitioner herein then filed a demurrer raising the question of jurisdiction and setting forth in the demurrer specifically the same grounds as contained in the motion to quash; that none of the counts set forth facts sufficient to constitute a contempt, want of facts and lack of jurisdiction being urged in the demurrer against each one of the several counts. The record further shows that after argument the motion to quash was denied and the demurrer overruled; whereupon, according to the reporter's notes, set forth in the transcript, the petitioner's counsel then said: "We rest without putting anything before the court." The recital in the judgment as to this particular is as follows:

"After argument, said motion to quash was denied, and said demurrer was overruled. Thereupon said Metzler & Mitchell, as counsel for said Lindsley, announced in open court that they had nothing further to offer."

Following this statement the court pronounced its judgment finding that the acts and matter set forth in each of the four counts contained in the affidavit constituted separate and distinct contempts, and adjudging the petitioner herein guilty on each of said four counts, imposing separate and distinct fines for each count, with imprisonment in jail in lieu of payment at the rate of $2 per day.

It is now contended that the judgment of the court is void, by reason of the fact that no further evidence was offered in the case; that there was nothing before the court except the affidavit and the order to show cause, to which we have herein referred; that testimony should have been taken; and, in substance, that the court was without jurisdiction to pronounce judgment without first proceeding to take testimony.

[2] This proceeding was instituted under the second paragraph of section 1211, Code of Civil Procedure, which specifies that—

"When the contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or judge at chambers, an affidavit shall be presented to the court, or judge, of the facts constituting the contempt, or a statement of the facts by the referees or arbitrators, or other judicial officer."

Section 1212, Code of Civil Procedure, then directs that a warrant of attachment or an order to show cause shall be issued. In this case the affidavit was filed, and then an order to show cause was issued. Coming to section 1217 of the same Code, we find:

"When the person arrested has been brought up or appeared, the court or judge must proceed to investigate the charge, and must hear any answer which the person arrested may make to the same, and may examine witnesses for or against him. * * *

After these proceedings have been had, section 1218 of the same Code reads:

"Upon the answer and evidence taken, the court or judge must determine whether the person proceeded against is guilty of the contempt charged, and if it be adjudged that he is guilty of the contempt, a fine may be imposed on him not exceeding five hundred dollars, or he may be imprisoned not exceeding five days, or both."

The wording of section 1217, Code of Civil Procedure, does not require, in absolute terms, the taking of testimony. It does require that the court must investigate the charge, must hear any answer which the person arrested may make; and may examine witnesses for or against him, not that the court must or shall summon witnesses for or against the person ordered to show cause, when there is no necessity therefor, or when the defendant expressly rests his case upon the statement, in substance, that he has nothing to place before the court.

[3] It must be borne in mind, also, that the affidavit upon which such an order to show cause is based must set forth the facts constituting the contempt in order to give the court jurisdiction to proceed; not merely the ultimate facts, but the facts themselves, showing acts specifically constituting the contempt. In this particular the affidavit differs from the formal language ordinarily found in an information or indictment. The affidavit, in itself, in a contempt proceeding must be evidentiary in character in order to show the contempt alleged and lay a basis for the proceeding. As stated in Frowley v. Superior Court, 110 P. 817, 158 Cal. 220:

"In proceedings for constructive contempts of court, that is, contempts committed without the presence of the court, * * * the affidavit which is made the basis for the proceeding should show upon its face the acts which constitute a contempt. The affidavit constitutes the complaint and unless it contains a statement of facts which show that a contempt has been committed, the court is without jurisdiction to proceed in the matter."

See Strain v. Superior Court, 142 P. 62, 168 Cal. 216, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 702; Mitchell v. Superior Court, 125 P. 1061, 163 Cal. 423.

[4] In the case of a constructive contempt, where an answer has been filed denying the allegations of the affidavit, an issue is presented and witnesses are called and examined and a trial had, as in other cases. In re Buckley, 10 P. 69, 69 Cal. 1. In 5 Cal. Jur. 945, § 41, we find the further statement:

"Inasmuch as the affidavit serves as a complaint in a charge of constructive contempt, allegations in the affidavit that are not denied in the answer are deemed to be admitted."

See, also, Mitchell v. Superior Court, 125 P. 1061, 163 Cal. 423, 425.

Hoteling v. Superior Court, 217 P. 73, 191 Cal. 501, 29 A. L. R. 127, states the rule:

"The affidavits on which the citation is issued constitutes the complaint. * * * The affidavits of the defendant constitute the answer or plea * * * and the issues of fact are framed by the respective affidavits serving as pleadings."

It is also further held that such proceedings are of such a criminal nature that the defendant cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. It is further held in that case that, while a writ of certiorari is not a writ of review, it nevertheless extends to the whole of the record, and even to the evidence itself, where necessary to determine jurisdiction. While not expressly so stating (the second paragraph on page 506 of the opinion in the Hotaling Case), the necessary inference to be drawn from the language there used is that competent evidence must be adduced to support the allegations which are traversed, leading to the logical determination that, where allegations are not traversed, no additional testimony need be presented to the court.

"A party charged with contempt has the same inalienable right to be heard in his defense, especially in instances of mere constructive contempt, as he would have against the charge of any other crime. And, in the proceeding for such a contempt, an issue is made up by the affidavit and answer, witnesses are called and examined, and a trial is had as in other cases. While affirmative allegations contained in an affidavit of the defendant in contempt proceedings for the disobedience of an injunction cannot be deemed established without a trial to determine the issues so joined, yet the production of witnesses may be waived in such proceedings, and the party may consent to try the case on the evidence." 5 Cal. Jur. 943, § 40.

As to what the record should show we find the following in 13 C. J. p. 82:

"The judgment should show on its face that the court had jurisdiction to inflict the penalty, and that the judgment was warranted by the pleadings. In cases of constructive contempt it should show that the accused had been given an opportunity to be heard in his defense. The punishment inflicted should be clearly and specifically stated."

[5] Outside of providing that the court may examine witnesses for or against the person alleged to be in contempt, section 1217, Code of Civil Procedure, requires the court to investigate the charge. This does not mean that the court must necessarily look outside of the record evidence presented to it to determine the accuracy or truthfulness of matters alleged, which are undenied or uncontradicted when submitted to the court for decision. The court may investigate the charge by examining the affidavit to determine what is set forth and which is submitted to it without further evidence relating to the same matters. We do not see that the case of Roe v. Superior Court, 60 Cal. 93, contravenes these propositions. The opinion in the Roe Case is brief, but it appears that affidavits charging contempt were filed, and that Roe had filed an answer thereto. The court said:

"It is contended that according to the statute witnesses must be examined (C. C. P. § 1217), and the judgment must be on the answer and evidence (Id. § 1218). That is so, but it does not appear that this course was not pursued."

The opinion further says:

"Moreover, the production of witnesses might have been waived and Roe might have consented to trying the case on affidavits."

That is practically what the petitioner in this case did when his counsel announced: "We rest without putting anything before the court." Two cases have expressly been called to our attention having to do with procedure in contempt proceedings: Herald-Republican Pub. Co. v. Lewis, 129 P. 624, 42 Utah, 188, and Zobel v. People, 111 P. 846, 49 Colo. 142. We quote from the Herald-Republican Pub. Co. Case, supra, which is relied upon by the petitioner herein as showing ample reasons why the judgment of the trial court should be annulled, as follows:

"The other alleged grounds may be considered together. And in this connection we think the last ground—rendering a judgment on pleadings adjudging the accused guilty of the charged contempt without evidence or proof or a hearing—presents the most serious question. Our statute (Comp. Laws 1907, § 3360) provides that, when a contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or judge, an affidavit shall be presented to the court or judge 'of the facts constituting the contempt.' Upon that a warrant of attachment is issued 'to bring the person charged to answer.' By section 3366, it is provided that, 'when the person arrested has been brought up or has appeared, the court or judge must proceed to investigate the charge, and must hear any answer which the person arrested may make to the same, and may examine witnesses for or against him.' By section 3367, 'upon the answer and evidence taken, the court or judge must determine whether the person proceeded against is guilty of the contempt charged, and if it be adjudged that he is guilty of the contempt, a fine may be imposed on him not exceeding $200, or he may be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days, or both.'

"The petitioners allege, and the allegations are not denied, but are supported by the record, that the court adjudged the accused guilty upon the affidavits and answers 'without proof or evidence,' without an investigation of the charge, and without a trial or a hearing. Though sufficient facts are alleged to constitute a constructive and criminal contempt, and though the person charged therewith stands mute still the court under the statute may not treat such allegations as confessed, and upon them pronounce a judgment of conviction. The court nevertheless is required 'to investigate the charge.' It no doubt may, without proof or evidence, pronounce such a judgment if a plea of guilt or an answer equivalent thereto is entered."

While citing from this case, in considering the point relied upon by the petitioner, we may also quote therefrom the following statement sustained by a long list of authorities there set forth, to wit:

"The authorities are almost, if not quite, unanimous that if any act or conduct of any publication is 'calculated to intimidate, influence, impede, embarrass, or obstruct the courts in the due administration of justice in matters pending before them,' it constitutes a contempt of court. Moreover, it is also frequently stated in the cases that if any willful act or conduct, or any publication, has a tendency to prevent a fair trial, or tends to prejudice the public or jurors against an accused person on trial for an offense, or the tendency of which publication is to prejudice the rights of either party to a civil action, such act, conduct, or publication may be punished as for a contempt of court."

As stated, the citation of authority supporting this rule is legion.

It will be observed that the opinion of the court in the Herald-Republican Case was based upon the predicate that an answer had been filed to the affidavits presented to the court charging contempt; that every allegation contained in the affidavits was denied save and except the mere fact of publication. The trial court held that the fact of publication, being admitted, carried with it all the other acts, including the intent necessary to constitute contempt, and admitted of no other proof in the case. It is also stated, after quoting the language, that the court is required to investigate the charge:

"And nothing short of a plea of guilt, or its equivalent, will justify a judgment of conviction without evidence, and without an investigation of the charge."

In Zobel v. People, 111 P. 846, 49 Colo. 142, the proceedings were identical with those in the case at bar. Upon the return day or order to show cause, the defendant first presented a motion to quash, which, being denied, he filed a demurrer, which, being overruled, from the language of the opinion, "no desire was manifested by the defendant in the contempt proceedings to plead, and no request was made for leave to make any answer or further return than the motion to quash or demurrer already referred to." The court thereupon adjudged the defendant guilty of contempt. The court then proceeds to consider the provisions of the Colorado Code relating to contempts, which provisions are almost identical with those contained in our Code of Civil Procedure, and then says:

"When defendant presented himself in court in response thereto, instead of making an answer denying the facts set up in the affidavit on which the entire proceeding for contempt was based, and without asking to have witnesses examined or evidence heard, and without making any showing at all in opposition to the affidavit, he filed a motion to quash the proceedings, which, in more than one particular, is a general demurrer. It was overruled. The court was ready to proceed with the investigation. No request was made by defendant to plead over, or to answer the affidavit further. There was no denial of defendant's alleged right to plead over, or to produce evidence. The court was ready to grant it if demanded. Section 328 of the Code says: 'The court shall proceed to investigate the charge, and hear any answer which defendant may make to the same, and may examine witnesses.' The court heard the only answer, which was a demurrer or motion to quash, that defendant made, and, so far as the record shows, would have heard evidence, had defendant offered to produce any. The court, then, on due application, adjudged defendant guilty of contempt, under the contradicted affidavit. * * * We fail to see wherein there has been a departure from the statutory proceeding in this case. * * * Section 328 provides that the court may hear witnesses; but certainly, in the absence of any request by defendant therefor, when he himself rests his defense upon a motion to quash or a demurrer, thereby confessing the affidavit, there is no necessity for the court to conduct a hearing or take evidence."

[6, 7] This court has already held that the facts alleged in the affidavits upon which the proceeding for contempt was based are clearly sufficient to show willful contempt within the foregoing rule (discussing the rule relating to publications tending to embarrass the proceedings pending in court, etc.). It is also there held by this court that it is not necessary to show that the jurors, or prospective jurors, actually read the article so published. In the Matter of Application of Lindsley for a Writ of Habeas Corpus (Cal. App.) 241 P. 934, where the petitioner's application for discharge on a writ of habeas corpus was denied, the rule is also well settled that, upon proceedings in certiorari, the evidence cannot be reviewed in so far as it affects or applies to the merits of the case. It can be considered only for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was proof of the jurisdictional facts alleged in the affidavit. Strain v. Superior Court, 142 P. 62, 168 Cal. 216, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 702; Hotaling v. Superior Court, 217 P. 73, 191 Cal. 501, 29 A. L. R. 127; Livingston v. Superior Court, 49 P. 836, 117 Cal. 633, 38 L. R. A. 175.

As analogous to the proceedings had in this case, we may refer to the provisions of the Penal Code and also to the common law applying to ordinary criminal cases where a like situation is presented. Section 1011 of the Penal Code reads:

"If the demurrer is disallowed, the court must permit the defendant, at his election, to plead, which he must do forthwith, or at such time as the court may direct. If he does not plead judgment may be pronounced against him."

This section of the Penal Code has been held constitutional by the Supreme Court in the case of People v. King, 28 Cal. 265. While the holding appears to have been unnecessary in the King Case, the section certainly applies to misdemeanors and offenses such as the one at bar, which is not even classified in the Codes as a crime. In 31 C. J. 821, the text-writer, referring to pleas upon felonies, uses the following language:

"Upon demurrer the court will examine the entire record in order to determine whether a judgment thereon would be warranted. A demurrer admits the truth of all the facts which are sufficiently pleaded, but not facts which are insufficiently pleaded, or the mere conclusions of the pleader," and then when it comes to treating of misdemeanors, where the demurrer has been overruled, the text-writer, in section 409 thus sets forth the common-law rule:

"In the case of misdemeanors, it is generally held that a judgment overruling a demurrer operates as a conviction, and that while it is within the discretion of the court to allow defendant to plead over, he cannot do so as a matter of right, except in some jurisdictions or unless the right is given by statute. While there is some authority to the contrary, it seems likewise that the right to plead over as a matter of right does not exist even in the case of felony; but it is discretionary with the court to allow defendant to plead over, and such plea is ordinarily allowed. Upon a failure and refusal to plead, the court may enter final judgment."

In 16 C. J. p. 394, § 724, the rule is again announced that, in prosecutions for misdemeanors, in the absence of a statute, "if defendant plead in abatement, or specially in bar, or if he demur, he cannot plead not guilty, either at the same time or after the issue on the plea or the demurrer has been decided against him; but he may be sentenced as upon a conviction, unless the court in its discretion allows him so to do."

In section 722, supra, in setting forth the different pleas which a defendant may make and enter, it is said:

"Defendant also may plead guilty or interpose the plea of nolo contendere, which is an implied confession" and in section 739 of the same volume, page 404, "that plea which is still allowed in some jurisdictions, is not a plea in the strict sense of that term in the criminal law, but a formal declaration by accused that he will not contend with the prosecuting authority under the charge. When accepted by the court, it becomes an implied confession of guilt, and, for the purposes of the case only, equivalent to a plea of guilty; and when judgment has been entered on the plea, the record is competent evidence of the fact of conviction."

In 7 Cal. Jur. p. 993, § 130, the procedure followed in this case is set forth as proper. In the case of Mitchell v. Superior Court, supra, the Supreme Court, in considering whether further proof was necessary to support a certain allegation in the affidavit setting forth contempt, in the absence of a denial of the allegation, ruled as follows:

It is not necessary, "however, to determine these matters, because the undenied allegation of defendant's presence at the time of the making of the order rendered a showing of service of notice upon him entirely unnecessary."

As said in the case of Herald-Republican Co. v. Lewis, supra, if what was done by the defendant amounted to a plea of guilty or admission of everything charged in the affidavit, then, and in that case, the trial court was authorized to proceed and render judgment. If the procedure provided by the Penal Code that may be followed in cases which are criminal cases in every sense of the term, and where the punishment may be more severe than that allowed in the present case is applicable, then the procedure of the trial court in the case at bar must be approved.

[8] We are of the opinion that, when the defendant came into court in response to an order to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for having done and performed the acts charged in the affidavit, filed his motion to quash, and then his demurrer thereto, and, after an adverse ruling on both his motion and his demurrer, announced that "he rested his case without putting anything before the court," he did those acts which amounted to an admission of guilt, or plea of guilty of whatever was charged against him in the affidavit, and, if the affidavit set forth facts showing contempt, then, and in that case, upon an investigation of the affidavit and consideration of the facts therein alleged, which were alleged under oath, the court, if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of each of the several contempts charged, it had jurisdiction to pronounce judgment. The petitioner had his day in court; he had his opportunity to make answer and present any defense, excuse, or explanation that he saw fit. Thus every constitutional right guaranteed to him was preserved, and, if he chose to submit his case upon the testimony, to wit, the affidavit already presented to the court, we do not readily see how, in the face of his own expressed willingness to so submit the case, that he can now be heard to complain.

[9-11] It has been argued that only one contempt was committed; that the several acts committed upon different days in the different articles published upon different days do not constitute different contempts, but, if contempt at all, only one contempt was committed. This, however, is not the law. In Oates v. U. S., 223 F. 1013, 139 C. C. A. 389, it is said:

Where it consists of "separate acts of disobedience to an injunction, the sentence should not be imposed generally for all offenses; but the punishment for each offense should be specified, so that it could be reviewed on appeal."

In Gompers v. Buck Stove & Range Company, 31 S. Ct. 492, 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, it is further said:

"A decree adjudging each defendant guilty of the independent acts set out in the separate paragraphs of a petition charging them with contempt of an injunction order, and consolidating sentence without indicating how much of the punishment was imposed for the disobedience in any particular instance should be reversed if it appears that the defendants have been sentenced on any charge which, in law or in fact, does not constitute a disobedience of the injunction."

This rule is approved in 13 C. J. p. 82, as follows:

"Thus, where a defendant is found guilty of separate acts constituting contempt, judgment must be pronounced separately for the separate contempts."

In the case at bar each publication is charged separately and in different counts of the affidavit, constituting a separate and distinct offense, for which the court was authorized to pronounce judgment, the contempt sufficiently appearing, as we have heretofore considered. The petitioner not having had imposed upon him a fine for any of the contempts of which he has been adjudged guilty in excess of the amount authorized to be imposed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which this action was taken and had, this court is not authorized to hold the aggregate amount thereof excessive, whatever our views might be upon this matter.

It follows from what has been said that the petition for a writ of review herein must be, and the same is hereby, denied.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 517
MULTER v. KEPPEL, County Superintendent of Schools. (Civ. 5110.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California, Feb. 15, 1926.)

1. Schools and school districts $\S$ 42(2)—Statutory proceeding is limited to exclusion of an elementary school district from a high school district combined with annexation of elementary school district to a contiguous high school district (Pol. Code, $\S$ 1734c).

Proceeding provided by Pol. Code, $\S$ 1734c, relating to exclusion of a school district from a high school district, is limited to exclusion of an elementary school district from a high school district combined with annexation of the elementary school district to a contiguous high school district.

2. Schools and school districts $\S$ 42(2)—Statute held not to authorize withdrawal of portion of high school district from district itself and formation of a new high school district (Pol. Code, $\S$ 1725, 1734).

Pol. Code, $\S$ 1725, being limited solely to formation of new high school districts, held not to authorize withdrawal of a portion of high school district from the district itself and the formation of a new high school district; section 1734, being inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Application for writ of mandate by A. N. Multer against Mark Keppel, as County Superintendent of Schools of Los Angeles County. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and Albert W. Leeds, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. The sole question presented to this court is whether or not, by reason of a certain petition for the formation of a proposed "Arcadia city high school district," it has become the duty of the county superintendent of schools to proceed to call an election as provided by section 1725 of the Political Code. It is conceded by respondent that the whole question presented is whether or not section 1725 of the Political Code is applicable to the situation shown by the stipulation on file herein. It is contended by respondent that section 1734c provides the only method by which an elementary school district may withdraw from a high school district and form a new district—unless, perhaps, the provisions of section 1734 would apply to the case.

The contention that section 1734 of the Political Code might be applicable is disposed of by the fact that the record shows that the Monrovia city high school district is composed of two elementary school districts only, and therefore is not a union high school district. Pol. Code, $\S$ 1721. The provisions of section 1734, relating to exclusion of a school district from a high school district, are by their terms restricted to union high school districts.

[1] The proceeding described in section 1734c is limited to the exclusion of an elementary school district from a high school district, combined with annexation of the elementary school district to a contiguous high school district; but this, also, is not the situation presented by the case at bar.

[2] It seems, therefore, that there is no method provided for withdrawal of a portion of the high school district from the district itself and the formation of a new high school district. As we view it, section 1725 cannot be construed to permit such withdrawal and is limited by the Legislature solely to the formation of new high school districts, and not to the withdrawal of any part or portion of an existing high school district. There is no presumption that of necessity there must be some method provided for such withdrawal. Moreover, the conclusion that the result sought by petitioners can be obtained under section 1725 would permit the Arcadia school district to withdraw from the Monrovia high school district without the consent of that high school district. There are manifest reasons why the Legislature might not be willing to allow such an unconditional privilege. So, in section 1734a, which provides a method for exclusion from a union or joint union high school district, of a school district which is a part thereof, the proceeding is conditioned upon the existence of an agreement of consent, signed by a majority of the high school board. It is reasonable to assume that a similar requirement of consent by the high school district would have been written into section 1725, if that section had been intended to authorize withdrawal from an existing high school district.

Therefore the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

76 Cal. App. 473

HITCHCOCK MILITARY ACADEMY v. MYERS. (Civ. 3008.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 5, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 5, 1926.)

1. Schools and school districts $\Leftrightarrow$ Statutes relative to liquidated damages and damages for breach of contract held inapplicable, in action by Military Academy to recover tuition according to terms of contract (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

In action by Military Academy to recover unpaid tuition for last half of school year according to terms of contract with defendant, where latter's children were taken out of school at end of first half of year, Civ. Code, § 1670, relative to liquidated damages, and section 1671, relative to damages for breach of contract, held inapplicable.

2. Schools and school districts $\Leftrightarrow$ Military Academy held entitled to recover tuition for full year as stipulated in application for admission, signed by parent, though children were voluntarily withdrawn when year was half over.

Military Academy held entitled to recover tuition for full year as stipulated on application for admission, signed by parent, though children were voluntarily withdrawn from school when year was half over.

Appeal from Superior Court of Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by the Hitchcock Military Academy against Henrietta de Back Myers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. W. Zagoren and George L. Popert, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Frederick L. Berry, of San Francisco, and Ralph H. Lewis, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action by plaintiff to recover of the defendant $900, alleged to be due on account of certain contracts for tuition, entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant. Respondent had judgment for $896.91, and from this judgment the defendant appeals. It appears from the transcript that the defendant is the mother of two minor sons, Paul de Back Myers and Theodore E. Myers; that on or about the 1st day of June, 1924, at San Rafael, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a contract in writing for the admission of the two minor sons of the defendant into the school conducted by the plaintiff for a school year, beginning September 3, 1924, and ending June 3, 1925. The applications for admission of the two minor sons of the defendant to the Hitchcock Military Academy were made subject to the current printed register and regulations of the academy for the period above mentioned. These terms and conditions are as follows:

"Terms.

"Cadets are accepted only for the entire school year, or for the remainder of a school year if received after the opening date. Pro rata allowance will be made if a boy is accepted after the first four weeks of the school year, but no reduction or credit will be granted if a cadet is expelled, suspended, or withdrawn.

"Charges for Resident Cadets.

"The charge for board, tuition, room, minor medical attention, athletics and use of the Academy swimming pool and government arms for the school year of approximately thirty-seven weeks, is $950, payable as follows: $50 registration fee, to accompany the application for admission of new boys or the application for readmission of old boys; $450 payable on entrance in September; $450 payable at the close of the Christmas vacation. * * *

Cancellations.

"Registration fees will be returned if applicants are not accepted. Early registration is desirable, and to encourage such action we will return the fees if a written request for cancellation of reservation is received by the Academy not later than thirty days before the opening date in September.

"Charges are made for a place in the Academy, and not for a period of attendance. The absence of a cadet does not materially decrease the expenses of the Academy; hence parents and guardians are held responsible for full payment for the school year, or such part of the school year as remains after a late entrance."

The testimony in the transcript further shows that the two boys attended school one-half year each; that the defendant paid the $450 for each boy payable on entrance, but refused and neglected to pay the $450 cove-nanted and agreed to be paid at the close of the Christmas vacation; that neither one of the boys attended the half-year of school subsequent to the Christmas vacation, beginning in 1924 and ending in 1925. It is for this unpaid portion that this action is prosecuted. It will be observed that the rules and regulations of the academy, subject to which application for admission of the two boys was made, provide that admission can be had only for an entire school year and that deductions are not made on account of the failure of pupils to attend for the entire year, as charges are made for a place in the academy and not merely for the period of attendance.

The appellants in this case contend that sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code are controlling here. The first section referred to provides that:

"Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made, for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section."

The next section provides:

"The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage."

[1, 2] A number of cases are cited having to do with controversies arising under these sections where liquidated damages or damages for breaches of contract are set forth in the agreement itself. The inapplicability of the sections involved and of the authorities cited having to do with cases where liquidated damages and penalties are set forth in the contract is so apparent that we do not need to extend this opinion by a review thereof. The case at bar is not one involving liquidated damages, or any damages arising from a breach of the contract. It is simply one to enforce payment according to the terms of a contract whereby the defendant purchased for her two boys admission to the Hitchcock Military Academy for one school year. There is no provision in the contract whereby either party seeks to compensate the other in liquidated damages for a contemplated breach thereof. In considering cases of this kind, the text-writer in 35 Cyc. p. 816, says:

"School rules and provisions contained in a school catalogue, advertisement, or application blank become part of the contract for tuition and other school charges, where notice thereof has been given to parents or guardians, or their attention called thereto. A contract for a complete course of instruction or for a specified period of time is entire, and the school proprietor is entitled to recover the whole sum agreed upon or nothing."

Likewise to the same effect is the case of Teeter v. Horner Military School, 81 S. E. 767, 165 N. C. 564, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 975, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 309. It is there said:

"A contract for schooling for any specified period of time being entire, * * * it seems to be well settled that, if, during the term of the contract, a pupil is properly expelled for misconduct, or unnecessarily withdraws from the school, without any fault on the part of the proprietor or master, or anyone connected with the school, the school is entitled to the whole consideration for the entire period, and may recover any portion thereof remaining unpaid, and the other party to the contract may not recover back any part of the consideration paid in advance for such period. Thus, a parent whose son was properly expelled from a military school for hazing, about 30 days after the beginning of a term, cannot recover any portion of a sum which he paid in advance, at the beginning of the term, upon the tuition fee."

To the same effect is the case of Vidor v. Peacock (Tex. Civ. App.) 145 S. W. 672, in which case it is held that, where a pupil is withdrawn during the year, the father is responsible for the whole sum agreed to be paid in the contract. A case involving a somewhat similar principle is that of Bartlett v. O. F. Savings Bank, 21 P. 743, 79 Cal. 218, 12 Am. St. Rep. 139, where an attorney had agreed to perform certain services of an entire contract for a specified compensation. The unwarranted acts of the defendant prevented full performance by the plaintiff. It was held that the contract was entire and the plaintiff was entitled to recover. A long list of authorities appears in the note to Teeter v. Horner Military School, as reported in 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 975, supporting the principal case that such contracts are entire and that schools are entitled to recover the full compensation agreed to be paid. As stated in some of the cases, this rule rests upon the fact that the place for a pupil in the school is contracted for at the beginning of the year and cannot reasonably be filled by the school authorities during the course of the year, when a pupil contracting for a place, improperly withdraws therefrom, or is withdrawn therefrom. In the case at bar, it appears that the two boys were simply voluntarily withdrawn by the defendant.

Under such circumstances, we think the cases which we have cited are controlling, and, as the contract signed by the defendant is an entire contract, the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

76 Cal. App. 511

GRAY v. PERLIS et al. (Civ. 5125.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 15, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Finding of trial court on substantial evidence on issue of ownership of business is conclusive.

Where question of whether tailoring business belonged to a married woman and was carried on by her in good faith as her own enterprise was one of fact for trial court, its finding on substantial evidence that the business belonged to her is conclusive.

2. Husband and wife §257.

Where ownership of a tailoring business was established to be in a married woman, proceeds thereof became her separate, as distinguished from community, estate (Civ. Code, § 162).

3. Husband and wife §257—Fact that husband contributed time and skill to wife's tailoring business held to give him no interest therein.

Where ownership of a tailoring business was established to be in wife, fact that husband contributed time and skill in conduct thereof gave him no interest in the business nor proceeds therefrom, nor did it have effect of transmuting status of ownership of the business from wife's separate estate to community property.

4. Husband and wife §257—Husband may legally give time and industry to wife in aiding to carry on business owned by her.

Since creditors have no lien on debtor's labor, nor any way to compel him to work, he may legally give his entire time, skill, and industry to his wife in aiding to carry on business owned by her, and community creditors cannot complain.

5. Husband and wife §257—Fact that married woman, in conducting business owned by her, used some equipment owned by husband held immaterial on question whether profits were community property.

Where tailoring business was conducted by a married woman as her separate property, fact that husband allowed her to use a sewing machine and motor belonging to him was immaterial.

6. Husband and wife §266.

Husband may relinquish to wife right to her earnings during marriage, and thereupon they become her separate estate (Civ. Code, § 158).

7. Husband and wife §270(8)—Agreement of husband to relinquish to wife right to her earnings during marriage may be proved by evidence as to his conduct with relation thereto.

Agreement of husband to relinquish to wife right to her earnings during marriage may be proved by evidence as to husband's acts and conduct with relation to her earnings, indicating that he did not regard them as community property.

8. Bankruptcy §303(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that wife's earnings from her tailoring business became in fact her separate property.

In suit by trustee in bankruptcy of husband's estate to recover personal property as belonging to bankrupt, evidence held to justify finding of relinquishment by husband to wife of right to earnings from tailoring business owned by her, and that earnings therefrom became in fact her separate property.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by F. P. Gray, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of B. Perlis, bankrupt, against B. Perlis and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goldman, Nye & Surr and Ernest J. Torregano, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Laurenz J. Krueger, John A. Sinclair, and Oscar T. Barber, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy, brought this action to recover certain personal property, claiming that it belonged to the bankrupt's estate, also to require an accounting, and for damages for alleged conversion. Judgment was given for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

For several years prior to 1916 respondent B. Perlis was engaged in business on Sutter street in San Francisco as a ladies' tailor, employing some ten persons. In September of that year said business failed, and Perlis made an assignment for the benefit of creditors to the board of trade, but was not released by said creditors from payment of his debts. On account of worry caused by the collapse of his business, Perlis became sick and unable to earn a livelihood for himself or his family, and the burden of supporting the family then fell upon Mrs. Perlis. In order to meet this situation, Mrs. Perlis, in October, 1916, applied for and obtained from the superior court a decree of sole tradership, and thereupon opened and afterwards conducted under her name and management a ladies' tailoring business in premises on Geary street leased by her for that purpose. The negotiations for the opening of said business were concluded by her. Said business was started with a cash capital of $250, which Mrs. Perlis raised by pawning jewelry which was her separate property. She also used in operating said business, along with the other equipment, a few articles of personal property belonging to her husband. They were of small value, and included a sewing machine and motor. The four members of the Perlis family, consisting of Mrs. Perlis, her husband, and two minor sons (the latter being joined herein as defendants), together with a few other persons, were employed in conducting said business. B. Perlis helped with the cutting and fitting and some of the selecting and buying of materials. He received no wages, merely his living expenses. The other members of the family were also supported out of the proceeds of the business. On April 5, 1920, B. Perlis was adjudged a voluntary bankrupt. On that date Mrs. Perlis, besides having on hand a stock in trade of the value of about $300, had on deposit in the bank, in her name, the sum of $2,329.72, which represented the net proceeds of said business at the end of 3½ years' operation thereof. She also had on deposit, as trustee, the sum of $970 belonging to her two minor sons.

The amended complaint, which contains four counts, charged in substance that said business was owned and operated by B. Perlis; that "said sole tradership was merely a fraudulent device and blind" carried on by Perlis and his wife in furtherance of a conspiracy entered into between them to defraud the creditors of Perlis; that as a result of said fraudulent acts on their part assets belonging to Perlis amounting to $15,000 have been sequestered and illegally converted by Mrs. Perlis, for which amount judgment was prayed. The trial court found against appellant on all charges of fraud and conspiracy, and further found that "all the capital and assets of said ladies' tailor business * * * are, and have, since the establishment of said business * * * been the separate property of Sophia Perlis." Appellant contends "that the facts do not support the finding that all the business and assets were separate property," but show that the same were community property, and that therefore, as such trustee he is entitled to recover the same as part of the bankrupt's estate.

[1, 2] The question of whether said business belonged to Mrs. Perlis and was carried on by her in good faith as her own enterprise, and at her expense and for her benefit, or whether, as charged in the complaint, it was operated by her husband in her name as a "cloak and screen" for the fraudulent purpose of sequestering the proceeds thereof, was one of fact for the trial court to determine, and, said court having found upon substantial evidence in favor of Mrs. Perlis on that issue, the matter of the ownership of said business is settled so far as this appeal is concerned (Oldershaw v. Matteson & Williamson Co., 125 P. 263, 19 Cal. App. 179; Estate of Pepper, 112 P. 62, 158 Cal. 619, 31 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1092; Hossfeldt v. Dill, 10 N. W. 781, 23 Minn. 469; Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y. 227), and, the ownership of said business having been thus established in Mrs. Perlis, the proceeds of that business became her separate estate (Diefendorff v. Hopkins, 28 P. 265, 30 P. 549, 95 Cal. 343; Estate of Pepper, supra; Smith v. Smith, 191 P. 60, 47 Cal. App. 650; Civ. Code, § 162).

[3-5] The fact that the husband contributed his time and skill in the conduct of the business gave him no interest in the business nor in the proceeds derived therefrom, nor did it have the effect of transmuting the status of ownership of the business from separate to community property. (Oldershaw v. Matteson & Williamson, supra; Walsh v. Walsh, 23 P. 1099, 84 Cal. 101; Lewis v. Johns, 24 Cal. 98, 85 Am. Dec. 49. Creditors have no lien on a debtor's labor nor any way to compel him to work, and consequently he may legally give his entire time, skill, and industry to his wife in aiding to carry on a business owned by her, and his creditors cannot complain of his doing so, since such a donation of services is not inconsistent with his obligation toward them. See cases cited in note, 28 A. L. R. p. 1048. Nor was it of any legal consequence that Perlis allowed his wife to use as part of the equipment of said business a few articles of personal property of insignificant value, belonging to him. Walsh v. Walsh, supra; Estate of Pepper, supra; Hossfeldt v. Dill, supra. The profits derived from the business cannot be said to be, as appellant contends, the product of the sewing machine and motor belonging to the husband, but were the results of the operation of the entire business, which belonged to the wife. Even if the subject of the loan had been money to use in the business instead of the personal property mentioned, it would not have affected the title to the business. Estate of Pepper, supra.

[6, 7] The conclusion of the trial court that the earnings of said business were not community property may also be sustained upon the principle of law that the husband may relinquish to the wife the right to her earnings during marriage without any consideration other than their mutual consent, and that thereupon said earnings become her separate estate. Smith v. Smith, supra; Wren v. Wren, 34 P. 775, 100 Cal. 276, 38 Am. St. Rep. 287; Larson v. Larson, 115 P. 340, 15 Cal. App. 531; Diefendorff v. Hopkins, supra; Civ. Code, § 158. As stated in Smith v. Smith, supra:

"Such an agreement may be proved by evidence as to the acts and conduct of the husband with relation to the earnings of the wife or business conducted by her as community property indicating that he did not regard them as community property. Larson v. Larson [115 P. 340, 15 Cal. App. 531] supra; Kaltschmidt v. Weber [79 P. 272], 145 Cal. 596, 599."

[8] The facts already narrated show in this connection that, following her husband's business failure, Mrs. Perlis, through a former attorney, applied for and obtained in good faith a decree of sole tradership in order that she might operate a business of her own and thereby support her family. Proceeding under said decree she procured the necessary money by pawning her separate property to open said business, and she thereafter conducted the same under her name and management. Said decree was offered in evidence at the trial of this action by appellant in support of his case, and, although said decree was afterwards held to be invalid by the trial court because of an error committed in failing to specify in the tradership proceedings the true given name of Mrs. Perlis' husband, said business was nevertheless started and was carried on for a period of 3½ years under the belief that said decree was valid, during which time Perlis, the husband, made no claim to said business or to any part of its profits; nor did he ever indicate that he regarded said business or the earnings of his wife therefrom as community property. We therefore believe that from the acts and conduct of the parties it was not unreasonable for the trial court to infer that there had been a relinquishment by the husband to his wife of the right to such earnings, and that consequently such earnings became in fact her separate property. Kaltschmidt v. Weber, supra; Smith v. Smith, supra; Diefendorff v. Hopkins, supra.

After reviewing the entire record, we conclude that the evidence is sufficient to support said contested finding to the effect that the assets of said business were the separate property of Mrs. Perlis.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 468

HARBINSON et al. v. MALLON et al.
(Civ. 2980.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. Feb. 5, 1926. Rehearing Denied March 6, 1926.)

Appeal and error — 1011(1)—Where defendant agreed to build irrigation system and sell to district and evidence supported finding of performance, judgment would be affirmed notwithstanding contrary evidence.

Where defendant, for a consideration, agreed to build an irrigation system and sell it to an irrigation district embracing lands of plaintiffs, and, in action based on theory that system when so conveyed was incomplete, the evidence supported findings that it was complete, judgment would be affirmed notwithstanding evidence which would have supported contrary finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest M. Weyand, Judge.

Action by J. C. Harbinson and another against J. F. Mallon and another upon contracts. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and Seth Millington, of Colusa, for appellants.

U. W. Brown, of Colusa, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This is an action by plaintiffs to recover the sum of $16,766 alleged to be due from the defendants for and on account of certain contracts hereinafter mentioned. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs appeal.

On the 15th day of November, 1916, the plaintiffs and defendants entered into a contract in writing by the terms of which the plaintiffs leased to the defendants a certain tract of land for the period of two years for the purpose of growing rice, at a specified cash rental per acre. This contract provided that the defendants should construct and install an irrigation system conducting water to certain lands, including the lands belonging to the plaintiffs, specifying in general language the work to be performed, including drains, headgates, etc. The contract also provided that at the expiration thereof, the appellants were to convey an interest in the entire irrigation system constructed by the lessees, by which said lands were to be irrigated to such extent as their (the appellants') lands bore to the whole acreage then irrigated, or to be irrigated by said irrigation system; that the irrigation system should be free from all indebtedness. The contract further provided that it was understood and agreed that the parties thereto, their successors or assigns, together with other parties who had lands subject to irrigation from said system, and who desired to unite with the parties to said contract in the irrigation of their lands by said system, shall and will form a mutual water corporation for the irrigation of their said lands, to which mutual water corporation said irrigation system shall be conveyed free of incumbrances. It was further agreed that the respondents would thereupon convey to the appellants stock in said mutual water corporation to the extent of the acreage demised, fully paid up, without cost or expense to said appellants. In consideration of the construction of said irrigation system, the appellants agreed to convey to the respondents certain lands consisting of 800 acres, other than the lands leased in the contract. On the 14th day of January, 1917, the respondents, in pursuance of said lease, or contract, dated November 15, 1916, and in consideration of the conveyance by appellants to respondents of the 800 acres of land as provided in said contract, by an instrument in writing purported to grant, convey, assign, and set over to the appellants, free and clear of debts or charges, the right and title in and to the irrigation system, irrigation plant, and property therein described, in such proportion of interest therein to the same extent as the lands of appellants, which were described in said lease of November 15, 1916, bore to the whole acreage irrigated by said system prior to December 31, 1918, the date of the expiration of said lease, and providing further that upon the organization of a mutual water corporation there should be issued to appellants stock in such corporation to the extent of one share for each acre of land described in said agreement, fully paid up, without cost or expense to appellants. On the 21st day of November, 1918, the appellants and respondents entered into another agreement in writing, modifying the lease and agreement of November 15, 1916, in that it was agreed that an irrigation district should be formed comprising the lands of appellants and other lands within the irrigation system in lieu of the mutual water corporation provided for in the agreement dated November 15, 1916, and providing further that said irrigation district should be formed within one year and should acquire by purchase the irrigation system constructed by the respondents, that the appellants should receive an amount of bonds of said district which should bear the same ratio to the entire amount of bonds received for the irrigation system as the number of acres of appellants' lands bore to the whole acreage included within the district.

On or about the 18th day of June, 1918, the irrigation system in question was offered to the Maxwell irrigation district, this district being formed and organized to purchase the property in question. Thereafter such proceedings were taken and had by the district that there was submitted to the electors of the district the proposal to issue bonds of the district in the sum of $260,000 for the purpose of buying the irrigation system constructed as aforesaid. This proposal was approved by the property owners and qualified electors of the Maxwell irrigation district. Thereafter, and on or about the 16th day of September, 1918, the appellants, respondents, and all others owning an interest in the irrigation system, constructed as aforesaid, by proper conveyance, transferred to the Maxwell irrigation district said irrigation system, including all rights of way, ditches, drains, water, water rights, pumps, headgates, machinery, appliances, etc., connected therewith or used in the maintenance or operation of the same.

After these proceedings had been taken and had, it appears that the landowners of the district in an informal manner agreed to add certain improvements and betterments to the irrigation system, in which informal meeting it appears that the plaintiffs participated. The engineer of the district was directed to make an estimate of the amount of money required for the purposes mentioned. Thereafter, on April 1, 1919, the board of directors called a special election for the purpose of voting an assessment of $52,355 to pay the costs of such improvements and betterments. At the election held on the 29th of April, 1919, this proposed assessment was voted unanimously. In order to have the money available immediately for the installation of said improvements and betterments to the irrigation system, it appears that an agreement was entered into by which $45,000 of the bond money should be retained and an authorization was signed by the landowners of the district, authorizing J. W. Forgeus, as trustee, to withhold from the bond money such landowners' pro rata part of said $45,000, to be used for the installation of motors, pumping equipment, etc., at the site of the water wheels theretofore used by the irrigation system constructed by the respondents. This money proving insufficient to pay for the contemplated improvements, other proceedings were had so that the amount chargeable to the lands of the plaintiffs aggregated the sum sued for in this action. It appears that the respondents advanced the money necessary to pay the portion of said assessment chargeable to the lands of the plaintiffs, and, under the agreements just referred to, deducted that sum in the settlement of their indebtedness and delivery of bonds to the plaintiffs.

The contention of the appellants now is that the irrigation system constructed by the defendants was not completed when the interest therein agreed to be conveyed by the defendants to the plaintiffs was transferred and the plaintiffs conveyed in payment thereof, to the defendants the 800 acres mentioned and provided for in the contract dated November 15, 1916. On the part of the respondents, it is contended that the system was completed in accordance with the terms of said contract and had been in operation for a period of more than one year and had furnished to the appellants the water agreed to be furnished their lands for irrigation purposes in a quantity equal to that furnished after the improvements and betterments to the system made by the district. As to whether the work done by the Maxwell district was a completion of the work agreed to be performed by the respondents in their contract for building the irrigation system, or was, in truth and in fact, simply improvements and betterments, the trial court, upon conflicting evidence, found:

"That prior to the conveyance of said irrigation system to said Maxwell irrigation district, and at the time of said conveyance, said irrigation system was completed and was in a condition to properly function, and the same operated satisfactorily for two years before it was turned over to said district; that it irrigated all of the lands of the district prior to the time of the organization thereof; that it diverted as much water from the river prior to the organization as since its organization; that after the organization of said irrigation district, and after the conveyance to it of all the properties and rights which went to make up the irrigation plant or system, free and clear of incumbrances, the landowners of the district, including plaintiffs, agreed that they would install certain improvements or betterments; that prior to the expiration of the lease and agreement of November 15, 1916, said irrigation system was conveyed to said Maxwell irrigation district free and clear of all incumbrances."

The testimony of Mr. Brown, engineer of the district, shows all the improvements and betterments installed in the system by the Maxwell irrigation district and also the installation of storage pumps and motors for the purpose of giving assurance of a sufficient water supply to the landowners within the district. This testimony, as well as the testimony of some other witnesses, if believed by the trial court, is sufficient to support the finding that the system was completed as contemplated when the same was conveyed to the Maxwell irrigation district, and that whatever was thereafter done was done in the way of improvements, betterments, and maintenance. There is some testimony in the transcript and referred to by the appellants that might support a contrary finding, but such matters are exclusively for the trial court.

The findings to which we have referred being sufficiently supported, it follows that the judgment of the trial court must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 455

LEMM et al. v. RUTHERFORD. (Civ. 2961.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 5, 1926. Rehearing Denied March 6, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 5, 1926.)

Waters and water courses ☞101—Landowner cannot sink well so near irrigation ditch of another that water supply would be taken from ditch.

Landowner held unauthorized to sink a well or sump so near an irrigation ditch across his land belonging to another that his water supply would be practically all taken from waters flowing in such ditch.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Suit by Charles L. Lemm and another against George Rutherford. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendant appeals. Order affirmed.

Carter & Smith, of Redding, for appellant.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court granting a temporary injunction. The plaintiffs set forth in their complaint that they are the owners of certain lands situate in the county of Shasta, comprising about 553 acres, and that they and their predecessors in interest for more than 50 years have been the owners of a certain water ditch taking water out of a certain stream known as Cow creek; that the water belonging to the plaintiffs is taken at a point on said creek and carried thence in a ditch in a general westerly direction parallel to said stream over and to the lands of the plaintiffs hereinbefore referred to, and there used for irrigation purposes; that said water ditch in its course passes along and over a certain tract of land belonging to the defendant before reaching the lands belonging to the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs have acquired and own the right to conduct said water in said ditch from said Cow creek to their lands in the ditch above mentioned; that a short time preceding the commencement of this action the defendant on the lands and premises belonging to him, and at a point about 33 feet from the water ditch belonging to the plaintiffs sunk a sump or well 8 feet in depth, three sides of said well or sump being 8 feet and the fourth side thereof about 9 feet in dimensions; that after said well was dug only a trifle of water appeared in the lowest places therein; that, within about 24 hours after water was turned into the ditch belonging to the plaintiffs, for the purposes of conducting water from Cow creek to their lands and premises to be used for irrigation purposes, the water in the well or sump dug by the defendant increased to a depth of about 4 feet; that the defendant installed a pump in said well, and was proceeding to pump water therefrom until a temporary restraining order was issued herein; that an order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued pending the trial was made, and, upon the hearing upon such order to show cause, a temporary injunction was issued in this action, restraining the defendant from pumping water from said well until the final order of the court. It is from this temporary injunction that the defendant appeals.

There seems to be no controversy in the testimony that practically all water in the well withdrawn by the defendant's act came directly from the water flowing through the plaintiffs' ditch. The argument presented by the appellant in this case, admitting the taking of the water to be as above stated, is to the effect that the defendant, as the owner of the land in question, is the owner of all the percolating water therein, and that, as the water from plaintiffs' ditch comes to the well dug by the defendant underneath the surface, the defendant is entitled to withdraw therefrom all the water that may be found therein for the purpose of irrigating his own land. In support of this contention, a large number of California cases having to do with percolating waters are presented for our consideration.

On the part of the respondent, it is first contended that the granting of a temporary injunction is largely discretionary with the trial court, and should not be interfered with; secondly, that the plaintiffs are the owners of an easement over the defendant's lands to the extent that plaintiffs are entitled to have the percolating and seepage waters remain undisturbed along the lines of its irrigation ditch for the purpose of supporting and maintaining the current of water flowing in said ditch, and also, further, that the different cases relating to percolating waters, in the ordinary sense, where it is held that the owner of the soil is also the owner of all the water beneath the soil, are inapplicable. Passing by the question that the discretion of the trial court, in issuing a temporary injunction, should not ordinarily be interfered with, we will consider what appears to us to be the main question presented by the facts of this case. Has a landowner a right to sink a well or sump so near an irrigation ditch belonging to another that it is reasonably apparent his water supply will be practically all taken from the waters flowing in said irrigation ditch? We think this question answers itself, and that under such circumstances cases having to do with ordinary percolating waters, in the true sense of the term, have no application. However, we will refer to a few of the leading cases in California, dealing with questions somewhat similar. In the case of Katz v. Walkinshaw, 74 P. 766, 769, 141 Cal. 116, pages 128 and 129 (64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35) of the main opinion written by Justice Shaw, it will be noted that the rule laid down in the case of Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 299, relating to percolating waters, and the subsequent cases following the McCue Case are taken up, considered, and limited in their application. The Walkinshaw Case further holds that the law relating to percolating waters is very much limited and is governed largely by another rule, which is to the effect that one must so use his own property as not to injure that of another. In the Walkinshaw Case the owner of land was enjoined from sinking wells and pumping water therefrom which materially interfered with and diminished the water supply in wells owned by an adjoining landowner. It is true that the waters used and proposed to be used by the parties enjoined was conducted away from the lands from which it was pumped. The complaint in the Walkinshaw Case alleged:

"That the water was necessary for domestic use and irrigation on the lands on which they were situate; that the defendant, by means of other wells and excavations upon another tract of land in the vicinity prevented any water from flowing through the plaintiff's wells to their premises; and that this was done by drawing off the water through the wells of the defendant, taking it to a distant tract, and there using it."

The contention was made in the Walkinshaw Case similar to the contention made here as to the rights of the defendant to percolating water. In speaking of this contention, Justice Shaw said:

"The idea that the doctrine contended for by the defendant is a part of the common law adopted by our statute, and beyond the power of the court to change or modify, is founded upon a misconception of the extent to which the common law is adopted by such statutory provisions, and a failure to observe some of the rules and principles of the common law itself."

Mention is then made of conditions under which the principles enunciated by the common law of England are inapplicable, among which are the physical conditions of our state and also the fact that the rule of the common law is not to be applied where the reason for it utterly fails, and, further:

"The true doctrine is that the common law, by its own principles, adapts itself to varying conditions, and modifies its own rules so as to serve the ends of justice under the different circumstances, a principal adopted into our Code by section 3510 of the Civil Code: 'When the reason of a rule ceases, so should the rule itself.'"

We do not need to follow the reasoning of the Walkinshaw Case further than as above stated to show that, where the circumstances are such that the reason for the rule utterly ceases, it cannot be applied. In the case of Hudson v. Dailey, 105 P. 748, 156 Cal. 617, opinion by Justice Shaw, the Supreme Court considered a case involving the withdrawal of water by wells and pumps and thereby depleting the quantity of water flowing into a nearby creek. The trial court found there was a substratum of impervious material under which water flowed and from which water was taken by the defendant in connection with the water that was drawn from the creek supplying the plaintiff. As to this matter, the opinion reads:

"But as the findings also, in substance, declare that the pumping of the defendant does, to a material extent, decrease the amount of water which the plaintiff is able to divert from the creek and which she needs for the irrigation of her land, the finding as to the lower strata is immaterial. If the pumping by the defendants constituted an unlawful diversion of water to which plaintiff was entitled, it would be no defense that they also took other water from another source."

In the further consideration of the facts presented in the Dailey Case, the court came to the conclusion that the defendant had an interest in the water flowing in the creek, and that the claims of the plaintiff were not paramount to the rights of the defendant, and it was upon this phase of the case that judgment was rendered. Again, in the case of Verdugo Cañon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 93 P. 1021, 152 Cal. 655, a case involving the taking of subterranean waters by means of wells, opinion by Justice Shaw, it is said:

"The continued presence in the soil, sand, and gravel composing the bed of the stream of a sufficient quantity of water to supply and support the surface streams in their natural state, is essential to their existence and preservation, and the parties have as clear a right to have this quantity remain underground for that purpose as they have to the stream upon the surface; and neither party should be permitted to decrease this necessary quantity of underground water to the depletion of the surface streams and the injury of those to whom it has been assigned."

The facts of that case are not the same exactly as presented in this, but the principle announced is similar—the right to the support to the water flowing in the ditch afforded by the seepage water escaping therefrom into the soil reasonably adjacent to the ditch. Here the defendant by his action, as determined by the trial court, dug his well so near the water ditch belonging to the plaintiffs as to draw therefrom practically all of the water finding its way to his lands through the agency of an 8-foot well and a pumping plant. For all practical purposes, considering the juxtaposition of the well to the ditch, the suction pipe of the pump might just as well have been inserted directly in the ditch belonging to the plaintiffs. We think the common law relating to percolating waters, as stated, where the circumstances show that real percolating waters are involved, have no bearing upon the issues in this case, and that the principle set forth in the Walkinshaw Case and the two California cases, which we have cited following the Walkinshaw Case, are the ones governing the conditions such as are here presented.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 492

NEWBERRY v. EVANS et al. (Civ. 2950.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 10, 1926.)

1. Eminent domain $\hookrightarrow$ 167(4)—Drainage district, in taking property, must do so in exercise of right of eminent domain according to statutes, unless owner consents to such taking (St. 1903, p. 291; St. 1915, p. 1321; Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, subd. 3; Const. art. 1, § 14).

Unless owner of property, required for purpose of drainage district, organized under St. 1903, p. 291, St. 1915, p. 1321, and Code

Civ. Proc. § 1238, subd. 3, consented to taking or damaging of his property by such district, district was required to pursue course outlined by Const. art. 1, § 14, and to be invoked according to the procedure adopted by the Legislature for taking of property by eminent domain.

2. Drains $\hookrightarrow$ 19—Unauthorized act of drainage directors in digging ditch across owner's land constituted a trespass for which they were severally and jointly liable, even though such acts were committed in their official capacity or as directors of district.

Acts of directors of drainage district in digging a ditch across owner's property without his consent, and without first making just compensation therefor, constituted trespass for which they were severally and jointly liable, authorizing owner to proceed against them as for a tort, even though such acts were committed by them in their official capacity or as directors of drainage district.

3. Drains $\hookrightarrow$ 19—Drainage district held not immune from liability for unauthorized acts of officers in digging ditch across owner's property, where work was performed as district itself had outlined and expressly directed it to be done (St. 1903, p. 299, § 26).

Drainage district was not immune from liability for acts of its directors in digging a ditch across owner's property without his consent and without awarding him just compensation therefor, where such officers, in performing work, did it precisely as district itself had outlined and expressly directed such work to be done, and hence drainage district should have been retained as party defendant, in action against directors for such unauthorized acts, in view of St. 1903, p. 299, § 26.

4. Drains $\hookrightarrow$ 20—Drainage district may be sued as well as institute and maintain actions at law or suits in equity (St. 1903, p. 291; St. 1915, p. 1321).

Drainage district, organized under St. 1903, p. 291, St. 1915, p. 1321, being given express and specific authority to sue or to defend in any action, may be sued as well as institute and maintain actions at law or suits in equity.

5. Drains $\hookrightarrow$ 19—Drainage district held not required to satisfy judgment against directors for unauthorized taking of owner's property, in absence of showing that drainage district actually took property or used it for its purposes.

Drainage district held not required to satisfy judgment against directors in action by owner for damages for digging ditch across his land without his consent and without making just compensation, though work itself had been planned and authorized to be done by district, in absence of any showing that district actually took owner's property or was using it for its purposes.

6. Property $\hookrightarrow$ 4.

Injury to trees by unauthorized acts of drainage directors in digging ditch is injury to real property on which they were growing.

7. Drains ☞20—Personal judgment against directors of drainage district for unauthorized digging of ditch across owner's property creates presumption that directors alone were concerned in commission of such act.

Personal judgment against directors of drainage district for digging ditch across owner's land, without his consent and without making just compensation therefor, creates presumption that directors alone were concerned in commission of tort on which such judgment was founded, notwithstanding that directors, in digging ditch, did it precisely as district itself had outlined and expressly directed it to be done.

8. Drains ☞20—Judgment against drainage directors for using funds of district in satisfaction of personal judgment held not void as against director who was not member of board when funds were paid out or when tort on which judgment was based was committed.

Judgment, in action to recover of directors of drainage district funds of district expended by them in satisfying personal judgment against them for digging ditch across owner's land without his consent and without making just compensation therefor, held not void as to a director who was not a member of the board when damage to owner's land was committed or when judgment was ordered paid, where it was not denied that he had a hand in causing funds of district to be used in paying such judgment.

9. Drains ☞20—If director of drainage district was not member of board when personal judgment against directors was ordered paid out of district's funds, he would not be proper party to action to recover therefor.

If director of drainage district was not a member of board when personal judgment against directors was ordered by board to be paid from funds of the district, and he in no other way assisted or abetted act of board in thus misappropriating funds of district, he would not be a proper party to action to recover for such unauthorized diversion of funds.

10. Contribution ☞6—Contribution cannot be invoked by party voluntarily paying obligation against person for whom such payment was made.

Where an obligation arising out of contract has been paid and extinguished voluntarily, by a party not obliged to pay it, right of contribution ordinarily cannot be invoked as against person for whom such payment was made by party thus making such payment.

11. Contribution ☞3—Drainage director could not be held liable for proportionate part of moneys paid out of district's funds to extinguish personal judgment against directors under doctrine of contribution, where he was not member of board when such payment was made or when damage was committed.

Director of drainage district, who was not a member of board of directors when personal judgment against directors was satisfied out of funds of district or when tort on which judgment was based was committed, cannot be held liable to district for a proportionate part of moneys paid out of its funds to extinguish such judgment under theory of contribution, assuming that district paid judgment upon theory that it with director committed damage complained of, or even if district had been made a party to such action.

12. Contribution ☞5.

Generally right of contribution does not apply as between joint tort-feasors.

13. Drains ☞19—Drainage district would be liable for fees of attorney contracting to defend action, though district was eliminated as party thereto, in absence of showing that payment of fees was to be contingent on quantum of services rendered.

Attorney, who appeared for drainage district in action against directors and district for unauthorized digging of ditch across owner's land and who continued so to act until district was eliminated as a party defendant thereto, might recover of district full sum which it agreed to pay him for his professional services in such action, in absence of any showing that payment of his fees was to be contingent on quantum of services rendered, and even though drainage directors, after district ceased to be a party to action, agreed themselves to pay him for his professional services to them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by H. O. Newberry against W. E. Evans and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants W. E. Evans, Louis Pedrotti, and George F. Morken appeal. Reversed with directions.

W. F. Cowan and A. W. Hollingsworth, both of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

R. M. Barrett and C. W. Anderson, both of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

HART, J. The Wilfred-Bellevue drainage district, which is situated in the county of Sonoma, is, as its name implies a drainage district, and was organized and is existing as such under and by authority of the laws of the state of California. See Stats. 1903, p. 291, and Stats. 1915, p. 1321. At all times mentioned in the pleadings and the evidence, the defendants, other than defendant Morken, were duly elected and acting members of the board of directors of said district. The times at and during which said Morken became and acted as a member of the said board will later be shown.

The plaintiff, prior to and at the time of the institution of this action, was the owner of real property situated within the boundaries of said drainage district, and which has been, at all the times mentioned in the complaint, assessed for the payment of taxes in and to said district, "and taxes thereon during said period have been and now are paid by this plaintiff into the treasury of said drainage district."

It appears that, at some time prior to the 1st day of January, 1921, the board of directors of the said Wilfred-Bellevue drainage district (hereinafter, for convenience and brevity to be referred to as "the district" or the "drainage district") by due proceedings, and in furtherance of the purposes and objects of the district, ordered the engineer thereof to survey and lay out a route for the construction of ditches as a part of its system of drainage. In compliance with the direction thus given, the said engineer (L. L. Mills by name) proceeded with the work of laying out and establishing the line or lines along which the ditches were to be constructed. Among the ditches so laid out was one designated in the field notes of the engineer as "ditch No. 2." The line of said ditch was started, and as later constructed starts at a point about a quarter of a mile north of what is known as Bellevue Station, a railroad station of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad, "and runs along the easterly side of the railroad right of way" through the property of one F. W. Wilson, "from the northerly property line of said land to the southerly line thereof and parallel to and at a distance of about 3 feet from the westerly line of said land." Said ditch, as above indicated, was constructed over and along the line or route as marked out by the survey made by said engineer.

On the 28th day of July, 1921, the said F. W. Wilson brought an action against the drainage district and the defendants in the present action, as the board of directors of said district, the purpose of which was to recover damages for damage alleged to have been produced by the defendants in the building of said ditch to that portion of his said land through and over which said ditch No. 2 was constructed and maintained and also for damage alleged to have been likewise caused to a certain number of pear trees then growing on said land. Subsequently to the bringing of said action—on March 13, 1922—Wilson filed a third amended complaint, but omitted therefrom the drainage district as a defendant, thus leaving therein as the only parties defendant to the action Evans, Pedrotti, and Morken, the defendants in the present action. The said third amended complaint in that case alleged, among other things, that the defendants therein (and herein), on the 1st day of January, 1921, while acting as trustees in the management, control, and operation of said drainage district, without the knowledge, consent, or approval of plaintiff, "did then and there wrongfully dig and construct a ditch over and through the land of plaintiff (said land being specifically described in said complaint) along the line of said land," as above indicated, said ditch as so constructed being 675 feet in length and of the width of four feet and of the depth of four feet. Several different items of damage to a certain number of trees on said land and to the land itself are specifically alleged and described, all amounting, in the aggregate, as stated in money, to the sum of $1,000, for which judgment was prayed.

The answer to said complaint after certain denials, alleged that in the years 1920 and 1921, the drainage district was engaged in the construction of a system of drainage for said district, and to that end caused surveys to be made for its drainage ditches; that one of the ditches so surveyed and laid out was the one which was to be constructed for the purpose of carrying water from a large territory north of the lands of plaintiff and across said lands, "thence southerly for a long distance until the same was discharged into a large body of water called the Laguna; that defendants notified the plaintiff in said action (Wilson) of the necessity for the use of the portion of his lands over which said ditch was to pass as a part of the drainage system which had been outlined, and that the said plaintiff thereupon consented to the construction of said ditch along the line of the survey thereof and over and through his said lands, and directed defendants to proceed with the work of constructing said ditch; that he knew at all times "the identical place where the said ditch was to be constructed and of its proximity to the westerly row of pear trees on said lands." Upon the issues thus made by the pleadings, the cause came on for trial on the 12th day of September, 1922, before the court sitting without a jury, and on the 25th day of April, 1923, judgment was entered upon the findings and conclusions of law in favor of the plaintiff in said action (Wilson) for the total sum of $325 and costs. The court found in that action that the defendants, "while acting as directors * * * of said drainage district, and without the consent or approval of plaintiff herein, entered upon the land of plaintiff as particularly described in the third amended complaint" and wrongfully dug and constructed the ditch in question. It was further found (finding 1) that the direct result of the construction of said ditch was the destruction of the westerly row of pear trees growing on Wilson's said land, and that the damage to said trees amounted, as stated in money, to the sum of $325. The court further found in said action "that the lands of the plaintiff (Wilson), apart from the damage to the pear trees thereon, as above set forth in finding 1, have not been damaged by reason of the construction of said ditch by the said defendants." As a conclusion of law, the court found that "the defendants are liable personally for the damage to the trees of plaintiff," etc. No appeal was taken from the judgment therein entered.

It appears from the record in the instant case that the defendant Morken was not a director of the drainage district at the time the preparatory steps for building the ditch in question were taken, he having been appointed a member of the board of directors of the said district by the board of supervisors of Sonoma county on June 14, 1921, to fill a vacancy occurring in the board of directors. It further appears that, on February 7, 1923, an election was held by the landholders of the district for the purpose of electing a director in the place and stead of said Morken; his term being then about to expire. At said election said Morken and one Chas. Bacon were rival candidates for said office of director, and, upon a canvass by the board of directors of the returns of the election so held, it was found that Bacon received the highest number of votes cast at said election for said office, and was by said board declared duly elected thereto. A certificate of election was thereupon duly issued to said Bacon, who, having duly qualified, assumed the duties of his office as director of the district on the 6th day of March, 1923, in the place and stead of said Morken, defendant herein. On June 5, 1923, at a regular meeting of the board of directors, all the members thereof (Pedrotti, Evans, defendants in the present, as also in the Wilson action, and Bacon, successor of Morken as director) being present, the matter of the Wilson judgment was called up for consideration. The minutes of said meeting read, in part:

"A judgment of $325 having been awarded F. W. Wilson in his damage suit and costs of $82, it was decided to pay same out of the construction fund in favor of W. F. Cowan (attorney for defendants in the Wilson as well as in the present action) and let him settle with Wilson's lawyers. Wilson agreed to discount $25 from the amount awarded, so a warrant for $382 was drawn out of the construction fund in the name of W. F. Cowan."

Wilson accepted the above-stated amount as in full payment and satisfaction of his judgment against the defendant directors, and the same was duly and regularly satisfied.

The present action was brought by plaintiff, who, as shown above, was a landowner and a taxpayer in and to said district, and on behalf of the district, for judgment in favor of the latter in the sum of $791.30; being the sum alleged to have been taken and diverted from the funds of the district by said defendants to pay, and with which, it is alleged, they did pay and satisfy, the judgment rendered against them in the action of F. W. Wilson against said defendants and certain costs, attorney's fees, and other expenses incurred by them in said action, and for costs incurred herein by said plaintiff.

The complaint herein proceeds upon the theory that the judgment obtained against the defendants in the Wilson Case was wholly a personal judgment and in no manner or form bound the drainage district, which, as seen, was pretermitted as a party to said Wilson action by the third amended complaint, upon which, together with the answer thereto, said action was tried and judgment entered against the defendants herein alone, and that the appropriation of the moneys of the drainage district by the board of directors to the payment and satisfaction of the Wilson judgment and the costs, attorney's fees, and other expenses incurred therein by the defendants, constituted a misappropriation or wrongful diversion by the latter, as the directors thereof, of the funds of said district. The complaint briefly, but with sufficient fullness, relates the history of the Wilson litigation and the causes leading to the action by Wilson, and also contains a statement of the issues therein tried and decided, and the fact that the drainage district was dropped from said action as a party thereto before the issues of fact therein were tried. The complaint also sets forth in detail the items of costs, attorney's fees, and other expenses incurred in the Wilson suit which, it is alleged, were included within the amount of the judgment in the Wilson Case, as compromised and satisfied in the total sum alleged to have been wrongfully taken from the funds of the drainage district, and misappropriated by defendants.

The answer admits that Evans and Pedrotti were at all times mentioned in the complaint directors of said district, but declares that the defendant Morken, at the time of the commission of the alleged trespass upon which the Wilson action was founded, was not a director of the drainage district, "and is not now a director of said * * * district, although, at the time of the commencement of said action by said Wilson and at the time of the rendition of the judgment therein, the said Morken was a director of said drainage district." The judgment in the Wilson action against defendants is admitted, as is also the payment by defendants out of the funds of the drainage district of said judgment and the costs, attorney's fees, and other expenses incurred in the Wilson action, as specified in the complaint, but the answer alleges that the acts of said defendants, upon which the action by Wilson was based, were not oppressively committed or with the intent to, or purpose of, injuring the said Wilson or his property, but that said acts were within the scope of the authority of said directors, were caused to be done by defendants solely in their capacity as directors of said district and "for the use and benefit of said drainage district"; that the Wilson judgment was paid by said drainage district, "with full knowledge of all the facts upon which the said judgment was based, and with full knowledge that each and every act performed by said personal defendants was performed for the use and benefit of said drainage district; and that said district did fully ratify and approve said payment."

Among the court's findings are the following:

"That for the purpose of defending said action of Wilson, Plaintiff, v. Evans, Pedrotti and Morken, Defendants, * * * the defendants for their own benefit and not for the use of or on behalf of said drainage district, incurred obligations and expenses for court costs, attorneys fees, witness fees, meals for witnesses, court reporter's fees, automobile hire, surveyor's services, and photographs, and for all of said expenses, said defendants caused demands to be filed against the said Wilfred Bellevue drainage district. That defendants Evans and Pedrotti, acting as a majority of the board of directors of said district, allowed, audited, and ordered warrants drawn for each and all of said demands, * * * and that warrants were drawn. * * * That each and every one of said demands (which are set forth in the finding) were allowed and ordered paid by defendants Evans and Pedrotti, acting as a majority of said board of directors. * * * That prior to the commencement of this action said warrants were paid out of the funds of the Wilfred Bellevue district, and that the treasury has been depleted in the aggregate amount of the judgment and of the costs. That it is not true that each and every act and thing done and performed by the said defendants, in and about the premises and upon which the said action of Wilson v. Evans et al. was based, was done for and on behalf of and for the use and benefit of said drainage district. * * * That it is not true that the said judgment and expenses were paid by the drainage district with full knowledge of the facts upon which the judgment was based. * * * That it is not true that the drainage district fully or otherwise ratified and approved said payment."

The court further found that defendants Evans and Pedrotti "were at all times herein mentioned directors of the * * * drainage district," but that defendant Morken, at the time of the commission of the trespass complained of in the Wilson action was not a director of the drainage district, "and is not now a director of said drainage district, although at the time of the commencement of said action by said Wilson and at the time of the rendition of judgment therein the said Morken was a director of said drainage district." The court also expressly found that Morken joined Evans and Pedrotti in causing a warrant to be issued and drawn upon the funds of the district and payable to W. F. Cowan for the purpose of using the money so obtained in payment of the Wilson judgment.

The conclusions of law are, in part, as follows:

"(1) That the judgment in the case of Wilson v. Evans, Pedrotti, and Morken, heretofore mentioned, was and is a personal judgment against said defendants individually, and that said judgment has never been appealed from, modified, or reversed in whole or in part. That the principal of said judgment, together with costs, expenses, and attorney's fees and all other charges and expenses in connection therewith and heretofore in the court's findings of facts specifically mentioned, were in truth and in fact charges and expenses against said defendants Evans, Pedrotti, and Morken individually, and that said defendants were individually liable for all thereof."

The court further concluded as a matter of law that, by reason of the payment by defendants from the funds of the district of the judgment in the Wilson Case and the costs, attorney's fees, and other expenses accruing against defendants in said action, the treasury of the drainage district "has been unlawfully depleted in the sum of $757.80," etc., and that the drainage district is entitled to judgment against the defendants and each of them for said amount. Judgment was entered accordingly. A motion by the defendants for a new trial was denied, and they appeal from said judgment, supporting said appeal by a record prepared in conformity with the requirements of the so-called alternative method.

[1-4] The Legislature has vested in all duly organized drainage districts the right to exercise the power of eminent domain whenever it is found necessary, for the accomplishment of the purposes for which they are organized, to invoke that power. Section 1238, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc.; section 14, Stats. 1903, pp. 291, 295, under the provisions of which the district spoken of herein was organized. The Constitution provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner." Article 1, § 14, Const. Thus it is clear that, unless the owner of property required for the purposes of such districts consents to the taking or damaging of such property by such public agencies for their use as such, the one course which those organizations must pursue in order to secure the legal right to take or damage such property is that outlined by the Constitution and to be invoked according to the procedure adopted by the Legislature for the purpose of facilitating the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It therefore cannot be denied that the acts of the defendants in entering upon the property of Wilson and digging a ditch over and across said property, under the circumstances as indicated or disclosed by the findings in Wilson's action against them, constituted a trespass for which they were severally and jointly liable. And this is so, even if the acts complained of were committed by the defendants in their official capacity or as directors of the drainage district. "One, acting in his official capacity, is individually liable for the negligent discharge of his duties." Proper v. Sutter Drainage District, 200 P. 664, 666, 53 Cal. App. 576, 581; Perkins v. Blauth, 127 P. 50, 163 Cal. 787. Of course, that rule applies as well where the wrong has occurred as the result of an act involving no element of negligence as where the wrong committed is the direct result of the negligence of the person committing the wrong. "One may become liable in an action as for tort by actually doing to the prejudice of another something he has no legal right to do." 2 Cooley, Elements of Torts, p. 19; Perkins v. Blauth, supra. Wilson, therefore, was authorized to proceed, as according to the complaint in his action he did proceed, against the defendants as for a tort. There is not, however, serious, if any, controversy between the parties as to those propositions.

The controversy here revolves around the general proposition, as advanced by the appellants, that, since it was made to appear by the answer to the complaint in the Wilson action and the answer to the complaint in the present action, as well as by evidence received in this action, the damage to Wilson's property was the direct result of acts by the directors of the drainage district which were expressly directed to be done by the district, in the exercise of its authority to establish a system of ditches necessary to carry out the purposes of its organization, and were for the sole benefit and use of the district, it was within the legal right or authority—indeed, a legal duty—of the district to pay and satisfy the judgment for damages awarded in favor of Wilson and against the directors for the damage resulting from the commission of those acts. With the predicate of that proposition established, there could be no legitimate controversy as to its soundness as a matter of right and justice. From the answer to the complaint in the Wilson Case and the answer to the complaint and the uncontradicted evidence in the present case, it is clear that the directors of the drainage district (defendants herein and in the Wilson case) were, when committing the acts of trespass complained of by Wilson, acting under the direct authority or instructions of the drainage district with respect to a matter falling within the general scope of the purposes and powers of the latter. The act of the district in causing a survey of the ditch was not ultra vires. But, in attempting to exercise a power lawfully conferred upon it, to wit, the taking (if it did take) or damaging of private property for a public use and its own benefit, the district itself, acting through its board of directors, without the consent of the owner, and without first making to him just compensation therefor, as prescribed by the Constitution, committed a wrong for which it was liable to the owner. Such, we say, was the case as it was presented by the pleadings of defendants in both cases and the evidence in this. Therefore, as thus disclosed, it was not a case where injury to the property of another was directly or at all produced by the negligent performance by the officers or agents of a public mandatory of their duties as such officers or agents. Assuming, though, that the case upon the facts was of the latter class, the district would not be immune from liability, since the officers and agents of the district, in performing the work, did it precisely as the district itself had outlined and expressly directed it to be done. In other words, the injury to the property of Wilson resulted from the work itself as it had been planned and authorized to be done by the district, and not from any negligence of the officers or agents of the district in performing the work. The act or acts which thus the district commanded its officers or agents or employees to perform, being inherently wrong, the district and the officers or agents or employees who performed the act or acts are both liable. Perkins v. Blauth, 127 P. 50, 163 Cal. 782, and cases therein cited at page 789; Weissband v. City of Petaluma, 174 P. 955, 37 Cal. App. 296, 307; Western Assur. Co., etc., v. Sac. & San Joaquin Drainage District (Cal. App.) 237 P. 59, 63.

Hence, from any of the several viewpoints of the case as thus considered, the drainage district, having originally been made a party defendant in the action by Wilson, ought to have been retained in that action as a defendant. Indeed, if the district actually took the land of Wilson and has been or is using it for its purposes as a drainage district, the action of Wilson should be treated as having been in effect a condemnation proceeding instituted by the district for its own necessities, and, therefore required to pay or stand for the damages awarded against the defendants in said action. It is not in the present connection inappropriate to say, in reply to the contention of respondent to the contrary in that particular, that there was no legal impediment to the making of the district a party defendant to the Wilson action. Section 26 of the Statute of 1903, supra, provides that, "in all courts, actions, suits, or proceedings, the said board (of directors) may sue, appear, and defend in person or by attorneys, and in the name of such drainage district." Thus the district is given express and specific authority to sue or to defend in any action, which means, of course, that it may be sued as well as institute and maintain actions at law or suits in equity. The cases cited by respondent, as supporting the view that the drainage district could not legally have been made a defendant in the Wilson suit, are Proper v. Sutter Drainage Dist. et al., 200 P. 664, 53 Cal. App. 576; Perkins v. Blauth, 127 P. 50, 163 Cal. 782; Brunson v. Santa Monica, 143 P. 950, 27 Cal. App. 89; Brownell v. Fisher, 57 Cal. 150; Hopkins v. Clemson Agricultural College, 31 S. Ct. 654, 221 U. S. 636, 55 L. Ed. 890, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243. Those cases, however, had to do with state agencies or public mandatories, the right to sue which had not been authorized by the Legislature.

[5-7] But the situation as it is presented here is such as to preclude us from holding that the district should be compelled to assume and satisfy the Wilson judgment. While, as seen, there is testimony in the present record showing that the damage done to the property of Wilson, for which the judgment in his action against the defendants awarding him damages was given, was an incident of an attempt upon the part of the drainage district to take the property for a public use and its benefit, still there is no evidence herein that the district actually took the property or is using or ever used it for its purposes. Turning to the judgment roll in the Wilson Case, we find nothing in the findings to the effect that the land was taken and was being used by the district as a part of its drainage system. To the contrary, it was therein expressly found that, while certain trees growing and standing on the land alleged in the complaint of Wilson were injured by the acts of the defendants, it is also found that "the lands of the plaintiff have not been damaged by reason of the construction of said ditch by the defendants." Of course, injury to the trees was, in law, injury to the real property upon which they were growing, but by the finding it was evidently intended to declare that the soil itself was not injured. Indeed, construing the finding by the light of the complaint in that case, it would be the reasonable inference that neither the soil nor the fee to the land was taken for the uses of the district. The complaint in that case, as has above been shown, segregated or divided the damage alleged and the damages claimed into two distinct items, to wit: Damage to the trees, $500 damages; damage to the land, $500 damages. The court, in its findings, it will be perceived, followed the segregation thus made by the complaint, and, as stated, it seems to us that the reasonable construction of, or the more rational inference from, the finding as to damage, is that there was no taking of the land. But, regardless of all those matters, the fact is that, notwithstanding that it is found that the defendants, while acting as directors of the district and in control of its affairs, committed the trespass, the judgment is exclusively against them as a personal judgment. The judgment is, of course, buttressed by all the presumptions and intendments which apply to all judgments which, upon their face, are not void, and, while it is true that a party suing only one or two of a greater number of tort-feasors is not for that reason barred from suing any against whom he has not proceeded, unless a judgment he has secured against those sued has been satisfied, or his right of action against those not sued is barred by the statute of limitations, it is equally true that it is to be presumed from the judgment in the Wilson action that the defendants alone were concerned in the commission of the tort upon which said judgment is founded. And there is no showing in the present action which would justify the conclusion that it was the legal duty of the district to pay the Wilson judgment, and the landowners of the district, so far as the present case is made to appear here, had the right to regard and treat the act by the district in satisfying said judgment out of its funds as involving a diversion by the directors of so much of said funds as were so taken and used from its lawful purposes. As before suggested, if the defendants, under allegations in their answer to that effect, had shown that the district had taken and was using the land of Wilson for its purposes—that is to say, if it had been made to appear in the present action, under an issue appropriately made and tendered, that, by virtue of the Wilson judgment or under the compromise between Wilson and the district, whereby Wilson accepted, as in satisfaction thereof, less than the judgment called for, the district was to have and own and use for the purpose of its drainage system the land alleged in the Wilson action to have been damaged—then, in that case, the payment of the Wilson judgment by the district would not only be just, but, upon the theory that it amounted to the taking of property by the district for its use as a drainage district, would be legally proper.

[8-12] The contention that the judgment in the present case, in so far as it involves and affects the defendant Morken, is void, cannot be sustained. While said judgment as to Morken may be voidable or erroneous or not justified, it is not void. This point, however, is predicated upon the finding herein that Morken was not a member of the board of directors when the damage to Wilson's land was committed, or the work resulting in the damage was ordered to be done. There is also evidence tending to show that Morken had nothing to do with the act of taking and using money from the funds of the drainage district to pay the Wilson judgment. And, as pointed out above, the evidence without conflict shows that Morken, at the time the payment of the Wilson judgment was ordered and caused by the directors to be made out of the funds of the district, was not a member of the board of directors. The action by the plaintiff, as is manifest, is one for the recovery for the district from the defendants of the moneys which it is alleged in the complaint were illegally paid out of the funds of the district by the defendants to satisfy the Wilson judgment against the defendants, and the question is, not whether Morken committed or was connected with the commission of the damage to Wilson's property, but whether he caused or in any way assisted in causing a wrongful use of the district's funds in the manner as alleged in the complaint. The answer, however, sets up a special defense in the nature of a plea in confession and avoidance for all the defendants, including Morken, and amounts to a collateral attack upon the judgment in the Wilson Case. Therein the fact of the use of the money by the defendants to pay the Wilson judgment is admitted, but it is sought to justify the action of the defendants in so using the funds of the district by the plea that the damage to the property of Wilson was alone caused by the district, and that therefore, in paying the judgment of Wilson against the defendants, the district did only what legally it ought to do.

As to defendant Morken, nowhere is there in the answer any denial by or for him of the charge in the complaint that he had a hand in causing the funds of the district to be used in paying the Wilson judgment, and thus he is deemed to have admitted that he, in conjunction with his codefendants, caused the payment of the Wilson judgment to be made from the funds of the district. The court found accordingly. While upon such admission the judgment can stand, and could still have stood, even if the court had failed to make a specific finding as to that matter, yet, if it be true, as the evidence received in the case seems to indicate is true, that Morken was not a member of the board of directors when the judgment in the Wilson Case was ordered and caused by said board to be paid from the funds of the district, and he in no other way assisted, advised, or abetted, the act of the board of directors in thus misappropriating the funds of the district, he was not a proper party to this action, and could not and should not be compelled to stand for any part of the loss sustained by the district by reason of the wrongful diversion of its funds by applying them to the payment of said judgment. Of course, it would not be argued, assuming that Morken took no part in causing the district to pay the Wilson judgment, that the payment of said judgment with the funds of the district would place Morken in the position of one whose obligation has been paid by another, and that, having accepted the benefit of the payment of said judgment with the district's money, he became a debtor of the district by reason of such payment, and should be required to pay the district the debt thus arising against him. Where an obligation arising out of contract has been paid and extinguished voluntarily by a party not obliged to pay it, the right of contribution cannot, as a rule, be invoked as against the person for whom such payment was made by the party thus making such payment. "No one can be made a debtor for money paid to his use, unless it was done at his request, or unless the party paying the money was bound as a surety, or otherwise, to pay it for him." 6 Cal. Jur. § 6, pp. 504, 505. Nor will it seriously be contended that Morken may be held liable to the district for a proportionate part of the moneys paid out of its funds to extinguish the obligations of the Wilson judgment under the right of contribution, assuming that the district paid said judgment upon the theory and admission that it, with the defendants, committed the damage complained of by Wilson, or even if the district was, had been, or were to be made, if it could now be made, a party to the action. The general rule is that the right of contribution does not apply as between joint tort-feasors. There are, however, some exceptions to the general rule. 6 R. C. L. § 17, p. 1054. But there is not presented here a case falling within any of the exceptions which, it has been held, qualify the general rule.

But, as above declared, the judgment here as against Morken is well supported upon his implied admission that, jointly with his codefendants, he did cause the funds of the district to be drawn upon and used in the payment of the Wilson judgment against him and his codefendants, as alleged in general terms in the complaint. It is not impossible or improbable that, although not a member of the board of directors at the time the Wilson judgment was ordered paid and was paid from the funds of the district, he could in some way—advising and abetting the act—have taken part in causing the moneys of the district to be used in the payment of said judgment. In other words, he could, even though not a director, have wrongfully and knowingly conspired with or otherwise induced the directors to betray their trust by a wrongful use of the trust property, in order himself to escape payment of a judgment which imposed upon him a several liability. The judgment, however, must be reversed because of the inclusion therein, as moneys of the district illegally used, of certain expenditures by the district in connection with the Wilson litigation while the district was still a party thereto, and we therefore suggest that the case should be tried upon amendments to the answer, if defendants be so advised, which will justify inquiry into these propositions, to wit: (1) Whether the district, by the compromise of the Wilson judgment, secured the land or the right to use the land damaged, and has been or is now, as the effect of such compromise, in possession and control, either as owner or otherwise, and using the same for the purposes of its drainage system. (2) Whether defendant Morken was in any way connected with the alleged wrongful appropriation of the funds of the district to the payment of the Wilson judgment. Justice plainly demands that these matters should be fully gone into. If the district is now or has been, under the compromise of the Wilson judgment, in the enjoyment of the right to use the land of Wilson, alleged in his complaint to have been damaged by defendants, then the district should be held to have taken said land according to the principles underlying the doctrine of eminent domain and should be required to stand for the payment of the Wilson judgment, as compromised.

[13] Now, as to the ground upon which a reversal must be ordered. As seen, when the action was first filed in the superior court, the district was a party defendant to the Wilson suit, and the district, acting through its board of directors, entered into a contract with Cowan whereby he was to defend the district in said action for a fee of $200. Of course, the board had the legal right to make that contract with Cowan, and, as he appeared for the district as its attorney in said litigation and continued so to act until the district was eliminated as a party defendant thereto, and, furthermore, as there is no showing to the effect that, whether the payment to him of the full sum of $200 or any less sum than that was to be contingent on the quantum of service he should render the district therein, it is clear that the district is under obligation to pay him the full sum which it agreed to pay him for his professional services in said action. And this would still be true, even if, after the district ceased to be a party to the action, the defendants agreed to pay him out of their own pockets a fee or fees for his professional services to them. In so far as it failed to recognize the validity of the contract between Cowan and the district for the payment by the latter of the sum of $200 to the former for his services in the Wilson action and added to the judgment against defendants herein said sum of $200, said judgment cannot, upon the present record, be upheld. Furthermore, there are certain items of costs and expenses which the record before us discloses were incurred prior to the time at which the district was dropped from the Wilson action as a party defendant thereto. All costs and expenses legitimately and necessarily incurred in the Wilson action while the district was a party would, manifestly, constitute a proper charge against the district, and should be so adjudicated in this action.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the trial court to grant leave to the defendants, or any one of them, if they or he be so advised, to amend their answer in the particulars herein above specified or suggested, or to set up any proper special defense to the claims of the complaint herein which may, according to their judgment, be available to them under the facts of the several transactions leading to the present controversy.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 232

BRICHETTO et al. v. RANEY et al.
(Civ. 2969.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 15, 1926. As Modified Jan. 26, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 15, 1926.)

1. Mortgages ⚡380.

Action to foreclose mortgage is equitable.

2. Mortgages ⚡490—Where mortgagee paid taxes on mortgagor's failure to do so, as authorized by mortgage, foreclosure decree should include such payments.

Where mortgagee, as authorized by mortgage, paid taxes on mortgagor's failure to do so, such payments became part of mortgage indebtedness, and foreclosure decree should include them.

3. Mortgages ⚡380—Court's jurisdiction to enter deficiency judgment in mortgage foreclosure suit does not destroy equitable character of proceeding.

That court in mortgage foreclosure suit has jurisdiction to enter personal money judgment if sum realized on foreclosure sale is insufficient to satisfy mortgage debt does not destroy equitable character of proceeding.

4. Jury ⚡13(5)—Trial ⚡374(2)—Allowance of jury trial in equity case is not matter of right, and jury's findings may be disregarded by chancellor and contrary findings made, or, if adopted, new findings must be made by chancellor (Code Civ. Proc. § 592).

Jury trial on issues of fact in equity case is not a matter of right, but allowance thereof is wholly ex gratia, and jury's findings are merely advisory, and may be disregarded and contrary findings made by chancellor, or, if verdict is adopted, chancellor must still make findings, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 592.

5. Judgment ⚡200.

Whether judgment foreclosing mortgage is supported by evidence is referable to findings of court and not to verdict of jury.

6. Mortgages ⚡559(4) — Evidence held to show that bank took legal title to mortgaged realty in trust for benefit of purchasers.

Evidence held to show that bank took legal title to mortgaged realty in trust for benefit of purchasers, and deficiency judgment against it was not warranted.

7. Mortgages ⚡278, 283(1)—Grantee taking mortgaged property "subject to mortgage" is bound only to extent of property, but grantee "assuming mortgage" becomes principal debtor and mortgagor becomes surety.

Grantee, taking conveyance of mortgaged property "subject" to mortgage, in absence of express or implied agreement to assume debt, is bound only to extent of the property, but grantee "assuming" debt becomes principal debtor and mortgagor becomes surety.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assume; Subject to.]

8. Mortgages ⚡280(5) — Parol proof that grantee assumed mortgage debt must be clear and satisfactory to make grantee personally liable.

In absence of provision in deed or of other written agreement showing grantee's assumption of mortgage debt, parol proof that such agreement was made must be clear and satisfactory to make grantee personally liable.

9. Estoppel ⚡68(2)—Bank's affidavit supporting its claim to portion of crop on mortgaged land, as against receiver, alleging that it was owner, held not inconsistent with its subsequent claim that it was trustee for purchasers (Code Civ. Proc. § 369).

Bank's affidavit supporting its claim to one-third of crop produced on mortgaged land, as against receiver appointed in mortgage foreclosure proceeding, alleging that it was owner of land, held not inconsistent with its subsequent claim that it was trustee for purchasers thereof, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 369.

10. Trusts ⚡63½ — Oral agreement under which mortgaged property was conveyed to bank in trust, though void as against innocent purchasers and incumbrancers for value, was valid as between beneficiaries of trust and bank (Civ. Code, §§ 853, 869a, 2221, 2222).

Though oral agreement under which property was conveyed to bank in trust for purchasers was void under Civ. Code, § 869a, as against innocent purchasers and incumbrancers for value, it was valid as between beneficiaries of trust and bank, notwithstanding sections 2221, 2222, and, such beneficiaries having paid consideration, resulting trust in their favor is presumed under section 853.

11. Mortgages ⚡280(5) — That mortgaged property was conveyed to savings bank in trust for purchasers and that banks are prohibited from dealing in realty held convincing evidence that bank did not assume mortgage debt (State Bank Act, §§ 61, 62 [Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652]; Civ. Code, §§ 869a, 2221, 2222).

That mortgaged property was conveyed to savings bank as trustee for purchasers, and that under State Bank Act, §§ 61, 62, savings banks are prohibited from dealing in realty, is convincing evidence that bank did not assume mortgage debt, regardless of whether trust was void under Civ. Code, §§ 869a, 2221, 2222.

12. Appeal and error ⚡987(2).

Trial court's decision on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal without violating constitutional limitation on appellate review.

13. Estoppel ⚡60—Estoppel by conduct involves implied representation of existence of apparent facts, and to justify prudent man in acting thereon it must be plain and not doubtful.

Estoppel by conduct, founded on silence of party whose duty it is to speak, involves an implied representation of the existence of apparent facts, and to justify a prudent man in acting thereon representation must be plain, not doubtful or of questionable inference.

14. Mortgages ⚡280(5) — Evidence held to show that mortgagor conveyed mortgaged property to bank knowing bank was mere trustee, as against contention that bank was liable for deficiency (Civ. Code, §§ 18, 19).

Evidence held to show that mortgagor conveyed mortgaged property to bank knowing bank was mere trustee for purchasers, or at least that mortgagor was put on inquiry under Civ. Code, §§ 18, 19, as against contention that bank was liable for deficiency of proceeds of sale on foreclosure and mortgage debt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkirith, Judge.

Suit by L. F. Bricchetto and another against F. A. Raney and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank appeals. Reversed.

Newton A. Johnson, of Fresno, for appellant.

F. W. Reeder, of Oakdale, and L. J. Mad-dux and T. C. Boone, both of Modesto, for respondents.

HART, J. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage upon a certain tract of land of 963 acres, more or less, and executed by one F. A. Raney, to secure a promissory note made by him in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $45,000. The note and the mortgage were made and executed on the 4th day of September, 1920, the note to become due and payable five years from the date thereof. It provided for the payment of interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, said interest to be paid semiannually, and, if not paid as it became due, was to be added to the principal and become a part thereof and bear interest at the same rate. It was further provided in said note that if default be made in the payment of interest as provided therein, "then this note shall immediately become due and payable at the option of the holder thereof."

The mortgage provided, among other things, that it "is also intended to secure, and does hereby secure, the payment of all liens, incumbrances, charges, and the counsel fee herein mentioned, said counsel fee to become payable and be allowed if suit be commenced to foreclose this mortgage"; that the mortgagees, their heirs, successors, and assigns, may lawfully pay and discharge at maturity "all liens or other incumbrances now subsisting or hereafter to be laid or imposed upon said lot of land and premises, and which may be in effect a charge thereupon, and to insure and keep insured the buildings now or to be erected on said mortgaged premises for at least $1,000, and to pay the premiums on such insurance; and such payments shall be allowed, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum; and such payments and interest shall be considered as secured by these presents, and shall be a charge upon said premises, and shall be repayable on demand," etc. The mortgage also contained a release clause by virtue of which every acre of land embraced within the tract described in and subject to the mortgage upon which the sum of $75 has been paid is to be released from the operative effect of the instrument.

The complaint is in the form usual to actions for the foreclosure of the liens of mortgages. In addition, it alleges that the defendants were in default in the payment of certain county and irrigation taxes assessed against the land, the same aggregating the sum of $6,969.79; that, in accord with the terms of the mortgage, the plaintiffs paid said taxes. It is further alleged that there became due and payable on the 4th day of September, 1921, as for interest on the said note the sum of $1,350, and a like sum as for interest due on the 4th day of March, 1922; that defendants had defaulted in the payment of said interest, and continued to be so in default to the time of the commencement of this action, to wit, the 22d day of July, 1922.

It is further alleged that the defendant bank "is now the owner and holder of said property by bargain and sale deed from F. A. Raney, and assumed the mortgage at the time of receiving said deed and agreed to pay the same, said bank having paid the first installment of interest on said note." It is alleged that "there is now being harvested from said land a wheat crop," of which a one-third part will be delivered to the defendant bank as its share of said crop; that if defendant bank "receives said rental from said land they will apply it to their own use and will not apply it to the liquidation of said note; that it is absolutely necessary that the court appoint a receiver ex parte to take possession of the premises and receive the rents, incomes, and profits thereof pending the litigation, and to apply the proceeds thereof under an order of this court."

It is further alleged by plaintiffs that the defendants have breached the covenants and conditions of said note and mortgage, and that they (plaintiffs) "have elected and do now elect to exercise the option by said note provided and to declare and do declare all of said note, etc., due and payable."

The prayer is for judgment against Raney and the defendant bank for the sum of $45,000, the principal sum of the note, together with interest falling due from time to time according to the terms of the note, for taxes paid by plaintiff by virtue of assessments levied by the county of Stanislaus and the Oakdale irrigation district upon said land, in the payment of which defendants are alleged to have defaulted, for any deficiency which may be found to exist in the amount necessary to satisfy the judgment, interest, and costs upon the sale of the property, and for an order appointing a receiver, pendente lite, to take possession of the property and to receive the rents and profits thereof, and to hold the same subject to the disposition thereof to be made by the court.

By a supplemental complaint, the plaintiff stated that, subsequent to the institution of this action, taxes assessed upon the land for county and irrigation purposes became due and payable, said taxes totaling the sum of $4,186.47, and that plaintiffs, by reason of the default of the defendants in paying the same, and to prevent the sale of the property for the satisfaction of said taxes, paid all said taxes; that the same were and are a lien on the mortgaged premises, and prays judgment for the said sum of $4,186.47 in addition to the sum asked in the original complaint.

The larger portions of the complaint are denied by the defendant bank on information and belief. Said defendant, however, directly denies that it breached the covenants and conditions of the note and the mortgage, or those of either of them, and alleges that, while the defendant Raney, by deed dated September 4, 1920, conveyed to it the land described in the complaint, and that thus it acquired the legal title thereto, it took said title in trust for W. W. Stanforth and Hugh Blair, who were therefore the equitable owners of said land and beneficiaries of said trust. The said defendant, in its answer, explains its connection with the lease of said land to the plaintiffs herein, and of which more will be said later on in this opinion.

The defendant Raney filed a separate answer, in which he also denies, on information and belief, nearly all of the allegations of the complaint; directly denies that (as the complaint alleges) from the sale of the land under the decree of foreclosure there will not be realized a sufficient sum to satisfy the judgment, or that there will be such a deficiency in the amount for which the land is sold as to require or justify the entering of a deficiency judgment against the defendants and in favor of plaintiffs. Raney also filed a cross-complaint, and thereafter amended the same. Therein he sets forth in detail an account of all the transactions culminating in the conveyance by him to the bank of the land described in the complaint, and alleges that said bank, at the time the transfer of the land was made to it, agreed to assume and pay the debt to secure which the mortgage herein involved was given. He also sets up an estoppel as against the defendant bank, alleging in that behalf that, assuming that the bank took the conveyance solely as a trustee or in trust for the benefit of Stanforth & Blair, the said defendant did not at that time apprise or notify him of that fact, but its silence in that particular led him to infer and believe that it took the conveyance entirely for itself or as an absolute transfer of the whole title of the land to it.

The plaintiffs answered Raney's cross-complaint, and therein admit to be true the allegation therein that, "as a part of the consideration, to the amount of $45,000, for said conveyance, the said * * * bank assumed the payment of said note and mortgage," etc., but affirmed that both Raney and the defendant bank are severally and jointly liable for the indebtedness evidenced by said note and mortgage, as also for all taxes assessed against the land, and which plaintiffs were compelled to pay by reason of the default of said defendants in that respect. The bank answered the amended cross-complaint, denying those allegations thereof which involve the claim by the cross-complainant that it assumed the payment of the mortgage indebtedness as a part of the consideration for the conveyance of the land to it. But further consideration herein of the pleadings may be dispensed with, it being sufficient to say that there was a joinder of issue upon all the vitally important questions of fact in the case, and that they were therefore squarely and clearly submitted for decision.

The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiffs by way of answers by the jury to the following special issues of fact submitted to them by the court:

(1) "At the time of the delivery of the deed of September 4, 1920, by F. A. Raney to the Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank, did F. A. Raney have any notice or knowledge that the bank was trustee for Stanforth & Blair? Answer: No." (2) "Was there an agreement, express or implied, by the Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank, a corporation, to pay the mortgage set forth in the complaint? Answer: Yes."

The court made findings in accord with the answers returned to the foregoing interrogatories, and found as a fact as well as a conclusion of law that the defendant bank and said Raney were jointly and severally liable, as principal and surety, respectively, for the deficiency found to exist in the amount required to satisfy the judgment, and entered a deficiency judgment accordingly.

The defendant bank appeals from said judgment upon a record prepared in accordance with the so-called alternative method.

The court specifically found that the bank took the conveyance of the land described in the complaint from Raney for itself or in its own behalf, and not as trustee for Stanforth & Blair; that Raney, at the time of the delivery of the deed of conveyance to said land to the bank, had no notice or knowledge that the bank took and accepted said conveyance as a trustee for Stanforth & Blair or for the benefit of the latter; that at the time of the delivery of the said deed to it the bank agreed to assume the payment of the note and mortgage and to perform all other covenants and conditions contained in said instruments. The legal integrity of these findings is assailed by the appellant upon the ground that they are not supported by any evidence in the case. Since the findings founded upon the answers returned by the jury to the above interrogatories are absolutely essential to the support of the judgment, it will follow, if the contention that those findings are without the requisite evidentiary support to uphold them, that all the other or what may be termed as subsidiary findings, in so far as they apply to the defendant bank, must necessarily fail to be of any effect, or, in other words, will be wholly devoid of materiality in the consideration of this appeal. In other terms, without the findings specially referred to above, the judgment as against the appellant cannot stand.

[1-3] Before taking up for consideration the question whether the findings which follow or approve the special findings of the jury upon the special issues submitted to them as above indicated are supported, we should first dispose of the contention of counsel for the plaintiffs that the court below was bound by the verdict, that the making of findings by the court was wholly supererogatory, that the findings made are entirely without force or effect and that therefore the question whether the decision is insufficiently buttressed evidentially must be determined by reference to the verdict and not to the findings. The contention is obviously unsound. The action here is purely one of an equitable character and of equitable cognizance. It will not be maintained that, because a recovery for taxes is also sought in the action, that the suit was transformed into a mixed equitable and law action. The matter of the payment of taxes by the mortgagor was provided for in the mortgage and therefore upon the default by the mortgagor in the payment thereof and their payment by the mortgagee, they became as much a part of the mortgage indebtedness as was the principal or original obligation itself. The plaintiff was entitled to have embraced in the decree of foreclosure, not only a provision for the satisfaction of the loan evidenced by the promissory note, to secure which was the primary object of the mortgage, but one for all claims which arose by reason of the nonpayment by the mortgagor of any taxes or assessments imposed upon the property which the mortgage provided should become a lien on the land. But these propositions are so self-evident that the discussion thereof is wholly unnecessary. Nor does the fact that in a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage lien the court is vested with the jurisdiction to enter a deficiency or personal money judgment against the mortgagor or the defendant liable for the debt, in case the sum for which the mortgaged property has been sold under the decree of foreclosure is insufficient to satisfy the debt secured by the mortgage, take from the proceeding its equitable character. As was said in Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 254, approved by the case of Downing v. Le Du, 23 P. 193, 82 Cal. 473:

"Although a sale of the mortgaged premises might result in a deficiency for which a money judgment could be docketed against the defendant liable for such deficiency, such a judgment was not the sole object of the action, but was an incident of the equitable relief sought."

See, also, Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 108 P. 42, 12 Cal. App. 572, 579.

[4] No one will claim that the right to a trial by jury applies to equity cases, for it is too elementary to require argument to support the proposition that one of the inherent and most conspicuous attributes of chancery courts is that parties appealing thereto for the adjudication of rights appropriate to that forum are not entitled as a matter of right to a trial by a jury of the issues of fact arising therein. Conversely, the allowance of a jury in a suit calling entirely for equitable relief is wholly ex gratia. The finding of the jury in such case is merely of an advisory character upon the issues of fact, and the verdict may be disregarded and findings contrary thereto made by the chancellor, or, if the verdict be adopted, it is still incumbent upon the chancellor to make findings. Code Civ. Proc. § 592; Stockman v. Riverside L. & Irr. Co., 28 P. 116, 64 Cal. 57, 58; Downing v. Le Du, supra; Van Valkenburgh v. Olaham, 108 P. 42, 12 Cal. App. 572; J. I. Case T. M. Co. v. Copren, 187 P. 772, 45 Cal. App. 159, 167, 168; Vallejo & N. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 147 P. 238, 169 Cal. 544; Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 254; Rochester v. Bennett (Mont.) 240 P. 384, 387.

[5, 6] It follows that the question whether the decision below is or is not supported by the evidence is referable to the findings and not to the verdict of the jury. And to that question consideration will now be given. W. W. Stanforth and Hugh Blair were, prior to and during the year 1920, engaged, as copartners, in the business of buying and selling real property, their offices being in the city of Fresno, where also they resided. They devoted their activities largely to the buying and subdividing of large tracts of land and selling the same by subdivisions to various persons. Among the lands so purchased and subdivided was a tract of land comprising about 880 acres situated in the county of Madera. Stanforth & Blair, by deed dated April 23, 1919, conveyed said land to the defendant bank, then designated and known as "Bank & Trust Company of Central California," with principal place of business at Fresno, but which subsequently was changed to that indicated in the title of this case. At the same time, said bank and Stanforth & Blair entered into and executed a written agreement, also dated April 23, 1919, wherein and whereby it was agreed that, although the said deed to said land was absolute in form, it was made to, and said property was to be held by, said bank in trust for the benefit of Stanforth & Blair, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said agreement and for the specific purposes therein set forth. The agreement, with much particularity of detail, set forth the terms, conditions, and provisions regulating the administration of the trust, and prescribed and declared the respective duties and obligations of the trustee and the trustors. As to these, though, it will be sufficient for our purposes to explain, in a general way, that the agreement provided for the surveying, the platting, and the subdividing of the land by the parties of the first part (Stanforth & Blair), and, upon the completion of such platting and subdividing, for the placing of the land upon the market for sale by subdivisions; that Stanforth & Blair should attend to the business of procuring contracts for the purchase of the subdivisions, and that the defendant bank should receive and disburse, according to the stipulations of said agreement, all moneys paid it by those entering into contracts with it for the purchase of such subdivisions; that all such contracts, or leases or other agreements in writing concerning the sale, the handling, the management or the operation of "the said town property," shall be made in its (said bank's) name, etc.; that the payment of the costs and expenses "of these trusts, including payment to the second party (bank) for its services hereunder," should be out of the moneys received or collected by the bank on the sales made under "these trusts." It should be explained that, at the time of the making of the contract between Stanforth & Blair and Raney for the sale by the former and the purchase by the latter of the land under the mortgage concerned herein, and also at the time said land was conveyed to the defendant bank, a Berkeley (Alameda county) bank held a mortgage on the Madera county land (the subject of said agreement of trust) as security for the payment of a promissory note for the sum of $20,000.

A large number of contracts of sale of the subdivisions of the Madera county lands were made between defendant bank and various other parties, and payments thereon were made by the purchasers to the defendant bank. At the time of the conveyance by Raney to the bank of the land upon which the plaintiffs' mortgage subsists, said bank had in its possession, holding the same as trustee for Stanforth & Blair, contracts calling for the payment to the bank, as such trustee, by the several purchasers of subdivisions of the Madera county land, of installments amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $52,000, more or less. Thus Stanforth & Blair owned a net equity in the subdivisions covered by those contracts, totaling, in value, the sum of $32,000, approximately.

The record appears to be silent as to the particular time at which were begun the negotiations eventuating in the purchase by Raney of the land upon which plaintiffs hold the mortgage which is the subject of this suit. That fact, however, bears no significance here. But it does appear that Raney purchased said land from the plaintiffs, and that the consideration passing from Raney to plaintiffs for the said land (Stanislaus county land, as hereinafter it may be referred to) was the sum of $50,000; that upon the consummation of the agreement of sale between plaintiffs and Raney, the latter paid to the former, by virtue of said agreement, the sum of $5,000 in cash, and gave and delivered to plaintiffs his promissory note for the balance of the purchase price ($45,000) and a mortgage on said land to secure the payment of said note.

After the last above mentioned deal between Raney and plaintiffs had been completed, one Cecil Grigsby, a real estate dealer of Fresno, undertook, and succeeded in starting, negotiations between Stanforth & Blair, on the one hand, and Raney on the other, looking to the sale of the Stanislaus county land by the latter to the former. After inspecting the land, Stanforth & Blair submitted to Raney a written offer for the purchase of the same. This written proposal to buy the land was dated at Fresno, August 4, 1920. Therein Stanforth & Blair offered $77,616.71 for the entire tract of 960 acres, more or less, on the terms therein specified. Among those terms were the following: That said proposed purchasers would take the land, "subject to a mortgage in the sum of $45,000," referring to the mortgage then existing on the land securing Raney's note to the plaintiffs for the sum so mentioned, same to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually; that the mortgage will not provide for any payments on the principal before "approximately five years"; that said mortgage should contain "a release clause releasing any portion of said land upon payment of $75 per acre for each and every acre so released"; that, "as a further consideration," we will assign or cause to be assigned certain contracts issued by the Bank & Trust Company of Central California, covering property in sections 31 and 32, in township 12 south, range 17 east, M. D. B. & M., Madera county, Cal., and signed by the following people in the following amounts, following which language is an enumeration of seven different contracts of sale executed by as many different persons and the defendant bank upon the sale by the latter to the former of subdivisions of the Madera county land, with the amount owed by each purchaser under his contract set opposite his name. The total sum of these amounts was $51,950. As before stated, Stanforth & Blair owned a net equity in said contracts amounting to the total sum approximately of $32,616. In other words, that sum represented the total amount over and above the mortgage indebtedness against the property held by the Berkeley bank. The proposal further provided that "said contracts are to remain in trust at the Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank." The foregoing are all the provisions of the offer which need be referred to.

On August 9, 1920, and within the time during which said offer was, as specified therein, to remain open, Raney accepted the proposal in the following language:

"I hereby accept the above offer, together with all terms and conditions therein mentioned, and agree to pay Cecil Grigsby a brokerage commission as agreed upon."

Upon thus completing the agreement to sell and purchase said land, Raney, upon the suggestion of Stanforth & Blair, conveyed the land to the defendant bank, as heretofore stated. In turn, said bank assigned to Raney the equitable interests of Stanforth & Blair in the several contracts for the sale of the several subdivisions of the Madera county land described therein. On the 15th day of October, 1920, the defendant bank and the plaintiffs entered into an agreement of lease, whereby the Stanislaus county land was leased by the former to the latter for the term of three years from the said 15th day of October, upon the consideration that the bank should receive, as rental, "one-third part of all grain or crops produced or raised on said land during the continuance of this lease"; the bank expressly reserving the right to sell said property at any time during the continuance of the lease. In this connection it may be stated that, within due time after the present suit was instituted (the court having appointed a receiver pendente lite to take possession and control of the property), the defendant bank through one of its officers executed and filed an affidavit in said action in support of its claim to the one-third part of the crops harvested on the Stanislaus county land in the year 1922 (the action was brought July 22, 1922), under the terms of the said lease of said land between said bank and the plaintiffs; that in said affidavit the said bank declared that it was the owner of said land, and entitled, as against the receiver appointed by the court, to the possession of the one-third part of the crops raised and harvested on said land during that year.

The above embraces a general statement of the facts. A review of such of the testimony as is conceived to be necessary will follow; but before proceeding to do so, it is proper at this juncture to say that the testimony of Ralph Vianello and W. H. Fielding, who, at the time of the transfer of the land directly concerned in and with this action by Raney to the bank, and the testimony of Stanforth, that the said defendant took said conveyance as a trustee, in trust for the benefit of Stanforth & Blair, stand in the record undisputed. The testimony of Stanforth and of said trust officers of the bank that the contracts relating to the Madera county land were owned by Stanforth & Blair and held by the defendant bank in trust for them also stand in the record uncontroverted. In fact, Raney himself, in substantially all the letters addressed by him to the bank concerning the transfer subsequent thereto, did so (as will later herein be the more fully shown) upon the assumption that said bank had taken the conveyance as a trustee for Stanforth & Blair. As to the contracts for the sale of the several subdivisions of the Madera county land, the fact that they were held in trust by said bank was so plainly indicated in the written offer submitted by Stanforth & Blair to Raney for the purchase of the Stanislaus county land that the latter could not have acquired any other thought or impression than that they were so held by defendant bank as trustee for Stanforth & Blair. The offer, as has been shown, provided that Stanforth & Blair, "as a further consideration will assign or cause to be assigned certain contracts (describing them) issued by the Bank & Trust Company of Central California," and further provided that "said contracts are to remain in trust at the Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank." Mr. Raney, himself a banker, certainly, when accepting said offer, could not have misapprehended the real meaning or import of those provisions. Thus warrantably it may be, and, indeed, it is to be held, as a matter of law, that, upon the testimony, it stands in the record in this case as an established fact, that the defendant bank did take the legal title to the property solely in trust for the benefit of Stanforth & Blair, and that the latter were, at all times, from the date of the conveyance, not only the equitable but the beneficial or real legal owners thereof.

[7] Nor is there disclosed by this record any evidence, either direct or circumstantial, with the possible exception of the mere circumstance that the land was conveyed to the bank by Raney, that lends any support to the finding that the defendant bank, on taking the conveyance, or at any other time, agreed to assume the payment of the debt secured by the mortgage, and that circumstance alone possesses no probative force as in proof of such an agreement, for the reason, among others, that the deed to the bank does not so provide, but expressly and specifically provides that the conveyance thus effected is subject to the mortgage; and there is a broad and obvious distinction, in the effect thereof upon the rights of the parties, between the taking of mortgaged property subject to a mortgage subsisting thereon at the time of such taking and the assumption or agreement by the grantee to pay the debt secured by such mortgage, in that, where the purchaser or grantee of the mortgaged property takes it subject to the mortgage only, there being no express or implied agreement to assume the mortgage debt, he is bound only to the extent of the property, but if the debt be assumed by the grantee, he becomes the principal debtor, while the mortgagor, as is the theory of the findings in this case, becomes the surety. Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 751; Roberts v. Fitzallen, 52 P. 818, 120 Cal. 482.

[8] If there is nothing in the deed itself clearly indicating an assumption by the grantee of the debt secured by the mortgage, and there is no written agreement extrinsic to the deed to that effect, then proof by parol testimony that such an agreement was made must be clear or of the most satisfactory character. As stated, no express parol agreement was shown. Raney himself did not testify that any such agreement was made by the bank with him. As far as he went in that respect was to say that it was his "understanding" or that he assumed that the bank assumed the payment of the note secured by the mortgage. That "understanding" or assumption on his part, according to his own testimony, was not suggested or inspired by anything expressly said by the defendant bank's trust department officers, with whom he directly dealt in all the transactions pertaining to the transfer of the land to said bank, nor did those officers or any officer of the bank use any language from which such an agreement could be implied. It will not, of course, be contended that the assumption of the debt secured by the mortgage by Stanforth & Blair, if, in truth, they really did assume it, would of itself bind the defendant bank in that particular, or, in other words, that such agreement by Stanforth & Blair, if any such was in fact entered into with Raney, was tantamount to an agreement on the part of the defendant bank to satisfy the obligation to secure which was the purpose of the mortgage, since, manifestly, such a position could only be maintained upon the theory or hypothesis that Stanforth & Blair, in the transaction ending in the purchase of the land from Raney, were acting and did act as agents of and for said bank, and were authorized as such by the bank to make such an agreement for it; but such a theory or hypothesis is wholly without any support or justification from any evidence brought into the case. Indeed, the uncontroverted fact in this case that a trust relation as to said land was created between the bank, as trustee, and Stanforth & Blair, as beneficiaries, completely negatives any such a theory.

[9] In stating that the fact that the bank took the deed to the property as a trustee only stands in this record uncontroverted, we have not lost sight of the fact that, in its affidavit filed in this case supporting its claim to a one-third portion of the crop produced on the land against any right of the receiver to maintain possession of the same, the bank asserted that it was the owner of the land and leased it to the plaintiffs. Even if it were true that he did not know before and at the time he conveyed to the bank that the latter took the land as a trustee, Raney certainly knew it at the time the affidavit was filed. He so admitted in his testimony, and his letters written to the bank and Stanforth & Blair after the deed conveying to the bank was delivered were all written upon the assumption that the bank's interest in the conveyance was only that of a trustee. But it was not inconsistent with its relation as trustee to said property for the bank to allege in said affidavit that it was the owner of the property. For the purpose of administering the offices of the trust, it was the owner of the land. The bank was the trustee of an express trust (Code Civ. Proc. § 369), and, had it sued to recover moneys due the trust estate, or for damages for trespass upon the trust property, being the holder of the legal title thereto, the bank could have sued in its own name and without the joining therein as coplaintiffs the cestui que trust. Code Civ. Proc. § 369, supra; Lauer v. Williams, 163 P. 687, 32 Cal. App. 590, 594, and cases therein cited. And in stating in the complaint that it was the owner of the land, it would tell the truth, so far as the purposes of the action were concerned, and still would say nothing which could be taken as in derogation of its real or true legal relation to the property, or necessarily as proof of its absolute ownership. So, in the present case, the bank's statement in the affidavit that it was the owner of the land was not intended as setting forth the claim that it was the absolute owner of the land, but only such owner for the purpose of administering the affairs of the trust. This, as we have said, was known to Raney at the time the affidavit was filed. As against the admitted fact that the bank was acting merely as a trustee as to the property, said statement in the affidavit referred to was wholly devoid of force as proof that the bank held the absolute or an unqualified fee in the land.

It is deemed the more orderly to consider now the point urged here by the defendant Raney that, even if the bank took the property for the benefit of Stanforth & Blair or as trustee for the latter, the transaction, as a trust, is absolutely void by virtue of the terms of sections 869a, 2221, and 2222 of the Civil Code. The section first named was passed by the Legislature of 1923. Stats. 1923, p. 275. It in substance provides that any conveyance of real estate or interest therein, which has been or hereafter is made to any person or persons in trust, or where such person or persons is or are designated "trustee" or "as trustee," or "trustees," or "as trustees," and no beneficiary be indicated or named in said conveyance, it shall be presumed that the grantee or grantees, as the case may be, holds or hold the title to the estate or interest therein absolutely in his or their own individual right and free from any trust, and a conveyance executed by such grantee or grantees, whether purporting to be the act of such grantee or grantees in his or their individual right, or in his or their capacity as trustee or trustees, shall prima facie convey such title or interest to his or their grantee or grantees; that, as to a conveyance by such trustee or trustees in their capacity as such, such presumption shall be conclusive as to an undisclosed beneficiary of such trust and the original grantor or trustor and any one claiming under them, in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for a valuable consideration, upon the filing of such conveyance for record in the office of the county recorder, etc. The section further provides that, as to such conveyance so filed prior to the taking effect of said section, such presumption shall not become conclusive, except in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for a valuable consideration, until one year after the taking effect of "this act," when it shall become conclusive without qualification whatsoever, "and no action to avoid or impugn any such conveyance * * * shall be commenced after the time when such presumption becomes conclusive as hereinbefore provided," etc.

[10] No agreement in writing to the effect that the Stanislaus county land was to be held by the defendant bank in trust for Stanforth & Blair was made between said parties. Stanforth testified, however, that for a long period of time prior to the date of the conveyance of the land in question to the defendant bank, and to and including said date, the latter had managed and handled and was managing and handling, under a trust agreement, a number of other and different pieces of real property, situated in different localities belonging to or owned by him. Among the property so handled were, as we have shown, the interests in the Madera county land, as to which, as also shown, there was a trust agreement in writing. He stated that, following his custom of having all his real property and real estate deals so managed by said bank, he and Blair caused the conveyance of the Stanislaus land to be made to the defendant bank for the same purpose—that is, to be held and managed by the bank in trust and for the benefit of him and Blair. But, conceding that the trust as to the Stanislaus county land is void under the Code section above named, in so far as are concerned innocent purchasers or incumbrancers of said land, for a valuable consideration, it was not void as between the bank and Stanforth & Blair. The latter having paid the consideration for the transfer of the property to the bank, a trust is presumed to result in their favor (Civ. Code, § 853), and a court of equity would promptly enforce it. But all these propositions are not of controlling or, indeed, any special importance in the decision of the question now in hand.

[11] The single question here is whether the defendant bank, upon taking the conveyance, assumed the payment of the debt secured by the mortgage, and, there being shown no express agreement that it did, the question whether the conveyance was taken by it in trust for Stanforth & Blair or in its own right was one of singular evidentiary importance in that respect, and this is equally true whether the trust was or was not void for the reasons and the purposes specified in section 869a of the Civil Code, or under the terms of sections 2221 and 2222 of said Code. If, to illustrate, the bank, as we hold is shown to be true, took the conveyance merely as a trustee, then that fact regardless of whether the trust was void under the sections above named or for any reason, would not only be competent but convincing evidence that the claim that it assumed the payment of the note secured by the mortgage was not true or well founded. Counsel for Raney have not made it clear in their briefs precisely what their claim is as to the effect of the invalidity of the trust, if, as they claim, it is invalid or void as to the persons named in section 869a, upon the question whether the bank took the conveyance in its own right or only as a trustee. It may be that the theory was that, since, as is the claim, there was, as to said land, no written trust agreement in which beneficiaries were indicated or named, and none indicated or named in the conveyance to the bank, the presumption would follow that the land was not taken in trust but in the bank's own right, as an absolute conveyance to it. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 19, 33. But, if such a presumption were permissible in that connection, or possesses any force as evidence that the bank accepted the conveyance in its own right and not as a trustee, it is more than met and we think is dispelled by the uncontradicted positive testimony in the case, reinforced by the same presumption, possessing equal if not greater compelling probative force than as applied above, following from the proposition that a savings bank is absolutely prohibited by the laws of this state from dealing or trading, either directly or indirectly, in real property, save and except in several instances, which are indicated in section 61 of the State Bank Act, and of which the case here is not one. Section 61 and also section 62, Act 652 (Gen. Laws of California 1923, pp. 202, 209).

But there is advanced another theory upon which it is claimed that liability for the deficiency judgment should be decreed against the appellant. It is this: That the evidence discloses that the appellant, at the time the transfer was made, did not impart to Raney information that it was taking the conveyance merely as trustee for Stanforth & Blair, or, in other words, did not explain to or inform Raney that it (appellant) was not taking the property in its own absolute right, as the deed of conveyance upon its face indicates. The significance of this contention is, obviously, that, having been given no such information, either by the bank officials or Stanforth & Blair, Raney was justified in inferring that Stanforth & Blair, in negotiating and consummating the exchange of the properties, were in truth and in fact acting for said bank, and that as such representatives or agents were authorized to agree for the bank to assume the payment of the deficiency judgment, Raney having testified that Stanforth & Blair did agree to assume such payment, that, at all events, the silence of the parties, at the time the transfer to the bank was suggested and made, as to the true relation to the property that it was intended that the bank should sustain, should be sufficient to foreclose any right in the bank now to claim immunity from liability for the deficiency judgment.

[12] In the outset, it is well enough to state that, after a most careful and painstaking examination of the testimony, we have been convinced that Raney, at the time he conveyed the land to the bank, well knew, or, at the least, from all the facts and circumstances attending the making of the conveyance, with which he was perfectly familiar, ought to have known, that the deed to the bank was accepted by the latter solely in trust for Stanforth & Blair. In announcing this conclusion, we are not forgetful of the rule so thoroughly established and understood that where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence addressed to the fact or facts in issue, the decision thereon in the court below cannot be disturbed without an arbitrary disregard of the limitation placed by the Constitution upon courts of review in the matter of considering and reviewing on appeal the evidentiary phases of a case. But we think there is practically no conflict in the evidence upon the point now being considered, as will presently be made to appear.

[13] In considering the question now before us, these propositions must be borne in mind: That Raney and the plaintiffs, in attempting to establish the bank's liability for the deficiency judgment, and, to that end, in attempting to show that, if the bank took as trustee, knowledge of that fact was withheld from Raney when the transfer was made, are practically relying upon the doctrine or defense of estoppel in pais, or estoppel by conduct by reason of silence when it was the duty of the party thus sought to be estopped to speak; that this defense often means, as it means in this case, that the tongue of the party against whom it is invoked is silenced against the right of uttering the truth as to a matter involving a substantive right. And as to the defense of equitable estoppel, particularly where it is set up as against the assertion of a substantive right, and the ground of the estoppel is conduct by silence on the part of the party against whom the defense is pleaded, "the facts proved must be such that an estoppel is clearly deducible from them." Wheaton v. N. B. & M. Ins. Co., 18 P. 758, 76 Cal. 415, 429, 430, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216. In other words, estoppel, by conduct, founded upon the silence of the party whose duty it is to speak and so expose all the material facts of a transaction which are within his knowledge and of which the other party is ignorant, involves an implied representation of the existence of the apparent facts of the transaction, and, to justify a prudent man in acting upon it, "it must be plain, not doubtful, or matter of questionable inference." Bigelow on Estoppel (5th Ed.) pp. 570, 578. As that author further says at page 578, same edition: "Certainty is essential to all estoppels. The courts will not readily suffer a man to be deprived of his property where he had no intention to part with it." With the above principles before us, the testimony bearing upon the defense of estoppel will be considered.

[14] In taking up for consideration Raney's testimony, we may well start with these undisputed facts: That he was himself a banker, being the president of the bank with which he was connected, and that he was not alone presumptively but also presumably actually familiar with the laws of the state governing the banking business in all its phases; that, accordingly, he is to be assumed as well as presumed to know, and to have known at the time he conveyed the land to the defendant bank, that a savings bank cannot, under the laws of this state, acquire title to real property, either by purchasing the same or exchanging property for it, except in the cases enumerated in the State Bank Act, supra, and within which exceptions the case here does not fall; that all his dealings with the bank relative to the land in question were entirely with the trust department of the bank and the trust officers thereof.

After detailing the facts and circumstances of the negotiations leading to the execution of the agreement of sale and purchase by him and Stanforth & Blair, Raney testified, giving his testimony in substance only: That, upon the completion of the contract for sale of the land, the papers or deed and agreement of sale were to be deposited with the defendant bank in escrow, and so remain pending the examination of abstracts of title of the properties to be exchanged and a report thereon; that the provisions of the written agreement of sale were to be accepted as setting forth the escrow instructions; that after the matter of the title to the respective properties was satisfactorily adjusted and approved, he caused a deed to be prepared conveying the land to Stanforth & Blair; that thereafter the latter instructed Raney to convey the property to defendant bank; that he made no inquiry either of Stanforth & Blair or the bank as to the reason for the conveyance of the land to the latter; that, after being so instructed, he went to the trust officers of the bank and asked if it would be "satisfactory" to the bank to make the deed to it, to which question said officers replied in the affirmative, and that thereafter he changed the grant so as to make the bank the grantee, and also erased from the deed, at the request of Blair and the bank, a covenant therein contained as originally prepared to the effect that Stanforth & Blair were to assume the payment of the debt secured by the mortgage. "Stanforth & Blair," Raney proceeded, "were to assume and pay the mortgage; they were the ones who originally agreed to it. Nobody else ever agreed to it. I had no talk about this assumption and payment by any one else except Stanforth & Blair. I had no talk about whether—with the bank—whether they would assume it." Prior to the delivery of the deed to the bank and after it was understood by him that the conveyance was to be to the bank, Raney addressed a letter to defendant bank, which, at the beginning of the page, bore the words, "Attention, Mr. Vianello," trust officer of the bank with whom Raney testified he principally conducted the transactions involved herein. Said letter in part, read:

"I hand you herewith an offer signed by Messrs. Stanforth & Blair on a piece of property that they are purchasing from me, and also my acceptance of same. This offer recites full details of escrow arrangement. Herein you will notice that said contracts now held by you are to be assigned to me. I will appreciate it if you will get these contracts assigned at your earliest possible convenience. I have ordered certificate of title covering on the property I am selling to Messrs. Stanforth & Blair, and as soon as the said certificate is completed I will send it to you along with a deed made in your favor viz.; Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank of Fresno, California. * * * In my talk with you personally, some ten days ago, you expressed the opinion that you thought the contracts were all good ones and held by people that would pay up satisfactorily. At any rate I would deem it a special favor if you would be good enough to write me a letter just giving a general outline of each contract in accordance with what you think of them, especially the addresses, and whether you think they will make improvements as called for on the contracts in each case, whether you think they will go on the land personally in any cases, and also your opinion as to their financial standing and ability to carry out the contracts. I do not expect you to put yourself on record in this matter any more than to just give me a general outline such as you talked with me in person. If you will do this I will attempt in some way to show my appreciation."

Raney testified that some ten days prior to the date of the above letter (August 13, 1920), he had a conversation with Mr. Vianello, the trust officer of the bank, in which the latter explained to Raney "about the value of the various Madera county contracts and the amount of them. I thought at the time it was an acceptance of those for and on behalf of Stanforth & Blair. There was," Raney continued, "a question in my mind for awhile, I think for a long time, what the bank's connection was, when I was asked to deed it to them."

A letter, under date of August 31, 1920 (four days prior to the execution and delivery of the deed to the bank), was addressed by Raney to Stanforth & Blair, in which he apologized for the delay in delivering the deed, explaining, though, that, while "the abstract could have been over promptly," still he "figured it was best for all concerned that an unlimited certificate of title be issued, and it has taken longer than I figured to get it, but it is now absolutely clear and ready." Another reason for the delay, he added, was the absence of plaintiffs' attorney on a vacation, "and they have deferred making out the papers until now for the reason that Mr. Reeder (said attorney) attends all such matters, and they (plaintiffs) insisted that he close this matter up. The papers are now made out," Raney proceeded in said letter, "and as soon as I can get Mrs. Brichetto's signature (at the present time she is in San Francisco) they will be immediately forwarded to the bank as agreed upon. In fact, I think I will have them sent through the abstract company here, and a letter can accompany them setting forth the condition of title, and withholding the issuance of such title until the transfers are made, so when it is issued it can be brought down showing it in your name, or rather the name of the Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank. This, I imagine, will be what you want. I feel and hope that these papers will be in the bank's hands by September 4, and I am writing to assure you they are on their way." In the same letter was the following written in red ink: "There is one redeeming feature of this delay, and that is that the mortgage will be dated later, thereby saving us quite an item on interest."

Raney stated that a copy of the foregoing letter was forwarded to defendant bank. A letter addressed to the defendant bank by Raney and dated September 3, 1920, and at the beginning of which on the paper on which it was written were the words, "Attention, Mr. Vianello," stated, in part: "Inclosed please find deed from myself to your bank conveying," describing the land in question. "I also inclose," continued said letter, "an unlimited certificate of title issued by * * * covering on this property, and showing it to be in the name of L. F. and George Brichetto, free from all incumbrances, except taxes for the present year not yet payable, and which are assumed by Stanforth & Blair. * * * I also inclose a crop lease in duplicate from yourselves to Brichetto Bros. * * * This deed and these papers are, of course, sent to you in trust under the escrow agreements and instructions, wherein they are not to be delivered until certain contracts mentioned in the escrow agreement (offer and acceptance agreement) have been assigned to me. * * * You will also note that the escrow instructions call for an unlimited certificate of title covering the property covered by the various contracts to be assigned to me, showing it to be free and clear of any and all incumbrances save the mortgage to the Berkeley bank."

Raney explained that he inclosed with the above letter the lease from the bank to Brichetto Bros. for the Stanislaus county land, because "it was part of my transaction with Stanforth & Blair that I agreed to secure for them a tenant. * * * This is the lease I made by reason of my arrangement with Stanforth & Blair. * * * The Brichettos, the tenants in this lease, are the same parties who are plaintiffs in this action. I bought this land from Brichetto Bros. and put a mortgage on it in their favor for $45,000. I was instrumental in securing this lease as a part of that transaction." Raney testified that the agreement for the exchange of the properties was completed by the delivery of the receipt to him by the bank of the contracts covering the Madera county lands, his receipt therefor to the bank being dated September 7, 1920.

In a letter addressed by Raney to Stanforth and dated November 26, 1920, the latter asked Stanforth if he (Stanforth) "cannot help me" regarding the taxes on the Madera county lands. "I have never received my tax notice," he stated in said letter, "but I imagine that either you or the bank have received such notice. * * * Also let me know how you have handled the taxes in the past. I imagine you or the bank have paid them, and then have collected pro rata from the different contract buyers. Awaiting your early advice," etc. Raney addressed to defendant bank a letter under date of December 24, 1920, in which he informed said defendant that the several contracts that he "took over from Stanforth & Blair" had been turned into trust deeds, "and are held as collateral by the Berkeley Bank of Savings & Trust Company."

A letter, dated April 18, 1921, was written and sent by Raney to Stanforth & Blair, which contained some significant statements. The letter is quite lengthy, but the more important portions may be extracted without garbling or perverting the meaning thereof. "I am just in receipt of a letter from the * * * bank" (appellant), stated the letter, "in reference to the payment of a certain amount of interest on the mortgage connected with the Madera contracts. That I assure you was a surprise, * * * for it was not specified in our agreement. * * * In all fairness it seems to be up to me to take care of and reimburse you for a certain amount of interest. * * * I am somewhat uncertain and doubtful * * * just when this interest should start. * * * It seems to me that, arriving at what is absolutely just and fair, September 4th should be the date to commence my interest liability rather than August 9th. I would also like to call your attention to what I think is an error on the bank's part and be to your interest, namely, that the mortgage in question was paid by me to the Berkeley bank in November 6, 1920, and therefore they should not pay interest up to December 15th and charge you with it."

There were many other letters passing between Raney and the defendant bank and Stanforth & Blair of the same general tenor, or practically upon the assumption that the bank as to this land was merely acting as a trustee for Stanforth & Blair. Raney, it is true, repeatedly declared in his testimony that, when he delivered the deed to the bank, he did not know that the bank's position in that transaction was that of a trustee only, nor, so he stated, did he learn that such was the fact until about a month after the deed was delivered to the bank. All those asseverations, though, are not supported by the letters written by him to the bank and Stanforth & Blair prior to and after the transfer of the Stanislaus county land was made to the bank, nor by his testimony, reasonably interpreted. Typical of his testimony in general is the following, elicited on cross-examination:

"Q. Now, I am asking you if it was not Stanforth & Blair who was to assume and pay this mortgage? A. They were the ones that originally agreed to it, yes.

"Q. Did anybody else ever agree to it? A. No.

"Q. By Mr. Maddux (Raney's attorney, interrupting): What do you mean by that, 'nobody else ever agreed to it'? A. I had no talk about this assumption and payment by any one else except Stanforth & Blair; I had no talk with the bank whether they would assume it.

"Q. (By bank's attorney, resuming cross-examination): You knew, didn't you, Mr. Raney, during all these negotiations that the * * * bank was not the principal in the matter? A. I did not.

"Q. Who first approached you concerning the sale of this land in this county? A. Mr. Grigsby. * * * He was a real estate agent or broker at Fresno.

"Q. He discussed with you, then, the matter of making an exchange of certain property? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And during all those negotiations you were informed that Stanforth & Blair had equities in properties in Madera county? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. You were willing to make an exchange of your land (Stanislaus county land) for these equities—so-called equities—in the Madera county land, is that not correct? A. After I had looked up those equities, yes.

"Q. Now, then, during these negotiations you were informed, weren't you, that those Madera county lands were held in trust for Stanforth & Blair by the bank? A. No.

"Q. Now, didn't you know anything about that at all? A. I did not. I knew the bank held title to them. I didn't know what way they held them.

"Q. You never inquired, did you? A. No.

"Q. You never asked the bank how it happened that they were holding those, did you? A. No.

"Q. And every time you dealt with the bank you dealt with the trust officers, didn't you? A. I did.

"Q. And you were in the trust department of this bank during all those negotiations, weren't you? A. Yes.

"Q. The bank never made any offer to convey to you any land whatsoever or to transfer to you any equities in any contract, did it? A. Yes; they agreed to transfer these contracts on the Madera county land that they held title to.

"Q. Now, wasn't that the agreement you had with Stanforth & Blair and not with the bank? A. Stanforth & Blair made one agreement, and then I talked with the bank and got the understanding from them that they would.

"Q. But now, Mr. Raney, wasn't it simply the proposition that the bank was carrying out the agreements that Stanforth & Blair made—isn't that it? A. I didn't know what it was.

"Q. Well, now, as a matter of fact, didn't you know that that was it? A. I did not. I never saw any evidence of it.

"Q. Did you have any agreement at all with the bank that they would buy your land in this county? A. No.

"Q. It never at any time agreed to transfer to you any property, did they, in exchange for your property? A. Yes; they did.

"Q. And all the negotiations were with reference to this exchange of that property with Stanforth & Blair, wasn't it? A. Originally; until later on—(interrupted).

"Q. Then in order for Stanforth & Blair to carry out that agreement you went to the bank, didn't you? A. Stanforth & Blair started and the bank finished it. * * * It was agreeable to the bank.

"Q. It was agreeable to you for the bank to finish it, wasn't it? A. Yes; I didn't question the men when they asked to deed it to the bank; that was satisfactory to me for the bank to take title to it.

"Q. You were putting the matter in escrow with the bank so the bank would represent you in the transaction also, didn't you? A. Yes, I did; I sent the papers up to them which were not to be turned over until I got certain papers."

Raney proceeded to say that at the time the agreement of sale (the offer and acceptance), which was signed by him and Stanforth & Blair, was sent by him (Raney) to the bank, with the other papers mentioned above, he did not know that the land was to be conveyed to the bank. He was thereupon asked, on cross-examination:

"When this negotiation was had leading up to the signing of this, Raney—Defendant's Exhibit 22 (the agreement of sale)—you knew that the * * * Savings Bank (defendant bank) had in trust those various agreements and equities on the Madera county lands, didn't you? A. I knew then that they had title; I didn't know what shape it was in trust."

At this point counsel for defendant bank called Raney's attention to his letter to the bank, under date of August 13, 1920, or four days after Raney executed his written acceptance of the offer of Stanforth & Blair, and of which certain parts are hereinabove reproduced, and he admitted writing said letter.

"Up to that time," testified Raney, referring to the time of writing said letter, "I was dealing with Stanforth & Blair alone, as far as I knew. Q. (By counsel for bank): In this contract it is recited 'that these contracts are in trust'—said contracts are to remain in trust at the Fidelity Trust and Savings Bank,' reading now from Exhibit 22 (offer and acceptance), so that your statement is incorrect, is it, Mr. Raney, to the effect that you did not know before the writing of this letter, dated August 13, 1920, that the bank had anything to do with it. That is not correct, is it? A. That is the first time I knew that they were to take a deed to it.

"Q. That is what you meant? A. That I should deed it to them direct.

"Q. Now you had previously—some days prior to the writing of that letter of August 13, 1920—had a talk with Mr. Vianello, the trust officer of the bank, had you? A. Yes.

"Q. And during that talk he had explained to you the holding by the bank of these various Madera county contracts, hadn't he? A. He explained about their value and the amount of them.

"Q. Yes; and it was an acceptance of those for and on behalf of Stanforth & Blair, wasn't it? A. Well; I—

"Q. You thought so, didn't you, at the time? A. I took it so at the time, yes.

"Q. Yes; and always have thought so since, haven't you?"—To which Raney returned the answer given above in connection with the reproduction herein of parts of his letter to Stanforth & Blair, under date of August 31, 1920.

Enough from Raney's testimony is thus given to show that no other conclusion can rationally follow therefrom, when considered in connection with his letters to the bank and to Stanforth & Blair, and the fact that he is himself a banker, and the further fact that his dealings with the bank in all these transactions were with the trust department thereof, than that he well knew, at the time he conveyed the Stanislaus county land to the bank, that the latter was taking said conveyance merely as a trustee for Stanforth & Blair. It is plain from reading his testimony that he was more or less evasive in replying to pointed questions upon the subject of his knowledge respecting that matter. His statement at one time, that he did not know, at the time the agreement of sale was finally executed by his written acceptance thereof on the very sheet of paper upon which the offer of Stanforth & Blair was written, that the Madera land contracts were then being held in trust by the defendant bank for Stanforth & Blair, is not entitled to any credence whatever, assuming, as we must assume, that he was and is a man at least of average intelligence and possessed of that degree of business sagacity which is always to be expected in a person intrusted with and capable of assuming the responsibility of administering in a proper way the functions of a bank president. It is not at all probable that such a man would enter into and carry out transactions of such magnitude—transactions involving the purchase and sale or exchange of properties valued at many thousands of dollars—without first thoroughly investigating and so becoming conversant with every vital phase thereof, the conditions of the sale or exchange, the value of the property he was to receive, the title, legal and equitable, if thus it was divided, in whom such title rested, and the many other incidents attending the inauguration and consummation of such transactions. Indeed, we are justified in declaring, upon the question whether he knew, at the time he transferred the land to the bank, the latter was taking it only as a trustee, Raney's testimony is inherently improbable. At any rate, it is perfectly clear that the plea of estoppel upon which he and the plaintiffs solely rely to establish and fix liability upon the defendant bank for the deficiency judgment herein entered is not supported by his or any other testimony received in the case, either documentary or oral, with the degree of certainty which is and should always be required before a court of equity will, solely upon such plea, interpose to deprive a person of his property. Even if Raney, before transferring the property to defendant bank, was without actual knowledge of the fact that the bank was to take the property in no other capacity than that of a trustee, he ought to and would have learned that fact by the prosecution of an inquiry upon the circumstances of which he had actual notice (which are hereinabove fully stated and frequently adverted to), and which were sufficient to put him, as a prudent man, upon inquiry as to the legal relation to the property or to Stanforth & Blair with reference thereto that the bank thus proposed to assume. Civ. Code, §§ 18, 19. The statement in the agreement of sale between him and Stanforth & Blair that the Madera land contracts were then held in trust by the defendant bank and the provision therein that they were to remain in trust with said bank were themselves sufficient so to operate upon the mind of a party to the transaction as to put him, as a prudent person, upon inquiry as to the specific purpose for which he was, by the request of Stanforth & Blair, to transfer title to the land to the bank, with which previously he had had no dealings relative to the negotiations between himself and Stanforth & Blair of which said agreement was the culmination. As has been shown, Raney, after having been told by Stanforth & Blair to make the deed to the bank, manifested no interest in such request other than to know that such transfer would be satisfactory to the bank.

It is not necessary to examine in detail herein the testimony given by the witnesses for the defendant bank upon the question of Raney's knowledge of the fact before and at the time of the conveyance of the land in question to said bank that the latter took the conveyance as a trustee. It will be sufficient to repeat that both Vianello and Stanforth positively testified that they explicitly stated to Raney, prior to the date the conveyance was made, that the bank was to take the deed to the land as a trustee for Stanforth & Blair, and that the bank was interested in the land to that extent only.

The judgment as to the defendant and appellant bank is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 478

CITY OF MARYSVILLE v. POOLE.
(Civ. 3019.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 5, 1926.)

Pleading  362(3)—Where city's tenant was notified before expiration of lease that it would not be extended nor new one executed, allegations of answer in unlawful detainer that lease provided that, if land was required for municipal purposes, growing crops should remain until maturity, not exceeding year from notice of termination of lease, and that notice of termination for such reason was not given, held properly stricken; provision applying only to termination before end of term.

Where tenant of city was notified before expiration of lease that city would not extend it nor execute new lease, allegations of answer, in city's action for unlawful detainer after expiration of term, that lease provided that, if land were needed for municipal purposes, growing crops should remain until maturity and harvest, not exceeding one year from notice of termination of lease, that land was not needed for such purposes, and that no notice of termination for such reason was served on defendant, held properly stricken; such provision applying only if city terminated lease before expiration of term.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by the City of Marysville against A. E. Poole. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for appellant.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action for unlawful detainer. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. It appears from the record that from year to year the plaintiff had leased to the defendant by written lease certain premises belonging to the city of Marysville, in the county of Yuba; that on or about the 13th day of March, 1924, the city of Marysville executed and delivered to the appellant a written lease, under the terms of which plaintiff let and leased to the appellant certain real property from the 13th day of March, 1924, to and including the 28th day of February, 1925. The lease was executed by the mayor and city clerk of the city of Marysville and by the appellant. The property was occupied by the appellant under the terms of said lease. Prior to the 28th day of February, 1925, the appellant asked the mayor and city council of Marysville for a new lease, but was informed that the city would not lease the property for any further period of time, and the city clerk of the city of Marysville, in writing, notified the defendant that the city would not lease said premises for any further period of time after the expiration of said lease, which would occur on the 28th day of February, 1925, as before stated. The appellant, however, continued to hold possession of the property. Thereafter, and on or about the 15th day of April, 1925, the plaintiff served a formal demand upon the defendant to deliver up and surrender the possession of said premises. This the defendant failed to do. Hence this action.

The defendant set forth in his answer by way of equitable defense that for some 15 years previously the defendant had continuously occupied the premises in question under a lease made from year to year; that in all the leases there was a provision that, in event the plaintiff required the land for municipal purposes, all growing crops should be permitted to remain thereon until maturity and harvest, not exceeding in any case one year from the giving of notice of termination of lease; that the defendant thereafter alleges that the said lands are not required for municipal purposes, and that no notice of termination of said lease for said reason has been served upon this defendant; that a crop of barley and alfalfa was growing on said land, and defendant had expended large sums of money in clearing said lands, and would not have expended moneys in improving the same or sown said crops but for such understanding between plaintiff and defendant, and that said defendant should remain in possession until said lands were required by plaintiff for municipal purposes. This allegation was stricken out upon motion. The defendant and appellant assigns this as error, and cites the cases of Arnold v. Krigbaum, 146 P. 423, 169 Cal. 143, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370; Knight v. Black, 126 P. 512, 19 Cal. App. 518; Schubert v. Lowe, 223 P. 551, 193 Cal. 291. These cases, however, are not applicable, because this is not an attempt to forfeit a lease on account of condition broken, but is simply a case where a lease has expired and the lessee notified prior to the expiration of the lease that it would not be extended, and that no further lease for the property in question would be executed. The lease under which the defendant was holding and under which the equitable defense was attempted to be set up did contain provisions relating to the right of the defendant to remove improvements and crops in the event that the lessor should desire to terminate the lease prior to the expiration of the specified term thereof. The language of the lease is (referring to the city):

"Shall have the right to at once terminate this lease and declare the same to be null and void, and that the said party of the first part shall be the sole judge thereof through the mayor and city council, * * * provided that the party of the second part shall in case of such termination of this lease be allowed 60 days from and after notice of the same within which to remove any buildings, fences, or improvements, etc., and also all growing crops at maturity not exceeding in any case one year from the giving of such notice."

(245 P.)

Nothing of the kind was attempted in this case. The lease expired by its own terms, of which the appellant had notice, and he also had notice that no additional lease would be executed. The findings of the court in favor of the plaintiff appear to be supported by sufficient testimony.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

198 Cal. 440

PATCHETT et al. v. WEBBER.
(S. F. 11021.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1926.
Rehearing Denied April 29, 1926.)

1. Statutes ⚡230—Statute amended at later period regarded as latest expression of legislative will (Civ. Code, § 1265; Code Civ. Proc. § 1474).

Civ. Code, § 1265, having been amended at a later period in 1874 than Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, must be regarded as the latest expression of legislative will, and which controls devolution of homesteads existing at that period.

2. Homestead ⚡136—Statute authorized one who had selected a homestead of his own separate property to dispose of it by will (Civ. Code, § 1265, as amended by St. 1873-74, p. 231).

Civ. Code, § 1265, as amended by St. 1873-74, p. 231, providing for devolution of homestead to owner's heirs or devisees, authorized one who had selected a homestead of his own separate property to dispose of it by will.

3. Executors and administrators ⚡53, 453(4)—Homestead property, subject to testamentary disposition of owner, held to have become part of his estate, and judgment decreeing that administrator had no claim therein was binding on administrator and all heirs of that estate (Civ. Code, § 1265).

Homestead property, in view of Civ. Code, § 1265, being made subject to testamentary disposition of owner, became a part of his estate on death, and hence judgment rendered in suit of administrator of such estate against another, in which it was decreed, following stipulation of parties, that administrator had no claim or interest in such homestead property, was binding on him as administrator and on all heirs of that estate.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡453(4)—Decree determining that administrator was without interest in homestead property held binding on all parties thereto, even though erroneous, where it was executed within jurisdiction of the court.

In administrator's suit to recover homestead property, in which issue as to ownership of such property covered a subject-matter over which trial court had jurisdiction, and all necessary parties having been present, decree of trial court, following stipulation that administrator had no claim or interest in property, even though erroneous as a matter of law, was a decree executed within jurisdiction of court, and binding on all parties thereto.

5. Adverse possession ⚡111 — Defendant's special plea that predecessor was in quiet and peaceful possession of land in controversy, and that no claim had been made thereto on part of plaintiffs, held sufficient to raise issue of adverse possession in defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 318).

In suit to quiet title, defendant's special plea, under Code Civ. Proc. § 318, that his predecessor was in quiet and peaceful possession of the land during a certain period, and that no claim had been made thereto during that time on part of plaintiffs, held to raise issue of adverse possession in defendant.

6. Quieting title ⚡10(1).

In action to quiet title, plaintiff must prevail on strength of his own title and not on weakness of another's.

7. Quieting title ⚡12(1)—Plaintiffs, to recover in action to quiet title, must show that they or their ancestors were seized or possessed of the property within five years before commencement of action.

In action to quiet title, plaintiffs, to recover, must show that they or their ancestors had been seized or possessed of the property within five years before commencement of the action.

8. Quieting title ⚡12(1)—Plaintiffs held not entitled to recover possession of property, where they failed to show that they or their ancestors had been in possession within five years before commencement of action.

Plaintiffs held not entitled to recover in action to quiet title, where they failed to show that they or their ancestors had been seized or possessed of the property within five years before commencement of the action.

9. Adverse possession ⚡13 — Plaintiffs held barred by limitations from recovering property in controversy, where defendant had been in actual, peaceable, and adverse possession for 46 years (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 318, 322).

Plaintiffs held barred by statute of limitations, under Code Civ. Proc. § 318, from recovering property in controversy, where defendant and his predecessor, during a period of 46 years, had been in actual and peaceable possession, exercising all acts of ownership which an ordinary person would have done under like circumstances; defendant not losing title under section 322 because he subdivided tract into lots.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County ; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Mary Patchett and others against Eugene I. Webber, as administrator of the estate of Benjamin Bradshaw, deceased. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John T. York, Henry C. Gesford, and E. L. Webber, all of Napa, for appellant.

Percy S. King, Jr., of Napa, for respondents.

LENNON, J. Further consideration of this case, after hearing and determination by the Court of Appeal in the first instance, satisfies us that the reasoning and conclusion of the Court of Appeal are correct, and we therefore adopt the opinion of Mr. Justice Nourse as the opinion of this court as follows:

"This action was commenced on December 11, 1922, for the purpose of quieting title to certain property situated in the city of Napa. Plaintiffs had judgment quieting their title to a portion of the property involved, and defendant had judgment awarding him the remaining portion. From the portion of the judgment adverse to him the defendant has appealed upon a record prepared under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

"On May 5, 1875, John M. Patchett duly executed and recorded a declaration of homestead upon a tract of land, a portion of which is involved in this suit. The entire tract was his separate property, and comprised at the time about six acres upon which he resided with his family. Patchett died on August 13, 1876, leaving children by a former wife, who were the predecessors in interest of the plaintiffs in this action, and also leaving surviving him his wife, Martha Patchett, and Benjamin Bradshaw, her son by former marriage. John Patchett left a will by which he devised all his real and personal property of every nature to his wife, Martha, 'to be used and enjoyed by her during the term of her natural life, hereby giving, devising and bequeathing unto my said wife Martha Patchett, the full, free and uninterrupted use, occupation and enjoyment of all the property * * * as fully and freely as I might or could do if living; and from and immediately after her death, I give and devise what then remains of the same to the persons hereinafter named' (the predecessors of the plaintiffs in this action). This will was admitted to probate, Martha Patchett was appointed executrix, immediately entered into possession of the six-acre tract, and continued in the possession thereof until her death on August 29, 1904, when Benjamin Bradshaw, her only child, was appointed executor of her estate. He took possession of the premises as such executor on October 4, 1904, and continued in possession as such until November 1, 1909, when the entire property was distributed to him in the closing of his mother's estate, at which time he took and continued possession of the home place in his own right.

"On September 23, 1876, Martha Patchett, the widow of John M. Patchett, listed the homestead property in her inventory, which was filed with the papers of the estate of John M. Patchett, and at the same time took possession of the property, and it appears in the amended complaint filed in the case of Patchett v. Bradshaw, which will hereinafter be referred to, that, since the 14th day of February, 1879, the said Martha Patchett exercised complete and exclusive control and possession over all of said property, claiming it as her own. From the same pleading it appears that, immediately upon the death of Martha Patchett (August 29, 1904), Benjamin Bradshaw entered into the possession of the same premises, and claimed the same 'as the property of and belonging to the estate of Martha Patchett, deceased.' The action just referred to was instituted by Charles H. Patchett, one of the plaintiffs herein, and the grandson of John M. Patchett, the original homesteader; he having been duly substituted as administrator with the will annexed of his grandfather's estate following the death of Martha Patchett. The action was brought against Benjamin Bradshaw as the executor of the estate of Martha Patchett, and was for the purpose of securing an accounting of the properties claimed to belong to the estate of John M. Patchett and held in the possession of Martha Patchett during her life, and thereafter held by her executor, and asked particularly for the delivery to the plaintiff as the administrator of the John M. Patchett estate certain real property alleged to belong to that estate, including the property here in suit. That action was commenced on February 20, 1905, and on January 31, 1907, a stipulation was filed, signed by the attorneys for the respective parties therein, in which it was stipulated that the defendant Bradshaw was the sole owner of the property here in suit and designated as the homestead property; that the other real property involved in that action should be awarded to the plaintiffs therein; and that the defendant Bradshaw should release all claim thereto; and that the court might enter its judgment and decree in accordance herewith without findings of fact or conclusions of law. Pursuant to that stipulation, a decree was duly entered on the 15th day of June, 1907, wherein, after disposing of the various claims in favor of the plaintiff in that litigation, it was ordered and decreed that the so-called homestead property 'vested absolutely in, and became the property of, Martha Patchett, the surviving widow of said John Patchett, as successor to said homestead,' and that the defendant, as executor of the estate of Martha Patchett, was entitled to the full possession thereof, and that the plaintiff as administrator of the estate of John Patchett, was not entitled to the possession of any part thereof, 'nor have the heirs, devisees or other legal representatives of said John Patchett, deceased, any right or interest in any portion thereof.' This decree was filed on June 15, 1907. No appeal or other attack was made thereon, and it became final in due course of law.

"Subsequent to the entry of the foregoing decree the proceedings in the estate of John M. Patchett were concluded by the filing of a final account and a petition for final distribution by Charles Patchett, the plaintiff in the litigation just referred to. The administrator did not include in either of these documents the homestead property, and made no mention of any claim thereto on behalf of the estate or the heirs. In due course a decree of distribution was filed in that estate wherein the entire estate was distributed to the plaintiffs in the action before us or to their predecessors in interest, omitting therefrom, however, all interest in, or claim to, the homestead property, the property now in suit.

"On June 18, 1909, Benjamin Bradshaw, while in possession of the property as executor and sole heir of his mother's estate, duly filed for record a subdivision of the entire tract of land comprising the homestead. In this subdivision a street was opened directly through the middle of the entire tract, and lots were laid out in the usual way, each having a frontage of approximately 54 feet. Thus by the subdivision the 6-acre tract was divided into two blocks numbered block 1 and block 2; block 1 containing 16 separate lots and block 2 containing 15. On November 1, 1909, the entire property, as originally described in the homestead declaration, was distributed to Benjamin Bradshaw in closing the estate of Martha Patchett, and immediately thereafter sales were made and deeds were executed by said Bradshaw conveying some 16 of the lots as segregated by Bradshaw's subdivision. These deeds were executed over a period commencing November 16, 1909, down to March 4, 1922. All were duly recorded, and in each instance the deed described the lot as being a part of block 1 or 2, as shown on the 'map of Bradshaw's subdivision, a part of Patchett's addition in the city of Napa, Cal.,' giving the number and date of the filing of such map. On July 22, 1922, Benjamin Bradshaw died, and the defendant, as public administrator of the county, was duly appointed as administrator of the estate.

"This action was commenced on December 11, 1922, by the plaintiffs, who are the descendants of John M. Patchett, deceased, the issue of his marriage prior to his marriage with Martha Bradshaw. The complaint is in the usual form of an action to quiet title to property alleged to be subjected to an adverse claim by the defendant. The plaintiffs carved out of the original homestead tract all the tract of land delineated on Bradshaw's subdivision recorded in the manner above referred to which had not prior to the commencement of the action been sold by Bradshaw to other individuals. They are claiming, therefore, all the lots of land appearing upon this subdivision which were held in the possession of Bradshaw at the time of his death, but omit from their pleadings all reference to those lots of land which he had sold prior to the commencement of the action, as well as the entire strip of land known as Third street, which he had dedicated to the use of the public upon the filing of his map in 1909. The trial court granted the plaintiffs all the relief they asked for, excepting lot 13 in block 1, a tract of land which is described upon this map as approximately 54 feet by 115. This lot was awarded to the defendant upon the theory that, the old home building having been located on that particular lot, the defendant was entitled thereto through adverse possession, it appearing that he, or his mother preceding him, had lived in the premises since the death of John M. Patchett in 1876, a period of about 46 years.

"The plaintiffs' claim is based upon the theory that they are the successors to the remaindermen, under the will of John M. Patchett, to the entire estate; that, though the property is claimed by them as devisees under the will, in accordance with section 1265, Civil Code, they insist that the homestead did not become a part of the estate of John M. Patchett, and that they are accordingly not bound by the judgment in Patchett v. Bradshaw, which awarded the property to the predecessor of the defendant herein. It is the defendant's contention that the homestead did not vest in the predecessors of the plaintiff, but that it became a part of his estate; that the plaintiffs are therefore estopped by the judgment in Patchett v. Bradshaw; that the defendant and his predecessor in interest have acquired title to all the lands by adverse possession; and that the devise in the will of John M. Patchett, purporting to grant a life estate only to Martha, is invalid to that extent, and in fact constituted a devise of the entire estate to her. The trial court followed plaintiffs' theory of the case to the full extent urged by them, excepting as to the one small lot upon which the home was located, and as to that the court found that Bradshaw had acquired title thereto by prescription. Judgment was entered accordingly awarding all the property in suit to the plaintiffs other than lot 13, which was awarded to the defendant. The defendant has appealed from all that portion of the judgment adverse to him.

[1] "On this appeal the principal question involved is the construction of the homestead laws as they existed at the time of the death of John M. Patchett in 1876. A reference to the Codes as they stood at that time discloses a slight inconsistency in wording, but a very vital difference in effect, between sections 1265, Civil Code, and 1474, Code of Civil Procedure. Both of these sections were amended by the Legislature in 1874. The amendment to section 1474, Code of Civil Procedure, was approved on March 24, 1874 (St. 1873-74, p. 362), while the amendment to the Civil Code section was approved on March 30th of the same year (St. 1873-74, p. 231). The Civil Code section must, therefore, be regarded as the latest expression of the legislative will and the one which controls the matter of the devolution of homesteads existing at that period. Weinreich v. Hensley, 54 P. 254, 121 Cal. 647; Estate of McGee, 97 P. 299, 154 Cal. 204, 206.

"In order to avoid confusion in the history of this legislation, it should be said that the foregoing cases involved a similar situation which arose in the amendment of these two Code sections by the Legislature of 1880, with, however, a reversal of the situation as to the time, that is to say, the amendment to the Civil Code section was approved prior to the approval of the amendment to the section of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was held in those cases that section 1474, Code of Civil Procedure, controlled over the Civil Code section.

[2, 3] "All parties agree that, in accordance with the former rulings of the Supreme Court, section 1265, Civil Code, as amended in 1874, that being the law which existed at the time of the death of the homesteader, controls the devolution of this particular homestead. That section, after making provision for the disposition of homesteads selected from community property, provides that "in other cases, upon the death of the person whose property was selected as a homestead, the property shall go to his heirs or devisees, subject to the power of the superior court to assign the same for a limited period to the family of the decedent." The provisions of section 1474, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended at the same session, were almost identical with the Civil Code section with this important exception—that in the case of a homestead selected by the owner of separate property the section declared that it "vests * * * in his or her heirs." It will be seen, therefore, that the main distinction between the sections as they read at that time was that the Civil Code section carried the homestead selected from separate property over to the heirs or devisees, whereas the section of the Code of Civil Procedure carried it to the heirs only. As said in Estate of McGee, 97 P. 299, 154 Cal. 204, 205, "the word 'heirs' cannot be construed to mean 'devisees,'" and section 1474 therefore operates, as was said in construing similar language in section 1468, Code of Civil Procedure, "to vest the title to the homestead in the heirs at law and so to withdraw it from the disposition made by the testator under his will." This, it must be recalled, was said in construing a case which came to the Supreme Court under the Code sections as amended in 1880, when section 1474 was held to be controlling over section 1265. We, however, are confronted with a directly opposite situation, and must find that the Civil Code section which provides for the devolution to 'heirs or devisees' is controlling, and that, accordingly, under the homestead laws as they existed in 1876, it permitted one who had selected a homestead of his own separate property to dispose of it by will. This conclusion necessarily follows from the use of the words 'or devisees' in the Code section, as otherwise those words would have no meaning at all. In fact, the proposition is conceded by all parties to this litigation; the point of difference between them being whether the homestead became a part of the estate of John M. Patchett, the respondents claiming that it went to them as devisees under the will without administration. It would seem evident that, if the property is by law made subject to the testamentary disposition of the owner, it becomes a part of his estate, and must be administered on in probate in the ordinary way. On the other hand, where the law declares that certain property shall on the death of one party vest in another—shall vest in the survivor or in the heirs of the deceased—the rule is that such property goes directly to the person designated without administration, and that it is accordingly not a part of the estate of the decedent.

"It follows from this that, if the property is subject to the testamentary disposition of the owner, and thus becomes a part of his estate, the administrator of his estate is permitted to sue or be sued concerning the property without joining the heirs in such litigation, and that any judgment in which the administrator is a party is equally binding on all the heirs and on all persons claiming under such administrator. This proposition is conceded by the respondents. If, therefore, we are correct in holding that, by reason of the language of section 1265, Civil Code, the homestead became a part of the estate of John M. Patchett, it must necessarily follow that the judgment and decree rendered in the suit of Charles H. Patchett, as administrator of that estate, against Bradshaw, in which it was decreed, following the stipulation of the parties thereto, that the administrator had no claim or interest in this homestead property is binding upon him as such administrator and upon all the heirs of that estate who are the plaintiffs and respondents in this action.

"Respondents have cited a number of cases holding that the homestead vests absolutely in the survivor or in the heirs, as the case may be, and that it does not become a part of the estate subject to administration. All these cases, however, involved an interpretation of a statute which expressly declared that the homestead would, upon death, vest either in the survivor or in the heirs. None of these cases involved an interpretation of section 1265, Civil Code, as it stood between the period of its amendment in 1874 and the amendment in 1880, during which time it was the controlling statute, and during which time the statutory law was that, in a case of separate property selected by the owner, the homestead should, on the death of its creator, go to his heirs or devisees.

"Therefore, in the action instituted by Charles H. Patchett, as administrator of the estate of John M. Patchett, to recover the property which was alleged to have been unlawfully seized and held by Martha Patchett and her executor, the issue was raised as to the validity of this will and particularly as to that portion of the will which related to the disposition of this homestead property. Growing out of this issue were the questions whether the will was valid in its attempt to devise the homestead property to the widow for the period of her life only, with the remainder over to certain designated heirs, or whether the will was entirely ineffectual in its attempt to devise any interest in the homestead property. The further issue arose in that particular litigation as to whether the attempt of the testator to give a life estate in the homestead to the widow (assuming the power of testamentary disposition) was ineffectual because of the peculiar wording of the will, from which the defendant and appellant here argues that the widow was in fact given the power by the will to defeat the entire remainder, and that she therefore took an estate in fee and not a life estate.

[4] "With these issues before them the parties stipulated that the decree should be entered awarding the entire homestead to the defendant therein as the successor in interest of the widow. As consideration for this the defendant therein waived all claim to all the other lands involved in that litigation, and these were accordingly awarded to the plaintiff. It may be that, if these issues had gone to trial, and the court had held that the widow took the entire estate through the right of survivorship, to the exclusion of the other heirs, such holding would have been erroneous. Nevertheless, the issue as to the ownership of the homestead property covered a subject-matter over which the trial court had jurisdiction, and, all the necessary parties having been present, the decree of the trial court, even though we may concede it to have been erroneous as a matter of law, was nevertheless a decree executed within the jurisdiction of the court, and is binding upon all the parties thereto. The respondents are in this peculiar position: If they take under the will as a part of the estate, they are bound by the judgment; if they 'succeed as heirs,' they would be entitled to a portion of the estate only as Martha Patchett, the widow, was an 'heir' also. Under this theory she would be entitled to her share under section 1386, Civil Code, free from any limitation as to a life estate under the will, and to this share the appellant herein would succeed. Thus the judgment as rendered could not stand under either theory.

[5-8] "In addition to this, the appellant specially pleaded as a separate defense the provisions of section 318, Code of Civil Procedure, which provide that no action for the recovery of real property or of the possession thereof can be maintained, unless it appears that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor was seized or possessed of the property in question within 5 years before the commencement of the action, and further pleaded that ever since the 1st day of November, 1909, and until his death, in 1922, Benjamin Bradshaw was in the quiet and peaceful possession of the land described in the complaint, and that no claim had been made thereto in that period on the part of the plaintiffs. Some criticism is made as to the character of this pleading as being insufficient to raise the issue of adverse possession in the appellant, but we do not deem these criticisms important in view of the rule announced in Alhambra, etc., Co. v. Richardson, 14 P. 379, 381, 72 Cal. 598, 601, where it is said: 'So far as the title to real property is concerned, prescription and limitation are convertible terms; and a plea of the proper statute of limitations is a good plea of a prescriptive right.' The evidence showed without conflict that, outside of the claim appearing in the complaint in Patchett v. Bradshaw, none of the respondents, either directly or indirectly, asserted any claim or title to any of the property in suit at any time during the period of 46 years when it was held by the appellant and his predecessor. All the evidence showed without conflict that since the entry into possession in his own right by Benjamin Bradshaw he had paid all the taxes on the entire tract other than the lots which he had sold to others; had dedicated a street cutting the tract in two; had paid for the improvements upon that street, as well as the others surrounding the entire tract while it was in his possession. The only answer to this showing of uninterrupted possession on the part of the appellant is that, by reason of the subdivision of the premises into lots in 1909, the exception found in section 322, Code of Civil Procedure, 'when it consists of a tract divided into lots, the possession of one lot is not deemed the possession of any other lot of the same tract,' should be invoked to defeat the appellant's claim to adverse possession of the entire tract. The difficulty with respondents' position on this phase of the case is that they have overlooked the well-known rule that in actions of this nature a party must prevail upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of another's. It was incumbent upon the respondents to show that they or their ancestors had been seized or possessed of the property within five years before the commencement of the action (Akley v. Bassett, 209 P. 576, 189 Cal. 625, 646), and this they failed to do.

[9] "There is evidence in the record showing without dispute appellant's entry into possession of the entire tract on October 4, 1904, and his accord with the findings of the trial court to that extent. This finding is not subject to attack on this appeal. There is no evidence tending to show a change of possession since that time. It is, therefore, a case for the application of the presumption that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature.

"We cannot escape the conclusion that, irrespective of the manner of pleading the issue of adverse possession, the trial of the issue was fairly had before the lower court, and that the error of the court consists in its adoption of respondents' theory that, because the occupant of the premises subdivided them into lots, he thereby lost the right to claim a prescriptive title to the entire tract because of section 322, Code of Civil Procedure. Without a particle of conflict the evidence shows that the respondents and their predecessors, for a period of 46 years at least, had not been in possession of the premises, while during that whole period the appellant and his predecessor had been in actual and peaceable possession exercising all the acts of ownership which an ordinary person would have done under like circumstances. For these reasons the respondents were barred by the statute of limitations, mentioned in section 318, Code of Civil Procedure, as pointed out in Beckett v. City of Petaluma, 153 P. 20, 171 Cal. 309, 312. * * *

"For these reasons we conclude that the portion of the judgment adverse to the appellant and from which he appeals should be reversed, with directions to the trial court to retry the issues relating to the property described in the complaint other than lot 13 of block 1 thereof."

Judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; LAWLOR, J.; CURTIS, J.

198 Cal. 426
PEOPLE v. SELBY. (Cr. 2842.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1926.)

1. Homicide ☞177—Testimony as to friendly conduct and conversation of deceased and her divorced husband shortly before homicide held admissible to refute suicide theory.

In murder trial, testimony as to friendly conduct and conversation of deceased and her divorced husband, in defendant's absence on day of her death and preceding day, held admissible, not to show motive, but as tending to refute suicide theory.

2. Criminal law ☞1134(6).

Admission of testimony on wrong theory is not error, if admissible under another theory.

3. Witnesses $\hookrightarrow$ 255(9) — Permitting district attorney to refresh witness' recollection by presenting transcript of her testimony before grand jury and asking her if she so testified held not error (Code Civ. Proc. § 2047).

Where state's witness stated that, if she testified before grand jury that defendant admitted killing deceased, "it was my theory of expressing it, not his," district attorney was properly permitted to present transcript of such testimony to witness and ask her if she so testified, in attempt to refresh her recollection, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2047.

4. Homicide $\hookrightarrow$ 166(3)—Testimony that defendant held up patrons of deceased's store and shot two of her friends on morning after homicide held admissible to show motive.

In murder trial, testimony that defendant held up and robbed patrons of deceased's store and shot two of her friends on morning after homicide held admissible as tending to show motive, in view of evidence that some of persons assailed had incurred defendant's ill will by attempting to influence deceased against him.

5. Homicide $\hookrightarrow$ 338(1) — Admission of testimony that defendant held up patrons of deceased's store and shot two of her friends on morning after homicide held not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal.

In murder trial, admission of testimony that defendant held up and robbed patrons of deceased's store and shot two of her friends on morning after homicide held not sufficiently prejudicial to defendant, if erroneous, to justify reversal, in view of all evidence in case, especially as it tended to support claim of insanity.

6. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 815(8)—Instruction held properly refused as precluding consideration of accused's extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions for any purpose until corpus delicti was established to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt by evidence aliunde.

In murder trial, instruction that evidence of defendant's confessions, admissions, or statements might not be considered "for any purpose" until jury were satisfied to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt that deceased's death was caused by unlawful act of another than herself held properly refused, as precluding consideration of such evidence for any purpose until corpus delicti was so established by evidence aliunde.

7. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 409, 538(3)—Jury may consider all evidence, including extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions, in determining whether offense and accused's connection therewith are established to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt.

Jury may consider all evidence, including accused's extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions, in determining whether all elements of offense charged and accused's connection therewith have been established to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt.

8. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 673(1).

Evidence, not admitted for limited purpose, will be considered for every purpose.

9. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 768(3)—Instruction pending jury's deliberations that they should refrain from emphatic declarations of opinion and hold minds in state of abeyance, it being for state's interests and defendant's benefit that verdict be returned, held not erroneous as causing compromise verdict.

Instruction pending jury's deliberations that jury would be given ample time for deliberation and that they should refrain from emphatic declarations of opinion and hold their minds in state of abeyance, so that they might freely interchange views, it being for state's interest and defendant's benefit that verdict be returned, held not erroneous as causing compromise manslaughter verdict.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Norman Selby was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. L. Giesler, G. H. Shreve, and F. H. Thompson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for the People.

LAWLOR, J. The defendant, Norman Selby, was charged with the murder of one Theresa W. Moers in an indictment returned by the grand jury of the county of Los Angeles. To the charge, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and upon the trial he was convicted of the crime of manslaughter. A motion for a new trial was duly interposed on his behalf and denied; judgment of conviction was pronounced, whereupon he appealed from the said judgment and from the said order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant states in his brief that, "in view of the conflict of evidence as to the cause and manner of deceased's death, insufficiency of the evidence is not urged here as a ground for reversal." While counsel for appellant in his oral argument on the hearing of the appeal herein discussed the evidence at some length in support of the claim that the refusal to give an instruction proposed by appellant, hereinafter considered, was prejudicial, nevertheless it was again conceded that the evidence was sufficient as matter of law to support the verdict rendered. The appellant thus having conceded the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, a general statement of the facts and circumstances surrounding the death of the deceased will suffice before taking up the asserted errors relied upon for a reversal.

The deceased came to her death from a bullet wound in her head, inflicted on the night of August 12, 1924, between 11:30 p. m. and midnight, in the Nottingham Apartments, in the city of Los Angeles, where she and appellant had been living together as husband and wife. As a defense, the appellant maintained that the deceased had either committed suicide or died as the result of the accidental discharge of a revolver while struggling with him as he was attempting to disarm her to prevent her self-destruction. The evidence of the prosecution tended to show that the body of the deceased was found by the janitor in the apartment on the morning of August 13, 1924, and that it was, at the time, partly covered with her clothing and a sheet or bed cover; that there were signs of violence indicated by bruises about the eyes, the arms, one leg, and the right side of the chest, as well as the bullet wound in the head; that a revolver, having one exploded shell, was found lying close to the body; that a man was seen running from the areaway of the apartment house on the night deceased met her death; that the appellant had taken his automobile from the garage on the night of the deceased's death between 11 and 11:30 p. m., and returned it about 4 a. m., at which time, as testified by the garage man, appellant was intoxicated; that appellant then stated to the garage man, "You don't know what I know"; that the appellant, according to the testimony of certain police officers, came into the Hollywood Police Station about 3:45 a. m. and said, among other things, "Wait till you see the papers," and that he "would go to the electric chair for Theresa"; that before this he had driven to the home of his sister, Mrs. Jennie Thomas, a witness for the prosecution, a distance of about 8 miles from the apartment, arriving about 1 or 1:30 a. m., gave her certain jewelry and personal effects belonging to the deceased and himself, and told her that the former was dead, the witness testifying, "I am not certain in my mind whether he said she was dead or that he had killed her, because I was frightened," but the witness, on being confronted with her testimony before the grand jury, admitted she may have testified, "He told me she was dead * * * and that he had killed her; he was afraid he had, but he had nothing more to live for himself."

[1, 2] 1. The first point relied upon for a reversal touches on the admission of certain evidence. The prosecution called as a witness, among others, F. M. Andreani, an attorney, who had a short time before the homicide represented the deceased in an action of divorce against her husband. This witness was permitted, over the objection of the appellant, to testify to two conversations, occurring, respectively, on August 11 and 12, 1924, a day prior to and the day of her death, between the deceased and her divorced husband in the office of her attorney, in which property and other matters were discussed, and having been held in the absence of the appellant. The deceased saluted her former mate with a kiss, and what was said tended to show that an attitude of friendliness existed between the deceased and her husband. A motion to strike out this testimony was denied. This testimony was apparently admitted by the trial court as tending to show motive for the offense charged against appellant. In view of the appellant's defense that the deceased committed or attempted to commit suicide, we are of the opinion that these conversations were properly admitted in evidence, not to show motive, but to reveal the condition of mind of the deceased just prior to her death from which the jury might have inferred that she was not without hope that the former relationship might be resumed, thus tending to refute the appellant's theory of suicide. And these conversations or declarations of the deceased immediately prior to her demise, as bearing on the question whether she intended to commit self-destruction, were admissible, whether or not made in the presence of the appellant. The cases of People v. Tugwell, 152 P. 740, 28 Cal. App. 348, 359, and People v. Wilson, 112 P. 579, 14 Cal. App. 518, support this view, though in those cases the evidence of the conversations or declarations of the deceased just prior to death tended to support the suicide theory whereas here it tended to overcome such theory. The testimony in the instant case was not admissible to show motive, because it involved hearsay, but the hearsay quality, as we have indicated, would not be objectionable when admitted as tending to refute the theory of suicide. And the rule is that, if testimony is admitted on a wrong theory, but is admissible under another theory, its admission under the wrong theory will not constitute error.

[3] 2. We find no error in the action of the court in permitting the district attorney to present to the prosecution's witness Mrs. Jennie Thomas a transcript of her testimony taken before the grand jury and to ask her if she so testified. The testimony of this witness before the grand jury tended to show that the appellant had admitted to her he had killed the deceased, whereas her testimony at the trial was, to say the least, equivocal on the point. The witness at the trial had, in answer to an interrogation apparently intended to aid in refreshing her recollection, admitted she may have so testified before the grand jury, but, if she did, "it was my theory of expressing it, not his." In view of the uncertain state of the witness' recollection of the fact in question, we think the prosecution followed the proper course in attempting to refresh her recollection. Section 2047, Code Civ. Proc. In People v. Durrant, 48 P. 75, 84, 116 Cal. 179, 213, involving a charge of murder prosecuted by information, the court allowed the prosecution to refresh the recollection of the witness by his deposition taken at the preliminary examination. We perceive no reason why the testimony of a witness given before a grand jury may not likewise be availed of to refresh the recollection of the witness. Citing Reid v. Reid, 14 P. 781, 73 Cal. 206, 209, it was held in People v. Durrant, supra, that the testimony at the preliminary examination may "at least be regarded as a private memorandum." Under the present practice the defendant is entitled to a copy of the testimony taken before the grand jury. Section 925, Pen. Code.

[4, 5] 3. It is claimed that the testimony of various witnesses, in detailing certain facts and statements of the appellant, immediately after and on the morning following the death of the deceased, was improperly admitted. Some of this testimony was to the effect that, on the morning after deceased's death, the appellant went to the store conducted by the deceased during her lifetime and there held up and robbed a number of patrons; that he then repaired to the place of business of a Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Schapp, friends of the deceased, shot both of them, and then left the place. It was urged in support of the admission of this testimony that the holding up of a number of patrons in the store of the deceased and the assault upon her friends tended to show animus toward her and her friends; that it tended to furnish a motive for the crime. The evidence sufficiently showed that some of the persons thus assailed were friends of the deceased, who had incurred the appellant's ill will by attempting to influence her against him, and thus tended to show a malignant disposition toward both deceased and her friends which would furnish a motive for the homicide. In any event, even if it be assumed the rulings complained of were erroneous, we think that the errors were not sufficiently prejudicial to the appellant to justify a reversal, in view of all the evidence in the case and that it tended to support his claim that he was insane.

[6] 4. The following instruction was requested by the appellant and refused:

"With respect to the proof of the corpus delicti, I instruct you that in determining that question you must not consider any evidence of alleged confessions, admissions, or statements of the defendant. Evidence of alleged confessions, admissions, and statements may not be considered for any purpose until you have first satisfied your minds to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the deceased came to her death through the unlawful act of some person other than herself. Proof of the dead body alone, joined with evidence of alleged confessions, admissions, and statements of the defendant, would not be sufficient to convict, for there must be evidence tending to show the commission of a homicide and unlawful killing, before evidence of alleged confessions, admissions, or statements of defendant could be considered for any purpose. Evidence of alleged confessions, admissions, or statements of the defendant alone cannot be relied upon to establish as sufficient any fact which is a necessary ingredient to form the body of the crime. If after consideration of the evidence in connection with the proof or lack of proof of the corpus delicti, you believe that proof of one or more of the necessary elements of the corpus delicti, as I have defined it to you, would be wholly lacking without the evidence of alleged confessions, admissions, or statements of the defendant, then I instruct you you must acquit the defendant."

It is contended by the people that:

"It is not the law of this state that evidence of confessions, admissions, and statements of the defendant may not be considered for any purpose until the jury have first satisfied their minds to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the deceased came to her death through the unlawful act of some person other than herself. * * * It was enough under all the authorities if the killing of the deceased by violence was established by a preponderance of satisfactory proof, and, after that, if the confessions and admissions of the defendant, even though extrajudicial, tended to corroborate the proof of such death by violence and to show that the defendant committed the act of violence, the jury should be permitted, and have always been permitted, to take such admissions and confessions into consideration in arriving at a proper verdict. The true rule is well stated in volume 8, p. 168, § 248, of the recent and well written work, California Jurisprudence, and in a note of that section, attention is called to the fact that some of the expressions in People v. Tapia, 63 P. 1001, 131 Cal. 651, run counter to and have been practically overruled by other California authorities."

In response thereto, the appellant urges that:

"The respondent cites and quotes from numerous cases the force or logic of which we cannot see. Most of the cases thus quoted from refer to the admissibility in evidence of confessions and admissions and the extent to which the proof of the corpus delicti must go to supply a foundation for this admission. With that rule we are in accord. There is not the slightest question but that slight proof is all that is necessary to justify the admission of such evidence. But there is a clear and sharp line of demarcation between those cases so holding and the cases which refer to the quantum of proof of the corpus delicti required as a matter of sufficiency of evidence to sustain a verdict of guilty based upon it and as to when and how confessions and admissions may be considered by the jury in making up their verdict. The unbroken line of authority in this state is that the corpus delicti and all of its essential elements must be established by the prosecution in the final analysis by evidence independent of extrajudicial statements, admissions or confessions of the accused."

In our view the requested instruction did not contain a correct statement of the law, and it was therefore properly refused. Preliminarily it should be kept in mind that there is a sharp distinction between the rule governing the admission of extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions and the rule governing the jury in its consideration, of such evidence after it is admitted. Concerning the admissibility of extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions, it has been correctly declared that:

"Proof of the corpus delicti of the conclusive and convincing character required to support a conviction of the crime charged was not a prerequisite to the reception in evidence of the extrajudicial statements of the defendant that he had killed the deceased. Prima facie proof of the corpus delicti was sufficient for that purpose; and it was not essential to the proof and purpose to show that the crime charged was committed by the defendant." People v. Wagner, 155 P. 649, 29 Cal. App. 363. (Italics added.)

The following cases, among others, deal alone with the degree of proof of the corpus delicti essential to warrant the introduction in evidence of the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused, and are therefore of little value or assistance in determining the point here involved. People v. Simonsen, 40 P. 440, 107 Cal. 345, 346; People v. Besold, 97 P. 871, 154 Cal. 363, 367; People v. Frey, 131 P. 127, 165 Cal. 140, 146; People v. Vertrees, 146 P. 890, 169 Cal. 404, 408; People v. Quarez (Cal. Sup.) 238 P. 363; and People v. Garcia (Cal. Sup.) 238 P. 367.

The instruction in question here does not involve the admissibility of such evidence, and, as already indicated, the foregoing line of cases are therefore not in point. The refused instruction, if given, would have precluded the jury, after the introduction in evidence of the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the appellant upon a prima facie showing of the corpus delicti by evidence aliunde, from considering such evidence "for any purpose" until the corpus delicti had been established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt by such evidence aliunde.

[7] Research has revealed that the cases passing upon the degree of proof of the corpus delicti necessary before the jury may consider the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of a defendant are not as numerous as the cases involving the measure of proof essential before such evidence may properly be admitted. The following cases may throw some light on the first question which is here involved:

Though the case of People v. Jones, 55 P. 698, 700, 123 Cal. 65, 68, was concerned primarily with the question whether or not the corpus delicti of the offense therein charged had been sufficiently proved to admit the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused, nevertheless the court, apparently with approval, quoted the following:

"Mr. Justice Clifford, commenting upon the language used in Greenleaf on Evidence, said: 'Considering the language employed by that author, it is somewhat doubtful how far he would carry the doctrine; and, if it is to the extent that the corpus delicti must be fully proved independently of the confession, we are not prepared to adopt it, as in that view the admission of the confession would be useless, except to prove the agency of the accused, and would operate as an exclusion of the confession for any other purpose, whereas, if freely and voluntarily made, it is clearly admissible as evidence in support of any element in the charge to which it applies. Full proof of the body of the crime, the corpus delicti, independently of the confession, is not required, says Nelson, C. J., in People v. Badgley, 16 Wend. [N. Y.] 59, by any of the cases; and in many of them slight corroborating facts were held sufficient.' United States v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 5, 24 [Fed. Cas. No. 16707]." (Italics added.)

People v. Hatch, 125 P. 907, 909, 163 Cal. 368, 375, contains this pertinent declaration:

"It is claimed that the corpus delicti was not proved by evidence outside of the declarations and admissions of defendant. It must be remembered that the rule does not require that the evidence, other than the admissions and declarations of defendant, establish the commission of the offense beyond all reasonable doubt. People v. Jones [55 P. 698] 123 Cal. 65; People v. Ward [66 P. 372] 134 Cal. 306; People v. Rowland [106 P. 428] 12 Cal. App. 7. We are satisfied that the record presents substantial and sufficient evidence besides the admissions and declarations of the defendant to establish the commission of the crime charged."

The last case above cited (People v. Rowland, 106 P. 429, 12 Cal. App. 10) also involved the question of the admissibility of the accused's extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions, but the court there declared:

"It is, of course, a well-established rule of law that the confession or extrajudicial admissions of a party accused of crime cannot be considered for the purpose of proving the corpus delicti, or, in other words, of proving the elements necessary to constitute the crime with which he is charged. * * * But this rule has never been so far extended in its scope or application as to require the elements or the body of the crime to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt before the admissions or confessions may be received and considered as evidence." (Italics ours.)

At first blush the two sentences of this quotation may seem inconsistent, but, in view of the express declaration in the latter and the fact that the court was there considering whether or not the corpus delicti had been sufficiently proved to admit the accused's extrajudicial statements, it must be held that the first-quoted sentence was dealing with the kind of proof necessary to sufficiently establish the corpus delicti in order to admit such extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions—the point involved in that case.

The case of People v. Hatch, 109 P. 1097, 1101, 13 Cal. App. 521, 531, is decidedly in point on the question here involved. An instruction almost identical with the one requested and refused in the instant case was likewise refused in that case, and the appellate court held the refusal to be proper. A hearing was denied in the Supreme Court. The instruction in People v. Hatch, supra, read:

"In determining whether or not a crime has been committed in this case, apart from who committed it, you must not consider any admission or statement of the defendant; you must carefully exclude from your minds any and every statement made or alleged to be made by the defendant, when you come to consider whether a crime has been committed, and on that question you must look exclusively to the other evidence in the case. If the other evidence in the case does not show the commission of the crime charged beyond a reasonable doubt, then the defendant must be acquitted, notwithstanding his statements or admissions, if any. In other words, the law prohibits a conviction of crime solely upon the statements or admissions of the defendant."

The District Court of Appeal declared:

"The court refused to give this instruction, and was justified in so doing. The vice of the instruction is that it requires that the corpus delicti be proved beyond any reasonable doubt before extrajudicial statements or admissions of defendant may be considered at all. This is not the law. The correct rule is laid down in People v. Jones [55 P. 698] 123 Cal. 65. While it is true that there must be some proof of the body of the crime before extrajudicial statements or admissions of the defendant may be considered, it is not required that such proof shall go to the extent of establishing the crime beyond all reasonable doubt."

The case of People v. Gonzales (Cal. App.) 240 P. 291, concerned the question of admissibility of such evidence, and, while turning upon the failure of the prosecution to establish prima facie the corpus delicti by evidence aliunde before the admission into evidence of the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused, nevertheless the following excerpt from that opinion passes upon the identical point we have under consideration here:

"The proof of the corpus delicti, which must be produced before admissions or confessions of the defendant may be allowed to be put in evidence, need not be sufficient to satisfy the minds of the jurors beyond a reasonable doubt of the corpus delicti. It is sufficient if the preliminary proof be of a substantial character tending to establish the corpus delicti. * * * Such substantial evidence may be corroborated and strengthened by admissions and confessions of the defendant, and the proof beyond a reasonable doubt required by the law thus supplied. * * *" (Italics added.)

See, also, People v. Roganovich and Duzich (Cal. App.) 246 P. 132.

It is apparent from this review of the cases that the general trend of authority has been to hold that, upon prima facie proof of the corpus delicti, the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused may be admitted in evidence, and, having been so properly admitted, they may, with the evidence aliunde, be considered by the jury in its determination whether or not all the elements of the crime and the connection therewith of the accused have been established to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt.

We have found only two cases which seem to be in conflict with this principle. It was held in People v. Wagner, 155 P. 649, 653, 29 Cal. App. 363, 372, that it was error to refuse to give an instruction similar to the one involved in the instant case, and which stated that the jury must be "convinced from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that a criminal homicide was in fact committed" before they might consider the extrajudicial statements of the defendant. And there is language in People v. Tapia, 63 P. 1001, 1005, 131 Cal. 647, 651, 655, taken from Gray v. Com., 101 Pa. 380, 47 Am. Rep. 733, which announces a similar rule. The trial court in the Tapia Case stated in an opinion that it did not think the evidence sufficient to sustain the verdict. Manifestly, the trial court should have granted a new trial on that ground (People v. Knutte, 44 P. 166, 111 Cal. 453, 455), but instead of doing so it erroneously stated that it doubted its authority to grant a new trial in such a situation and declared it would pass the question to the Supreme Court, which tribunal, of course, had no authority to determine the weight of the evidence. It was to obviate this situation and because the opinion of the trial court was no part of the record on appeal and could not therefore be considered that resort was had by the court to a strict appraisal of errors asserted to have occurred at the trial in order to secure a reversal of the judgment and order. The court said:

"That this decision is based upon the very peculiar features of this case as above shown; and that in many cases the errors above noticed would not call for a reversal."

The presence of these facts must therefore be regarded as tending to greatly weaken People v. Tapia, supra, as an authority on the point involved in the instant case. Furthermore, as indicated in the note to the text in 8 Cal. Jur. p. 167, § 248, the case of People v. Tapia, supra, is at variance on this particular rule with the weight of authority in this state.

It may finally be said that the authorities are unanimous on the proposition that the corpus delicti is not required to be established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt before the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of a defendant may be received in evidence—prima facie proof of the corpus delicti being sufficient for that purpose. And, with the exception of People v. Tapia, supra, and People v. Wagner, supra, the rule is likewise unanimously declared that it is not necessary that the jury, in resolving the question of the guilt or innocence of a defendant upon all the evidence in the case, should, before considering for any purpose the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of a defendant, be first satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the corpus delicti has been established by evidence aliunde.

[8] When the case is submitted for their verdict, the jury may consider all the evidence in the case, including the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused, in determining whether or not all the elements of the offense charged and the connection therewith of the accused have been established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. If this were not the correct rule, proof of the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of the accused would have no utility except to connect him with the crime charged. The general rule is that, unless evidence is admitted for a limited purpose, it will be considered for every purpose. Any expressions in People v. Tapia, supra, and People v. Wagner, supra, to the contrary of what we have declared are at variance with the authorities and are not binding. It follows from the foregoing that the proposed instruction was erroneous, and was therefore properly refused.

[9] 5. We cannot agree with appellant's contention that the oral instruction given to the jury pending its deliberations caused or resulted in a "compromise" manslaughter verdict. This instruction, a written copy of which was also supplied to the jury upon request, merely told the jury, and correctly so, that they would be given ample time for deliberation and that, upon retiring to the jury room, it would be better that they refrain from emphatic declarations of opinion and hold their minds "in a state of abeyance," so that they might "fully and freely interchange views with each other," it being "for the interests of the state and the benefit of the defendant, that a verdict should be returned."

The judgment and the order appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LENNON, J.

76 Cal. App. 635

KAMMERER v. MARINO et al. (Civ. 3063.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 24, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨907(2) — Where evidence is not brought up, it will be presumed that none was offered in support of affirmative matters in answer, and that findings thereon were not required.

Where no findings are made on affirmative matters alleged in answer, and evidence is not brought up on appeal, it will be presumed in support of judgment that no evidence was offered in support of such affirmative allegations, and that therefore no findings were required.

2. Pleading ⇨430(2) — Findings according to evidence submitted without objection held not objectionable as outside pleadings (Code Civ. Proc. § 470).

Where plaintiff pleaded that he "furnished boxes" to defendant, but without objection from defendant introduced evidence that he furnished materials for making boxes, finding of court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 470, "according to the evidence," was not objectionable as outside the pleadings.

3. Pleading ⇨430(2) — Finding that plaintiff, who pleaded he had performed work and labor for defendant, had by and through his minor son performed such work and labor held not objectionable as outside pleadings (Code Civ. Proc. § 470; Civ. Code, § 197).

Where plaintiff pleaded that he performed work and labor for defendants, and, without objection by defendants, proved work and labor performed by his son, held finding that plaintiff by and through a son had performed work was not objectionable as outside pleadings, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 470, and Civ. Code, § 197.

4. Interest ⇨19(2).

Where amount of claim is capable of being made certain by calculation, interest is allowable from due date.

5. Appeal and error ⇨932(1) — Claims for materials, work, and labor will be presumed based on contracts for agreed compensation in support of judgment allowing interest from date such claims became due.

In support of judgment allowing interest on several claims for materials, work, and labor from time they became due, it will be presumed that the several causes of action were based on contracts in which rates of compensation were agreed on, and that amounts due were capable of being made certain by calculation.

6. Interest ⇨19(2) — Existence of dispute as to amount of plaintiff's claims does not render it unascertainable by calculation as affects defendants' liability for interest from due date.

Existence of dispute between parties as to quantity of materials or work furnished or done does not make amount of plaintiff's claims unascertainable by calculation or relieve defendant from liability to pay interest from due date which could have been avoided by tender of amount due.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by John Kammerer against Guiseppe Marino and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Donald R. Green, V. L. Hatfield, Martin I. Welsh, and W. H. Hatfield, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone from the judgment herein in favor of plaintiff.

The complaint states separately five causes of action. The first count alleges the delivery of a certain quantity of grapes by plaintiff to defendants at an agreed price. The second alleges that "at the special instance and request of defendants plaintiff furnished boxes for said grapes to the value of $1,493.57." The third alleges that "Phillip Ehersman sold and delivered to defendants at their special instance * * * 5,876 pounds of grapes at $75 per ton," and that Ehersman assigned his claim therefor to plaintiff. The fourth alleges that on the 1st day of December, 1921, the defendants were indebted to John J. Kammerer in the sum of $19.25 for work and labor, and that he assigned his claim therefor to plaintiff. The fifth alleges that "plaintiff, * * * at the special instance and request of said defendants, performed work and labor for said defendants in the sum of $101.45." Each count alleges the amount due and unpaid thereunder, and that payment thereof was demanded and refused. The court found against appellants in accordance with the allegations of the third and fourth counts, and also as alleged in the first count, except that a smaller quantity of grapes was found to have been delivered than was alleged. As to the second count, the court found that the amount alleged therein was due and unpaid from appellants to plaintiff "as the balance due and unpaid for materials for making boxes, to wit, box lumber, laths, and nails furnished by plaintiff to said defendants at their special instance and request, * * * and for transporting and trucking box lumber." As to the fifth count, the court found that "plaintiff, by and through his minor son, David Kammerer, * * * performed work and labor in making and putting grape boxes or lugs together at the special instance and request" of appellants "in the sum of $311.45. That said defendants have paid to plaintiff on account of said work and labor the sum of $210, leaving a balance of $101.45 due" from appellants to plaintiff. Judgment was entered for the total amount remaining unpaid, "together with interest thereon from the 1st day of November, 1921, at the rate of 7 per cent, per annum."

[1] The appellants alleged certain affirmative matters in their answer to the complaint, and the court made no direct finding thereon. Appellants contend that such omission constitutes error. Since the evidence has not been brought up, it must be presumed in support of the judgment that no evidence was offered to prove such affirmative allegations, and therefore no findings thereon were required. Hertel v. Emireck, 174 P. 30, 178 Cal. 534; Mohr v. North Rawhide Min., etc.,

Co., 170 P. 600, 177 Cal. 264; Continental Nat. Bank v. Stoltz, 189 P. 712, 46 Cal. App. 532; Terry v. Southwestern Building Co., 185 P. 212, 43 Cal. App. 366.

[2, 3] Appellants urge that the finding relative to the second cause of action is outside the issues raised by the pleadings. Upon objection at the trial that evidence offered for the purpose of showing that plaintiff furnished "materials for making boxes" was not admissible to prove that he "furnished boxes," the court doubtless would have permitted an amendment to overcome the objection. As the record fails to show that any such objection was made, it must be presumed that the parties treated the complaint as sufficient to justify the admission of the evidence, and that such evidence was introduced without objection. Silvers v. Grossman, 192 P. 534, 183 Cal. 696, 702, and cases there cited. Under such circumstances, it was proper for the court to "direct the fact to be found according to the evidence." Code Civ. Proc. § 470. For like reasons, it was not error to find in favor of plaintiff for work and labor performed by his minor son. Cannon v. McKenzie, 85 P. 130, 3 Cal. App. 286, 290. The plaintiff was entitled to the earnings of his son. Civ. Code, § 197.

[4-6] The court allowed the plaintiff interest upon the amount of the several claims from the time they became due and payable. Appellants contend that such claims were unliquidated, and that therefore interest should have been allowed only from the date of the judgment. The presumption in support of the judgment is that the several causes of action are based upon contracts in which the rates of compensation were agreed upon in advance, and that the amounts due thereon were capable of being made certain by mere calculation. In such a case interest is allowable from the time payment becomes due. Gray v. Bekins, 199 P. 767, 186 Cal. 389, 399; Western L. Co. v. Vanomar Producers, 217 P. 534, 62 Cal. App. 644, 647; Robinson v. American Fish, etc., Co., 119 P. 388, 17 Cal. App. 212, 220. The fact that there was a dispute between the parties as to the quantity of grapes or materials furnished or work done did not have the effect of rendering plaintiff's demands unascertainable by calculation. Fairchild v. Bay Point, etc., Ry. Co., 134 P. 338, 22 Cal. App. 328, 330. Appellants could have avoided their liability to pay interest by tendering the amount actually due plaintiff. The mere fact that plaintiff demanded more than was due is not a sufficient ground for disallowing interest. Western L. Co. v. Vanomar Producers, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 590

T. TANAKA et al. v. HIGHWAY FARMING CO. et al. (Civ. 3076.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error §880(2)—In action to recover compensation for work in production of grapes, exclusion of parol evidence to show that buyers' contract was intended to bind them to pay plaintiff held not error against owner.

In action to recover compensation under contract with landowner to do work in production of crop of grapes which had been sold without plaintiffs' knowledge, exclusion of parol evidence to show that buyers' contract was intended to bind them to pay plaintiffs was not error against owner of which he could complain, where landowner had demanded no affirmative relief against buyer, as owner was primarily liable to plaintiffs despite such contract.

2. Judgment §729—Seller of grapes may recover from buyers, who agreed to pay laborers, amount recovered by laborers, though buyers were codefendants in laborers' action (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1909, 1910).

Seller of grapes may recover from buyers, who had agreed to pay laborers, amount of judgment recovered by laborers, though buyers were codefendants in laborers' action, where seller had demanded no affirmative relief against buyers in such action, and was not permitted to show buyers' agreement to pay, since buyers' liability was therefore not adjudicated in such action, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1909 and 1910.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action by T. Tanaka and others against the Highway Farming Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Williams & Fenstermacher, Chester O. Hansen, and Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, all of Fresno, for appellant.

L. L. Cory, W. H. Stammer, and B. H. Cory, all of Fresno, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The appellant Highway Farming Company and the plaintiffs entered into a contract, by the terms of which the latter were to perform all the work and labor in the production of a crop of grapes on 120 acres of land belonging to the former, and to receive therefor "45 per cent. of the gross proceeds of all the grapes," the same to be sold "jointly by the first party and the second parties in their names." The complaint alleges that thereafter the defendants E. S. Ardzooni and L. S. Ardzooni, as copartners, "did assume each and all of the obligations of said contract on the part of said Highway Farming Company to be kept and performed"; that the plaintiffs complied with all the terms of the contract, and duly delivered the crop produced upon the premises; that the defendants did not comply with the terms of the contract, but, on the contrary, sold all of the crops "without the knowledge and consent of said plaintiffs, or in the name of said plaintiffs or either of them," and refused "to account for or pay to plaintiffs, or any one of them, said 45 per cent. of said crops to which the plaintiffs are entitled, or any amount in excess of 9 per cent. thereof." The complaint then alleges the reasonable value of the crops so sold, and prays for judgment against the defendants for the amount remaining unpaid, based upon such reasonable value.

The appellant, in addition to certain denials, admitted the allegation that Ardzooni Bros. had assumed the appellant's obligations under the contract, and, for "a second, separate, and affirmative answer to the plaintiffs' complaint," alleged that, after the execution of the contract, Ardzooni Bros. "did assume each and all of the obligations of said contract on the part of said defendant, Highway Farming Company, * * * and * * * performed each and every covenant in said contract on the part of the Highway Farming Company * * * to be kept and performed, and that the said plaintiffs did accept the performance of each and every covenant of said contract by said * * * Ardzooni Bros., in full satisfaction of the several obligations of said defendant, Highway Farming Company * * * under and by virtue of the terms of said contract." Appellant prayed that "plaintiffs take nothing by reason of his complaint against the said Highway Farming Company," and that it "be hence dismissed with its costs."

Ardzooni Bros. filed a separate answer, denying, among other things, that the copartnership, or the members thereof, had assumed any of the obligations of the appellant under the contract.

The court found that "the defendants E. S. Ardzooni and L. S. Ardzooni did not, as copartners, or otherwise, assume any of the obligations of said contract on the part of said Highway Farming Company to be kept and performed, * * * and that the plaintiffs did not accept performance of any of the covenants of said contract by said firm of Ardzooni Bros. in full or any satisfaction of any of the obligations of the defendant Highway Farming Company under or by virtue of any of the terms of said contract." The court found in favor of the plaintiffs against the appellant. Judgment was entered in accordance with such findings in favor of plaintiffs against the appellant and in favor of Ardzooni Bros. for costs of suit against the plaintiffs. The appeal is "from the judgment * * * and from the whole thereof."

The contract was executed October 26, 1921. On the following day, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs, the appellant entered into a contract of sale of the crops to be produced during the life of the contract on the land in question and on other lands belonging to it. The crops produced by the plaintiffs were delivered to defendants, who disposed of the same in accordance with such contract of sale thereof. The plaintiffs testified that they had no knowledge of the sale contract until after the crops had been delivered. Before the crops were harvested the appellant entered into a contract of sale of all its lands, including the land here in question, to Ardzrooni Bros. That contract contained the following:

"It is further understood and agreed that, whereas first party has been employing certain parties to properly farm said land, the second party agrees to assume the obligation of the first party in connection with the hiring and employing of those parties and to make proper adjustments of these obligations."

The contract was introduced in evidence. Counsel for the appellant called a witness who was present during the negotiations leading up to and at the time of the execution of the contract, and calling his attention to the clause herein quoted, examined him as follows:

"Q. * * * Did you hear any discussion in regard to that particular clause of this contract? A. I did. * * *

"Q. What was said in the discussion in regard to that particular clause? * * *

"Counsel for Ardzrooni Bros.: Objected to as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and varies the terms of a written contract by parol evidence. * * *

"The Court: I will sustain the objection."

Referring to this ruling of the court, counsel for appellant say in their opening brief:

"We will raise only one point in this appeal. The point to be here argued is as to whether or not the trial court erred when it excluded all testimony as to that portion of the contract between the appellant Highway Farming Company and Ardzrooni Bros., wherein and whereby, we contend, the defendant Ardzrooni Bros. became legally bound to respond to the plaintiffs for any moneys due the plaintiffs under and by virtue of their contract with defendant Highway Farming Company."

[1, 2] The plaintiffs were not parties to the contract between appellant and Ardzrooni Bros., and it was neither alleged nor proved that they agreed to look to the latter for performance of appellant's obligations to them or to release appellant therefrom. While, as between the defendants themselves, Ardzrooni Bros. may have become the principal obligor and appellant a mere surety, as between the plaintiffs and appellant the obligation of the latter is primary. The appellant demanded no affirmative relief against Ardzrooni Bros., but merely alleged, as a defense, that the latter had assumed and discharged the obligations of the former. The error complained of was against the plaintiffs in favor of Ardzrooni Bros. and not against appellant. The latter, therefore, is not in a position to complain. Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v. Inman, 180 P. 26, 40 Cal. App. 111, 112; Talcott Land Co. v. Hershiser, 195 P. 653, 184 Cal. 748, 756. Under the pleadings, no judgment could have been made between the defendants alone. As between them, therefore, the question whether Ardzrooni Bros. assumed appellant's obligations to plaintiffs has not been adjudicated. Code Civ. Proc. 1909 and 1910; Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 193 P. 243, 184 Cal. 226, 239; Robson v. Superior Court, 154 P. 8, 171 Cal. 588, 593; Hubermann v. National Surety Co., 174 P. 79, 37 Cal. App. 569, 570; Hentig v. Johnson, 96 P. 390, 8 Cal. App. 221, 224. Upon payment of the judgment, appellant will be in a position to maintain an action against Ardzrooni Bros. for the recovery of the amount paid in satisfaction thereof, if in fact, the latter assumed the obligations of the former to plaintiffs.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 800

K. NAKAGAWA, S. Awamura, and R. Tsujimura, Plaintiffs and Respondents, v. HIGHWAY FARMING CO., a corporation, Defendant and Appellant, E. S. Ardzrooni, and L. S. Ardzrooni, Copartners Doing Business Under the Firm Name and Style of Ardzrooni Bros., Defendants and Respondents. (Civ. 3075).

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1926.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Williams & Fenstermacher, Chester O. Hansen and Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, all of Fresno, for appellant.

L. L. Cory, W. H. Stammer, and B. H. Cory, all of Fresno, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant Highway Farming Company has appealed from the judgment herein in favor of plaintiffs against that company and in favor of defendants Ardzrooni Bros. against the plaintiffs. The appeal is submitted upon the briefs and oral arguments in the case of Tanaka and others against the same defendants (Civ. No. 3076, 245 P. 434), this day decided by this court. But one point is made by the appellant, and that the same as made in the Tanaka Case, and the facts material to the appeals are the same in both cases.

For the reasons stated in the opinion filed in the Tanaka Case, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 525

PEOPLE v. DRYDEN. (Cr. 1302.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 16, 1926.)

1. Automobiles ⇐355.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of driving automobile while intoxicated.

2. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)—Admission of arresting officer's testimony that he told defendant, arrested for driving while intoxicated, that he had arrested defendant before for being drunk, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice requiring reversal, in view of defendant's denial thereof and his admission that he had been drinking shortly preceding arrest (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In prosecution for driving automobile while intoxicated, admission of testimony of arresting officer that he talked with defendant about previous arrest or near arrest for the very same thing, and for being drunk, though improper, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice, and hence not ground for reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, where defendant denied having been arrested on charge of drunkenness and admitted that he had been drinking whisky shortly prior to his arrest.

3. Criminal law ⇐1171(6)—District attorney's conduct in asking defendant if he had not been arrested for drunkenness on two occasions, after defendant without reason had on direct examination denied ever having been arrested for drunkenness, held not so prejudicial as to have induced miscarriage of justice.

Where defendant, without reason therefor, denied on direct examination ever having been arrested for drunkenness, held, district attorney's conduct in asking defendant if he was not arrested for being drunk on two occasions was not so prejudicial as to have induced miscarriage of justice, since controversy arose through defendant's own act, and especially where objection to question was sustained and no assignment of misconduct on part of district attorney was made at the time.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

David Dryden was convicted of driving an automobile while intoxicated, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. H. Egermayer and N. S. Hammack, both of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the offense of driving an automobile upon a public highway of this state at a time when defendant was under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

[1] It is contended by appellant that the evidence of defendant's guilt was insufficient to support the judgment. The witnesses for the prosecution, among whom were two policemen and a doctor, testified unqualifiedly that shortly after defendant had driven his automobile on a public highway he was intoxicated. Defendant himself testified that within 20 minutes next preceding his arrest he had taken two drinks of whisky. He also made certain incriminating admissions as to his condition at the time of his arrest, including the statement that he was in no condition to drive an automobile; and other witnesses gave testimony regarding acts and declarations on the part of defendant which were not consistent with normal, sober, conduct on his part—from all of which, notwithstanding other evidence in the case from which defendant's sobriety on the occasion in question might possibly be deduced, it follows that appellant's contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict of the jury cannot be sustained.

[2] Appellant also complains that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence over defendant's objection a statement made by one of the arresting officers to the effect that, in a conversation had between him and defendant, the arresting officer told defendant "that he had been arrested before, almost been arrested, for the same thing not very long before that, * * * that he had had a chance, that he had been arrested once before for being drunk, and that he did not learn his lesson then—had an awful time pulling his car out of the canyon that time."

At the time the evidence to which objection is made was admitted, the judge of the trial court said:

"Well; that sort of evidence is receivable, but is not receivable as testimony of what occurred on some other occasion, and has no value in that regard, but is receivable only as discovering what reply the defendant made, if any, and what his attitude was when the question or statement was made to him. That is the only reason that that sort of evidence goes in. It is not because of what the officer says to the individual whom he arrests, but it is the idea of what the arrested person says in reply to it. I think the motion should be denied, the jury bearing in mind my observation on the statement just made by the officer."

Appellant now urges the point that defendant was prejudiced because evidence of another alleged offense by him was permitted to go before the jury. An examination of the statement made by the officer shows that, strictly speaking, he gave no testimony that defendant had actually committed any other offense. The officer was merely narrating what had occurred in the way of conversation between him and defendant. However, it is clear that whether before that time defendant had ever been arrested for the commission of a similar offense had no bearing upon the question of whether he was intoxicated at the time in question, and at such time had been driving an automobile on a public highway.

As suggested by the judge of the trial court, the replies made by defendant to material and competent questions directly connected with the offense with which defendant was charged, or statements made by the arresting officer in the presence of the defendant, in certain circumstances (not here present), might be admissible in evidence; but it is plain that such a rule should not be extended to a point which would permit the introduction of any and all statements made by the arresting officer to a defendant under the guise of noting the replies or the attitude of the defendant thereto. If such flexibility of the principle should be recognized, the result would be that the rule which requires that a defendant be tried only for the offense of which he is charged would cease to exist. It would always be possible for some person, lacking possibly in the spirit of fairness to an accused, at any time before or even during the trial, to purposefully engage the defendant in conversation and therein to either casually or pointedly refer to some other offense or difficulty laid to the door of the defendant, and thereafter to testify to the details of such conversation, thereby insinuating into the minds of the members of the jury evidence of former derelictions on the part of the defendant for the sole purpose of prejudicing the defendant's case. The rules of evidence adopted for the protection of litigants should not be so easily circumvented. The law forbids that to be done indirectly which may not be done directly.

In the case at bar, however, admitting the impropriety of placing before the jury the statements made by the arresting officer, to which objection is made, it must be assumed that the jury was guided by the statement made by the court to the effect that "what occurred on some other occasion * * * has no value in that regard, but it is receivable only as discovering what reply the defendant made, if any, and what his attitude was when the question or statement was made to him." The defendant testified that he had not been arrested before on a charge of drunkenness, nor was any evidence admitted that he had ever been arrested for the commission of such offense. Moreover, the evidence in the case, including the defendant's admission that he had been drinking whisky within 20 minutes next preceding the time of his arrest and that he was in no condition to drive an automobile, leaves no room for doubting the fact that the error in admitting the evidence to which reference has been had did not result in a miscarriage of justice, and consequently that it affords no ground for a reversal of the judgment. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

[3] In the same connection, misconduct of the district attorney is predicated upon the fact that, after defendant had testified in his own behalf and, in response to questions asked him by his counsel, had denied that he had ever been arrested on a charge of having been intoxicated, the district attorney, on cross-examination, inquired:

"Q. As a matter of fact, weren't you arrested on that charge of being drunk on July 19, 1924, and on November 24, 1924, on each of which occasions you forfeited the amount of $15 in police court as bail?"

It should be remembered that no direct evidence was admitted of the fact that defendant had ever been arrested on such a charge, and, consequently, no reason existed why defendant should deny that such was the fact. If he chose to do so, he presented an issue which, although irrelevant to the inquiry before the court, in a measure justified an attempt in good faith on the part of the district attorney by way of cross-examination to rebut it. The controversy arose through defendant's own act, and he cannot justly charge the district attorney with intentional misconduct for attempting in good faith to cross-examine the defendant on testimony given by him. People v. Allen, 137 P. 1148, 166 Cal. 723, 732. It further appears that defendant's objection to the question propounded by the district attorney to the defendant was sustained by the court. No assignment of misconduct on the part of the district attorney was made by the defendant at the time. In view of all the circumstances, if any prejudice resulted to defendant from the asking of the question, it was very slight, and, like the statement made by the arresting officer regarding what he had told the defendant, could not have induced a miscarriage of justice.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

76 Cal. App. 606

CROCKER v. CROCKER et al. (Civ. 3096.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 23, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨607(1).

Giving notice to clerk of trial court to prepare transcript is jurisdictional step to be taken when appeal is by alternative method.

2. Appeal and error ⇨627(1) — Failure of stenographic reporter to file transcript within time allowed is not jurisdictional, since provision requiring it is directory (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a).

Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, requiring stenographic reporter to transcribe report of trial and file it within 20 days after notice to prepare transcript has been filed with clerk of trial court, held directory, and failure of reporter to file transcript within time allowed is not jurisdictional.

3. Appeal and error ⇨387(2).

Filing undertaking with clerk of trial court to pay cost of preparing transcript provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 953b, is matter of security to clerk and not jurisdictional.

4. Appeal and error ⇨629—Remedy for delay in having transcript on appeal prepared must be in trial court, where there is no failure as to necessary jurisdictional steps.

Where there has been failure to proceed with diligence to have transcript on appeal prepared in lower court, but no failure as to jurisdictional steps necessary to be taken, remedy for delay must be in trial court.

5. Appeal and error ⇨627(2) — Appeal will not be dismissed because of short delay by appellant in having transcript prepared, where jurisdiction is not shown to be wanting (rule 6 of Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal).

Appeal will not be dismissed because of short delay by appellant in having transcript prepared, where jurisdiction is not shown to be wanting, in view of rule 6 of Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal; such delay being matter of procedure which is not fatal to hearing on merits.

Action by Mary Estell Crocker, as executrix of the estate of William Franklin Crocker, deceased, against Mary Estell Crocker and Warren Crocker. From the judgment, Mary Estell Crocker appeals. On motion of defendant Warren Crocker to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

James F. Gaffney, of Sacramento, and J. D. Elliott, of Placerville, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin, of Sacramento, and Henry S. Lyon, of Placerville, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This matter is before the court upon the respondent's motion to dismiss appellant's appeal from a judgment entered in said cause in the superior court of the county of Placer on the 17th day of July, 1925, on the following grounds:

"First. That no 'notice of appeal' as prescribed by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California was filed within 10 days after notice of the court's decision denying the motions for a new trial in the above-entitled cause. Second. That no 'draft' or 'bill of exceptions,' as prescribed by section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California was presented or filed or served on the adverse party within the 10 days after notice of the court's decision denying the motion for a new trial, or at all, in the above-entitled cause. Third. That no 'transcript' was filed within 20 days after the filing of the notice of appeal, or at all, as prescribed by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California."

Although several grounds for the motion are set forth in the notice, only one fact is really argued and presented for determination, to wit: The failure of the appellant to file an undertaking with the clerk of the trial court in which the cause was tried, as provided for by section 953b of the Code of Civil Procedure. The record shows entry of judgment on July 17, 1925, motion for new trial heard and determined August 14, 1925. There is nothing in the record showing that notice of the order of the trial court overruling appellant's motion for a new trial was given. On September 12, 1925, the appellant filed a notice of appeal and on the same day filed a notice with the clerk to have a transcript prepared. No question is made as to the sufficiency of these notices. On the 17th day of September, 1925, the appellant filed an undertaking to pay all costs on appeal. On the 6th day of February, 1926, the appellant filed an undertaking securing the payment of costs for preparing the transcripts. This undertaking was filed two days after the service of notice to dismiss. It would appear from the record that counsel for appellant, at the time of filing the undertaking on the 17th day of September, 1925, was laboring under a misapprehension as to the kind of undertaking that should be filed in order to comply with the sections of the Code governing appeals taken according to the alternative method.

There is nothing in the record showing whether the testimony in the case has or has not been transcribed; the only evidence is the certificate of the county clerk to the effect that no transcript of the evidence has been filed. Prior to the filing of the undertaking referred to on the 6th day of February, 1926, it appears that no arrangement was made with the clerk relative to costs. It does not appear one way or the other whether any such arrangements were made with the stenographic reporter.

[1, 2] Upon this state of facts, it is argued that the filing with the clerk of an undertaking to pay costs of preparing the transcript, or making some arrangement for the payment thereof, is jurisdictional, that the time has expired for preparing such transcript, and therefore that the appeal cannot be perfected. That the giving of notice to the clerk to prepare transcript is one of the jurisdictional steps to be taken when the appeal is by the alternative method is well established, and, based upon the authorities sustaining this rule, it is argued that the giving of an undertaking, as provided for in section 953b, is also jurisdictional. Section 953a specifies that it is the duty of the stenographic reporter to transcribe fully a report of the trial and file the same within 20 days after the notice to prepare a transcript has been filed with the clerk. This provision has been held to be merely directory, and a failure of the reporter to file the transcript within the time allowed is not jurisdictional, and, as said in 2 Cal. Jur. 623:

"Neither by statute nor rule of the appellate courts is there any provision prescribing a limit to the time within which the transcript is to be prepared, nor any penalty for the failure of the reporter to file the transcript within 20 days."

[3] That the filing of an undertaking with the clerk to pay costs is directory only and not mandatory, and therefore, not jurisdictional, has been decided so many times that we need only to refer to the cases. Pierce v. Works, 154 P. 852, 171 Cal. 684; Fisher v. Oliver, 164 P. 800, 174 Cal. 781; Smith v. Jaccard, 128 P. 1023, 1026, 20 Cal. App. 280; Carr v. Stern, 120 P. 35, 17 Cal. App. 397; Harpold v. Slocum, 143 P. 609, 168 Cal. 364; 2 Cal. Jur. 620, 625. The giving of the undertaking provided for in section 953b, Code of Civil Procedure, is a matter of security to the clerk and not jurisdictional. That there is neither rule nor statute as to the time of preparing the transcript has been decided by this court. Shaw v. Blasevich, 132 P. 278, 21 Cal. App. 498; Jaques v. Board of Supervisors, 135 P. 686, 22 Cal. App. 627. In the latter case it is held that rule 2 of the Supreme Court, relating to the filing of the transcript, dates from the date of certification of the transcript by the trial judge, and has nothing to do with the time allowed for the preparation of the transcript. In Smith v. Jaccard, supra, it is also pointed out that no penalty is provided on account of the failure of the reporter to complete his notes within 20 days after notice filed with the clerk.

[4] Where there has been a failure to proceed with diligence to have the transcript on appeal prepared in the lower court and no failure as to the jurisdictional steps necessary to be taken, the remedy for the delay must be in the trial court. As stated in Smith v. Jaccard:

"It is doubtless the duty of the appellant, as the moving party, to take the necessary steps to secure the filing of such transcript, and for want of diligence in such matter on his part it is within the power of the trial court to terminate his proceedings for procuring such transcript. The determination of the question as to whether or not there has been due diligence in such matter is one largely lying in the discretion of the trial court, with which the appellate court will not interfere unless it appears that the court in its action has abused its discretion"—citing Galbraith v. Lowe, 75 P. 831, 142 Cal. 295, and cases there cited.

In the case of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts, etc., Co., 207 P. 253, 189 Cal. 52, it is also held that the proceeding for want of diligence in the preparation of the transcript should be first taken in the trial court.

[5] Rule VI of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal of the state of California, effective March 1, 1919, requires before ordering the dismissal for the reasons set forth in this case, that there must be a showing of a dismissal of the proceedings for a settlement of a bill of exceptions or transcript in the trial court, or that the time to institute such a proceeding has expired. There is no such showing in this case. The delay in this case has not been of any great duration, and the delay is incident to matters over which the trial court has jurisdiction, and this court ought not to order a dismissal of an appeal where jurisdiction is not shown to be wanting and the alleged delays are only in matters of procedure, which are in no wise fatal to a hearing of the cause upon its merits. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

76 Cal. App. 601

ALLMAN et al. v. RICH. (Civ. 5282.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 23, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 22, 1926.)

1. Specific performance $\S$ 119—Plaintiff, in action for specific performance of contract relating to real property, must prove that contract was in writing or partially performed, and contained all material terms expressed in sufficiently definite manner (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1741).

Plaintiff, in action for specific performance of contract relating to real property, must prove that contract was either in writing or partially performed, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1741, and that it contained all material terms, expressed in sufficiently definite manner.

2. Specific performance $\S$ 121 (9).

Conflicting evidence as to meaning and intent of parties held not to warrant decree of specific performance of alleged contract for purchase of land, especially in view of conflicting finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action to establish a trust in certain real property by Solomon Allman, as administrator, and another, against Solomon V. Rich. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. J. Welch, Jr., of Riverside, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Morris Allman and Bernard Altman commenced this action to impress a trust on certain real property alleged to have been purchased by the defendant with funds furnished by the plaintiffs. Morris Allman has since deceased, and the action has been prosecuted by his administrator. Judgment went for the plaintiffs, from which the defendant appeals on typewritten transcripts.

In their complaint the plaintiffs alleged that on October 5, 1920, each of the plaintiffs entered into a contract in writing with the defendant in the same form, substance, and tenor, by which it was agreed that the defendant should purchase the land in suit on behalf of himself and the two plaintiffs, the interest of each to be an undivided interest in proportion to the amount paid by each, and that each of the plaintiffs was to furnish defendant the sum of $1,500 for that purpose; that each of the plaintiffs, on the execution of his contract, paid the defendant $1,500. It is then alleged that at the time of the execution of the contract the defendant represented to each of the plaintiffs that he was purchasing the land from the Southern Pacific Railway Company at the price of $15 an acre, while in truth he paid but $3.90 an acre therefor; that defendant thereafter deeded to each of the plaintiffs 100 acres of said land, and retained for himself about 400 acres thereof; that the entire purchase price of said lands was furnished by plaintiffs, and that no part thereof was paid out of the funds of defendant. Appropriate denials were made in the answer, and the cause went to trial on the issues thus framed.

The plaintiffs followed one of the approved forms of pleading an action upon a written contract "by setting forth its substance according to its legal effect." Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton, 86 P. 193, 194, 149 Cal. 195, 198. The contracts were not attacked for fraud, mistake, misrepresentation, or on other equitable grounds, and no revision or reformation of the contracts was sought. The allegations of fraud and misrepresentation go only to the alleged breach of that portion of the alleged contracts by which it was claimed that the defendant agreed to convey to each of the plaintiffs an undivided interest in the lands in proportion to the amount paid by each, but that, having falsely represented to them the cost of the lands, had conveyed to them but 100 acres each. The plaintiffs do not claim that the defendant, while occupying a station of trust and confidence, had overreached his position, or that they had suffered any damage because the property was not worth what they paid for it, or because the defendant had done any act to their injury. They do not repudiate their written contracts as they allege them to be, but, relying upon them, ask for their specific performance.

On the trial of the case the plaintiffs did not offer the alleged written contracts in evidence, made no offer of proof that they had ever been executed, and made no pretense that they had been lost or destroyed. Their case consisted of oral evidence of the conversations and negotiations had by the parties prior to the execution of the alleged written contracts, which evidence tended to show that the parties orally agreed in the same terms as the complaint alleged they contracted in writing. All this evidence was offered over the objections of defendant, who subsequently put in evidence two written contracts executed by the parties at the time alleged in the complaint, but which were materially different from those alleged. The situation is that the plaintiffs sued upon allegations that two written contracts were executed, proved that they were not, and then recovered upon them.

The difference between the parties is this: The plaintiffs alleged that the parties agreed in writing that the defendant should purchase from the Southern Pacific Railway Company a tract of land, describing it, and which consisted of 628.88 acres, and that the defendant agreed to transfer to them an undivided interest in said tract in proportion to the amount paid by each. The defendant answered that he had arranged for the purchase of the south half only of said tract, consisting of 314.44 acres; that he had paid to the Southern Pacific Company the purchase price thereof on October 1, 1920, but that a few days thereafter he was informed by the railway company that it would not sell the south half of said tract, but that it would be necessary for him to buy the entire tract of 628.88 acres, and that the money already paid would be accepted on account of the purchase of the entire tract. He then denied that the parties had ever agreed that the interest of the plaintiffs therein should be in proportion to the amount paid by each. It was then specifically alleged that the parties had on different dates separately entered into a contract to buy an undivided 100 acres of said land from the defendant for the sum of $1,500.

The undisputed proof is that the written contracts as alleged in the complaint were never executed, but that on October 5, 1920, the plaintiff Altman, and, on November 5, 1920, Morris Allman, each entered into a contract in writing with the defendant, both of the same tenor and effect, wherein it was recited that the defendant had purchased the entire tract of land, and that the second party (one of the plaintiffs) was purchasing from the defendant an undivided 100 acres of said land for the sum of $1,500, the payment of which was therein acknowledged. The purpose of these agreements seems to have been to satisfy the purchasers as to their interest in the land while the defendant was completing the purchase from the Southern Pacific Company. For this purpose it was agreed that the defendant should execute his quitclaim deed to an undivided 100 acres of said land to each of the purchasers, and that they were to hold these deeds in escrow until the defendant had obtained a warranty deed from the Southern Pacific Company, and that when the defendant's title to the land was clear he should execute to each of them a deed conveying 100 acres to each, which should thereupon be recorded. It further appears that these deeds were duly executed and delivered and recorded some time in February, 1921.

The trial court found that on or about October 5, 1920, the parties entered into "an agreement" (not written contract as alleged in the complaint), whereby the defendant agreed to purchase the land described in the complaint for the three parties as a joint adventure at the price of $15 an acre, and "the interest of each to be an undivided interest in proportion to the amount paid by each in cash, * * * and that said Bernard Altman and Morris Allman should receive each an undivided 100 acres of the above-described lands." There is a hopeless conflict in these findings. If the plaintiffs were to each receive an undivided 100 acres of the tract, they have no complaint so far as the transfer is concerned, as it is conceded that they each received and recorded their deeds to that acreage and hold the undisputed title thereto. On the other hand, if the agreement called for a division in proportion to the amount paid by each, it is apparent they were entitled to more than the 100 acres which they have received. The confusion seems to have come from the fact that the preliminary arrangements were made on the basis of the contemplated purchase by the defendant of a tract of land consisting of 314.44 acres. When, therefore, the defendant promised to each of the plaintiffs that he would transfer to each of them an undivided 100 acres of the tract he would have retained for himself about 114 acres, and thus each of the three parties would have owned approximately one-third of the entire tract. All the evidence of conversations between the parties relating to the contemplated purchase occurred prior to October 1st, when for the first time the defendant learned that it would be necessary for him to buy the entire tract of 628.88 acres.

[1, 2] There is a complete failure of the proof to correspond with the allegations of the complaint. Treating the action as one for the specific performance of a contract relating to real property, it was necessary to prove: (1) Either that the contract was in writing or that it had been partially performed (section 1741, Civ. Code); and (2) that the contract, whether written or oral, contained all the material terms expressed in a sufficiently definite manner. Unless the meaning and intent of the parties can be placed beyond the bounds of mere conjecture by full and clear proof a court of equity cannot enforce its provisions. Raymond v. Laboudigue, 84 P. 189, 148 Cal. 691, 694; Buckmaster v. Bertram, 200 P. 610, 186 Cal. 673, 676. It is impossible to say from the record before us, and particularly in view of the conflicting finding, whether the plaintiffs agreed to take an undivided one-third interest in the 314.44 acres; whether they agreed to take a proportion of 628.88 acres equal to the amount paid by them or whether they agreed to take but 100 acres, and, if so, whether this acreage was to come from the south half of the entire tract or from any portion thereof which the defendant elected to convey to them. Because of these uncertainties the case comes squarely within the rule of Buckmaster v. Bertram, supra, and on a retrial of the case care should be taken to determine with exactness the actual agreement which the parties made.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J

76 Cal. App. 594
COPPUCK v. HUFF. (Civ. 5016.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 23, 1926.)

Trover and conversion $\S$ 40(3)—Evidence held to show plaintiff had no title to cigar stand fixtures and merchandise alleged to have been converted.

Judgment for defendant, in suit for conversion of cigar stand, business, and fixtures, held sustained by evidence showing plaintiff never was owner of fixtures nor of merchandise at time of conversion, but that fixtures were part of hotel of which defendant was manager; that only right plaintiff had in cigar stand was that of a month to month tenant, who had relinquished possession by failure to pay rent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Albert H. Coppuck against John Doe Huff. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goldman, Nye & Surr, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Leon Samuels, M. V. Spicer, and Chas. J. McDonnell, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action in conversion. The complaint alleges that on or about the 11th day of June, 1923, plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of a certain cigar stand, business, and fixtures located in the Hotel Keystone at No. 54 Fourth street, San Francisco; that on said last-named day defendant unlawfully took possession of the same and converted the property to his own use, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $650, which amount is alleged to be the reasonable value of the property.

Defendant answering denied title in the plaintiff. The trial court found that plaintiff had no title to the property in question and never was the owner thereof, and it was decreed that he take nothing by his action, and judgment was accordingly entered in favor of defendant. It is claimed that the evidence does not support the findings as to ownership or title.

There is no merit in this contention. There is ample evidence to show that the only right plaintiff ever had in the premises was as a tenant at the monthly rental of $50 per month. It was alleged in the answer and it appeared in evidence that plaintiff purchased the business conducted at the cigar stand from one Shannon in the month of February, 1923. The cigar stand was located in the lobby of the building mentioned, and the fixtures connected therewith, including the cash register, were owned by the hotel.

When plaintiff took possession of the stand, he installed a manager therein, who was to conduct the same under a working agreement. The manager was to pay the sum of $50 a month to the hotel as rent, which amount was its charge for the premises, and an additional sum of $75 per month to plaintiff. These sums were to be paid out of the profits derived from the business, the manager to replenish and furnish the merchandise. Defendant Huff, who managed the hotel, did not approve of the arrangement. He was familiar with the amount of business usually carried on at the stand, and he knew that such business would not justify or even pay such a profit, and so informed plaintiff. Plaintiff, therefore, concluded to dispose of the stand. He advertised the place for sale and succeeded in procuring a purchaser in one J. Fleming, who agreed to give $850 for the business. Of this sum he paid $500 on account, and possession was surrendered to him. Fleming remained but a short time and sold the business to one Duke. Duke concluded that he had been swindled and he abandoned the business on May 25, 1923, and surrendered the keys to defendant as manager of the hotel, at the same time requesting him to dispose of the small quantity of stock on hand for his benefit.

The value of this merchandise was the sum of $12. Plaintiff, at the time he acquired the business, agreed to pay as rental $50 per month in advance commencing on the 26th day of February, 1923. He failed to pay any rent after April 26th following. After Duke had abandoned the property, plaintiff had a conversation with defendant concerning the business. Defendant agreed to permit him to again take possession of the stand upon condition that he would install therein merchandise to the extent of $300 and agree not to dispose of the business for a sum in excess of $650. This offer was made by defendant, for the reason that he was desirous of having a cigar stand operated in the hotel, but at the same time he wanted to see to it that no one else was swindled. Plaintiff refused to accept the offer or to have anything further to do with the enterprise. At this time plaintiff made no claim of any kind whatsoever upon defendant growing out of his connection with the business. Defendant thereafter restocked the stand at an outlay of some $300 and subsequently disposed of it, whereupon plaintiff brought this action. From this evidence it is manifest that plaintiff never was the owner of the fixtures, but, on the contrary, the same were a part of the Keystone Hotel, of which defendant was the manager. Nor was plaintiff the owner of any merchandise pertaining to the business at the time of the alleged conversion. Whatever merchandise he may have had was disposed of by his vendee or his successor long prior thereto.

As above stated, the only right that plaintiff had in the cigar stand was that of a month to month tenant. He had failed to pay his rent and had relinquished possession. The appeal is devoid of any merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 533

MORROW v. LEARNED. (Civ. 5285.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 18, 1926.)

Appeal and error ⇐ 154(4)—Stipulations ⇐ 18(9).

A "stipulation for judgment" is consent to entry of judgment, and "consent to judgment" is waiver of errors by consenting party.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by William L. Morrow against George O. Learned. From the judgment rendered pursuant to oral stipulation, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. Neal Ames, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jesse F. Watterman and A. W. Hutton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to cancel two written contracts and for damages for defendant's failure to perform. Judgment was rendered in pursuance to an oral stipulation made in open court granting plaintiff all he prayed for, with a condition favorable to the defendant. The plaintiff has appealed on typewritten transcripts.

The contracts in question were executed on May 24 and May 25, 1918. At the time plaintiff was owner of certain patents for the manufacture of gasoline engines, and was also the owner of some manufactured engines, an air pump, and an air compressor. By the terms of the contracts these manufactured articles were sold outright to the defendant, and he agreed to manufacture and sell other engines in accordance with plaintiff's patents sufficient to supply the demand therefor, and to account to the plaintiff for a stipulated portion of the proceeds. On August 5, 1919, plaintiff served notice of cancellation of the contracts upon the ground that defendant had failed to perform, and subsequently commenced an action for a cancellation and for damages. Judgment went against the plaintiff, and no appeal was taken.

On August 26, 1921, plaintiff again served notice of cancellation, and then commenced this action for a cancellation and for damages. The defendant pleaded the former action as a bar, and that was the principal question before the trial court. The plaintiff waived the claim for damages, and offered no evidence on that issue. After the defendant had rested and while the plaintiff was finishing his rebuttal he called the defendant to the stand and drew from him the admission that he would be satisfied to have the contracts canceled and to return to plaintiff all his plans, blue prints, and patterns if plaintiff would only concede his right to manufacture and sell a two-cylinder engine which the defendant had perfected and which was not covered by any of plaintiff's patents. Plaintiff was immediately called to the stand by his counsel and agreed that he had no patent on the two-cylinder engine mentioned by the defendant, and that he had no objection to the defendant's continuing to manufacture and sell that engine on his own responsibility. Counsel for defendant then interposed that that was all his client desired, and that if such an agreement could be made he would consent to judgment as prayed by plaintiff. The trial court then suggested a recess to enable the parties to reach an agreement.

When court reconvened, the following proceedings occurred:

"Mr. Watterman (attorney for defendant): If your honor please, the matter of compromise has just been submitted, and it was this: In consideration of the cancellation of the contracts Mr. Morrow will allow Mr. Learned a license to sell this two-cylinder engine in consideration of a small royalty such as Mr. Learned may be willing to pay. He said he is willing to pay $1 to Mr. Morrow. I think that is sufficient for each engine manufactured and sold. Not to be paid, of course, until within 30 days after Mr. Learned receives payment for the engines that he sells. Mr. Learned naturally is willing to turn back to Mr. Morrow all the patterns that he received from him, blue prints, whatever they are, but to retain, of course, the engines which he bought from him and the so-called air pump or compressor.

"Mr. Palmer (attorney for plaintiff): I think that is a correct statement, Mr. Watterman.

"The court: Better postpone the case for a few days and draw up that agreement and dismiss the action.

"Mr. Watterman: I think we better have judgment entered by stipulation.

"The Court: All right.

"Mr. Palmer: I think the court had better return judgment by stipulation.

"The Court: All right; what do you propose be received as the stipulation, then?

"Mr. Palmer: Mr. Watterman stated it.

"Mr. Watterman: Suppose we prepare a proper judgment, including the stipulation, and have it o. k'd.

"Mr. Palmer: That is all right.

"The Court: All right.

"Mr. Watterman: The only question to be considered, then, is the question of costs.

"Mr. Palmer: Each party pay his own costs.

"The Court: That is satisfactory.

"Mr. Watterman: Each party pay his own costs.

"The Court: I don't understand exactly what the stipulation is. I suppose you will put it in writing and bring it here later on and postpone this to a date certain, or just mark it submitted until you bring in the judgment.

"Mr. Watterman: I think it may be just marked submitted.

"The Court: All right; mark it submitted."

Plaintiff subsequently became dissatisfied, engaged new counsel, and refused to sign a written stipulation for the judgment. The court, following the agreement made by the parties in open court, entered judgment accordingly, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

On this appeal several technical grounds are urged by the appellant—the failure to file findings of fact and conclusions of law, that the provision in the judgment permitting the respondent to manufacture and sell the two-cylinder engine was without the issues, that as the stipulation was not in writing it should have been entered in the minutes of the court by the clerk, and that the judgment was entered ex parte without the knowledge of appellant. It is not necessary to consider any of these grounds, because, if any error occurred, the appellant has not suggested any possible prejudice.

The judgment was entered on the stipulation of the parties given in open court. A stipulation for a judgment is a consent to the entry of the judgment, and "a consent to a judgment is a waiver of errors by a party consenting thereto." Jackson v. Brown, 23 P. 142, 82 Cal. 275, 278. A judgment so entered will not be disturbed on appeal. Erlanger v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 42 P. 31, 109 Cal. 395; Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Waymire, 92 P. 645, 152 Cal. 286.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 290

HANHART v. MADERA COUNTY.
(Civ. 3029.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1926.)

1. Time ⚡6—Publication once each week for designated number of weeks satisfies requirement of publication for designated number of weeks.

Requirement that notice be published for designated number of weeks in some newspaper of county is fully satisfied by publication once each week for designated number of weeks, it not being necessary that full time prescribed shall intervene between first and last publication.

2. Counties ⚡114—Estoppel ⚡62(3)—Tax collector not authorized to contract for publication of delinquent tax list for four successive weeks and claim for fourth publication properly disallowed, and county board of supervisors not estopped from rejecting claim by reason of previous custom of paying therefor (Pol. Code, § 3766).

In view of Pol. Code, § 3766, providing for publication of delinquent tax lists once a week for three successive weeks, tax collector is without authority to contract for publication for four successive weeks, and, fourth publication being of no benefit to county, board of supervisors properly disallowed publisher's claim therefor, and, it being illegal, previous custom of paying for fourth publication does not estop rejection of claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by D. R. Hanhart, doing business under the firm name and style of Madera Mercury, against the county of Madera. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Barcroft & Barcroft, of Madera, for appellant.

Mason A. Bailey, of Madera, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff published the delinquent tax list of the defendant county, in the month of June, 1924, once each week during four successive weeks. His claim therefor was allowed for the first three publications, but disallowed as to the fourth. This action was brought to recover for the fourth publication. It was stipulated:

"That since the year 1893 it has always been the custom of the tax collector of the county of Madera to require the publication of the delinquent tax list or roll to be made four times during the three weeks' interval prescribed by law, and until the rejection of the claim on which this suit is brought, the supervisors of the county of Madera have always paid for making four publications of said delinquent tax list or roll."

After three publications of the list had been made, the tax collector, "by his requisition in writing," directed plaintiff to "complete the printing of the 1924 delinquent tax roll of Madera county (for taxes of 1923) according to section 3766 of the Political Code of California." The plaintiff thereupon made the fourth publication. The defendant was given judgment, and the plaintiff has appealed.

[1] Section 3766 of the Political Code provides for the publication of delinquent tax lists by the tax collector as follows:

"The publication must be made once a week for three successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation published in the county, and must be paid therefor at the county rate for advertising as fixed by the board of supervisors,"

In the construction of similar statutes the decisions of the courts of different jurisdictions are not in harmony. "In some jurisdictions it is held that a provision of the statute for publication 'once a week for four successive weeks' contemplates 'a full four weeks' publication, and not four times in four different weeks. In others the courts have held that such a provision does not mean four weeks of seven days each, and that the publication is completed on the day on which the summons is published in the fourth successive week, although less than twenty-eight days have elapsed since it was first published." 21 R. C. L. 1301. The latter rule of construction has been followed in this state. "Where the publication is made once each week instead of daily, it is not necessary that the full time prescribed by the order shall intervene between the first and last publication, but only that the summons shall be published once each week during the time prescribed." 21 Cal. Jur. 517. "It is settled in this state that a requirement that a notice be published for a designated number of weeks in some newspaper published in the county is fully satisfied by a publication once each week for the designated number of weeks. * * * The two publications, one each week, constituted a publication for two weeks." Sherwood v. Wallin, 154 Cal. 735, 739, 99 P. 191, 193. Where a defendant is a nonresident of the state, publication of summons must be made at least once a week for not less than two months. Code Civ. Proc. § 413. "It is not at all necessary that two full calendar months should intervene between the first and last publication." Foster v. Veh- meyer, 133 Cal. 459, 460, 65 P. 974; S. & L. Society v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347, 353. See, also, Hensley v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 541, 542, 44 P. 232; Wise v. Williams, 88 Cal. 30, 34, 25 P. 1064; Beck v. Wilson, 49 Cal. App. 281, 282, 193 P. 158; Hoffecker v. Board of Supervisors, 23 Cal. App. 405, 408, 138 P. 371.

[2] Appellant contends that the tax collector had discretion to cause the list to be published for four weeks, and that the defendant is legally bound to pay for such publication. The tax collector is no more authorized to contract for publication for one week more than the law requires than for five or any number of weeks. The statute is the measure of his authority. A fourth publication was unnecessary and was of no benefit to the county. A board of supervisors may certainly disallow a claim for an unnecessary and unauthorized expense incurred by an officer of the county. The complaint alleges that the county accepted the benefit of the fourth publication, and appellant contends that defendant is estopped thereby and by its previous uniform custom of paying for a fourth publication. As stated, the county received no benefit from the fourth publication, and it requires no citation of authorities to show that the custom of allowing illegal claims for any length of time does not estop a public officer to reject a similar illegal claim. Undoubtedly the plaintiff made the fourth publication in good faith, but that fact does not warrant payment therefor from the public funds.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 565

COOMBS v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(Civ. 5133.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 19, 1926.)

1. Master and servant §417(4¼).

Reviewing court cannot consider affidavits in reference to stipulation made at hearing before referee hearing claim for compensation for injuries.

2. Master and servant §373—Injury to employee's knee from putting more weight on it than on other, caused by position assumed in work, held compensable (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act [St. 1917, p. 833, § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911, § 1]).

Injury to employee's knee, resulting from kneeling and putting more weight on injured knee than on the other, caused by position assumed in process of finishing cement work for employer, held compensable, in view of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act

(St. 1917, p. 833, § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911, § 1).

3. Master and servant §417(7)—Reviewing court can annul award of Industrial Accident Commission only where finding of fact is without any evidence.

Reviewing court can annul Industrial Accident Commission's conclusions on questions of fact only where commission's finding of fact is without any evidence whatever to support it, and, where there is a conflict in testimony, commission is final arbiter.

4. Master and servant §417(7).

Reviewing court must assume that Industrial Accident Commission believed all evidence given which tends to sustain award.

5. Master and servant §417(5).

Reviewing court cannot annul award of Industrial Accident Commission because findings are inconsistent.

6. Master and servant §416—Industrial Accident Commission does not lose jurisdiction by failing to make award within 30 days (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act [St. 1917, p. 850, § 20a]).

Industrial Accident Commission does not lose jurisdiction of claim for compensation by failing to make award within 30 days; Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, § 20a, being directory only.

7. Certiorari §49—On writ of review, record of proceedings in lower tribunal must be ascertained wholly from record.

On writ of review, record of proceedings in lower tribunal must be ascertained wholly from record as shown by return to the writ, except that in a proper case an amended or supplementary return might be required.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Oliver J. Musland, claimant, opposed by S. H. Coombs, employer. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission to claimant, the employer brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

John A. Rush, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondents.

YORK, J. [1] The only questions raised in support of the allegations of the petition for a writ of review herein are questions that involve the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings. We cannot, of course, consider the affidavits in re the stipulation made at the hearing before the referee, as the record of this matter before us cannot be so made up or so changed.

[2] The evidence of the claimant was that he was not injured in a ball game as several witnesses have stated that he had told them. He denied having ever stated this. He further testified that he first noticed the injury to his knee but a few days before he quit work; that it was a gradual swelling, not the result of a sudden injury, but rather the effect of kneeling and putting more weight on the injured knee than on the other, necessarily caused, he stated, by the position he had to assume in the process of finishing cement work, which was the work which he was employed by the employer to do. This constituted a compensable injury. Subdivision 4 of section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, as amended, Stats. 1919, p. 911; Deering's Gen. Laws (1923 Ed.) Act 4749.

[3-5] In Walker, Petitioner, v. Industrial Accident Commission et al., respondents, 171 P. 954, 177 Cal. 738, L. R. A. 1918F, 212, the Supreme Court says:

"Our authority, with respect to the commission's conclusions on questions of fact, goes no further than to permit the annulment of an award where the commission's finding of a fact is without any evidence whatever to support it. Where there is a conflict in the testimony, or where opposing inferences may reasonably be drawn, the commission is the final arbiter."

In the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 170 P. 823, 177 Cal. 380, the Supreme Court says:

"This court, in reviewing awards of the commission, is not acting as a court of appeal. It has no power to weigh the effect of positive evidence. It must assume that the commission believed all the evidence given which tends to sustain the award made. Likewise the court has no power to annul an award because the findings are inconsistent."

In quoting from Dr. Magan's certificate of September 17, 1925, the petitioner herein omits from each reference to the same the word "apparently," and makes such statement out as an unequivocal statement of positive fact. Quoting from the brief of respondent Industrial Accident Commission, page 15, we adopt the following:

"The findings of fact of April 7, 1925, state that the employer was liable for the medical expense, the amount to be determined by supplemental proceedings. The award omits allowance of medical expenses for this reason. The award, therefore, is not subject to annulment. Whether a finding of fact can be annulled where the award is not involved is doubtful, as section 67, referring to review by the courts, provides only for review of orders, rules, regulations, decisions, and awards, and not findings of fact which are expressly made not subject to review.

"Furthermore, in the petition for rehearing filed by Coombs with respondent commission, no contention is made of error with respect to the finding of medical expense. The illegality was therefore waived and cannot now be raised.

Savercool's Case, Great Western Power Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 238 P. 662. Section 64 (c), Workmen's Compensation Act.

"On May 26, 1925, respondent Commission made a supplemental award for medical expense. No petition for rehearing has been filed by petitioner challenging this order, and the supplemental award would seem therefore to have become final. Section 64(c), 65(a)."

The record shows that the following stipulation was entered into in the presence of the parties:

"7. That at said time the actual daily earnings of the employee were $6, for employment six days a week, and that the average weekly earnings may be computed upon that basis."

As to the third proposition raised by the petitioner, the question is covered by the case of Moore Shipbuilding Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. App.) 233 P. 392, 393.

There is no evidence in this matter to show any fact as to any part or portion of the injury suffered by respondent Musland having occurred or having been contributed to by any prior employment. The only evidence which we have is the evidence of Musland as to the fact that he first noticed the injury coming on a few days before he quit his employment. As a matter of fact, the petitioner herein contends that the injury occurred on the day after he quit his employment, in a ball game, which would probably of itself dispose of any such contention. Therefore it would have been beyond the power of the commission to make any award to be distributed in proportion among any other employers and for whom the applicant may have theretofore worked. As to the length of time that Musland worked there was a conflict as to that, but the total period under any way of figuring was more than 10 days, as claimed in the third paragraph of petitioner's points and authorities.

[6] As to the question of the Commission losing jurisdiction for failing to make the award within 30 days, we hold that section 20 (a) of the Compensation Act is directory only.

[7] On writ of review the record of the proceedings in the lower tribunal must be ascertained wholly from the record, as shown by the return to the writ, except that in a proper case an amended or supplementary return might be required. Bryant v. Board of Supervisors, 163 P. 341, 32 Cal. App. 502.

As there are sufficient facts in evidence, or shown by the stipulation, to sustain each and every one of the findings of the commission, the award is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

76 Cal. App. 621

ANGELOPOULOS v. BOTTORFF, City Manager, et al. (Civ. 3067.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 24, 1926.)

1. Constitutional law ☞275(1)—Fundamental right to engage in lawful business, not inimical to public welfare, cannot be taken away, except by due process of law and opportunity to be heard (Const. U. S. Amend. 14; Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13).

The fundamental right to engage in a business or occupation otherwise lawful, and not inimical to public welfare, is different from occupations considered as mere privilege, and cannot be taken away except by due process of law and opportunity to be heard, in view of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, and Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13.

2. Constitutional law ☞275(1)—Right to conduct restaurant business is a property right, which cannot be taken away, except by due process of law.

The right to conduct a restaurant business is a property right as distinguished from an occupation or business permitted to be conducted or engaged in as a mere privilege, and the deprivation, interference, or prevention of one's engaging therein is a deprivation of a property right, which cannot be done except by due process of law.

3. Constitutional law ☞287—Cancellation of restaurant license without notice or opportunity to be heard held a deprivation of property right without due process of law (Const. U. S. Amend. 14; Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13).

Cancellation of restaurant license under ordinance, without notice and opportunity to be heard, held void as deprivation of property right without due process of law, in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, and Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 1, 13.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by John Angelopoulos against H. C. Bottorff, as City Manager of the City of Sacramento, and others, to enjoin interference with plaintiff's business as restaurant keeper. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Ralph H. Lewis, of Sacramento, for appellant.

R. L. Shinn and C. J. Hasman, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff, a restaurant keeper of the city of Sacramento, began this action to restrain the defendants from interfering with his business as such restaurant keeper, under and by virtue of a purported revocation of a license theretofore issued to him authorizing such business upon payment of certain fees, etc.

The demurrer of the defendants to the plaintiff's complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appeals. It appears from the complaint that the plaintiff is the owner of a certain leasehold interest in property situate at 205 K street in the city of Sacramento; that the value of said lease is the sum of $1,000; that at the time of interference complained of the plaintiff was conducting a restaurant business at the location named under a license authorizing him so to do. The record shows that on or about the 1st day of October, 1921, the city council of the city of Sacramento enacted an ordinance providing for the licensing and regulating the carrying on of certain trades, professions, occupations, etc.; that on or about the 1st day of December, 1921, the ordinance just referred to was amended by including restaurant keepers. Thereafter, and on or about the 11th day of May, 1922, the city council enacted Ordinance No. 73, fourth series, purporting to amend the ordinance first mentioned herein, known as Ordinance No. 18, fourth series. Ordinance No. 73, so enacted, contained a provision that licenses issued under Ordinance No. 18, fourth series, might thereafter be canceled by the city council at any time without notice to holders thereof, upon satisfactory evidence to the city council that the holder had violated any of the conditions of the license, or had violated any law of the United States or of the state of California or any ordinance of the city of Sacramento, and that thereafter the person whose license had been so canceled should not be entitled to receive any business license of any character from the city of Sacramento except upon a permit from the city council. On the 17th day of August, 1922, the city council of the city of Sacramento enacted Ordinance No. 87, fourth series, providing further that, in the event of a cancellation for cause of any business license issued by the city of Sacramento, the license fee paid by the licensee for such license should be forfeited to the city of Sacramento. In the event of the cancellation for cause of any license issued by the city of Sacramento for any business at a particular location, no other license shall be issued to any person for the same kind of business at said location, nor for the conducting of any of the following businesses: (Here follows a list of businesses named, including that of restaurant keeper) within one year after said cancellation, except upon a permit from the city council. The ordinance then provides that the license may be granted or refused at the discretion of the city council, and may be revoked without notice to the holder thereof upon evidence satisfactory to the council that any of the statements set forth in the application are untrue, or that the conditions specified in the application have been violated; also that the applicant shall deposit with the city controller the sum of $500 in cash as security that the licensee will not violate, nor permit to be violated, any law of the United States, or of the state of California or any ordinance of the city of Sacramento in the conducting of, or in connection with, said business, and, further, that, if the city council shall at a hearing thereof determine any of said laws or ordinances have been violated, or permitted to be violated by the licensee, the council shall have the right to declare said deposit forfeited to the city of Sacramento.

The record shows further that upon the enactment of Ordinance No. 18, fourth series, the plaintiff applied to the city controller of the city of Sacramento for a license to conduct a restaurant business on the premises named; that a license was issued to him, and ever since said date the plaintiff has paid the fees provided by said ordinance for the license pertaining to his business as a restaurant keeper; that said license was in full force and effect at the dates herein mentioned; that on the 3d day of January, 1924, the city council of the city of Sacramento revoked plaintiff's license upon the ground that he had theretofore, to wit, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1923, in the police court of the city of Sacramento, been convicted on a charge of having in his possession three ounces of intoxicating liquor, and for no other cause whatever; that on the 4th day of January, 1924, the defendants notified the plaintiff that his license had been revoked, and that he would not longer be permitted to conduct his restaurant business at the place named, and that he could not thereafter engage in any business in the city of Sacramento without the consent of the city council, and threatened to arrest the plaintiff and prosecute him upon the charge of violating Ordinance No. 18, fourth series, for the attempt to continue in business. The complaint contains further allegations as to what the defendants threatened to do, and concludes with the allegation of the damages suffered by such acts. It also further appears that the purported revocation of plaintiff's license was had without any notice being served upon him or opportunity of hearing being given, nor does it appear anywhere in the record that the possession of the three ounces of liquor referred to as the alleged cause of the revocation of plaintiff's license was had or possessed by the plaintiff in connection with his restaurant business.

While the same constitutional objections are urged by the appellant against the various provisions of the different ordinances set forth herein for the purposes of this decision, we need consider only one question—the fact that the plaintiff's license was ordered revoked by the city council without notice being given to the plaintiff and an opportunity afforded him to be heard and show cause, if any he had, why his license should not be revoked.

[1] There appears to be some conflict in the authorities relating to the power of the city council to revoke a license without notice, apparently due to the fact that the distinction has not been kept clearly in mind between a right to do business and a privilege to engage in certain occupations, usually attended by acts inimical to the public welfare, such as the keeping of saloons. But whatever the rule is in other states it is now well settled in California that the fundamental right to engage in a business or occupation otherwise lawful and not inimical to the public welfare is different from occupations considered as a mere privilege, and is surrounded with certain constitutional safeguards, among which is the right to be heard, and the further fact that this right cannot be taken away except by due process of law. These matters are clearly set forth in the case of Abrams v. Daugherty, 212 P. 942, 60 Cal. App. 297:

"The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. Article I, section 1, of the Constitution of California, provides that all men have certain inalienable rights, among them being those of enjoying liberty and possessing and protecting property, and section 13 thereof provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. The deprivation of such right without due process of law would be a violation of these provisions. The meaning of this is that no one can be deprived thereof without notice and an opportunity for a hearing before some tribunal authorized to determine the question.' To the same effect is Brecheen v. Riley (200 P. 1042, 1044) 187 Cal. 121, 124, where the court, having the Real Estate Brokers' Act under consideration, say: 'It is firmly established that it is the right of every person to pursue any lawful business or vocation he may select, subject to such legal restrictions and regulations as the proper governmental authority may impose for the protection and safety of society, and that such right is valuable and must be protected and secured, and cannot be taken from those who possess it, without 'due process of law.' In Schomig v. Keiser (209 P. 550, 551) 189 Cal. 596, while considering the same act, the court say: 'The portion of the act which authorizes the real estate commissioner to forfeit the license of a broker or salesman and take it away from him is highly penal in its nature, and should not be construed to include anything which is not embraced within its terms.' In Hovey v. Elliott, 17 S. Ct. 841, 167 U. S. 409, 418 (42 L. Ed. 215, see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes), it is said: 'It is a rule as old as the law, and never more to be respected than now, that no one shall be personally bound until he has had his day in court, by which is meant, until he has been duly cited to appear, and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard. Judgment without such citation and opportunity wants all the attributes of a judicial determination; it is judicial usurpation and oppression, and can never be upheld where justice is justly administered.'"

In Suckow v. Alderson, 187 P. 965, 182 Cal. 247, in considering the right to be heard, the court holds that due process of law includes "the meaning of this is that no one can be deprived thereof without notice and an opportunity for a hearing before some tribunal authorized to determine the question," and that these are matters guaranteed by the Constitution of the state of California. In Brechen v. Riley, 200 P. 1044, 187 Cal. 122, the court, in considering the questions which we have here presented, said:

"It is firmly established that it is the right of every person to pursue any lawful business or vocation he may select, subject to such legal restrictions and regulations as the proper governmental authority may impose for the protection and safety of society, and that such right is valuable and must be protected and secured, and cannot be taken from those who possess it, without 'due process of law'"—citing a number of authorities.

[2] We do not think it necessary to cite authorities that the right to conduct a restaurant business is a property right, as contradistinguished from occupations or businesses permitted to be conducted or engaged in as a mere privilege, and that the deprivation or interference or prevention of one's engaging in the business of conducting a restaurant is a deprivation of a property right, and that all the cases of this state holding that such property rights cannot be taken away except by due process of law are applicable. In Modern Loan Co. v. Police Court, 108 P. 56, 12 Cal. App. 582, the court, in considering certain sections of the Penal Code relating to the restoration of stolen property, said:

"One who is in possession of property under a claim of right cannot be deprived of its possession without due process of law; and in order to constitute due process of law, there must be notice of the time and place of hearing and an opportunity to be heard. * * * The statute should give the parties interested in the property an opportunity of presenting, in a deliberate, regular and orderly method, issues of fact and of law to the court or to a court and jury unless a jury is waived. Under these two sections, irrespective of the value of the property, and without any right of appeal, and without the slightest notice, * * * the magistrate may proceed * * * to * * * make an award. A proceeding permitting this contravenes the provisions of the state and federal Constitutions that a person cannot be deprived of his property without due process of law."

It has been held that notice and opportunity to be heard is a right and not a mere matter of discretion. In Brookes v. City of Oakland, 117 P. 433, 160 Cal. 423, the same rule is applied with regard to sewer assessments, holding notice and an opportunity to be heard necessary. Also in Bannerman v. Boyle, 116 P. 732, 160 Cal. 197, it is held that, where it is provided that an officer may be removed for cause without other qualifying words, such removal can only be had after notice and hearing. The same rule is also laid down in 16 Cal. Jur. 261. In the case of State ex rel. Makris v. Superior Court of Pierce County, 193 P. 845, 113 Wash. 296, 12 A. L. R. 1428, the questions which we are here considering were fully considered, and the rule which we have stated followed. In the Makris Case, supra, the ordinance involved contained the following:

"The license of any business mentioned in this section may be revoked by the commissioner of public safety in his discretion for disorderly or immoral conduct or gambling on the premises, or whenever the preservation of public morality, health, peace or good order shall in his judgment render such revocation necessary," etc.

No provision was made for hearing. The commissioner of public health, being of the opinion that a certain candy store having permission to sell soft drinks, without any previous notice or hearing, notified Makris, among other things, as follows:

"You are hereby advised that said license is revoked, effective to-day, under the provisions of section 47 of Ordinance No. 6749 as amended by Ordinance No. 7301."

The court, in holding the order of revocation void and the section of the ordinance providing therefor void, used the following language:

"Our decision in Seattle v. Gibson [165 P. 109, 96 Wash. 425] and those of the federal and state courts upon which that decision is rested render it plain that it is sufficient to render a law or ordinance void in the light of these constitutional guaranties, if the prescribed manner of administering such law or ordinance results in leaving the question of the propriety of issuing, withholding, or revoking a license to conduct an ordinarily lawful business, and thus the question of who may and who may not engage in such business, to the decision of any officer or set of officers, uncontrolled by any prescribed rule of action," —and further said that no law can be passed "grant[ing] to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens," which corresponds to section 21 of article I of our state Constitution.

[3] Nothing said herein is intended to limit or restrict the powers of the city council to enact all such regulations generally classified as police regulations to protect the public health and morals in relation to the conduct of the business licensed. The ordinances under consideration go much further and include violations of law having no relation to the businesses being conducted. Under the terms of the ordinances, the violation of the state traffic laws might be made the basis for the revocation of a license, which leads to only one of two conclusions, that the violations of law or ordinance referred to must have relation to the business licensed, or that the ordinance is void in toto. The violation of law alleged in this case does not appear to have been in connection with the business licensed, but, whether such be or be not the case, the fact that the revocation was had without notice or hearing renders the purported order of cancellation void, and, as that is the only question necessary to be decided in this case, we limit our ruling to the failure to give notice and afford an opportunity for a hearing.

Upon the matters set forth in plaintiff's complaint, it would appear that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief asked, but, as the cause is before us upon a judgment entered after an order of the trial court sustaining the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, we are limited to reversing the judgment, with directions to the trial court to overrule defendants' demurrer and permit the defendants to answer the plaintiff's complaint within such reasonable time as such court may allow, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PULLEN, Justice pro tem.

76 Cal. App. 645

PEOPLE v. CUNNINGHAM. (Cr. 1297.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 26, 1926.)

1. Criminal law $\S$ 829(6)—Refusal of instructions to acquit if defendant was laboring under defect of reason, could not distinguish between right and wrong, or was moved by irresistible impulse, held not error, in view of instructions given.

In murder trial, refusal of instructions to acquit if defendant was laboring under any defect of reason, could not distinguish between right and wrong, or was moved by irresistible impulse, and that law excepted insane persons and incapables from responsibility for crime, held not error, in view of instructions given.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 773(1)—Instructions to acquit if defendant was laboring under defect of reason, could not distinguish between right and wrong, or was moved by irresistible impulse, and that insane persons and incapables are not responsible for crime, held not called for by evidence.

Evidence in murder trial held not to call for instructions to acquit if defendant was laboring under defect of reason, could not distinguish between right and wrong, or was moved by irresistible impulse, and that law excepts insane persons and incapables from responsibility for crime.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Merrie Cunningham was convicted of second degree murder, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph L. Fainer, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was tried upon an information charging her with the murder of Robert Smith. She was convicted of second degree murder and has appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] The sole ground raised on the appeal is that the trial judge erred in refusing to give five different instructions requested by the appellant touching the subject of mental incapacity. In these proposed instructions the trial judge was asked to advise the jury that the appellant was entitled to an acquittal if they should find that at the time of the commission of the act she had been laboring under any defect of reason, temporary or otherwise, or was without sufficient capacity to distinguish between right and wrong or was moved by an irresistible impulse, and that the law of the state excepted from responsibility for crime insane persons and "incapables." Though these instructions were refused, the trial judge did instruct the jury fully on the subject of the necessity of a finding of the existence of a criminal intent, a sound mind, and discretion on the part of the accused. This was followed by instructions covering the presumptions of law regarding the existence of criminal intent and the presumptions covering sanity and insanity. All this was followed by an instruction reading:

"A person is not guilty of any crime, if at the time of the commission of the act charged such person is not conscious of its commission, or if the person committed the act or made the omission charged through misfortune or by accident, where it appears that there was no evil design, intention or culpable negligence."

[2] From an examination of the entire record, we are satisfied that the jury was fully and fairly instructed on all the material issues of the case, and that there was no error in the refusal to give any one of the five proposed instructions heretofore mentioned. The case was a clear case of murder frankly and freely admitted by the appellant. She and the deceased had been living together as husband and wife for a period of about two months when the deceased informed her that he intended to leave her and go back to an old sweetheart in Oregon. This statement was made to her at about 2 o'clock in the morning while they were in bed together, and was followed by some pleading on the part of the appellant and stout resistance on the part of the deceased. The deceased went to sleep, and about two hours later the appellant, having remained awake and brooded upon the approaching separation, arose from bed, went to a dresser that stood in the room, and procured a revolver, and, returning to the bed, shot the deceased in the back while he still slept. The revolver was discharged four times; two bullets striking the deceased, one shattering a mirror hung over the dresser, and another striking the wall of the bedroom. The appellant immediately confessed her part in the shooting and gave as the only reason therefor the threat of the deceased to leave her on the following day. There was not at any stage of the trial any plea or any suggestion of insanity or mental incapacity of either a temporary or of a permanent nature. In this view of the record, the evidence did not call for or justify the giving of the instructions which the appellant proposed.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 530

WELDON v. LAWRENCE et al. (Civ. 5196.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 18, 1926.)

1. Quieting title ☞10(1).

Plaintiff, in action to quiet title, cannot prevail unless he shows title in himself.

2. Vendor and purchaser ☞228(2)—Attempted conveyance of title to one who was not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice is ineffective, as against a prior grantee to whom grantor had theretofore conveyed valid title.

Where grantor conveyed title by valid deed, an attempted subsequent conveyance of title by same grantor to another, who was not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, is ineffective as against prior grantee.

3. Appeal and error ☞1011(1)—Trial court's finding, on conflicting evidence, that grantor delivered deed with intent and understanding that grantee should record it, held controlling on appeal.

Question of delivery of deed being one of fact to be found from surrounding circumstances, trial court's finding on conflicting evidence that grantor executed and delivered deed conveying property, with intent and understanding that grantee should record the same, held controlling on appeal.

4. Deeds ☞60—Delivery of deed as present deed of grantor operates to vest title immediately, without reference to performance of conditions, though contrary to express stipulation of parties (Civ. Code, § 1056).

In view of Civ. Code, § 1056, on delivery of deed to grantee as present deed of grantors, it became free of any conditions not expressed in deed itself, and operated to vest title immediately without reference to performance of conditions, though such result may have been contrary to expressed stipulation of parties.

5. Fraudulent conveyances ☞172(1).

That grantor may have executed deed for purpose of defrauding his creditors does not affect validity of deed as between parties thereto.

6. Deeds ☞8—Vendor, after conveying valid title, cannot subsequently convey such title to another as would entitle such other to maintain action to quiet title against prior grantee.

After grantor has made valid transfer of title to another, he cannot subsequently convey such title to one not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, as would entitle latter to maintain action to quiet title against prior grantee.

7. Deeds ☞19—Where validity of completely executed conveyance transferring title was not made dependent on performance of future conditions, grantee's failure to perform promise to pay balance of purchase price is not legal grounds for nullification.

Where validity of completely executed conveyance, transferring title for valuable consideration, was not by its terms made dependent on performance of future conditions, failure of grantee to perform promise made by him in regard to payment of balance of purchase price would not serve as legal grounds for nullification of conveyance.

8. Pleading ☞354(2)—Trial ☞89—Refusal, in action to quiet title, to strike out answers and testimony of one in possession made party defendant, held not erroneous (Code Civ. Proc. § 389).

Where, in action to quiet title, one in actual possession of property was made party defendant, held, that under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, court did not err in refusing to strike out answers and testimony of such defendant, as his interest in property was necessary element to be considered.

9. Judgment ☞106(2)—Default judgment on supplemental complaint against defendant, made prior to time defendant was substituted as party defendant, and without his having been served with copy thereof, held properly denied (Code Civ. Proc. § 585).

Request for default judgment on supplemental complaint against defendant, made prior to time he was substituted as party defendant, and without such defendant having been served with copy thereof, held properly denied, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 585.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Thomas P. Weldon against E. W. Lawrence and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fred A. Shaeffer, of Santa Maria, for appellant.

W. C. Carpenter of Los Angeles, and H. J. Dubin and A. E. Campbell, both of San Luis Obispo, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is an action to quiet title, whereby plaintiff sought to obtain a decree for the cancellation of a deed executed by plaintiff's predecessors in interest, purporting to convey to defendant E. W. Lawrence certain real property situate in the city of San Luis Obispo; also, to declare plaintiff to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the premises described in said deed and to quiet his title thereto against all claims asserted by the defendants under said deed or under a contract of sale executed simultaneously with said deed; also, for damages in the sum of $200 for the alleged unlawful detention of said premises. The judgment was that plaintiff take nothing by his action and that defendants recover their costs. Plaintiff appeals.

The following facts appear from the record: Dio Sherwin and his wife, Irene Sherwin, were formerly the owners of said property, which was subject to a bank mortgage of $3,500. On May 16, 1922, they entered into a contract of purchase and sale with defendant E. W. Lawrence, whereby they agreed to sell said property to Lawrence for the sum of $5,500. Payment of the sum of $500 was made at the time the contract was signed, and the purchaser agreed to pay an additional $1,500 in cash on July 1, 1922, and to assume the payment of the principal sum of said bank mortgage. Said contract provided for immediate possession by the purchaser; also, that the seller should furnish a certificate showing clear title at date of sale, and upon payment of the balance of the purchase price would give a good and sufficient deed conveying the property free and clear of all incumbrances. Said contract further provided that if the title proved defective the sum of $500 should be returned, but that if said certificate showed clear title and final payment was not made according to the agreement, said sum should be forfeited; that time was of the essence of the agreement. Contemporaneously with the execution of said contract of purchase and sale and as part of the same transaction, Sherwin and his wife signed and acknowledged a deed conveying said property to Lawrence. The deed and the contract were prepared by and signed in the presence of W. C. Carpenter, with whom Lawrence was engaged in certain real estate enterprises. The legality of the delivery of said deed to Lawrence is challenged by appellant, but it is undisputed that Lawrence came into possession of said deed in Carpenter's office on the day of its execution and immediately filed the same for record. Shortly after the recordation of said deed, defendant Hodson, for whom the property was purchased by Lawrence, went into possession and moved onto said property a house which he had previously purchased. He has since expended about $6,000 in making other permanent improvements. Final payment on the purchase price was not made by Lawrence on July 1, 1922, the day on which it became due, for the reason, as he claims, that the Sherwins failed to furnish a certificate showing clear title to the property and that in fact the title thereto was not clear. With respect to the matter of title the record shows that on May 18, 1922, two days after said contract and said deed had been executed, a default judgment was entered against the Sherwins in the superior court of San Luis Obispo county for the payment of the sum of $615.05; and on the following day, May 19, 1922, the mortgagee instituted foreclosure proceedings wherein attorney's fees in the sum of $350 were demanded. Later, and on July 14, 1922, the sheriff served a writ of execution on Lawrence for the collection of the Sherwin judgment, obedient to which Lawrence paid the sum of $632.58. On July 19, 1922, the Sherwins executed a second deed to the property by which they attempted to convey title to appellant Weldon, and on July 26, 1922, Weldon commenced this action. Weldon was not a bona fide purchaser for a value, having accepted said deed with full notice of the existence of the former deed and under an agreement with the Sherwins to divide with them the amount of any purchase price which might be received by him upon subsequent sale of the property. The trial court found in favor of defendants on all contested issues except those arising under a supplemental complaint in which appellant claimed damages for alleged unlawful detention of said property, and as to those issues the court made no findings. The form of judgment rendered was that plaintiff take nothing by his action and that defendants recover their costs.

Appellant does not seek to collect the balance due on the purchase price under the executory terms of said contract of sale; the action being, as he contends, one to quiet title, by which he asks for a decree adjudging him to be the owner in fee simple of said property to the exclusion of all claims made by the defendants. The obvious effect of such a decree, if obtained, would be to forfeit the $500 paid by Lawrence to the Sherwins and to vest in appellant ownership of the improvements placed on the property by Hodson.

[1] "It is elementary that a plaintiff in an action to quiet title cannot prevail unless he shows title in himself." Williams v. City of San Pedro, etc., Co., 94 P. 234, 153 Cal. 44; Sears v. Willard, 130 P. 869, 165 Cal. 12; Rockey v. Vieux, 178 P. 712, 179 Cal. 681; Kilfoil v. Warden, 189 P. 303, 46 Cal. App. 503. In the instant case the trial court found specifically that it was not true, as alleged in the complaint, that appellant was and is the owner in fee simple of said property, and the first point urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that the evidence does not support that finding.

[2-4] The determination of the question of ownership depends entirely upon the validity of the Lawrence deed. If that deed be valid, title was thereby conveyed to and vested in Lawrence, and it would follow that the attempted subsequent conveyance of title by the same grantors to appellant, who was not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, was ineffective as against Lawrence as prior grantee. Bell v. Pleasant, 78 P. 957, 145 Cal. 410, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61; Robinson v. Muir, 90 P. 521, 151 Cal. 118; Slaker v. McCormick-Saeltzer Co., 177 P. 155, 179 Cal. 387; Purcell v. Victor Power & Mining Co., 156 P. 1009, 29 Cal. App. 504. Appellant's attack upon the Lawrence deed is based on the single ground that there was not a valid delivery thereof and consequently no passing of title. As to the question of delivery, the record shows a sharp conflict in the evidence, both Carpenter and Lawrence having contradicted the testimony given by the Sherwins to the effect that the deed was given to Carpenter as their agent and attorney, with instructions to hold the same until final payment was made on the purchase price. Carpenter testified in this connection that he did not recollect who actually handed the deed to Lawrence, but that he had not done so; that said deed did not come into his possession; that immediately after being signed said deed came into the possession of Lawrence in the presence of the Sherwins with the understanding that it should be recorded at once. The testimony of Lawrence was to the effect that after some discussion with the Sherwins in the presence of Carpenter as to whether or not the deed should be delivered, it was handed to him by the Sherwins with the understanding that it was to be recorded immediately. In that state of the record the trial court's finding that on May 16, 1922, the Sherwins "executed and delivered to said Lawrence their deed conveying said property to said Lawrence, and with the intent and understanding that he should record the same, * * *" is controlling on appeal, the question of delivery of a deed being one of fact to be found from the surrounding circumstances of each transaction (Neely v. Buster, 195 P. 736, 50 Cal. App. 695; Williams v. Kidd, 151 P. 1, 170 Cal. 631, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703; Thielen v. Thielen, 182 P. 806, 41 Cal. App. 312); and said deed having been delivered, as the trial court found, to the grantee as the present deed of the grantors, it became freed from any condition not expressed in the deed itself, and operated to vest title immediately without reference to the performance of conditions, although such result may have been contrary to the expressed stipulation of the parties (Mowry v. Heney, 25 P. 17, 86 Cal.

471; Lewis v. Brown, 133 P. 331, 22 Cal. App. 38; 9 Cal. Jur. 165).

"A grant cannot be delivered to the grantee conditionally. Delivery to him, or to his agent as such, is necessarily absolute, and the instrument takes effect thereupon, discharged of any condition on which the delivery was made." Civ. Code, § 1056.

[5] Whether or not said deed was made by the Sherwins for the purpose of defrauding their creditors makes little difference. If such was their purpose, the validity of the deed, as between the parties thereto, was not affected because of that fact (Lawton v. Gordon, 34 Cal. 36, 91 Am. Dec. 670; Ybarra v. Lorenzana, 53 Cal. 197); or if it be assumed that such was not their purpose, the deed was nevertheless valid in view of the finding of the trial court that it was delivered.

[6] We conclude, therefore, that the Sherwins, having made a valid transfer of title to Lawrence under the deed of May 16, 1922, could not subsequently convey such title to appellant as would entitle him to maintain an action to quiet title against the prior grantee; hence the judgment of the trial court that appellant take nothing by his action must be sustained.

[7] A number of other legal questions have been presented by the appeal, arising from contentions made by the respective parties as to the alleged performance and nonperformance of certain conditions imposed by the contract of purchase and sale. We do not find it necessary, however, to inquire into or pass upon those questions. As previously stated, the action was brought not for the enforcement of an executory contract, but to quiet appellant's title, appellant seeking to nullify a completely executed conveyance transferring title to land, based upon a valuable consideration, to wit, an initial payment of $500 on the purchase price, the validity of which conveyance was not by its terms made dependent upon performance of future conditions. If, therefore, it be assumed that Lawrence did fail to perform the promises made by him in regard to the payment of the balance of the purchase price, such failure would not serve as legal grounds for the nullification of said conveyance. Tillaux v. Tillaux, 47 P. 691, 115 Cal. 663. It may be conceded, as appellant asserts, that "the Lawrences cannot have the property and the money both." But the Lawrences are not attempting to maintain that inconsistent position. In their answer they allege that they are still ready, able, and willing to pay the full amount of the purchase price as required by said contract, less the amount paid to the sheriff in obedience to said execution. Obviously, after having accepted and asserted title under said deed, they would not be allowed to repudiate their written obligation to pay for said property.

It would therefore seem that the belief expressed by appellant as to the effect and operation of the judgment entered herein, is not well founded.

[8] It was not error for the trial court to refuse to strike out the answers and the testimony of Hodson. The latter was made a party defendant on stipulation of appellant, and was in the actual possession of the property at the time of the commencement of the action and had erected valuable improvements thereon. Up to the time of the decision of the trial court that appellant was not the owner of the land, Hodson's interest in the property was a necessary element in the case to be considered, and the evidence offered for the purpose of showing the circumstances upon which that interest was based and the extent of it was pertinent to the issues of the case. Code Civ. Proc. § 389; Birch v. Cooper, 69 P. 420, 136 Cal. 636.

[9] Appellant's request for a default judgment against defendant Hodson upon the supplemental complaint was properly denied. The record discloses that said supplemental complaint was filed long before Hodson was made a party to the action, and that the request for his default was made prior to the time he was substituted as a party defendant to said supplemental complaint, and without having been served with a copy thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 585.

Findings upon the question of damages claimed under the supplemental complaint were not essential, in view of the fact that it was held that appellant was not the owner of the premises or entitled to the possession thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 618

In re KNIGHT'S ESTATE.

CROCKER NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO v. KNIGHT.
(Civ. 5405.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 24, 1926.)

Homestead §150(1)—Setting apart of probate homestead to widow held not an abuse of discretion, where creditor was not injured, and widow had paid with her own property debts of estate exceeding value of homestead, which could not be partitioned without impairing its value.

Setting apart of probate homestead for widow out of estate of deceased husband held not an abuse of discretion, where creditor was not injured thereby, and widow had used own property to pay debts of deceased exceeding value of homestead, which could not be partitioned without materially impairing its value.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George A. Knight, deceased. Petition by Frances Hale Knight, executrix of the will of George A. Knight, deceased, to set apart to her a probate homestead, opposed by the Crocker National Bank, a creditor of the estate. From an order setting apart a probate homestead, creditor appeals. Affirmed.

Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Chas. J. Heggerty, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, setting apart to Frances Hale Knight, as a probate homestead, certain real property out of the estate of her deceased husband, George A. Knight.

George A. Knight died in 1916, leaving a widow, Frances Hale Knight, respondent here, and two adult sons. Frances Hale Knight was appointed executrix of his will. As such executrix she sold some of the property of the estate, and then petitioned the court to set apart to her as a probate homestead 680 acres of land in Mendocino county. This application was resisted by the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, a creditor of the estate and appellant here, on the ground that the estate was insolvent.

The only question involved is as to whether or not the trial court abused its discretion under the peculiar facts of this case. We think it did not. When the respondent herein applied to the court to set apart the property in question as a homestead for her, the appellant objected to this order being made. It did not contend that the property should be divided or that only a part thereof should be set apart to respondent or that the property was of a character that it could be divided without greatly impairing the value per acre. The appellant merely appeared opposing the granting of the homestead, and prayed that respondent's petition should be denied. A hearing was had and testimony offered which supports the following findings of the court:

"That the property consists of about 6 hundred acres of agricultural, tillable, and grazing land, lying in one connected body and not in separate parcels, except that the state highway runs through a portion of it; that there is a house and barns upon the property, and it is in every way suitable for a home for petitioner; that it was community property of petitioner and her husband; that the property was inventoried and appraised together with two other parcels which have since been sold by the executrix at the sum of $26,000; and that since then the executrix of the will of the decedent has sold the said two other parcels of the real property described in said inventory and appraisement for over $22,000; leaving the property sought to be set aside as a homestead unsold in said estate; that the value of said property is approximately $15,000; that the property remaining in said estate is of the value of approximately $1,100; that the property asked as a homestead cannot be partitioned, cut up, or divided without material injury, so as to select and set apart the portion thereof containing the said dwelling house and barns and a reasonable portion and quantity thereof as a homestead to and for the use of the petitioner, without materially impairing the value of both the said portion thereof that would and should be partitioned as a homestead and also the value of the portion thereof that would remain, and that the portion of said real property that would remain after partitioning the same as aforesaid, would not be of any practical or material value for any use or for sale, and would be practically valueless for any use or for sale; and that said real property cannot, and should not, be partitioned or cut up; and that any remainder of said property that would be left upon any partition thereof could not be sold for any material sum, and would not be of any material benefit or advantage to apply to the payment of any creditor or obligation of said estate; that the petitioner, during her administration of said estate as executrix, has sold and disposed of her own real and personal property, and has paid the proceeds thereof, to the amount of exceeding $29,000 of her own property to and for the payment of claims against and indebtedness and obligations of the decedent and of said estate, and has never been repaid said sum, and she is entitled to reimbursement from the assets and property of said estate in the said sum and amount of exceeding $29,000, and that there is not now remaining in said estate any assets or property thereof sufficient to repay and reimburse the said petitioner for the said sum and amount of exceeding $29,000 so advanced, paid, and applied by her out of her own property to and for the payment of said claims against said decedent, and that the rights of none of the creditors of said decedent will be injured or affected by an order setting apart all of said property as a homestead."

It also appears from the record that the original claim of the appellant against the estate was something over $25,000 and interest, and that it has been paid over $18,000 of this amount by the executrix out of her own property; that, if the property in controversy be considered as an asset of the estate at a valuation of $15,000, nevertheless, the proportion of the assets to the liabilities is such that the pro rata share of the appellant would be less than it has already received upon its debt and it would receive nothing more. There also remains unpaid over $7,000 of claims superior to appellant's, such as unpaid family allowances, commissions of executrix, attorney's compensation, etc. Appellant is not injured, therefore, by the exercise of the discretionary power of the court in setting apart this homestead to the widow. It is further to be emphasized that the point urged by appellant, i. e., that a portion only of the property should have been set apart to the widow, was not presented to the trial court. Appellant made no request that the property be divided but objected to the setting apart of a homestead.

In view of these facts and the findings of the trial court, we think that under the peculiar circumstances there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

78 Cal. App. 610

WILLIAMS v. BELLING. (Civ. 5213.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 24, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 22, 1926.)

1. Exchange of property $\Leftrightarrow$ 6—Lease and chattel mortgage securing it, concurrently executed, constituted one contract, and objection to mortgage was in effect an objection to the lease (Civ. Code, § 1642).

Lease and chattel mortgage securing same, which were concurrently executed, held to constitute one contract under Civ. Code, § 1642, and a valid objection to the validity of the mortgage was in effect an objection to the lease, within terms of memorandum for exchange of properties providing it was subject to approval of lease.

2. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 184(1)—Recital in mortgage securing lease that it was concurrently executed with lease for purpose of securing rents authorized inference that mortgagors were lessees named in lease and had agreed to pay rent therein reserved.

Where mortgage recited that it was concurrently executed with lease for purpose of securing payments of rents to become due, it may reasonably be inferred therefrom that mortgagors were lessees named in lease, and had agreed to pay rent reserved therein.

3. Evidence $\Leftrightarrow$ 70.

It is to be presumed, though presumptions are disputable, that lease and mortgage securing it were truly dated (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 23), and were executed and delivered on day of date.

4. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 71.

Fact term was to commence on future date did not prevent lease from operating as present demise.

5. Landlord and tenant $\Leftrightarrow$ 184(1)—Mortgage reciting its concurrent execution with lease for purpose of securing rents authorized inference it was intention of parties mortgage should take immediate effect as security for performance of promise to pay rent, though term did not begin until later.

Where mortgage recited its concurrent execution with lease for purpose of securing the payment of rent, it may be fairly inferred that it was the intention of the parties that mortgage should take immediate effect as security for the promise to pay rent, including installment becoming due on first day of term, even though such day was in the future.

6. Chattel mortgages — 150(2), 192 — Fourteen days' delay between delivery of mortgage and its recordation, if not excusable, rendered mortgage void as to creditors and incumbrancers whose claims were created during interval (Civ. Code § 2957).

Where it appeared from record that fourteen days had elapsed between delivery of mortgage and its recordation, such delay, though not affecting mortgage's validity between parties, would, if not excusable, rendered the mortgage void as to creditors and incumbrancers whose claims were created during the interval, in view of Civ. Code, § 2957.

7. Vendor and purchaser — 136 — Condition of title satisfactory to vendee is complied with by tender of title to which there is no reasonable objection, but such title should be fairly deducible from record.

A condition that title to real estate, subject to an agreement to convey, shall be satisfactory to vendee, is complied with by tender of title to which there is no reasonable objection, but such title should be fairly deducible from record, without reference to extrinsic evidence, and vendee cannot be required to accept title which he cannot by record show to be valid if attacked.

8. Exchange of property — 6 — Defendant agreeing to exchange property, subject to his approval of lease, held justified in refusal to continue, where validity of mortgage securing lease required reference to extrinsic evidence.

Where mortgage securing lease was not recorded for fourteen days after its execution, thereby rendering it subject to claims created during interval, and necessitating resort to other evidence than the records to support its validity, defendant who had agreed to exchange property subject to his approval of such lease was therefore acting in good faith and justified in not proceeding with the exchange, and could not be held liable for brokerage commission.

9. Exchange of property — 8(4) — Where exchange agreement was subject to approval of lease secured by mortgage, burden of proving that mortgage, which on the records was open to objection, was in fact valid, was upon party asserting fact.

Where agreement to exchange was subject to approval of lease secured by chattel mortgage, and such mortgage was subject to reasonable objection under the public records, the burden of proving that such mortgage was in fact valid rested on parties asserting its validity.

10. Exchange of property — 3(1) — It was competent for parties to exchange agreement to agree that no obligation to proceed should accrue if lease secured by mortgage constituting a material part thereof should be found reasonably subject to objections.

It was competent for parties to exchange agreement to agree that there should be no obligation to proceed if a certain lease secured by mortgage, which mortgage constituted material part of lease, should be found reasonably subject to objections.

11. Exchange of property — 6 — Under memorandum agreement for exchange of property subject to approval of certain lease by defendant, held it was intention of parties that no obligation to proceed should accrue, where reasonable grounds of objection to mortgage securing such lease appeared.

Where memorandum agreement for exchange of property provided it should not be binding until defendant had inspected and approved certain leases, it was intention of the parties that, upon disapproval of mortgage which secured such leases in good faith, upon reasonable grounds of objections to its sufficiency appearing, no obligation on part of defendant should arise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Dudley Kinsell, Judge.

Action by Fred R. Williams against Isaac Belling. From a judgment for the defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Grant & Zimdars, of San Francisco, and Frank G. Warren, of Stockton, for appellant.

Roscoe D. Jones, of Oakland (Isidoro A. Cereghino, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment denying the right of appellant to recover commissions and special damages.

Respondent, who was the owner of certain real property in the city of Stockton, signed and delivered to appellant, a real estate broker, a memorandum in writing in terms authorizing the latter to effect an exchange thereof for property of like character in the city of Oakland. Both properties were described in the memorandum which further provided for the payment to appellant of a commission in the sum of $1,000.

The major portion of the building upon the Oakland property was then being used for hotel purposes; the lower floor thereof being divided into two storerooms. The memorandum contained the following provisions, the effect of which is here in question:

"It is hereby understood and agreed that there exists a lease on said hotel extending over a period of seven (7) years from July, 1922, for a monthly rental of $700, secured by a chattel mortgage on furniture. * * * This agreement shall not be binding upon the undersigned until he has inspected and approved said leases,"

—the leases referred to being that of the hotel, a lease of one of the storerooms then in force, and a lease to be procured of the other storeroom mentioned. It was further stipulated therein that appellant should complete the exchange within 30 days from its date.

It appears from the evidence that appellant thereafter procured from one R. D. Cashatt, who held a contract for the purchase of the Oakland property, an agreement in writing authorizing the former to effect an exchange thereof for that owned by respondent, and providing for the payment of a commission for the service in the sum of $6,000; it being alleged that the agreement to pay the latter commission had been made before the delivery of the memorandum by respondent, and that the latter had knowledge thereof. Appellant's claim for special damages was based upon the loss of this commission.

It appears that the lease of the hotel, with the chattel mortgage securing payment of the rents therein provided, were submitted by respondent to his attorney, on whose advice he refused to approve or accept the mortgage and the lease, upon the ground of the invalidity of the mortgage as against the creditors, if any, of the mortgagors.

The trial court found that the refusal to approve was in good faith, and, without expressly finding the mortgage to be invalid, found that the memorandum was signed and delivered to appellant in reliance upon his representations that the mortgage was good and sufficient and in proper legal form; that, although such representations were not made for the purpose of deceiving or misleading respondent, they were not warranted by the information possessed by appellant, were false, and fraudulent, and were believed by respondent, who was thereby induced to sign and deliver the instrument; that such delivery was made and accepted upon the condition and express understanding that, if the leases were unsatisfactory to the latter, he should in nowise be bound thereby; that at the time of the delivery of the memorandum he had no knowledge of any agreement by Cashatt to pay a commission to appellant; that he had not failed to perform nor repudiated the agreement as alleged, and that appellant had not performed.

It is contended by appellant that there existed no valid objection to the sufficiency of the mortgage, and that respondent was legally bound to be satisfied therewith; and, by the latter, that the period which elapsed between the presumptive date of the instrument and its recordation rendered it invalid as to creditors of the mortgagors, and justified his refusal to approve.

The lease mentioned was not introduced in evidence. The mortgage bears date January 23, 1922, which was also the date of the acknowledgment of the mortgagors and of their affidavits attached thereto. The affidavit of the mortgagee named therein was dated January 31, 1922, and the instrument recorded February 6, 1922. Therein was recited its concurrent execution with the lease for the purpose of securing the payment of the rents to become due thereunder aggregating the sum of $63,000, payable in installments of $700 each on the 1st day of each month of the term commencing on February 1, 1922, and the further purpose of securing performance by the mortgagors of each and every term, covenant, agreement, and condition in favor of the mortgagee, including the mortgagors' agreement to perform the conditions and terms of the lease.

[1,2] These instruments constituted one contract (Civ. Code, § 1642), and a valid objection to the mortgage was in effect an objection to the lease within the terms of the memorandum. It was assumed by the parties to the action that both were delivered, and no evidence as to the fact or time of such delivery was offered at the trial. It may be reasonably inferred from the recitals and provisions of the mortgage that the mortgagors were the lessees named in the lease and had agreed to pay the rent therein reserved.

[3-5] It is to be presumed—although the presumptions are disputable—that the instruments were truly dated (section 1963, subd. 23, Code Civ. Proc.), and were executed and delivered on the day they bear date (22 Corp. Jur. 105, 106; 11 Corp. Jur. 488, 489; Chamberlayne on Evidence, § 1055; Wigmore on Evidence, § 2520; Lauder v. Peoria Agricultural, etc., Society, 71 Ill. App. 475; Gibson v. Norway Sav. Bank, 69 Me. 579). The fact that the term was to commence on a future date, to wit, February 1, 1922, did not prevent the lease from operating as a present demise (35 Corp. Jur. 1198, 1199; Seibert v. Grace, 138 Ill. App. 361); and it may fairly be inferred from the circumstances mentioned and the recitals of the mortgage that it was the intention of the parties that the latter instrument should take immediate effect as security for the performance of the promise to pay the rent, including the installment to become due on the 1st day of the term.

By section 2957 of the Civil Code, it is provided that a mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value, unless it is acknowledged or proved, certified, and recorded in like manner as grants of real property; and, in Ruggles v. Cannedy, 53 P. 911, 59 P. 827, 127 Cal. 290, 46 L. R. A. 371, it is held that the recordation of a chattel mortgage, having been designed by the statute as a substitute for and the equivalent of the immediate delivery and continued change of possession formerly required in this state should be had immediately or as soon thereafter as practical upon the execution thereof in order to give notice to and bind third parties.

[6] In the instant case it might fairly have been inferred that fourteen days had elapsed between the delivery of the mortgage and its recordation. Such delay, although not affecting its validity between the parties (Summerville v. Kelliher, 77 P. 889, 144 Cal. 155), would, if not shown to be excusable, render the mortgage void as to creditors and incumbrancers whose claims were created during the interval (Ruggles v. Cannedy, supra; Old Settlers' Investment Co. v. White, 110 P. 922, 158 Cal. 236; Civ. Code, § 2957; In re Hansen [D. C.] 268 F. 904).

[7] A condition that the title to real estate, which is the subject to an agreement to convey, shall be satisfactory to the vendee is complied with by the tender of a title to which there is no reasonable objection. Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 408, 89 Am. Dec. 57; Dillinger v. Ogden, 90 A. 446, 244 Pa. 20, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 533. It is the rule that such title should be fairly deducible from the record without reference to extrinsic evidence, and that the vendee cannot be required to accept that which he cannot by the record show to be valid if attacked. Crim v. Umbsen, 103 P. 178, 155 Cal. 697, 132 Am. St. Rep. 127; Benson v. Shotwell, 25 P. 249, 681, 87 Cal. 49.

[8] The above rules apply in principle to the instant case, in which the facts reasonably created an apprehension of the necessity for supporting the validity of the mortgage by proof not shown by the public records and dependent upon extrinsic evidence.

[9] Whether there were creditors of the mortgagors in a position to attack the mortgage does not appear from the record: but, if it be assumed that respondent would be obliged to accept a mortgage shown by the public records to be reasonably subject to objection, but which in fact created a valid lien, the burden of proving the fact rested upon appellant. Simmons v. Zimmerman, 79 P. 451, 144 Cal. 256, 1 Ann. Cas. 850.

An offer was made by the latter to procure the execution to respondent of a new mortgage upon the same property for the same purpose and, presumably, though the record does not show the fact, by the same mortgagors, which offer was not accepted, for the reason, as testified by the attorney for respondent, that, under the terms of the memorandum, there appearing reasonable grounds for not approving the lease in question, respondent was not bound to proceed.

[10] As stated, the memorandum provided that it should not be binding upon respondent until he had inspected and approved the leases. That it was competent for the parties to agree that no obligation to proceed should accrue if the lease, of which the mortgage was a material part, should be found reasonably subject to objections as to its sufficiency is well settled. Elliott on Contracts, § 1868; First Nat. Bank of Waurika v. Clay, 177 P. 115, 117, 74 Okl. 112; 13 Corp. Jur. 564; Rogers v. Maloney, 165 P. 357, 85 Or. 61.

[11] The trial court, in construing the writing, by implication concluded the intention of the parties to have been that, upon the disapproval of the mortgage in good faith, reasonable grounds of objection to its sufficiency appearing, no obligation on the part of respondent should arise; and this conclusion, aside from the finding as to the understanding and condition upon which the memorandum was delivered and accepted, is supported by the language of the provision mentioned.

The evidence was sufficient to support the finding of good faith and the implied conclusion that the refusal to accept the lease and mortgage was reasonably justified, and, the effect thereof upon the obligation of respondent to proceed being as stated, sustains the legal conclusions and judgment of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

76 Cal. App. 670

HOEFT v. HOTCHKISS. (Civ. 3059.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 27, 1926.)

1. Reference ⇨103(1)—Failure of movant to set aside judgment and referee's report for want of notice of hearing to make affidavit that she could produce evidence not heard, or that findings were erroneous, held to warrant denial of motion.

Failure of one moving to set aside judgment and report of referee, on ground that no notice of hearing before referee was given, to make affidavit that she could introduce any evidence not heard by referee, or that any finding by referee or court was erroneous, warrants denial of motion.

2. Reference ⇨103(1).

Failure to raise objection of want of notice of hearing before referee prior to entry of judgment held to warrant denial of motion to set aside judgment and referee's report.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Elenore E. Hoeft against A. M. Hotchkiss. From order denying plaintiff's motion to set aside judgment and referee's report, she appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. W. Kitts, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. E. Wright, of Nevada City, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. [1, 2] This is an appeal from the order of the trial court herein "denying plaintiff's motion to set aside the judgment and decree and the referee's report." The record consists of the final decree in the action and the motion to vacate, together with affidavits introduced at the hearing of the motion and the order denying the same. It appears that an "interlocutory judgment and decree" was entered, and F. R. Hull appointed to take an account; that he took such account and reported his findings to the court; and that thereafter the court "recast and re-stated" the account in many particulars and entered judgment upon the findings as so corrected.

Appellant contends that the motion should have been granted on the ground that she had no notice of the hearing before the referee. She introduced affidavits stating that neither she nor her attorney were notified of such hearing. She resided in Nevada City at the time of the hearing, and her attorney had his office in San Francisco. The referee made affidavit that he duly mailed notices of the hearing to the plaintiff and to her attorney six days before the time set for such hearing. Regardless of other questions, the motion was properly denied on two grounds: First, it is not stated in plaintiff's affidavits that she could have produced any evidence which was not introduced at the hearing before the referee and considered by him or that any finding made by the referee or by the court is erroneous. Second, it does not appear but that plaintiff and her attorney were fully informed of the filing of the referee's report and of its contents in ample time to have raised the objections which are now made prior to the entry of judgment. She should have made objection at that time to the adoption by the court of the referee's report. Doudell v. Shoo, 129 P. 478, 20 Cal. App. 424.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 481

CARP v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR HUMBOLDT COUNTY. (Civ. 3089.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 8, 1926.)

1. New trial ☞109.

Statutory motion for a new trial is not the exclusive procedure by which new trial may be obtained.

2. Divorce ☞167—Denial of wife's motion to set aside interlocutory divorce decree is not bar to her suit in equity to set decree aside for extrinsic fraud (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

That wife's motion to set aside interlocutory divorce decree under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 was denied, is not bar to her suit in equity to set decree aside on the ground of extrinsic fraud.

3. Appeal and error ☞477—Court may enjoin enforcement of its own judgment pending determination of appeal therefrom, to maintain status quo of subject-matter.

Court, in a proper case, may enjoin enforcement of its own judgment pending determination of an appeal therefrom, so as to maintain status quo of subject-matter in litigation.

4. Divorce ☞156—As respects right to final decree while interlocutory decree is under attack for fraud, it is public policy of state of California to prevent remarriage of divorced persons during time allowed for appeal, and thereafter, if appeal be taken, until right to divorce is finally determined.

As respects right to final decree while interlocutory decree is under attack for fraud, it is public policy of state of California, as shown by history of divorce legislation, to prevent remarriage of divorced persons during time allowed for appeal, and thereafter, if an appeal be taken, until right to divorce is finally determined; state having a well-recognized interest in matter.

5. Divorce ☞156—Court held to have discretion to deny husband's application for final decree of divorce until determination of wife's pending suit in equity to set aside interlocutory decree for fraud (Civ. Code, § 132).

Where husband's application under Civ. Code, § 132, for final decree of divorce was made while wife's suit in equity to set aside interlocutory decree for fraud was pending, held, that court had discretion to deny husband's application for final decree of divorce until final determination of wife's suit.

Original application for writ of mandate by August Carp, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Humboldt County Hon. George D. Murray, Judge, to compel respondent to enter final decree of divorce in action prosecuted by petitioner against his wife, Hilma Carp. Writ denied.

J. F. Coonan, of Eureka, for petitioner.

Henry L. Ford and J. Logan Beamer, both of Eureka, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application, made upon notice given by petitioner to respondents, for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent court to enter a final decree of divorce in an action prosecuted by the petitioner against his wife, Hilma Carp. The wife did not appear in that action, and an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered in favor of the husband on the 15th day of February, 1923. The wife did not appeal or move for a new trial. Within due time she moved the court to set aside the interlocutory decree "on the ground of accident, surprise, excusable neglect, and that no service of the summons had been made on said Hilma Carp." The motion was denied June 8, 1923. January 25, 1924, the wife commenced a suit in equity to set aside the interlocutory decree on the ground that the husband had fraudulently prevented her from appearing in the divorce action and making a defense. On the 30th day of October, 1925, judgment was entered therein against the wife. November 3, 1925, the wife made a motion for a new trial in that action, and on the 28th of that month the motion was denied. November 30th she duly appealed from the judgment therein, and the appeal is still pending. November 17, 1925, the husband served notice of motion for a final decree of divorce. The wife filed a verified "answer" to the motion, in which she stated that if her motion for a new trial of the action to set aside the interlocutory decree "is denied she will immediately appeal from said judgment in the said cause of Hilma Carp v. August Carp to the Supreme Court of the State of California." November 23, 1925, the husband's motion for a final decree of divorce was denied "without prejudice to renew the same." The petition herein was filed December 17, 1925.

[1, 2] Section 132 of the Civil Code provides:

"When one year has expired after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce, * * * but if any appeal is taken from the interlocutory judgment or motion for a new trial made, final judgment shall not be entered until such motion or appeal has been finally disposed of, nor then, if the motion has been granted or judgment reversed."

Petitioner contends that, under the facts stated, it was the mandatory duty of the court to enter a final decree of divorce. The primary purpose of the action to set aside the interlocutory decree was to obtain a new trial of the action for divorce. The statutory motion for a new trial is not the exclusive procedure by which a new trial may be obtained. San Joaquin, etc., Irr. Co. v. Stevinson, 166 P. 338, 175 Cal. 607, 611. The fact that the wife's motion to set aside the interlocutory decree, under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was denied, is not a bar to her suit in equity to set the decree aside on the ground of extrinsic fraud. Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 87 P. 19, 149 Cal. 556, 562; Bacon v. Bacon, 89 P. 317, 150 Cal. 477, 484; Lake v. Bonyne, 118 P. 535, 161 Cal. 120, 131. Persuasive reasons, some of which will be stated in another connection, could be advanced to show that the term "motion for a new trial," as used in section 132 of the Civil Code, is not restricted to the statutory motion for a new trial, but was intended to include any pending proceeding to obtain a new trial. It is not necessary, however, to so hold in order to sustain the action of the trial court.

[3] Actions in equity to set aside judgments obtained by extrinsic fraud are not novel. It is not unusual in such an action to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment sought to be vacated, pending the determination of the charge of fraud. In a proper case a court may enjoin the enforcement of its own judgment pending the determination of an appeal therefrom "so as to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter of the litigation." Tulare Irrigation District v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 242 P. 725, and cases therein cited.

[4] It is the public policy of the state, as shown by the history of divorce legislation, to prevent the remarriage of a divorced person during the time allowed for appeal, and thereafter, if an appeal be taken, until his right to a divorce is finally determined. The state has a well-recognized interest in the matter.

"While an action to obtain a decree dissolving the relation of husband and wife is nominally an action between two parties, the state, because of its interest in maintaining the same, unless good cause for its dissolution exists, is an interested party. It has been said by eminent writers upon the subject that such an action is really a triangular proceeding, in which the husband and the wife and the state are parties." Deyoe v. Superior Court, 74 P. 28, 140 Cal. 476, 482, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73.

Upon the entry of a final decree of divorce, either party may enter into another marriage, maybe with a person who is without knowledge of the pendency of a proceeding to set the decree aside. The positions which such innocent person and the children born of the second marriage will occupy, in the event of the decree being vacated, are matters of grave public concern. As said in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Temple in Estate of Wood, 69 P. 900, 137 Cal. 129, 139:

"There are * * * special reasons why it (the decree) should not take effect so that the parties can remarry, except with each other, so long as the judgment is subject to review and to be reversed. * * * It would transpire that the new spouse, in case of a marriage, would have been taken on condition. Any civilized people would desire to avoid such possibilities."

The case of Olson v. Superior Court, 165 P. 706, 175 Cal. 250, 1 A. L. R. 1589, was an application for a writ of mandate to compel the entry of a final decree of divorce. After the entry of the interlocutory decree, a reconciliation was effected and the parties resumed the relations of husband and wife. The court said:

"While in every proper case a trial court will, and if necessary by mandate will be compelled to, enter such a final decree, it would be a gross reproach to our jurisprudence to hold that our law ever contemplated that such a decree could be forced upon a blameless and nonconsenting wife after such a reconciliation. Our law demands no such thing. It never designed to make itself an instrument of such frauds."

[5] The wife has alleged, in her action to set the decree aside, that it was obtained by the husband's fraud. That action is still pending and may be determined finally in favor of the wife. To hold that the provisions of section 132 require the entry of a final decree under such circumstances would be to make the law an instrument of fraud. The action for a divorce and the suit to set aside the interlocutory decree were both pending in the same court. The court certainly had the discretion, at least, to deny the application for a final decree in the divorce action until the final determination of the other action in which the validity of the interlocutory decree was assailed. If, as has been shown, a court may, in a proper case, restrain the enforcement of its judgment pending an appeal therefrom, where mere property rights are in question, no sound reason can be given for compelling a court to enter a final decree of divorce in a case where the interlocutory decree is under attack in a pending action for fraud, and where the issues involve questions of great public concern.

The petition is denied, and the order of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 648

PEOPLE v. SICA. (Cr. 1283.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 27, 1926.)

1. Homicide $\S$ 255(2)—Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for involuntary manslaughter, where deceased was killed by accidental discharge of shotgun pointed at him as a joke (Pen. Code, $\S$ 192).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for involuntary manslaughter under Pen. Code, $\S$ 192, where deceased was killed by accidental discharge of shotgun pointed at deceased as a joke.

2. Homicide $\S$ 62—Killing held not killing while in commission of unlawful act, where gun was not pointed at deceased in "anger" (Pen. Code, $\S$ 417).

Killing by accidental discharge of gun pointed at deceased was not killing while in commission of unlawful act not amounting to felony, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 417, prohibiting display of deadly weapon in rude, angry, and threatening manner, where accused and deceased were not angry; "anger" being interchangeable with "passion."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Anger.]

3. Homicide $\S$ 309(1)—Defendant may be found guilty of manslaughter on two different theories, and jury may be instructed on as many theories as are logically deducible from testimony.

Defendant may be found guilty of manslaughter on two different theories, and jury may be instructed on as many theories as are logically deducible from testimony.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 814(3).

No instruction should be given jury which is not predicated on some theory logically deducible from some portion of testimony.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Where case was submitted to jury on two theories, one of which was not sound, appellate court will reverse if it cannot determine on which theory conviction was based (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Where case is submitted to jury on two theories, one of which was not sound, and appellate court cannot determine on which theory conviction was based, judgment will be reversed, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Angelo Sica was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

Carl E. Lindsay and Lindsay & Gearhart, all of Fresno, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and L. B. Browne, of San Francisco, for the People.

KNIGHT, J. On October 23, 1924, Norval M. Hyde, 21 years of age, was killed by the accidental discharge of a shotgun in the hands of the defendant, Angelo Sica, 17 years of age, while the latter was pointing the gun, in play, at Hyde. Sica was informed against by the district attorney for the crime of manslaughter, and upon trial was convicted, the jury recommending leniency. After denying a plea for probation, the trial court sentenced Sica to imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin. Sica has appealed, and for a reversal of judgment urges two principal grounds—first, insufficiency of evidence; and, secondly, errors of the trial court in the matter of giving instructions to the jury, which he claims deprived him of a fair trial.

The circumstances leading up to and attending the death of Hyde, as shown by the evidence, were as follows: Hyde and a young man named Farlinger were employed on certain premises near Fresno operated as a gun club, and lived in a tent on the property. Hyde and Sica were friends. About a week previous to the fatal shooting Sica had called on Hyde at the gun club's property and was invited by Hyde to visit him again. On the day of the accident, Sica and three boy companions went for a ride in an automobile belonging to one of the boys, and, being in the vicinity of the gun club, went over to see Hyde, arriving at the gun club about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. As they drove in, Farlinger was working in a ditch near by, and Hyde came riding up on horseback from the field. After an exchange of greetings all around, Hyde and Sica shaking hands in a friendly manner, the boys proceeded to chop an old log lying on the ground into firewood, and then engaged in target practice with a revolver which one of Sica's companions had brought with him. During the target practice Sica went into the tent, and brought out a double-barreled hammerless shotgun and two cartridges, inserting the cartridges in the gun on his way out of the tent. After loading the gun, he pointed it at the fence and other objects, whereupon the other boys warned him to "be careful with that gun" and to "look out for that gun, it is loaded—accidents happen." Notwithstanding these admonitions, Sica pointed the gun at Hyde, who was still astride the horse, 15 or 20 feet distant. As Sica pointed the gun at Hyde, one of the boys again warned him to be careful, and Hyde laughingly said to Sica, according to the testimony of Farlinger and another boy named Vaccaro, "Don't point that gun at me, you bastard, or I'll pull this on you," or words to that effect, exhibiting the pistol with which he and the others had been shooting at the target. A few seconds later the gun was accidentally discharged, the load striking Hyde in the left side of the back, and he fell from the horse. Sica, dropping the gun, exclaimed, "God, what did I do!" and rushed to Hyde's assistance. The boys lifted Hyde into the automobile and hurried him to the hospital, but he died before arriving there. According to Vaccaro's testimony, Sica, at the time the gun was discharged, was holding it with the butt to his shoulder, pointing it at Hyde, although not aiming it at him. L. Saladino, another boy, testified in regard to this point as follows:

"I looked around again and saw Angelo pointing the gun at Hyde, and Hyde said: 'Look out, you bastard, don't shoot me, or I will pull this on you.' So when he says that, Angelo Sica turned the gun away and then put it up again in a position like this, towards his waistline, and held it there a matter of a few seconds, and then put it up a little higher, and they were joking and laughing again, him and Hyde, and he said: 'Don't point that gun at me. What the hell is the matter with you, you damn fool?' And Angelo Sica was laughing and I looked around to see the well they were drilling, and heard a report, and I turned around and saw Hyde fall off the horse."

Sica's statement, taken by a deputy district attorney on the night following the accident, and afterwards introduced in evidence at the trial as part of the people's case, was in substantial accord with the versions given by his companions. Although he could give no accurate account of the exact cause for the discharge of the gun, he stated that he was pointing it at Hyde, and when he turned his head temporarily to look toward the other boys it was discharged; that he was grasping the stock of the gun "where you hold your fingers," and that he thought he was holding it "on the rim." The evidence further shows that Sica was not familiar with the use of a shotgun, never having handled or discharged one before.

[1] The contention of appellant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction of manslaughter is based in part upon the proposition that the gun was accidentally and not willfully discharged, and that consequently appellant was guilty of no crime. It is argued in support thereof that the evidence, taken as a whole, shows that the death of Hyde was the result of misadventure; that it was a case of a number of boys playing with firearms, and that unfortunately one of the firearms, being at the time in the hands of the appellant, was accidentally discharged; that the firing of the gun was not a voluntary act on his part at all; and that therefore appellant was not criminally responsible. The contention cannot be sustained.

Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice. It is of two kinds: (1) Voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. (2) Involuntary—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection (Pen. Code, § 192); and it has been held in this state, as in others, that, where the death of a human being results from playing or skylarking with, or the reckless handling of firearms, it is involuntary manslaughter, the killing being the result of the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, without due caution and circumspection. People v. Searle, 164 P. 819, 33 Cal. App. 228. Upon this branch of the case we believe the jury was properly instructed. People v. Wilson, 226 P. 5, 193 Cal. 512.

[2] The cause was submitted to the jury, however, not on the one theory of involuntary manslaughter, but, under instructions of the court, upon the additional theory that the death of Hyde was brought about by appellant while the latter was engaged in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony; and appellant contends that the giving of instructions upon said second theory constituted prejudicial error, for the reason that there was no evidence before the jury upon which such theory could be based.

When the prosecution rested its case, counsel for appellant, in the absence of the jury, moved that the court advise the jury to acquit. At the conclusion of the argument on the motion, the court stated, "Well, another phase of it, gentlemen, I think we have a statute there to the effect that any one who exhibits a deadly weapon in a rude and threatening manner in the presence of two or more witnesses is guilty of a misdemeanor," to which counsel for the prosecution responded, "Section 417 of the Penal Code"; and, after some further discussion as to the meaning of the words "rude" and "threatening," the court denied the motion. Appellant offered no evidence, but upon this branch of the case proposed an instruction, which, after setting forth the Code definition of manslaughter, read:

"You are instructed that there is no evidence in this case which justifies the conviction of the defendant of voluntary manslaughter, nor is there any evidence in the case which justifies his conviction of involuntary manslaughter because of the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony. It is for you to determine from all the evidence in the case whether the prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the death of Norval M. Hyde was caused by the defendant in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. Unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that such proof has been made, you must acquit the defendant." (Italics ours.)

The trial court gave to the jury that part of the proposed instruction embodying the Code definition of manslaughter, but refused to give those portions just quoted.

In lieu of instructing the jury as requested in the italicized portion of said proposed instruction, the court gave the following instruction:

"You are further instructed that every person who, not in necessary self-defense, in the presence of two or more persons, draws or exhibits any deadly weapon in a rude, angry, and threatening manner, or who, in any manner, unlawfully used the same, in any fight or quarrel, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

See Pen. Code, § 417.

This instruction was followed by one to the effect that if the jury was satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that "the defendant, Angelo Sica, *was committing an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony, or doing a lawful act in an unlawful manner, or doing a lawful act without due caution and circumspection, and while doing such unlawful act, or doing such lawful act in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection, said defendant Angelo Sica shot Norval Hyde, * *  inflicting injuries upon him from which he died, the jury should find the appellant guilty of manslaughter as charged in the information. (Italic ours.)

[3, 4] It is doubtless true that a defendant may be found guilty of manslaughter on two different theories (People v. Hubbard, 220 P. 315, 64 Cal. App. 27), and a jury may be instructed on as many theories as are logically deducible from the testimony (People v. Byrnes, 30 Cal. 206; People v. Quimby, 92 P. 493, 6 Cal. App. 482); but there is no evidence whatever in the instant case of a fight or quarrel, nor is there any proof from which the inference might be reasonably and logically deduced that said weapon was exhibited in an "angry" manner, conceding that the manner of its use was both rude and threatening. Anger is defined to mean a strong passion or emotion or displeasure or antagonism excited by real or supposed injuries or insults to one's self or others by the intent to do such injury, resentment, wrath, rage, fury, passion, ire, gall, choler, indignation, spleen. "Anger" and "passion" are interchangeable, and mean practically the same thing. Morris v. Territory, 99 P. 760, 768, 101 P. 111, 1 Okl.

Cr. 617, quoting Webster's Dictionary. Anger is not ordinarily classed as mental suffering. The Standard Dictionary defines it as "violent and vindictive passion or emotion caused by injury or insult real or imagined." Fort Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 85 S. W. 37, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 129. The testimony given by all of the witnesses to the shooting was that Hyde and Sica were laughing and joking up to the time the shot was fired; and all of the circumstances attending the tragedy prove beyond question that preceding it the boys were in an amiable and friendly mood. The word "angry" as used in said section 417 is not synonymous in its meaning with either of the other two adjectives employed therein, and, the three being used conjunctively, the distinctive elements represented by the three words must be present before the act becomes unlawful. It will therefore be seen that, without the element of anger being present in the use of said weapon by appellant, the whole theory that the death of young Hyde was caused by appellant while in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, must fall; and therefore the giving of instructions authorizing a verdict of guilty on that theory and the refusal to give appellant's instruction in negation thereof constituted error.

"Instructions are always to be given with reference to the facts proved before the jury." People v. Byrnes, supra, 9 Cal. Jur. 321.

"No instruction should be given to a jury which is not predicated upon some theory logically deducible from at least some portion of the testimony. Such instructions are only calculated to confuse and mislead the jury, and ought not to be given." People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 28, 8 Cal. Jur. 321.

In People v. Devine, 30 P. 378, 95 Cal. 227, it is said:

"In some cases an inapplicable instruction can do no harm, but when it is liable to mislead a jury, to the prejudice of one of the parties, it becomes as grave an error as though it were not 'correct as an abstract proposition of law.'"

In People v. Roberts, 82 P. 624, 1 Cal. App. 447, the court quotes approvingly from Blashfield on Instructions to Juries, wherein the author says:

"The giving of an instruction not supported by the evidence is sufficient ground for reversal, where it appears that such instruction misled, or might have misled, the jury, to the prejudice of the party complaining. * * *

Under the present state of the law, "instructions which are calculated to mislead the jury under the circumstances of the case are erroneous and require a reversal, if they result in a miscarriage of justice" (8 Cal. Jur. 628); and in the recent case of People v. Hoffman (Cal. Sup.) 232 P. 974, wherein the accused was charged with murder, in considering an instruction given for the people involving a theory of self-defense, the court said:

"There is no evidence to support any such theory, and the instruction was calculated to confuse the jury."

This was one of several grounds upon which the judgment was reversed.

[5] In the instant case it cannot be determined upon which of the two theories the jury founded its verdict. If founded upon the theory of the inapplicable instruction, the verdict is not supported by the evidence, and in that event appellant was not fairly convicted and the verdict amounts to a miscarriage of justice. In the case of People v. MacPhee, 146 P. 522, 26 Cal. App. 218, after pointing out error in the admission of testimony, it was said:

"After a most careful consideration of the entire cause including the evidence, but without the presence of the actual witnesses before us, we are unable to determine whether the defendants would or would not have been convicted by the jury had this erroneously admitted testimony been withdrawn from their consideration. This being so, we do not feel that section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution can be given application to uphold the judgment in the case at bar."

The same rule of reversal was followed in People v. Columbus, 194 P. 288, 49 Cal. App. 761. A like situation confronts us in the instant case. We have examined the entire record, and are unable to determine whether the defendant would or would not have been convicted by the jury had the instruction on the erroneous theory not been given. In this state of the record the judgment cannot be sustained.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 629

HASMAN v. ELK GROVE UNION HIGH SCHOOL et al. (Civ. 3051.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 24, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 22, 1926.)

1. Deeds ☞162—Condition that property be used to "maintain" school does not require perpetual maintenance of school; "permanent."

Condition in deed that property shall be used to "maintain" a school on property conveyed does not necessarily mean to keep it up perpetually, as "permanent" ordinarily implies greater continuity than "maintain."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Maintain; Permanency—Permanent.]

2. Deeds ☞155—Condition subsequent that property be used to maintain school or revert to grantor is to be strictly construed to avoid forfeiture (Civ. Code, §§ 1069, 1442).

Condition subsequent in deed that property be used to maintain school thereon; otherwise, to revert to grantor or heirs, is to be strictly construed to avoid forfeiture, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1069, 1442.

3. Deeds ☞162—Building and conducting of school for 29 years on premises conveyed for such use is a permanent use avoiding forfeiture on abandonment of use.

Under deed to trustees of school district, requiring use of property for school; otherwise, to revert to grantor, building of school on property in good faith and without intention at time of changing location, and conducting school for 29 years until change was necessary, is a permanent use avoiding forfeiture, though use was subsequently abandoned.

4. Deeds ☞155.

Mere provision in deed that property is conveyed for a particular purpose does not create a condition subsequent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Lillian Hasman, administratrix of the estate of J. H. Kerr (also known as Joseph H. Kerr), deceased, against the Elk Grove Union High School, and S. R. Gage and others, as trustees of said High School and individually to recover certain real property and to quiet title thereto. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles J. Hasman and R. L. Shinn, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This action was brought by the administratrix of the estate of Joseph H. Kerr, deceased, for the recovery of certain real property and to quiet title thereto in the estate. The defendant high school was given judgment, and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom. October 11, 1893, Joseph H. Kerr conveyed the land in dispute to the trustees of the school. The parts of the deed material to the questions raised by the appeal are as follows:

"The said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar, * * * has remised, released and forever quitclaimed, and by these presents does remise, release and forever quitclaim unto the said parties of the second part and to their successors, all those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the town of Elk Grove, * * * described as follows, to wit: Lots number twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine and thirty of J. H. Kerr Addition to the town of Elk Grove. * * * Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in anywise appertain-ing and the reversion and reversions, remainders and remainders, rents, issues and profits thereof. * * * To have and to hold all and singular the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said parties of the second part and to their successors forever, provided the same shall be used for the purpose of maintaining thereon a high school; otherwise, the above described property shall revert to and become the property of the party of the first part, his heirs, or assigns."

Upon the execution of the deed the high school went into possession of the property, erected buildings thereon, and continuously thereafter maintained a high school upon the premises until September 29, 1922, and during that period of time no other property was used for high school purposes. In the month of December, 1920, at an election duly called to determine the question of changing the location of the high school to another site, which was a half mile distant from the old site, a majority of the electors voted in favor of the change. Thereafter buildings were erected on the new site and since September 29, 1922, the main activities of the high school have been conducted there, but the buildings on the old site continued to be used by classes in agriculture and "during stormy weather the athletic classes and work have been conducted" therein.

Appellant contends that—

"The following conditions are clearly shown to exist in the provisions of the deed: First, For a continuous 'maintaining' of a high school upon said property; second, for the reversion of the property to the grantor, his heirs, or assigns, should the maintaining of a high school upon said property cease."

[1] To maintain a school does not necessarily mean to keep it up perpetually. In Whalen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 76 A. 166, 112 Md. 187, the defendant had agreed "to construct and maintain a turnout and siding" at a certain point on its main road. The turnout and siding were maintained for many years and then discontinued. The court said:

"We cannot yield our assent to the contention of the appellant that the word 'maintain' ordinarily means to maintain indefinitely or forever. Its meaning in that respect depends upon the context in which it appears and the subject-matter to which it relates."

The word "permanent" ordinarily implies greater continuity than the word "maintain." In Texas & Pacific R. Co. v. City of Marshall, 10 S. Ct. 846, 136 U. S. 393, 34 L. Ed. 385, the agreement involved provided:

"In consideration of the donation of the said sum of three hundred thousand dollars and said sixty-six acres of land, the said Texas & Pacific Railway Company will permanently establish its eastern terminus and Texas office at the city of Marshall, and will also establish and construct at said city the main machine shops and car works of said railway company."

The railway company complied with the terms of its agreement for about 8 years and then "moved various parts of its machine shops and its Texas office to other cities." The court said:

"The contract on the part of the railroad company is satisfied and performed when it establishes and keeps a depot, and sets in operation car works and machine shops, and keeps them going for 8 years, and until the interests of the railroad company and the public demand the removal of some or all of these subjects of the contract to some other place. This was the establishment at that point of the things contracted for in the agreement. It was the fair meaning of the words 'permanent establishment,' as there was no intention at the time of removing or abandoning them. The word 'permanent' does not mean forever, or lasting forever, or existing forever. The language used is to be considered according to its nature and its relation to the subject-matter of the contract, and we think that these things were permanently established by the railway company at Marshall."

In Lord v. Goldberg, 22 P. 1126, 1128, 81 Cal. 596, 601 (15 Am. St. Rep. 82) in construing a contract of "permanent" employment, it is said:

"It is clear that plaintiffs' employment was not intended to be for life, or for any fixed or certain period. It was to be 'permanent,' but that only meant that it was to continue indefinitely, and until one or the other of the parties should wish, for some good reason, to sever the relation."

[2] The contracts considered in the foregoing cases were not of such character as to require a strict interpretation thereof against any of the parties thereto, but in this case the rule of strict interpretation is applicable to the condition subsequent contained in the deed.

"A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created." Civ. Code, § 1442.

"A grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee." Civ. Code, § 1069.

"The established rule is that where the right to a forfeiture is created by contract or by law 'it has always been considered that it was necessary to restrain it to the most technical limits of the terms and conditions upon which the right is to be exercised.'" Downing v. Cutting Packing Co., 190 P. 455, 457, 183 Cal. 91, 95.

"No provision in a deed relied on to create a condition subsequent will be so interpreted if the language of the provision will bear any other reasonable construction." Victoria Hospital Ass'n v. All Persons, 147 P. 124, 126, 169 Cal. 455, 459.

"When such a condition is shown to have been created, the rule of construction is that of strictness against the grantor and in favor of the holder of the estate." Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 129 P. 794, 164 Cal. 493, 495 (44 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1229).

"There must be language used which is so clear as to leave no doubt that the grantor intended that an estate upon condition subsequent should be created—language which ex proprio vigore imports such a condition." Hawley v. Kafitz, 83 P. 248, 249, 148 Cal. 393, 395 (3 L. R. A. [N. S.] 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315).

"The burden is upon the party claiming the forfeiture to show that such was the unmistakable intention of the instrument. If the agreement can be reasonably interpreted so as to avoid the forfeiture, it is our duty to do so." Quatman v. McCray, 60 P. 855, 856, 128 Cal. 285, 289.

[3] The deed involved in this case can be reasonably interpreted so as to avoid a forfeiture, even without applying the rule of strict construction discussed in the foregoing decisions. In compliance with the literal terms of the deed, the property was "used for the purpose of maintaining thereon a high school," and the deed does not provide for a reversion upon the discontinuance of such use, but only upon failure to so use it. Adapting the language of the opinion in Texas & Pacific R. Co. v. City of Marshall, supra, the condition of the deed was satisfied when the high school district, in good faith, and without any intention at the time of changing the location of the school, erected buildings on the property and conducted a high school therein for 29 years, and until the interests of the school demanded a change of location. Such use of the property was a permanent use under the authorities herein cited.

"If, by a condition that certain buildings or a certain structure shall be permanently located upon the granted land, it is meant simply that this land shall in good faith be selected as the site of such buildings or structure, and that the same shall be erected upon the granted land, the condition is fulfilled by the erection of the buildings or structure upon the land, and the use of it for a time for the purpose intended, though the use of it for this purpose is subsequently abandoned." Jones on The Law of Real Property in Conveyancing, § 687.

See, also, Crane v. Hyde Park, 135 Mass. 147; Maddox v. Adair (Tex. Civ. App.) 66 S. W. 811; Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis R. R. Co. v. Barbour, 89 Ind. 375. Had it been the intention of Kerr that the property should revert upon the discontinuance of its use for high school purposes, it would have been so easy to have so stated, in plain and simple language, that it must be inferred from the terms actually employed that such was not his intention. In the following cases, relied on by appellant, the language used in the instruments there considered was so plain and certain as to require no interpretation. In Parsons v. Smilie, 32 P. 702, 97 Cal. 647, the condition was that the grantee should maintain on the premises "a good lumber yard for a period of not less than 5 years." In Papst v. Hamilton, 66 P. 10, 133 Cal. 631, the land was conveyed "upon the conditions, * * * that the premises shall be used solely for the purpose of erecting, furnishing, keeping, and maintaining thereon an academic or collegiate school * * * and for a residence or residences thereon for the professors or teachers and students of the said institution while engaged in their duties therein, and for no other purpose whatever." In Firth v. Marovich, 116 P. 729, 160 Cal. 257, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190, the deed provided for the forfeiture of title upon the breach of certain building restrictions contained therein. In Johnston v. City of Los Angeles, 168 P. 1047, 176 Cal. 479, the land in question was conveyed for specified uses and the deed provided that—

"In case the party of the second part shall cease to use the said premises for the said purposes, * * * then and in that case the said premises * * * shall revert to and become the property of the said party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns."

[4] A mere provision in a deed that the property is conveyed for a particular purpose does not create a condition subsequent. Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 129 P. 794, 164 Cal. 493, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229.

In view of the conclusion reached upon the main issue in the case, it is unnecessary to determine whether the use which the district is now making of the property constitutes a use "for the purpose of maintaining thereon a high school." The following cases, however, lend support to respondents' contentions in that regard: Reclamation District v. Van Loben Sels, 78 P. 638, 145 Cal. 181, and Behlow v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 62 P. 295, 130 Cal. 16.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, Justice pro tem.; PLUMMER, J.

76 Cal. App. 597

PEOPLE v. COSPER. (Cr. 1268.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 23, 1926.)

1. Criminal law ⇨1159(3).

Verdict cannot be disturbed if there is competent evidence sufficient to prove charge, notwithstanding that evidence is conflicting.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇨6(10)—Evidence as to treatment of patient during childbirth held sufficient to support charge of violation of Medical Practice Act (Medical Practice Act 1913, p. 734, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11).

In prosecution for violating Medical Practice Act 1913, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, proscribing the practice of any system or mode of treating the sick by one not holding a valid certificate, evidence that defendant gave treatments to patient during childbirth, held sufficient to support conviction.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1)—Accused held not within emergency exception of Medical Practice Act in giving treatments to patient during childbirth (Medical Practice Act 1913, p. 734, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, and Act 1913, § 22).

Defendant, charged with violating Medical Practice Act 1913, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, in practicing without valid certificate, held not within emergency exception of said act (section 22) in giving treatments to patient during childbirth; suggestion of emergency being refuted by evidence that arrangements for treatment had been made several days before defendant was called, and from fact that 20 hours elapsed between time of commencement of treatment and birth of child.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1) — Record held to show use of prayer by accused was mere subterfuge to escape prohibitory sections of Medical Practice Act (Medical Practice Act 1913, p. 734, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, and Act 1913, § 22).

Defendant, practicing without valid certificate, in violation of Medical Practice Act 1913, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, held not within exception in Medical Practice Act, § 22, providing provision of act should not apply to treatment by prayer; record showing without doubt that use of prayer by defendant was mere subterfuge to escape such provisions.

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(11)—Requested instructions relating to employment of assistant under duly licensed practitioner held properly refused, evidence not raising such issues (Medical Practice Act 1913, p. 734, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11).

In prosecution for violation of Medical Practice Act 1913, § 17, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11, practicing without valid certificate, requested instructions relating to employment of an assistant under duly licensed practitioner held properly refused; such issues not being raised, as uncontroverted evidence showed defendant and not assistant was actor in giving treatment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Wilbert L. Cosper was convicted of violating the Medical Practice Act, and he appeals. Affirmed.

T. D. Johnston, of Martinez, and F. L. Butterway, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The appellant was tried and convicted upon an information charging him with a violation of section 17 of the Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 734, as amended by St. 1915, p. 199, § 13, and St. 1917, p. 114, § 11), proscribing the willful practice of any system or mode of treating the sick and af-fllicted by one who does not hold a valid certificate therefor. The appellant has appealed upon a typewritten record from the judgment following the verdict of guilty and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The chief ground urged on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of guilty. The evidence covering the actions and methods used by the appellant at the time complained of is in conflict, and it is therefore not necessary to do more than to refer to the rule that the verdict cannot be disturbed if there is competent evidence sufficient to prove the charge contained in the information notwithstanding the conflict. It is in evidence that the appellant was the organizer and a member of a corporation known as the Christian Philosophical Institute, which was organized for the purpose of teaching students to treat by prayer the sick and afflicted. A few days prior to August 28, 1924, arrangements were made by the appellant to treat Anna Dietrich during the period of her confinement, and as a part of these arrangements it was agreed that the appellant would treat her without fee, and that he might bring to her home a number of his students for the purpose of giving them instruction in the treatment of cases of that character. At 5 o'clock a. m. of August 28, 1924, the appellant and his students gathered at the home of the patient and immediately thereafter the appellant made a physical examination of his patient and gave her instructions as to the character of exercises which she should perform in order to aid the birth of her child. During this time the appellant's students were engaged with him in going through certain exercises which were a part of the method of treatment taught by the institute, and during the period between the time of labor the students retired to the dining room and either engaged in silent prayer or in dancing and other forms of amusement. This treatment continued from 5 o'clock of the morning of August 28th until 2 o'clock of the following morning, when the patient and her husband insisted upon having medical treatment, and she was removed to a maternity hospital, where the child was born at 7 o'clock of that morning. At about 7 o'clock a. m. of August 28th a Dr. Leatherwood, who was duly licensed to practice osteopathy, came to the premises on the call of the appellant and remained with the patient for several hours, and during this time the appellant worked with the doctor and under his direction in the manipulation of the body of the patient. It was conceded that the appellant did not at any of the times referred to have a certificate entitling him to practice any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted in this state. The evidence recited, without going into further detail, is sufficient to support the charge in the information of a violation of section 17 of the Medical Practice Act.

[3] It is urged on the part of the appellant that the case was an emergency treatment, and that it therefore comes within the exception found in section 22 of the Medical Practice Act, which provides that "nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit service in case of emergency." The suggestion of an emergency in this particular is refuted by the uncontroverted evidence that arrangements had been made for the treatment by the appellant of this particular patient several days before the date he was called, and from the further fact that approximately 20 hours elapsed between the time when he commenced his treatment and the time of the birth of the child. During that time ample opportunity was afforded to secure a regularly licensed physician.

[4] It is also urged that the appellant is entitled to relief from the exception contained in section 22 of the Medical Practice Act, to the effect that the provisions of the act shall not "prohibit or apply to, any kind of treatment by prayer." An examination of the record in this case shows without the slightest doubt that the use of prayer by the appellant in the treatment of his patient in this case was a mere subterfuge to escape the prohibitory provisions of the Medical Act.

[5] The appellant suggests that the trial court erred in refusing to give his proposed instructions Nos. 4 and 5, which related to the employment of an assistant under a duly licensed practitioner and to the question of emergency treatments. We have seen that these issues were not before the jury, because the uncontroverted evidence was that the appellant was the actor and not an assistant in the treatment rendered, and that there were no circumstances under which the question of an emergency could arise. We find no prejudicial error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 569

ROCCA v. TUOLUMNE COUNTY ELECTRIC POWER & LIGHT CO.
(Civ. 3052.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, April 19, 1926.)

1. Electricity ⚡14(2)—Electric company held not relieved from duty of protecting high-tension wires beside highway against limb of tree, though tree was on private property.

Electric company, maintaining high-tension wires beside highway, was not relieved from liability for failure to protect wires against limb of a tree, falling on them and causing them to sag, because tree was on private property of another.

2. Electricity ⚡16(3).

Electric company is not relieved from liability for injury by wires broken by storm, unless storm could not reasonably have been anticipated.

3. Electricity ⚡19(3)—Injury to traveler on highway by contact with electric wire held to raise presumption of negligence in maintaining wire.

Where person, while traveling along a public highway, is injured by coming in contact with a highly charged electric wire, belonging to a power company, which is down across public highway, there is a presumption of negligence on part of company maintaining wire.

4. Electricity ⚡19(8)—Negligence in maintaining electric wire, injuring traveler on highway, held for jury.

In action for death of traveler on public highway, electrocuted by wire of power company, caused to sag by limb of tree falling on it, question of power company's negligence in not properly maintaining wires and guarding same against dangers reasonably to be apprehended held for jury.

5. Trial ⚡296(3)—Any error in instruction not requiring finding that dangers could have been apprehended by electric company held not prejudicial, in view of other instructions (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Any error in instruction authorizing recovery for death due to negligence of electric power company in construction and maintenance of its electric power lines, in that instruction did not require finding that dangers impending could have been reasonably apprehended or safeguarded against, held not prejudicial, within Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of other instructions.

6. Death ⚡99(5)—$12,000 damages to mother for death of adult son held not excessive.

Damages of $12,000 for death of plaintiff's adult son, who lived with plaintiff, and managed her property, plaintiff's life expectancy being 10 years, held not excessive.

7. Appeal and error ⚡1004(1).

Appellate court can set aside a verdict of jury on grounds of damages allowed being excessive only when it appears that improper causes have led to verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Jay L. Rocca, administrator of the estate of Lige William Rocca, deceased, against the Tuolumne County Electric Power & Light Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin L. Forster and R. P. Henshall, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jacobs & Jacobs, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff, as the administrator of Lige William Rocca, deceased, prosecutes this action under the provisions of section 377, Code of Civil Procedure, in the interest of Marguerite Rocca, mother of the deceased. Plaintiff had judgment in the sum of $12,000. A motion for a new trial being denied, defendant appeals to this court from said judgment.

After setting forth some preliminary matters, the complaint alleges that the defendant is a corporation organized for furnishing electricity for lighting and power purposes, and was maintaining a line of wires, poles, etc., for carrying and conveying electricity from Jamestown to Quartz Mountain and thence to Stent, in the county of Tuolumne, and was so doing on the 30th day of January, 1922. It is further alleged that said company maintained an electric power line along a public highway at a point where a certain other road used by the public intersected or connected with said public highway; that said road so intersecting said public highway is known as and called the App Mine road; that said App Mine road was, at the time in question, and for many years prior thereto had been, generally used and traveled by the public. The complaint then sets forth that on or about the 30th day of January, 1922, and while the defendant was in the possession and control of said electrical power line, it was so negligent and careless in maintaining and using the same that said wire was allowed to sag to within about 3 feet of the ground where it passed over the App Mine road; that on the morning of the 30th of January, 1922, the deceased, while walking along said App Mine road, came in contact with said wire without any negligence on his part, and was immediately electrocuted. Damages are then alleged in the sum of $15,000.

The answer of the defendant admits the maintenance of the power line, the death of the deceased as caused by coming in contact therewith, and then alleges that during the night of January 29 and 30, 1922, an unusual storm prevailed over the country where the power line of the defendant was maintained, and that, owing to the unusual severity of the storm, a limb was broken from a tree standing near the said power line; that said limb fell upon one of the wires maintained by the company, and thereby caused the same to sag within a few feet of the ground as herein stated. The answer further alleges that the deceased was negligent by passing along said road at an early and unseasonable hour, and, further, that the defendant did not know, and had no means of knowing, that said limb had by reason of the storm been blown from said trees onto the wires belonging to the defendant.

The testimony set forth in the transcript shows that the deceased and another person had passed along said App Mine road on the evening of January 29, 1922; that at the junction of the App Mine road the deceased and a friend named Hawke had alighted from an automobile in which they were traveling, and had gone by way of the App Mine road to visit a family by the name of Stephens; that said Hawke remained at the Stephens home until about 2 o'clock that night, when he left and passed down the App Mine road to the public highway with which said road connects; that the deceased remained at the Stephens home until between 4 and 5 o'clock in the morning, when he left said home, and started down the App Mine road to meet his brother, at a point where the App Mine road intersects the public highway. It appears that the deceased and the brother of the deceased had made a previous appointment to meet at the point indicated at about the hour of 5 o'clock on the morning of January 30, 1922. When the brother reached the appointed place on the morning of January 30, 1922, he found the deceased lying dead under the power wire herein referred to; that the power wire was about 3 feet above the body of the deceased, the wire being held down by the limb of the tree hereinbefore referred to, which limb was resting upon the wire near one of the poles on which the wire was strung, and at a point where the limb of the tree rested upon the wire the wire was pressed down to within about 6 inches of the ground.

The county road to which we have referred runs from Sonora by Jamestown; thence to the villages of Quartz and Stent. The App Mine road connecting therewith has been traveled by the public for a period of some 40 years. The defendant maintained two power wires along the county road over and above the point where the App Mine road connects therewith. These wires were strung over the App Mine road on poles 245.5 feet apart. These wires ran along the west side of the county road at a distance therefrom where they cross over the App Mine road of about 17 feet. The nearest pole southerly from the App Mine road was distant 94 feet. The nearest pole to the north of the App Mine road was distant about 151 feet. It appears from the testimony also that a telephone company maintained its wires along a line drawn between the power lines maintained by the defendant over the App Mine road and the trees from which the limb was broken, as heretofore stated. The wires of the power line were higher than the telephone wires by some 4 feet. The power line wires at the pole immediately south of the App Mine road, called pole B, were carried to a height of some 30 feet. At pole C to the north the wires were at an elevation of only 22 feet. It also appears from the testimony that the Pacific Gas & Electric Company maintained electric power lines over the App Mine road a short distance away, and that the poles of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, where its lines were carried over the App Mine road, were 108 feet apart. It also appears that old stumps of poles formerly used by the defendant in maintaining its line indicated that the span over the App Mine road was at one time only 148 feet. It further appears from the testimony that, during all of the period of time the defendant has maintained its electric power lines herein referred to, a certain pine tree has stood 33 feet distant from the power lines belonging to the defendant and a short distance northerly from the pole B, carrying the power wires over the App Mine road. In other words, the tree was between the poles carrying the span of wires over the App Mine road. It further appears that this tree, which was to the west of the power lines, leaned towards the east, so that a line dropped from where the limb was broken from said tree would reach the ground a trifle over 8 feet nearer the power line than the base of the tree. At a point from 45 to 48 feet above the ground, a limb 10 or 12 inches in diameter where it joined the tree, extended out in an easterly direction, at an angle of about 45 degrees. This limb was from 35 to 40 feet in length, and overhung the power lines belonging to the defendant, but was some distance above the power line. The pole of the power line near the pine tree is called in the testimony "pole B." The next pole to the south thereof is called "pole A," and was distant from pole B 257 feet. The pole to the north of the App Mine road is called in the testimony "pole C," and, as hereinbefore stated, is distant from pole B 245½ feet. The next pole of the power line north of pole C is called in the testimony "pole D," and is distant from pole C 260 feet. The next pole north of pole D is called "pole E," and is distant from pole D 199½ feet. The power wires of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company over the same corresponding territory, but, on the opposite side of the pine tree, have the following spans: 113 feet, 95½ feet, 162½ feet, and 98 feet. The two wires maintained by the defendant were strung on cross-arms and tied to insulators thereon about 4 feet apart. The wires of the defendant power company were 3 or 4 feet higher than the highest wire of the telephone company. The branches of the limb of the tree caught the east wire of the defendant company, and pressed it to the ground as hereinbefore stated, leaving the butt end of the limb resting upon the west wire maintained by the power company, and drawing it down to within some 12 or 14 feet of the ground. The pine tree is 27 inches in diameter and some 83 feet in height. The ground upon which the pine tree stood was elevated a slight distance above the ground where pole B was located. The point where the limb broken from the tree pressed the east wire of the power line to the ground was about 19½ feet north of pole B. All the testimony shows that the night in question was very dark. On the part of the appellant, considerable testimony was introduced to the effect that it was an unprecedentedly stormy and windy night. On the part of the plaintiff, considerable testimony was introduced to the effect that, although it was a stormy night, the storm was not unusual in its violence, and was only such a storm as frequently occurs in the mountainous regions where the power lines were maintained. In this particular, the appellant claims that the death of the deceased was brought about by inevitable casualty, and was the result of causes not to be reasonably apprehended or reasonably guarded against. The testimony shows that the scar on the pine tree where the limb was broken away showed an old break of about one-third of the surface thereof on the upper portion and a clean fresh break on the remainder. The testimony in the transcript shows that employees of the company knew of the circumstances of the pine tree and limb in question, but there is no evidence in the transcript indicating whether the old crack in the limb where it joined the parent tree was visible from the ground, or could have been discovered by an inspection of the limb, nor is there any evidence in the transcript that any inspection or examination was ever made of the tree prior to the accident in question by any one connected with the company or otherwise.

The testimony further shows that the deceased was unmarried and about 29 years of age; that the deceased and his mother lived on a ranch near Algerine, in the county of Tuolumne; that this ranch comprised some 600 acres in area; that the deceased had lived upon the ranch with his parents for a number of years preceding the World War; that during the World War the deceased was in the army and away from home; that upon his return in 1919 he worked for a while in a bakery near Sonora; that in November, 1920, the deceased returned to the ranch, and remained there until the date of his death; that in July, 1921, the father of the deceased died, and, after the death of the father of the deceased, the deceased for about 14 months, and up to the date of his death, took charge of the ranch; that the deceased was familiar with farming operations, and looked after the ranch in an excellent manner; that during the 14 months the deceased was in charge of the ranch in question the mother of the deceased depended exclusively upon him for the management of her affairs; that during the time the deceased was in charge of the ranch the proceeds thereof were deposited in a bank in Sonora; that the deceased drew from the money deposited in bank and used for his own purposes the sum of about $30 a month; that at the time of the death of the deceased there was in the bank to the credit of the mother, as proceeds of the operation of the ranch, the sum of $1,200, accumulated during the period of the deceased's management. There was also testimony introduced to the effect that during the busy season ranch hands were paid from $4 to $5 per day; that the compensation of the foreman of a ranch was from $100 to $130 per month. At the time of the trial the mother of the deceased was 67 years of age. The deceased was in good health, able-bodied, industrious, considerate of his mother, with whom he resided. The mother of the deceased had two sons, the deceased, unmarried, and a married son, named John J. Rocca. There were several sisters, all married but one. The testimony does not show that the son ever contributed any actual cash to the support of his mother, nor what the arrangement, if any, existed between the mother and the deceased relative to his management of the ranch. It simply sets forth that he was in charge of the 600-acre ranch, upon which grain and hay, garden products and fruit were produced, poultry raised, and a limited number of cattle and hogs, and the amount of money usually paid for like services rendered by others. The life tables show an expectancy on the part of the mother of 10 years, dating from the day of the trial.

As grounds for reversal of the judgment in this case, the appellant urges: (1) That the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that it contains no allegation that the mother was dependent upon her son for support, and that there is no allegation as to damages, save and except the general statement that the plaintiff was injured in the sum of $15,000; (2) that the death of Lige William Rocca was the result of inevitable casualty, and not of any negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the deceased himself was guilty of contributory negligence; (3) erroneous instructions given to the jury by the court, and, finally, that the judgment is excessive. The appellant also moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the testimony did not show any negligence on its part. We do not find anything of merit in the appellant's contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action. The questions presented by appellant's motion for a nonsuit may be treated generally in considering the question of negligence, if any, shown in this case.

The testimony shows that there is no mechanical appliance that will indicate the mere fact of a sagging wire; that there are mechanical appliances which indicate the circumstance of a broken wire, or of a wire becoming grounded; that appliances of this character were used by the defendant company; and that, had the wire in question broken and reached the ground, the company would have been advised thereof immediately. The testimony further shows that the accident in question occurred some time between 2:30 a. m. and 5 a. m., of January 30, 1922, and at an hour when the App Mine road is seldom frequented, and at a time when it is reasonable to infer that the lines of the company were not usually being inspected. Whether the storm in question was of that severity which would have induced an ordinarily prudent person to inspect the power line carrying a highly dangerous voltage to ascertain if any damages were being done thereto does not appear to have been directly presented one way or the other in the trial of this case. It may be here stated that the power line causing the death of the deceased carried 2,300 volts of electricity.

The question of negligence in this case depends upon a combination of factors: (1) Was the leaning position of the pine tree referred to herein and the overhanging limb which broke away therefrom and fell upon the power lines maintained by the defendant so near the power lines belonging to the defendant and in such a position as to induce an ordinarily prudent person to take precautions against injury resulting from damage that might be inflicted upon the tree by the usual winter storms, reasonably to be anticipated in the mountainous country where the lines were maintained? (2) Also, could the cracked condition of the limb, as shown by the scar after the limb had been wrenched away from the parent tree, have been discovered had any reasonable effort been made to ascertain the condition thereof? (3) Also, whether the distance between the poles on which the wires were strung was so excessive as to permit the bringing down to the earth of a line swung on a crossarm about 30 feet in height to within 6 inches of the ground at a point only 19 feet from the base of the pole? (4) Also, considering the leaning position of the trees and the overhanging limb, would or would not ordinary care and precaution have suggested to the defendant the advisability and reasonable necessity of erecting a pole between pole B and the App Mine road, so that, if the tree or a limb thereof did fall upon the power lines, it would fall upon a span not swung across the App Mine road? The testimony shows that the spans in the line maintained by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company in the same neighborhood were very much shorter in length. The voltage carried by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company does not appear in the transcript. Much stress is laid upon the fact by the appellant that the broken limb was carried over the telephone wires which were between the tree and the power lines belonging to the defendant. The telephone lines, however, were much lower, and, owing to the leaning position of the tree would tend to carry the limb over the telephone wires, even though the storm was not of unusual severity.

In the argument of this case our attention has been called to a number of cases. We will review the same, so far as pertinent, and also some cases not cited in the brief. In Curtis on the Law of Electricity, § 497, it is said generally:

"Electric companies, not being insurers against accidents from their appliances, are not liable for injuries resulting from an act of God or inevitable accident. The basis of the company's liability is its negligence; but the sagging of wire, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, is generally held to make a prima facie case of negligence which requires the company to give evidence that the sagging was not the result of its negligence. * * * If the sagging of its wire is occasioned by a cause for which it is not responsible, and it detects the trouble with promptness, and immediately pursues the proper steps to remedy the situation, it is not chargeable for an injury to another by reason of the sagging of the wire. * * * Whenever electric or other wires are maintained in such a location that it may be reasonably anticipated that the sagging thereof will cause injury, the one maintaining the wire must use due care to prevent the sagging thereof. Due or commensurate care in the case of high-tension electric currents means a very high degree of diligence. If a wire strung along or across a highway is negligently permitted to sag so that a traveler is injured thereby as a general proposition, the company maintaining the wire is liable for the resultant damages."

[1-3] The pine tree referred to herein stands upon private property, but the argument based upon that fact by appellant is untenable, and does not relieve the company from liability for failure to protect its wires or take the ordinary precautions which the circumstances demanded. In Hagerstown & Frederick Railway Company v. State of Maryland, for use of Bruce A. Weaver, 115 A. 783, 139 Md. 507, 19 A. L. R. 797, the law on this question is thus stated:

"An electric company maintaining high-tension wires beside a highway is not relieved from the duty of protecting the wires against the decayed limb of a tree which overhangs them, by the fact that they are on its own property, and the tree is on private property of another, if the fall of the limb is likely to break the wires and endanger persons passing along the highway."

In this case the poles belonging to the company were just inside and adjacent to a wire fence on the west side of the highway. The road or highway was about 30 feet wide, and standing just inside the fence on the opposite side of the road was a weeping willow tree from 5 to 6 feet in diameter. A larger limb of this tree extended out over the highway. This limb broke away and fell one evening, and, in its fall, struck and broke one of the transmission wires belonging to the company. This wire came in contact with the wire fence just referred to, and a minor child of the respondent touched this wire fence and was killed. The court, in considering the facts thus presented, declared the law as we have stated, and said further:

"The obligation of such companies to exercise proper care is not determined by their right to construct and maintain their lines, but rests upon their duty to protect others while in the lawful exercise of their rights. As we have said, there was evidence tending to show that the appellant, by the exercise of proper care, could have known that the tree was decayed, and that the limb that gave way would probably fall and break its wire, and that it did nothing either to protect its wires or to protect the public from injury that might be caused by a fallen wire. To hold that the appellant was relieved from all obligation or duty to the public simply because the tree stood on private property would deprive those lawfully and properly using the highway of the protection they were entitled to. * * * The appellant's line was on its private right of way where the appellant had a right to construct and maintain it. But it was also along a public highway, where the public and the little child that was killed had a right to be, and the company was therefore required, in maintaining its line, to exercise that high degree of care commensurate with the danger to which it exposed those using the highway. If the proximity of its line to the decayed tree rendered the highway unsafe for the use of the public, it was the duty of the appellant either to have the limb removed, or to exercise proper care to protect its wires, and, if the injury complained of was the result of its failure to discharge that duty, it should be held liable."

In Boyd v. Portland General Electric Company, 66 P. 576, 40 Or. 126, 57 L. R. A. 619, a case having to do with a wire broken by storm, the court said:

"An electric-light company is not relieved from liability for injuries by wires broken by a storm, unless it was one which could not reasonably have been anticipated."

In Warren v. City Electric Railway Co., 104 N. W. 613, 141 Mich. 298, where a telephone wire received a dangerous current from a trolley wire by being pressed down onto a trolley wire by a limb of a tree which was broken down by a severe storm, the court, in considering the subject of inevitable accident, and the claim that the wire was not properly constructed, used this language:

"In this connection it is urged that the proximate cause of the injury was not the want of insulation, nor the failure to guard the span wire, but it was the breaking of the tree. It is generally the case that an accident is the result of concurring causes. If the rain and snow never fell and the wind never blew, wires would be less likely to fall and break. * * * All of these were things to be anticipated and guarded against. If this was not done to the extent that a prudent man would do it, there was a failure of duty, which might be a concurring cause of the accident, making defendant liable."

In Spires v. Middlesex & Monmouth Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., 57 A. 424, 70 N. J. Law, 355, where a wire was broken by a falling limb from a tree, the court considered the question of the duty of the company to guard against such occurrences and to protect its wires from such possibilities, and discussed the question in this manner:

"We think the finding of the jury that the company was negligent was justified by the facts shown. The wire which was broken crossed the highway diagonally at the place where the accident happened. The parting of the wire was caused by the falling upon it of a heavy limb which had broken from a tree which stood some feet away. In view of the dangerous nature of a wire charged with a powerful electric current, corporations using public highways for wires that are so charged should exercise a high degree of care to keep the wires where travelers will not be likely to come in contact with them. The likelihood of such a wire being broken by the falling of the limb of a tree upon it is much lessened by a guard wire stretched over it and running parallel with it, and juries are justified, in proper cases, in holding that such a safeguard is due to the public, and that its absence speaks negligence."

In the case at bar the erection of another pole on the south line of the App Mine road would have given a span of wire adjacent to the leaning tree and underneath the overhanging bough, which would have absolutely protected the public in the use of the App Mine road. The failure to take any such precautions in the light of the circumstances presented by the tree and overhanging limb are matters of fact going to the question of negligence proper for the jury to consider; also the fact that the spans between the poles were of such great distance and the wire so loosely hung that it could be pressed to the ground so near to a supporting pole. In Heidt v. So. Tele. & Telegraph Co., 50 S. E. 361, 122 Ga. 474, a case having to do with the falling of a tree by a violent storm, the facts showing that it was one which could not have been reasonably guarded against, the court stated the law applicable, following the rule hereinbefore laid down, to wit:

"The electric light company, in the construction of its line, was bound to adopt all reasonable precautions for the protection of the public, to prevent casualties which might be reasonably anticipated. This obligation would require it to anticipate the influence of the ordinary storms customary to the locality. But if the falling of the electrically charged wire was caused by a storm of unusual severity, which could not have been reasonably foreseen and its consequences guarded against, the company would not be liable, if it was not otherwise negligent."

The telephone company and the power company were made defendants in that action. The telephone company was held liable for not having properly guarded its wires, and the power company held not liable on the theory that defendant (power company) had taken all reasonable precautions, and the storm was not one common to the locality where the wires were erected. In Rowe v. New York & N. J. Tel. Co., 48 A. 523, 66 N. J. Law, 19, a telephone wire swung above a power wire was blown down during a violent squall, and injury occasioned to a boy walking along the sidewalk where said wire reached the ground. Both companies were held liable, notwithstanding the storm, by reason of the fact that neither company had taken precautions to guard the wires from coming in contact. In the case of Smith v. San Joaquin, etc., Power Corp., 211 P. 843, 59 Cal. App. 647, the recital of facts shows that an electric power line strung along the side of a public highway was broken by the leaves of a large palm tree blown against the wire during the storm, and the court said:

"The defendant pleaded in its answer, and thereafter offered to prove, facts showing or tending to show that the wire which the plaintiff touched was properly in place the night before, that a wind arose, and the leaves of a large palm were blown over against the wire and broke it, and that such facts constituted an act of God. If the facts stated constituted an act of God the defendant should have been permitted to show the same as a defense. However, the respondent contends that the alleged facts do not show an act of God within the proper meaning of that rule. (Fay v. Pacific Improvement Co. [26 P. 1099, 28 P. 943], 93 Cal. 253 [16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198].) In this behalf he contends that if the palm tree stood in such a position as to endanger the defendant's wire that the defendant should have properly protected its wire therefrom and, in failing to do so, the omission was an act of neglect on the part of the defendant, and not an act of God. This contention is supported by the authorities. Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 197."

This case applies the rule of res ipsa loquitur. In Diller v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 123 P. 359, 162 Cal. 531, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 908, the rule of res ipsa loquitur is applied, and it is there said:

"The fact that a person, while traveling along a public highway, was injured by coming in contact with a highly charged electric wire belonging to an electric light and power company, which was down across the public highway at the point where the accident occurred, raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the company maintaining the wire."

Numerous cases are cited in that case, and, we think, definitely establish the rule as applicable to the case at bar. That the evidence does not show any previous breaking of a limb from the pine tree in question is wholly immaterial. The question is, Could it have been reasonably anticipated? or, as said in 19 Cal. Jur. 563:

"But merely because a particular accident has not happened before does not render it of that class which may not 'reasonably be anticipated,' for if, in the conduct of a certain business, it should be known that unusual or uncommon danger must necessarily coexist with certain conditions, responsibility attaches for a failure to control such conditions. And where injury could reasonably have been anticipated, it is not a prerequisite to liability that the wrongdoer should be able to anticipate the precise form of the consequential injury. Whether an injury should have been anticipated by defendant as the result of his negligent act depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, and is ordinarily for the jury to determine."

See, also, Teale v. S. P. Co., 129 P. 949, 20 Cal. App. 570, where this rule is held to apply, even though no previous accident had occurred.

The law applicable to cases involving circumstances which we are here considering is clearly set forth in the case of Fairbairn v. American River Electric Co., 148 P. 788, 170 Cal. 115, from which we quote the following:

"The companies are not insurers of the safety of the public against all dangers arising from the lawful placing in the street of appliances pertaining to the business carried on by them, but they are bound to know the danger which may naturally be caused by such use of the streets, and to guard against them by the exercise of all the foresight and caution which can be reasonably expected of prudent men, under the circumstances." 1 Joyce on Electricity, § 438; Denver v. Sherret, 88 F. 233, 31 C. C. A. 499. "The degree of care required of such companies, under the rule that they must exercise reasonable care, varies according to the facts and circumstances of the case, having in view the serious results which may ensue as a consequence of negligence." 1 Joyce on Electricity, § 438a. The standard to be attained is that of ordinary and reasonable care, and this means such care as a reasonably careful and prudent person, having in view the dangers to be avoided and the likelihood of injury therefrom, would exercise, under the circumstances, in order to prevent injury. Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it."

The verdict of the jury necessarily included the finding upon conflicting testimony that the storm was not unusual, and, therefore, one that should have been reasonably apprehended, and that finding is conclusive upon appeal.

[4] We think that the foregoing résumé of the testimony and law applicable to this case shows that the denial of the defendant's motion for a nonsuit was proper; that the question of negligence on the part of the defendant in not properly maintaining its wires and guarding the same against dangers reasonably to be apprehended was one properly to be submitted to the jury; that the rule of res ipsa loquitur applies; and that the cases of Kleebauer v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., 71 P. 617, 138 Cal. 497, 60 L. R. A. 377, 94 Am. St. Rep. 62, and Puckhaber v. S. P. Co., 64 P. 480, 132 Cal. 363, have no application, as they do not involve safeguarding against impending dangers.

[5] At the request of the plaintiff, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"If you believe that the defendant so constructed and maintained its electric pole lines and power wires that a pine tree was permitted to be and remain sufficiently near said power line that a limb from said tree extended over and above said power wires of said defendant, and that said limb, under weather conditions that were not unusual for said season of the year in said locality, fell upon the electric power line of said defendant, and placed said line sufficiently near the ground as to cause said power line at the point where the same crossed the App Mine road to reach a point sufficiently near the ground that the deceased Lige William Rocca, in walking along said road without negligence or fault upon his part, walked against or came in contact with said wire, and as a result thereof was killed, and that the killing of said deceased was due to the negligence of said defendant in the manner and place of the construction and maintenance of its electric power lines, when considered with reference to said tree and overhanging limb, then I instruct you that the defendant would be liable in damages to the plaintiff herein."

Taken by itself, it may be seriously questioned whether this instruction sets forth the law correctly. It is certain that it does not set it forth in very clear language. There is nothing in the instruction relating to whether the dangers impending could have been reasonably apprehended or safeguarded against, but, read in connection with instructions immediately following, the ambiguity and error, if any, involved in said instruction are corrected and cleared up, as the jury is immediately advised in the following language:

"The jury is instructed that the defendant is charged with the duty of so placing its wires and keeping and maintaining them, with reference to adjacent trees and limbs, as to protect said wires in reasonable safety against the danger of being broken or disturbed by falling limbs under ordinary seasonable weather conditions in the locality where said wires were maintained; and said defendant is charged with the duty of keeping in mind and protecting its power lines in reasonable safety against, the ordinary consequences that may result to adjacent trees or overhanging limbs from the ordinary seasonable weather conditions in the locality—including rain, snow, heat, cold and wind."

The jury was also instructed that they were to take into consideration all the circumstances and facts which we have hereinbefore set forth, which gave them a full idea of what they were to pass upon. At the request of the defendant, the court gave a number of instructions, among which we find the following:

"If you find from the evidence, and believe, that said storm and wind was the sole cause of the breaking of said limb off said tree, and said limb was sufficient in weight to cause said wire being sagged to or within about 3 feet of the ground at the point where the body of Lige Rocca was found, and if you should further find from the evidence that defendant was not negligent in the construction or maintenance of its power line, then I charge you that your verdict should be in favor of defendant."

"I further charge you that before a verdict for any sum can be found against defendant you must find from a preponderance of the evidence that the death of Lige Rocca was caused by the negligence of the defendant in not properly having constructed said line of power wire leading from Jamestown to Stent, or by the negligence of defendant in not having on January 30, 1922, properly maintained said wire at a point where a road leading from the App Mine intersects the highway leading from Jamestown to Stent."

In view of these instructions, and others which were given at the request of the defendant, which fully presented to the jury all questions of negligence on the part of the defendant, the dangers to be apprehended and the conditions surrounding the maintenance of the wire and whether the storm was a usual one occurring in that locality, or was of unprecedented violence and of a degree and force not to be reasonably apprehended, we cannot conclude any prejudicial error was committed by the court, and, therefore, section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution must be held as applicable.

[6] It is finally insisted that the verdict is excessive; that section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as applied to this case, does not permit the jury to take into consideration the pecuniary value and, therefore, the pecuniary loss of the comfort, society, and protection afforded the mother by her son. In this contention, however, the appellant is not borne out by the facts. The evidence shows that the mother, a widow, and a son were living together upon the mother's ranch; that the son had taken charge of the ranch; and that the mother consulted with the son in the management of her properties, and depended upon the son for his management, control and operation of the ranch properties, and, as well, was enjoying his society, comfort, and protection at her home. It is not a case where an adult child is living away from home and is not contributing anything in the way of society, comfort, and protection to a parent. The life expectancy of the mother in this case, as shown by the tables, is about 10 years, and, while there does not appear anything in mere dollars and cents as to the contributions made by the son to the support of his mother, it does appear that he was managing the ranch in question, and apparently showing a profit in the management thereof. Whether the son was entitled to draw down and expend for his own uses and purposes more than $30 a month is not shown by the testimony. The value of the son's services, however, may be reasonably inferred from the testimony as to the ordinary wages paid for like services. This is not all, however, that the jury was entitled to consider, because, in the management of the ranch property, skill, knowledge of conditions, and industry are important factors, and especially the interest in the property, its care, and development are highly important. These were factors entering into the profit reasonably to be expected by the mother in having her properties looked after by one who was capable, industrious, and interested. In considering the value of these factors, and arriving at a just conclusion thereof, we are of the opinion that the jury would arrive at as nearly an accurate approximation of the damages suffered as could be determined by any court. Of course, it cannot be said that the son would live with the mother and manage the ranch and afford all the profitable matters, which we have herein set forth, during the entire period of her life expectancy; neither could it be said that he would not do so. In considering these probabilities, the Supreme Court, in Parsons v. Easton, 195 P. 419, 184 Cal. 764, said:

"In the absence of anything to the contrary, the presumption would be that the benefit to the parents from the son, if any, would have continued during her survivorship [referring to the mother] the same as during the lives of both of them. Hence, it is proper to consider the value in money of the benefits which, from all the circumstances of the case, the parents might be reasonably expected to derive from the son during their expectancy of joint life and for the remainder of the mother's life expectancy, assuming that the son's life would have continued for that period."

From this it follows that, if the pecuniary value of the son to the mother in the management of her property was the sum of $1,200 per year, and her life expectancy was 10 years, her loss in dollars has been the sum of $12,000. To be sure, this is not considering the present worth of the sum involved paid annually in installments of $1,200. Here, however, another element enters into the case, and that is the pecuniary value, and hence the pecuniary loss of the society, comfort, and protection. Our attention has not been called to any rule by which such damages may be mathematically calculated. Such damages must be determined by the enlightened judgment either of the jury or the court, and, as we have said, we know of no rule which indicates that the judgment of the court is more likely to be accurate in such matters than the determination of the jury.

[7] Again, an appellate court is entitled to interfere and set aside a verdict of a jury on the grounds of the damages allowed being excessive, only when it appears that improper causes have led to the verdict. The language of this court, speaking through Presiding Justice Chipman, in Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 147 P. 90, 26 Cal. App. 318, states the rule and refers to the cases considering the same. We quote therefrom the following: "There is no evidence aside from the amount of the damages, from which it can be inferred that the jury were actuated in the slightest degree by passion, prejudice, or by corrupt motives. The amount in itself is not such as 'to suggest at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury.' (Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co. [106 Pac. 84], 156 Cal. 715; Bond v. United Railroads [113 P. 366], 159 Cal. 270, 286 [48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50].) This subject has been so frequently discussed by our appellate courts and under so many different conditions of facts that it would be difficult to throw any additional light upon it. We can discover no rule of law which would warrant our holding the verdict in the present case to be excessive and we content ourselves with referring to some of the cases, in addition to the two above cited, which we think fully justify our conclusion: Redfield v. Oakland Con. Co. [42 P. 822, 1063], 110 Cal. 285; Hillebrand v. Standard Biscuit Co. [73 P. 163], 139 Cal. 233; Skelton v. Pacific Lumber, etc., Co. [74 P. 13], 140 Cal. 507; Bowen v. Sierra Lumber Co. [84 P. 1010], 3 Cal. App. 313; McGrory v. Pacific Elec. Co. [136 P. 303], 22 Cal. App. 671." This question was before this court in the case of Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Construction Company, 243 P. 43. The opinion in that case quotes from Graham & Waterman on New Trials, page 451, the following pertinent language: "It is clear that the reason for holding the parties so tenaciously to the damages found by the jury in personal torts, is, that in cases of this class there is no scale by which the damages are to be graduated with certainty. They admit of no other test than the intelligence of a jury, governed by a sense of justice. * * *" This applies to all that part of the judgment in this case which rests upon the rule that damages may be allowed for the pecuniary loss, following the deprivation of society, comfort and protection. Again, if we were to conclude that the judgment is excessive, we have nothing before us upon which to reasonably predicate such a statement. The figures furnished by the appellant, calculated upon the present worth of the damages allowed, cannot be taken as a guide, because the appellant has proceeded upon the theory that the mother has suffered no pecuniary loss on account of being deprived of the society, comfort and protection of the son, or his judgment in the management of the property, or of their relationship being such as to induce her to place confidence in his judgment and to look to him for guidance, comfort and protection. These are valuable items to a woman 67 years of age, who has no other unmarried son to take charge of her property, and is, perforce, required to look elsewhere and possibly to strangers for a ranch manager possessing the necessary qualifications shown to have been possessed by the son. Every man on the jury, having knowledge of the management of ranch properties, appreciates the difficulty of obtaining a competent manager, and is, perhaps, by training better qualified to estimate this loss than either trial or appellate court. A review of the cases upholding and setting aside verdicts on the grounds of being excessive would not serve any useful purpose, and we content ourselves with a statement that no sufficient reason has been presented to us for setting aside the verdict on any such grounds.

Other objections urged in appellant's brief in relation to instructions, the admission of testimony and the sustaining of objections which we have considered and found untenable are not set forth in this opinion, because it would unduly lengthen the same.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PULLEN, Justice pro tem.

76 Cal. App. 541

MICHAELIAN v. ELBA LAND CO.
(Civ. 2984.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 18, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 19, 1926.)

1. Pleading $\S$ 403(3)—Failure to allege, in action for breach of contract to sell land, that defendant wrongfully withheld possession held cured by allegation of defendant's cross-complaint and plaintiff's reply thereto.

In action for breach of contract to sell land brought on theory that defendant had wrongfully rescinded contract, if allegation that plaintiff was entitled to possession, and that defendant wrongfully withheld possession was necessary, omission held cured by allegation of defendant's cross-complaint admitting termination of contract for plaintiff's failure to comply therewith and plaintiff's reply admitting such allegation.

2. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 350.

Evidence held to show that purchaser, during his possession of premises purchased from defendant, took good care of same, thereby precluding termination of contract by vendor on that ground.

3. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 92—Vendor held not entitled to forfeit contract for sale of land because purchaser failed to do best kind of farming or give best of care (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1442).

Vendor held not entitled, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1442, to terminate contract for sale of land, requiring purchaser to give certain care to premises because purchaser did not always do best kind of farming or give orchards or vineyards very best of care, or was late in his cultivation and pruning in spring of one year, where it was not shown that vines or trees were injured thereby, or that crops were any less, and vendor continued to receive payments.

4. Contracts $\S$ 318—Deeds $\S$ 155—Forfeitures are not favored, and are to be construed liberally in favor of holder of estate (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1442).

Forfeitures are not favored in law, and conditions providing for forfeiture of an estate are to be construed liberally in favor of a holder and strictly against enforcement of forfeiture, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1442.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨85—Vendor who declared contract terminated, and filed cross-complaint on that ground, and who had taken possession of premises, held to have rescinded contract, which action was acquiesced in by purchaser bringing suit for breach of contract.

Vendor, who declared contract terminated, and filed cross-complaint, in action by purchaser for damages for breach of contract, asking that contract be terminated, and who had taken possession of premises, and declared contract terminated before suit was commenced, thereby rescinded contract on his part, which action was acquiesced in by purchaser in bringing suit, although rescission by vendor was without right.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇨350—That purchaser, after eviction from premises, occupied sleeping room in house on premises held not conclusive as to termination of contract.

That purchaser for brief time after eviction from premises occupied a sleeping room in house on premises held not conclusive that vendor had not terminated contract and taken actual possession of premises and exercised complete control thereover.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⇨342—Purchaser, wrongfully dispossessed, might sue for breach of contract, treat contract as terminated, and sue for money paid thereunder, or sue in equity for specific performance and damages from wrongful disseisin and detention of premises.

Where vendor wrongfully dispossessed purchaser, purchaser might sue for damages for breach of contract, treat contract as terminated, and sue for recovery of money expended thereunder, and for reasonable value of services performed in pursuance of contract, and for any special damage which he incurred by such dispossession, or sue in equity for specific performance of contract, and such compensatory damages as wrongful disseisin and detention of premises entailed upon him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Jacob Michaelian against the Elba Land Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Farnsworth, McClure, Burke & Maddox, of Visalia, G. W. Zartman, of Tulare, and Frank Golden, of San Francisco, for appellant.

D. M. Edwards and J. W. Wright, both of Visalia, and J. C. Thomas, of Oakland, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the total sum of $78,978.24 for the alleged breach by the defendant of a contract for the sale to him (plaintiff) of a certain tract of land, situated in Tulare county, together with certain personal property. The cause was tried by the court, a trial by jury having been waived by the parties, and plaintiff was awarded judgment in the sum of $31,098.31, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of said judgment. The defendant appeals from said judgment upon a record made up in pursuance of the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The contract, for the alleged breach of the terms of which by defendant the plaintiff herein seeks relief, was entered into between the parties on the 24th day of June, 1918. The land involved in the agreement of sale is specifically described in said agreement, and growing thereon, at the time said agreement was executed, were fruit trees and a vineyard. Certain portions thereof were devoted to the growing of wheat and other like crops. There were also fuel trees upon the premises. The articles of personal property involved in the sale consisted of certain shares of stock in certain canal companies, and pumping plants, horses, mules, harness, and wagons, plows, harrows, cultivators, and a variety of other mechanical equipments suitable and necessary to the cultivation and care of fruit trees and grapevines. All these articles are specifically enumerated and described in the agreement of sale.

The purchase price of the land and said personal property was $85,000, payable as follows:

"Two thousand dollars, cash in hand, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged; $5,000.00 payable on July 1st, 1919; $8,000.00 on July 23, 1919, and $10,000.00 on December 15, 1919."

It was further provided that crops harvested after 1919 were to be marketed "in the name of the first and second parties jointly, at best market price, one-half of the returns from such sales to be paid to said party of the first part (defendant) until the amount received by him, together with payments made during the year 1919, shall equal one-half the purchase price to be paid for the above described property, together with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum on all deferred payments payable annually." The contract further provided: That second party (plaintiff) shall "have the immediate possession of said premises and personal property," but that title thereto or to the crops harvested shall not pass to second party, "except as hereinafter provided"; that second party shall pay all expenses for caring for said property after June 23, 1919, and that he (second party) "shall pay all taxes and amounts levied on said land or ditch stock for the year 1919, or that may hereafter be levied." The second party further agreed:

"To properly care for all the crops growing on said land, and will hereafter properly care for all vines and trees on said land, and in due and proper season prune the same, properly plow, cultivate, and irrigate the lands on which the same are growing, in proper season sulphur and spray such trees and vines as may require the same, and in due and proper season harvest the crops thereon, and keep all squirrels poisoned on said land; that he will plant at least 30 acres additional to vines or trees or both, each year for the ensuing three years, and properly care for the same."

Said agreement further provided that, whenever one-half of the purchase price and the interest have been paid on said property, "then the balance of said purchase price shall be evidenced by one or more promissory notes for such balance, bearing interest at the rate of 6½ per cent. per annum, payable annually, and provided that $10,000 of such principal shall be paid each year for three years after the date of said note, and the balance of said principal to be paid the fourth year." Upon the payment of one-half of the purchase price within three years from December 1, 1919, "then," so the agreement provided, "a deed to said land shall be executed by said party of the first part to the second party, conveying to him the title" to said land, the second party to execute to the first party a first mortgage on said land for the balance of the purchase price. The forfeiture clause of the agreement reads:

"Upon failure to make any payment of purchase price, or interest, as herein specified, or to do and perform each and every of the covenants and conditions herein agreed to be done, and performed by the said party of the second part, then all rights of said party of the second part hereunder shall cease, and this agreement shall become null and void, and all payments theretofore made shall belong to said party of the first part as the consideration for this agreement."

The complaint, which was filed on March 12, 1923, pleads the contract in its entirety, and charges that, on the 5th day of March, 1923, the defendant ousted plaintiff from the possession of the premises; that it "put 20 men on said premises," and, while plaintiff was absent therefrom, "did cause the gate to be locked which closed the said premises, and did thus forcibly eject plaintiff" therefrom; that, until so ousted, plaintiff performed each and every of the covenants and conditions of the contract of sale above referred to. It is alleged that, after taking possession of said premises under said contract, plaintiff improved the property and took proper care thereof, and in doing so expended large sums of money; that he had actual possession of the property for a period of 42 months immediately preceding the date of his wrongful ejection therefrom by defendant, and during all that time gave personal attention and care to the improvement of the premises and the cultivation and development of the orchard, vineyard, and other crops produced upon said property. The total sum for which he sues for the alleged breach of the agreement by defendant, to wit, the sum of $78,978.24, which includes interest thereon, is made up of various items of expenditure and payments made on the purchase price, all of which are specified in detail in the complaint.

A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and the defendant filed an answer and a cross-complaint. The answer admits the making of the contract as set forth in the complaint, but specifically denies all the other material averments thereof.

In its cross-complaint defendant alleged that plaintiff, after entering upon and into the possession of the premises, failed and neglected to give the required care and attention to the fruit trees and vines then growing on the land, and otherwise violated the terms, covenants, and conditions of the contract, specifically charging that 5 acres, which were planted to prunes and interset with "part Malaga and Thompson grapevines," died because of plaintiff's failure to cultivate and irrigate the same; that a great portion of the prune orchard growing on said premises when plaintiff took possession thereof in pursuance of the said contract of sale plaintiff failed and neglected to cultivate, spray, prune, and irrigate, with the result that "said prune trees died and became valueless"; that "90 acres of said land under said agreement were to be planted to vineyard, and the same were so planted, but on account of plaintiff's neglect to care for the same, a great portion thereof died, so that there is now less than a 50 per cent. stand of vines; that, under said agreement, said plaintiff took possession of all the personal property described therein, and thereafter removed and took for his own use from said premises one revolving harrow, one 2-horse cultivator, one 6-foot disc, one 2-horse scraper, two 2-horse plows, also about 30 tons of raisins, all of which was the property of this defendant." It is likewise alleged that plaintiff "has each year of his possession of the premises failed, neglected, and refused to properly plow, cultivate, and irrigate the lands on which the orchards and vineyards were growing, and by reason thereof the security of defendant for the amount due has deteriorated, and is now insufficient to pay plaintiff the balance due it under said contract"; that plaintiff has repeatedly been requested by the defendant that he (plaintiff) "care for the orchards and vineyards growing upon said premises," but that he has refused to comply with said requests, "and abandoned said orchards and said vineyards; that defendant has performed each and all the covenants and conditions required of it to be done and performed under and pursuant to the terms of said agreement." It is further alleged:

"That under and pursuant to the terms of said agreement, the said plaintiff, Jacob Michaelian, on or about the 24th day of June, 1919, entered into the possession of all of said real and personal property, and is now in the possession thereof."

The fifth paragraph of the cross-complaint alleges:

"That, pursuant to said agreement, said defendant did, on the 1st day of March, 1923, exercise said right and option to terminate said agreement, and did at the time terminate the same, and does hereby exercise said right and option to terminate said agreement, and does hereby terminate said agreement and declare the same null and void, and said plaintiff did on the 1st day of March, 1923, and at all times since has refused to deliver possession of said real and personal property to defendant."

The agreement of sale was annexed to, and expressly made a part of, the cross-complaint.

The answer of plaintiff to the cross-complaint denies specifically the allegations of the latter pleading to the effect that plaintiff in a number of specified particulars had failed to carry out the agreement on his part, but affirmatively alleges that he performed all the terms of the contract required of him thereby in the manner and at the times specified in said agreement. The charge in the cross-complaint that plaintiff removed from the premises and appropriated to his personal uses other than those mentioned in the contract certain farming implements, and the further charge that he removed from the premises 30 tons of raisins against the consent of defendant and disposed of the same contrary to the terms of the contract are denied and explained. That he abandoned the orchards and the premises, as charged in the cross-complaint, is also denied by plaintiff. There are many others of the averments of the cross-complaint specifically denied by plaintiff's answer thereto, and many affirmative allegations in said answer specifically describing and explaining the manner in which plaintiff performed the terms of the agreement and the obligations cast upon him thereby. These need not be specially recited herein since they involve only a repetition of the averments of the complaint, but with greater detail. Said answer also admits that defendant and cross-complainant, as set forth in his cross-complaint, took charge of the premises on the 1st day of March, 1923, and thus ousted plaintiff of the possession of the land, all of which, plaintiff alleges in his answer, was contrary to, and in violation of, plaintiff's rights under the said agreement of sale, and constituted a breach thereof by defendant. It is alleged in said answer that, by reason of the act of the defendant in so taking charge and possession of the premises, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $78,978.24, for which he in said answer prays judgment as for damages.

It is not necessary to present a résumé of the court's findings. It is sufficient to say that they are specific, and in detail embrace conclusions favorable to plaintiff upon all the vital issues of fact made by the pleadings and brought out through the evidence.

[1] The point first brought to our attention by the appellant is that the complaint failed to state a cause of action upon the essential theory thereof, and that the order overruling the general demurrer thereto involved prejudicial error. The specific contention is that, as the plaintiff's action, as made by his complaint, is one in ejectment, it was necessary, to state such a cause of action, for him to allege, in addition to the allegation that defendant wrongfully ejected or ousted him from the possession of the premises described in the complaint, that he (plaintiff) was entitled to the possession of said property at the time of the commencement of his action, and that, having failed so to state, his complaint is bad for want of facts. The theory upon which plaintiff's action proceeds, or undoubtedly the plaintiff intended so to proceed, was that defendant, by retaking possession of the premises, had wrongfully rescinded the contract of sale. The effect of his action, as framed by his complaint, would be, if sustained, acquiescence in the act of rescission of the contract by defendant. It is true that it is alleged in the complaint that the act by defendant in terminating the contract was in the fact of its retaking possession of the premises and consequently ousting plaintiff therefrom. It is also true that, in actions in ejectment, it must be alleged and proved that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the premises from which he alleges he has been wrongfully disseized at the time the action is commenced. But the plaintiff was not seeking to regain possession. What he asked for in his complaint, although in the form of damages, is a return to him of the moneys he paid on the purchase price and otherwise expended by him in the care and improvement of the property while the same was in his possession. Necessarily by the relief thus asked he proceeded upon the theory of rescission of the contract by defendant and acquiescence therein by him. At any rate, he thus, from the very nature of the relief sought by him, of necessity made wrongful rescission by defendant the basis of his cause of action, and, manifestly, he could not, under such circumstances, consistently claim possession of the property and at the same time claim, as he does claim, the right to the restoration to him of all the money he paid on the purchase price thereof and otherwise expended by him in performing its terms. But, if we were required to concede that, to state a cause of action for the relief sought by him, it was, nevertheless, necessary for him to have alleged that he was entitled to, and that the defendant, at the time of the commencement of his action, still wrongfully withheld from him, possession of the property, the defect of his complaint in that regard was cured by the defendant's cross-complaint. Therein, as seen, the defendant alleged and thus admitted that, on or about the 1st day of March, 1923, it elected to exercise its right under the contract to terminate said contract, and that it then did terminate it, for the alleged reason that plaintiff had not performed the terms and conditions thereof. And the plaintiff's admission in his answer to the cross-complaint that defendant, on the date mentioned, terminated the contract rendered the alleged defect in the complaint in the particular mentioned immaterial or wholly without importance. There was then no longer an issue upon that question. In other words, the situation thus presented involved a statement by the defendant that it had terminated and so rescinded the contract, and an admission by plaintiff of that fact, and his acquiescence in said act of rescission, thus leaving for determination only, so far as that fact was concerned, the question whether the defendant was justified in declaring and treating the contract as rescinded. The case went to trial upon the cross-complaint and the answer thereto, and, as was said in Cohen v. Knox, 27 P. 215, 216, 90 Cal. 266, 275 (13 L. R. A. 711):

"It would be a vain thing to reverse the judgment, and allow plaintiff to amend his complaint by averring facts already averred in his cross-complaint, and to again, in that form, present issues which have already been raised and determined."

[2] The point that the court's findings are devoid of sufficient support is not well founded. The learned trial judge prepared and filed herein a written opinion in which he reviewed the evidence and stated some of the principles of law pertinent to certain of the questions involved in this controversy, and the same is, in part, reproduced in respondent's brief. The conclusions announced in said opinion upon the facts are in line with the court's findings. We have carefully read the voluminous transcript of the testimony, and thus have been convinced that the conclusions announced in said opinion as to the effect of the evidence touching the several questions of fact arising in the case are fully warranted, and clearly confirm the conclusion that the court's decision, as crystallized in its findings, is abundantly supported by the evidence. We shall, therefore, adopt into this opinion as a part hereof certain portions of the opinion of the trial judge, being also satisfied with the statement therein of certain legal principles applicable to the case as made by the pleadings and proof. It will be noted that payments in installments required by the contract to be made by plaintiff in the year 1919, in which year the contract was executed by the parties, aggregated the sum of $25,000. It was, and is not, questioned that that sum was paid by plaintiff to defendant according to the exactions of the agreement. In addition to that sum, proceeds the court's opinion:

"The evidence showed that plaintiff had accounted to defendant for the returns from all crops raised, harvested, and sold up to March 1, 1923, and had paid to defendant the one-half of said returns, thereby paying to defendant in all, including said $25,000, the sum of upwards of $42,000. After the commencement of this action, plaintiff paid defendant a further sum of upwards $500, which sum was one-half the proceeds of sale of raisins which were being dried in a dryer at the time of the commencement of this action. In all of principal and interest plaintiff had then paid defendant the sum of $42,703.19. He had made all the payments required prior to June 24, 1923, under the contract, both of principal and interest.

"The foregoing disposes of defendant's denials as to payments.

"It should be noted that defendant in his cross-complaint does not claim that plaintiff had failed to make the payments required by the contract.

"By the cross-complaint defendant specifically alleges wherein he claims plaintiff failed to perform the contract. In effect the allegations are that he failed to care for, irrigate, prune, spray, or cultivate the peach orchards; that he neglected to cultivate and irrigate five acres of old prune orchard, interset with Malaga and Thompson grapevines; that he failed to cultivate, spray, prune, and irrigate another prune orchard; that he planted 90 acres to vineyard, as required by the contract, but that plaintiff failed to care for them, by reason of which a great portion died, leaving less than 50 per cent. stand of vines; that he removed from the ranch certain farming implements, and 30 tons of raisins, all being the property of defendant.

"It must be here said that all raisins and crops produced were accounted for by plaintiff; defendant recovering his full share of the proceeds thereof. Defendant alleges that the lack of care stated caused the peach trees, the 5 acres of prunes, and vines planted to die and become valueless; that for the same reason a great portion of the other prune orchard died and became valueless.

"On February 28, 1923, defendant placed a crew of men upon the ranch to prune orchards and vineyards. At the trial he claimed that this was done with the consent of the plaintiff, the latter to pay for the work. But it is evident that on March 1, 1923, defendant determined to then cancel the contract and to hold possession of the ranch. That is shown by the allegations of his verified cross-complaint and by the evidence in the case. He excluded plaintiff from any part in the care of the said premises; locked the gate to keep him out of the property; used the house and other buildings for his own purposes. For a short time after said March 1st plaintiff at intervals occupied a room in the house at night, but soon found that he was not to be permitted to carry out his contract, and left the premises. He commenced this action on March 12, 1923. The answer and cross-complaint were filed April 16, 1923.

"Defendant's right in taking possession of the premises and terminating the contract depended on his establishing the allegations of the cross-complaint. He produced many witnesses who testified that the orchards and vineyards had been neglected in the plowing, pruning, and irrigating; some witnesses who testified that the 90 acres of vines were not properly planted or irrigated. Plaintiff claimed that a large part of the vines planted by him died because of alkali; that some prune trees died of old age; that many fruit trees died because of alkali, some being killed by squirrels. The evidence was very conflicting as to the presence of alkali. Some witnesses for defendant visited and inspected the land, and they testified that there was not sufficient alkali, except in small spots, to prevent the growing of vines or fruit trees. Many of those witnesses were worthy of credit, but their evidence was based on their inspection of the land, and not on any experience in farming the same.

"On the other hand, plaintiff produced several witnesses who resided, and had resided for many years, on lands adjoining or in close proximity to the land in question. They had noted the farming of the land from year to year. They invariably testified that large portions of the land were so impregnated with alkali that its farming had been unsuccessful; that it would not produce soil, and why trees and vines died or did not grow was true. The soil in the two fig orchards is almost wholly alkali. There is a large acreage of alkali soil where the 90 acres of vines were planted. On the alkali the figs are missing. They died, or did not grow. On the good land there is a fair stand of growing, thrifty vines. There is evidence that apricots did not grow because of alkali; also the same as to prunes.

"The land where the alfalfa was planted by plaintiff's predecessors was evidently not properly leveled before planting, leaving portions of it difficult, in some places impossible, of irrigation. Plaintiff testified that much of the alfalfa was dead when he took possession, and that he had intended to plow up the remainder as unprofitable, and properly prepare the land for farming.

"I must conclude that plaintiff during his possession of the premises took good care of the same. While in places young trees and vines died in good soil, still it does not appear that it was from lack of care. Plaintiff gave the premises the care that the ordinary careful farmer does of like premises, and defendant had no substantial cause for complaint.

"In addition to paying defendant $42,703.19, principal and interest as above stated, plaintiff expended in improvements placed on said land and in caring for the orchards and vineyards at least $40,000, a large part being expended in the care, cultivation, and irrigation of the land. That constitutes additional evidence that plaintiff gave good care to the property.

"The evidence failed to show that plaintiff had removed any tools or farming implements belonging to defendant.

[3] "Plaintiff probably did not always do the best kind of farming or give the orchards and vineyards the very best of care, but the evidence showed that he did all the work in the ordinary manner and time of the farmers in his neighborhood. No complaint was made by defendant concerning lack of care until just prior to his taking possession of the land. Meantime it continued to receive payments on the purchase price. Plaintiff had occupied the place nearly four years, and during that time the proceeds from crops had continually increased, those of 1922 being nearly double those of 1919, and the crops were from the orchards and vineyards on the place, when plaintiff took possession. In some respects he went beyond what was required by the contract. For instance, the contract provided that he should plant 30 acres to fruit each year for three years. He leveled and planted 90 acres the first year, and planted quite a large additional acreage during his possession. The fact, if true, that he was late in his cultivation and pruning in the spring of 1923 did not warrant defendant in terminating the contract. He had pruned late each year. Defendant completed the pruning in March, and it was not shown by the evidence that the vines or trees were injured or that the crops of 1923 were any less because of the late time of pruning or cultivation, or at all. Section 1442 of the Civil Code provides: 'A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created.'

[4] "Forfeitures are not favored in law, and conditions providing for the forfeitures of an estate are to be construed liberally in favor of the holder of the estate, and strictly against the enforcement of the forfeiture.' Behlow v. S. P. Co., 62 P. 295, 130 Cal. 19; Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 237; Randol v. Scott, 42 P. 976, 110 Cal. 590; Knarston v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 56 P. 773, 124 Cal. 74.

"It must be held that defendant was not entitled to terminate it except for plaintiff's acquiescence, as hereinafter stated. Plaintiff is entitled to recover, as follows:

Payment on the contract (purchase price)
the sum of.....	$42,703 69
For leveling land.....	6,300 00
For pumping plant.....	1,000 00
For grape stakes.....	820 00
For building ditch.....	400 00
For lowering and cementing well.....	170 00
For electric line to pumping plant.....	512 00
For dry-house	61 50
For material for building.....	54 65
For digging well.....	167 45

$52,189 69

He should be allowed interest on the $25,000.00 paid in 1919, which his counsel calculated in their brief at 6 per cent., being 4,875 00

Making $57,064 69

From that sum should be deducted as for the stipulated rental value of the land while plaintiff was in possession..... 25,965 88

Leaving plaintiff $31,098 81

" * * * The amounts allowed for leveling land, pumping plant, grape stakes, building ditch, lowering and cementing well, the electric line, dry-house building material, etc., are allowed because of the evidence that such expenses incurred were reasonable, and they must therefore have added as value to the property the amount expended.

" * * * There is a large acreage of planted vines, planted and cared for by plaintiff, growing on the property, also of fruit trees. They no doubt added value to the property. * * *"

[5] There was an attempt on the part of defendant to show that there was in 1922, and continuing to and through 1923, a decline in the market prices of grapes and deciduous fruits and that it was for that reason that plaintiff had ceased giving the orchards and vineyards the care required by the contract, and which was necessary to the profitable cultivation of the fruit and grapes; the inference sought to be deduced from that fact being that plaintiff was thus endeavoring to free himself from the obligations of the contract, and at the same time secure a return to him of the moneys paid by him on the purchase price and otherwise expended in developing the property. The evidence showed that the very best and most profitable crop that had been grown on the premises while plaintiff was in charge thereof was gathered in the year 1922, a fact which tended to negative the theory or claim of defendant that plaintiff failed in 1922 or at any time to carry out the requirements of the contract as to the care and attention requisite to the successful prosecution of the fruit and grape-growing business on the premises. The trial court found, and the trial judge stated in his opinion, that plaintiff neither purposely nor negligently failed to perform the contract as to the care which was to be given to the trees and vines, etc., and also stated, what obviously was true, that the plaintiff was not responsible for any decrease in the value of the property; that a decline in the value of grapes and deciduous fruits prevailed at the time referred to throughout the entire state. The opinion of the trial judge proceeds:

"Defendant declared the contract terminated, and filed cross-complaint in the action asking that it be adjudged terminated, etc. He had taken possession of the premises, and declared the contract terminated before suit was commenced. His actions constituted a rescission of the contract on his part, and thereafter plaintiff, by bringing the suit for damages, acquiesced in the rescission, although rescission on defendant's part was without right.

"Judgment is awarded that plaintiff recover from defendant as damages the sum of $31,098.81 and costs, and that the contract be and is terminated by acquiescence of the parties. Merrill v. Merrill, 35 P. 768, 37 P. 392, 103 Cal. 287; Glock v. Howard, 55 P. 713, 123 Cal. 15, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Heilig v. Parlin, 66 P. 186, 134 Cal. 99."

It may be added to what is stated in the foregoing opinion of the trial judge that plaintiff testified that, when he took possession of the premises under the contract, he was told by the defendant's president, Frank Giannini, who is an experienced orchardist and vineyardist in the vicinity of the land in question here, that the proper time to spray fruit was in the month of March of each year; that he had always done that work in that month; and that, just prior to the receipt by him of a written notice, dated February 27, 1923, and signed by defendant, by its secretary, notifying him that he had failed to attend to the trees and the vines as required by the contract, and as was necessary for maintaining the thriftiness of the trees and vines, he was endeavoring to employ the necessary help for spraying the trees and vines in the month of March, 1923.

It is also well to note that the witness Liggett, who resided, and had resided, in the neighborhood of the premises described in the complaint and cross-complaint for many years, and was familiar therewith, and who for a time in the year 1922 was employed on said premises as a laborer by plaintiff, testified that, on retaking possession of the premises for defendant, said Frank Giannini employed him (witness), with others, to work on the place; that Giannini locked the gate by means of chains and locks, and instructed witness to keep the gate locked; that Giannini explained that the reason he desired that the gate should be kept locked was to prevent six or seven head of horses and mules then on the premises from escaping from and leaving the ranch. The witness testified that never before, so far as he knew (and he said he had been on the premises frequently), was the gate locked, although generally it was closed. The latter part of the witness' testimony, as well as that of others, and also the admission of Giannini plainly enough showed that there was no necessity for locking the gate for the reason stated by Giannini, and the inference therefrom which the trial court could reasonably have drawn, and which doubtless it did draw, was that the locking of the gate was only the assertion of the repudiation of the contract by defendant and the consequent intention to exclude the plaintiff from further possession of the premises.

[6] The fact that plaintiff for a brief time after his eviction from the premises by defendant occupied a sleeping room in the house on the premises was purely an evidentiary circumstance, but its force as such was destroyed by the decision of the trial court, founded upon sufficient evidence, including the admission of defendant, that the latter terminated the contract and took actual possession of the premises and from that time on exercised complete control of, and dominion over, the property as against the plaintiff, who made no pretense of actual or any possession of the premises after the defendant assumed control thereof.

[7] Lastly, it is not improper to suggest that the plaintiff had his election of one of several remedies for relief against the act of defendant in dispossessing him, viz: (1) He was at liberty to base his action on the contract and sue for damages for its breach by defendant; (2) he could treat the contract as terminated or rescinded, and sue for the recovery of the money that he had paid or expended thereunder, for the reasonable value of services performed in pursuance of the requirements of the contract, and for any special damage to which he may have been subjected by the vendor's wrong in dispossessing him; (3) he could have sued in equity for the specific performance of the contract and such compensatory relief by way of damages for any damage the wrongful disseisin and the like detention of the premises had entailed upon him. Hines v. Brode, 143 P. 729, 168 Cal. 507, 511, 512; Gray v. Bekins, 199 P. 767, 186 Cal. 400; 6 Cal. Jur., p. 464, sec. 276.

As before suggested, the plaintiff had the right to treat the defendant's act in retaking possession of the property as an act of rescission, to acquiesce therein, and to ask to be placed as near in statu quo as the circumstances and equities of the case would justify. Thus he proceeded, and thus the trial court by its decree seems equitably to have adjusted and settled the controversy.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action upon contract by the Apex Engineering Company against the North American Oil Consolidated. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

David J. Aaron, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harry G. McKannay, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendant in an action to recover $1,750, the agreed purchase price of a certain heat exchanger manufactured by plaintiff for the defendant.

The principle involved upon the appeal is fundamental in the law of contracts. It is presented by the following facts: On May 22, 1924, the representative of the defendant company gave to the representative of the plaintiff company an order for one "Heat exchanger consisting of material as per letter of December 12, 1923," at a price of $1,750. This was termed an "emergency order" and contained the direction: "Please prepay freight and include in invoice." The heat exchanger was to be made up. On the reverse side of the order it was stated:

"It is understood that this emergency order is entirely exhausted by the delivery of goods of one date and one invoice. * * * All goods delivered under this order must be receipted for on this order by person taking delivery and duplicate of this order sent at once to our purchasing department at Field Office, Taft, Cal., same to be followed by invoice (in triplicate) which shall cover all goods delivered under this order and none other."

This order was received from the defendant company by the president of the plaintiff company. The next day, upon his arrival at Los Angeles at the offices of the plaintiff company, he sent an acknowledgment of this order on behalf of his company, together with an invoice calling for "first payment on 1 Apex heat exchanger unit @ $1,750.00—$583.33." The terms in the acknowledgment of order were stated to be "one-third with order. Bal. net 30 days 2% 10 days." Upon the date of the plaintiff's acknowledgment of order and invoice above mentioned (May 23, 1924), plaintiff also sent defendant a letter, which read, in part, as follows:

"We are attaching hereto our formal acknowledgment of your order No. 1525 which was given to the writer yesterday. We have entered our shop orders for this equipment and have been promised shipment of same on or before Saturday, June 14.

"The writer neglected to call your attention to the terms which we mentioned in our letter to Mr. Simons of December 12th which covers the payment of one-third with order, balance

76 Cal. App. 683

APEX ENGINEERING CO. v. NORTH AMERICAN OIL CONSOLIDATED.
(Civ. 5366.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 1, 1926.)

1. Sales —23(4)—Acknowledgment of order accompanied by new condition as to terms of payment held not acceptance, but mere counter offer, which on rejection did not create contract.

Order for heat exchanger, requesting prepayment of freight and inclusion in invoice, was mere offer of contract, and acknowledgment of order with addition of conditions requiring immediate cash payment was not an acceptance, but mere counter offer which on rejection by buyer created no contract.

2. Contracts —23.

Where offeree makes counter offer, including new conditions, original offer is no longer open to acceptance, even though not expressly withdrawn.

net cash thirty (30) days from date of invoice, with two per cent. (2%) discount for payment of balance within ten (10) days from date of invoice. We trust you will pardon our oversight in not calling this to your attention at that time, and, if convenient, we will appreciate receiving your check covering this first payment as soon as possible."

At this point it may be well to inject an explanation of the "letter to Mr. Simons" mentioned above and the statement in the emergency order that the heat exchanger was to consist of "material as per letter of December 12, 1923." Both statements refer to the same letter which had been written to an officer and employee of the Consolidated Mutual Oil Company. The plant of this company was acquired later by the defendant company, at which time Mr. Simons turned over the letter to the defendant company. The letter consists of several pages and describes numerous articles of equipment for an absorption plant and quotes prices therefor. These articles are absorption tower, steam still, heat exchangers, oil to oil, and several others. Each article mentioned is described under a separate heading, and following these various paragraphs is a paragraph relating to terms. The testimony in the record and the correspondence between the parties offered in evidence all go to show that the parties in their negotiations leading to the giving of the order involved here considered only the portion of the letter which described and quoted price for "heat exchangers, oil to oil," and that no mention was made of the portion of the letter relating to terms and no understanding was reached that the terms of payment for the heat exchanger were to be the unusual ones mentioned in this letter to a third party and attempted to be included in the order from the defendant by the acceptance, acknowledgment, and invoice of the plaintiff.

The record shows that when the acknowledgment, invoice, and letter of May 23, 1924, were received at the office of the defendant, Mr. Kierulff, who was handling the transaction for it, was away from Taft, and that he did not return for about a week. Upon his return he wrote the plaintiff company as follows, under date of June 3, 1924:

"Referring to your letter of May 23, 1924, in which you ask for one-third cash with order, we beg to say that we have canceled our order No. 1525 for heat exchange unit on account of unsatisfactory terms."

Although it does not appear to be material, so far as the legal obligation of the defendant is concerned, it may be pertinent, nevertheless, upon the equities of the situation, to state that the record discloses that this action in canceling the order because of a variance in the terms of the acceptance by plaintiff was not an arbitrary and unreasonable one; that the order was an emergency order, and that the heat exchanger was needed without delay; that there was no authority in any one attached to the Taft office of the defendant company to sign a check of the company for the amount required for the advance payment; that Mr. Kierulff stated that it would have required about a week to get this check from the San Francisco office, and he wished to avoid this delay and inconvenience in securing the heat exchanger. He therefore placed his order elsewhere at the time he wrote to the plaintiff canceling the unaccepted order given to it.

Thereafter, there ensued some correspondence between the parties in which the plaintiff endeavored to have the defendant continue the order on the books under its usual terms, admitting that the plaintiff was at fault in not mentioning the unusual terms at the time the order was given, and stating that the work of building the heat exchanger was then about half completed. In reply to this letter, defendant referred to the change in terms and insisted that the order had been canceled. The plaintiff, however, shipped the equipment, and when defendant would not accept it this action was brought.

[1, 2] We think the correspondence between the parties after the cancellation of the order was immaterial. Defendant objected to its introduction, and its inclusion in the record adds no legal force to the position of either party. The outstanding fact is that the defendant made an offer; that the plaintiff accepted it only with the addition of important new conditions, which was not a valid acceptance. Consequently, there was no contract between the parties. The fixed rule of law would preclude the defendant from thereafter accepting the offer as made, even if it had not been expressly withdrawn. But the defendant removed all doubt by withdrawing its unaccepted offer. The transaction amounted to an offer by the defendant, nonacceptance by the plaintiff, a counter offer by plaintiff, which was rejected by the defendant.

If citation of authority be required for so elementary a legal proposition, it is available in the case of Niles v. Hancock, 73 P. 840, 140 Cal. 157, wherein it is said:

"While, unless expressly revoked, an offer will ordinarily remain open for a reasonable time, a rejection of the offer relieves the party making it from liability on that offer, and dispenses with the necessity of further revocation; and where an offer has once been rejected, the party rejecting cannot afterwards, at his option, accept the rejected offer, and thus convert the same into an agreement by acceptance. The consent of the party making the original offer must be again manifested, before there can be any contract. This is of course elementary. It is well settled that a proposal to accept, or acceptance of, an offer, on terms varying from those proposed, is a rejection of the offer, and puts an end to it. (See Wristen v. Bowles [22 P. 1136] 82 Cal. 87; Meux v. Hogue [27 P. 744] 91 Cal. 448;

3 Am. & Eng. Ency, of Law 853, and cases there cited.) A qualified acceptance is a new proposal. (Civ. Code, § 1585.) A party who submits a counter proposition instead of accepting an offer cannot abandon the substitute and accept the original offer without the other party's consent. (Fox v. Turner, 1 Ill. App. 153; Ortman v. Weaver [C. C.] 11 F. 358; Arthur v. Gordon [C. C.] 37 F. 558; Hyde v. Wrench, 3 Beav. 334.) The facts in the cases of Arthur v. Gordon [C. C.] 37 F. 558, and Hyde v. Wrench, 3 Beav. 334, were in this respect practically the same as those in the case at bar, and in each case it was held that the counter proposition of the purchaser to buy for a smaller sum than that specified in the original offer was a rejection of such original offer, and that a subsequent acceptance of the original offer was unavailing."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 712

GRISSIM v. BLUMENTHAL & CO., Inc.
(Civ. 5235.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 2, 1926.)

1. Automobiles ⇨197(2)—Real estate company's employee, who went to another city to get his automobile, held not within employment, so as to make employer liable to person injured.

Employee of real estate and insurance company, who went from his place of employment at Los Angeles to San Francisco, during a holiday, to get his automobile and other property, without being directed to transact and without transacting any business there, held not performing duties within his employment, so as to make his employer liable to a person injured by him during his return.

2. Evidence ⇨241(1)—Testimony as to conversations between plaintiff and one who defendant stated would represent him and between plaintiff's nurse and the same person held admissible.

Testimony as to conversations had between plaintiff and one whom defendant had told plaintiff would represent him, and between plaintiff's nurse and such person, held admissible in action for injuries.

3. Evidence ⇨242(2)—Testimony as to conversations between employee of defendant and plaintiff, and between employee and plaintiff's nurse, held error, when employee was not authorized to represent employer, though representing another defendant.

Testimony as to conversations had between employee of defendant and plaintiff, and between such employee and plaintiff's nurse, held inadmissible against employer, when record did not show employee was expressly or impliedly authorized to represent employer in such matter, though he represented another defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Daisy Grissim against A. C. Blumenthal & Company, Inc., and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and A. C. Blumenthal & Company, Inc., appeals. Reversed.

S. Laz Lansburgh and S. Joseph Theisen, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sterling Carr and Carr & Guiler, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. On the 1st day of December, 1922, the plaintiff was walking westerly on the south side of Market street and was in the act of crossing Third street. At the same time the defendant Clyde A. Griffin was driving an automobile southerly on Third street. As he attempted to pass the plaintiff his right front wheel hit the left foot of the plaintiff. Thereafter she commenced an action to recover damages for the injury sustained in the accident.

In her complaint she made Clyde A. Griffin one of the defendants, and A. C. Blumenthal & Co., a corporation, another defendant. The corporation was joined on the theory that at the time of the accident Clyde A. Griffin was an employee of the corporation and was engaged in the performance of his duties as such employee. Both defendants answered; a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact against both defendants, and ordered a judgment entered thereon. From that judgment the defendant corporation has appealed under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] The appellant makes the point that it was not liable because the record does not show that at the time of the accident Griffin was in the discharge or performance of any duties within his employment as an employee of the appellant. We think that the point is well made. The evidence presents no conflict on the subject. For some time prior to the above date the appellant was engaged in the real estate and insurance business and maintained an office in the city of Los Angeles. Mr. Griffin had been a resident of San Francisco, but had been employed by the appellant in its Los Angeles office. For a few weeks prior to the date of the accident he had been residing in Los Angeles, but came to San Francisco for the Thanksgiving holiday and for the purpose of getting his automobile and some other personal property and driving the automobile to Los Angeles. When he had finished his visit and was in the act of driving to Los Angeles the accident occurred. Mr. Griffin testified that at the time he left Los Angeles he had not been directed to transact any piece of business for his employer while he was on the trip. He further testified that while in San Francisco he did not transact any business for his employer, and did not attempt to do so, but that he made a friendly call on the employees of the San Francisco office. Mr. Blumenthal testified that he did not know that Mr. Griffin was going to San Francisco and did not know that he had gone until after Mr. Griffin returned to Los Angeles, and that he had not directed Mr. Griffin to perform any business for the appellant nor to obtain in the San Francisco office and take to the Los Angeles office any papers or other property. Under these circumstances the plaintiff did not make out a case as against the appellant. Kish v. California State Automobile Ass'n, 212 P. 27, 190 Cal. 246, 248.

The respondent calls to our attention the fact that at the time of the accident Mr. Griffin handed to the plaintiff his business card which had printed on it his Los Angeles address, "Secretary A. C. Blumenthal & Co." She also calls to our attention that at the same time he gave her the telephone address of Mr. Sheppard, and that thereafter she and her agents had certain conversations with Mr. Sheppard; also that Mr. Griffin had the authority to transact business for his employer in any part of the state, and therefore that he held a roving commission. However, the record is clear that on his trip to San Francisco he did nothing under his roving commission, and that he did nothing as secretary of the defendant corporation. Mr. Sheppard was in charge of the insurance department in the San Francisco office. Mr. Griffin had at various times placed his automobile insurance through the instrumentalities of the San Francisco office and allowed Mr. Sheppard to hold his policy of insurance. At the time of the accident he believed that he was covered with collision insurance, and for that reason he directed the plaintiff to communicate with Mr. Sheppard. However, when the insurance policy was examined it was found that it did not cover collision insurance. All reference to Mr. Sheppard thereupon became immaterial.

[2, 3] The plaintiff had offered in evidence several conversations between Mr. Sheppard and the plaintiff or between Mr. Sheppard and the plaintiff's nurse. The appellant objected. The objection was properly overruled, because the defendant Griffin had given to the plaintiff Mr. Sheppard's name and had stated to the plaintiff that Mr. Sheppard would represent him when Mr. Griffin was out of town. The record discloses that Mr. Sheppard occupies some position in the San Francisco office of the defendant A. C. Blumenthal & Co., but the record does not disclose that Mr. Sheppard was expressly authorized to represent his employer in transacting any business with the plaintiff, nor does the record show that Mr. Sheppard's position was such that he had the implied authority from his employer to take up such business matters. Therefore it is clear that, although the testimony referred to was admissible, it was not admissible as against the defendant Blumenthal & Co.

The judgment against the appellant is reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

77 Cal. App. 29

PEOPLE v. EPHRAIM. (Cr. 1280.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 10, 1926. Rehearing Denied April 5, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 5, 1926.)

1. Embezzlement ⚡5—On interposing defense to charge of embezzlement that money was retained because of indebtedness, accused must prove that money was appropriated openly and avowedly under claim made in good faith, but need not prove that claim was valid (Pen. Code, § 511).

In prosecution for embezzlement while acting as agent, accused, on interposing defense of being entitled to retain sum because of indebtedness, must prove, under Pen. Code, § 511, that money was appropriated openly and avowedly under claim made in good faith, but need not prove that claim was a valid one on which she might recover in law.

2. Embezzlement ⚡10—Prosecution must prove, under charge of embezzlement while acting as agent, that money was appropriated while such relation existed, and was appropriated for use of accused.

In prosecution for embezzlement while acting as agent, prosecution must prove that money was appropriated by accused while such relation existed, and also was appropriated for her own use.

3. Embezzlement ⚡38—Question of profits made by accused in real estate transaction with complaining witness before alleged embezzlement held outside of issues.

In prosecution for embezzlement of funds while acting as agent in attempt to secure settlement of contract for purchase of real estate, question of profits previously made by accused out of property exchanged by complaining witness for such contract held entirely outside of issues of the case.

4. Embezzlement ⚡44(5)—To support charge of fraudulent appropriation of money while in capacity of agent, proof of confidential relation up to and including time of alleged embezzlement must be introduced (Pen. Code, § 508).

Where accused was charged, under Pen. Code, § 508, with fraudulent appropriation of money while in capacity of agent of complaining witness, prosecution must prove that confidential relation continued up to and including time of alleged embezzlement.

5. Embezzlement $\S$ 44(5)—Date of alleged fraudulent appropriation must be proven, where termination of confidential relation was in doubt, so as to determine whether appropriation occurred during continuance of confidential relation.

Though ordinarily prosecution need not allege or prove exact date of offense, yet, where confidential relation is alleged to have arisen between parties through which money embezzled was lawfully received, and termination of relation was in doubt, date of alleged fraudulent appropriation must be proven to determine whether appropriation occurred during continuance of confidential relation.

6. Embezzlement $\S$ 44(5)—Evidence held not to show that money was fraudulently appropriated during existence of confidential relation, but that it was appropriated openly and avowedly after termination of relation.

In prosecution for embezzlement, held, that evidence failed to show that money was fraudulently appropriated during existence of confidential relation between parties, but rather to show that appropriation was made openly and avowedly after termination of confidential relation.

7. Embezzlement $\S$ 11(1)—Ordinarily, demand for property alleged to have been fraudulently appropriated by agent is not necessary, but is necessary where money is received by agent for special purpose and retained with consent of principal.

Ordinarily, it is not necessary to prove demand for property alleged to have been fraudulently appropriated by agent; but, where money is received by agent for special purpose and retained by him with consent of principal, demand is necessary in order to establish fraudulent intent to appropriate money.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 728(5)—Request for instruction is not necessary, where misconduct on part of state occurs with such frequency to lead jury to believe district attorney has damaging facts in his possession.

Though, ordinarily, request for instruction is necessary where error would be obviated by instruction to disregard it, such rule is not applicable, where misconduct on part of state in prosecution for embezzlement occurs with such frequency that jury is led to believe district attorney, as sworn officer of court, has in his possession facts so damaging that defendant must insist on their being withheld.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 706—Conduct of state's attorney in embezzlement prosecution in examination of witnesses and argument held such as to have prevented fair trial.

In prosecution for embezzlement, conduct of district attorney in bringing out reputation of accused and of former husband and facts of transaction having no relation to embezzlement charge, and in arguing such matters, and making statements contrary to evidence, held such as to have prevented fair trial.

On Petition for Rehearing.

10. Criminal law $\S$ 1159(3).

Matter of conflict in evidence is not important factor, where reversal is not on ground of insufficiency of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Alberta F. Ephraim was convicted of embezzlement, and she appeals. Reversed.

Thos. T. Califro, John D. Harloe, Julian H. Biddle, and Robert C. Young, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Chas. A. Wetmore, Jr., Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was tried and convicted upon an information charging her with the crime of embezzlement. She has appealed from the judgment following the conviction and also from the orders denying her motion for a new trial and an arrest of judgment. The information charged that on or about the 29th day of October, 1924, by virtue of her employment as clerk, agent, and servant of J. Carero, the defendant came into possession of the sum of $275, the property of the said Carero, and that while in possession thereof on the said 29th day of October, 1924, she did unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously convert, embezzle, and appropriate the said property to her own use.

From the evidence in the record we find that on October 30, 1924, the defendant received from the complaining witness through J. E. King, the duly authorized agent of the complaining witness, the sum of $275 to be used by her, if possible, to arrange with the Panama Pacific Land Company for the dismissal of an action which that company had brought against the complaining witness and his wife to recover possession of certain premises on Durant avenue in the city of Oakland which had been under process of purchase on an installment contract by the Careros and upon which contract they were several months in default. Upon the receipt of the money she went to the offices of the Panama Pacific Land Company in San Francisco accompanied by Mrs. Carero, the wife of the complaining witness, and there endeavored to obtain a dismissal of the action and a restoration of the Careros in their contract. The company refused to grant either request, but agreed to accept the defendant as a purchaser under the contract. On their return from San Francisco the defendant and Mrs. Carero went to Fruitvale to look at a home which the defendant proposed that the Careros purchase in lieu of their Durant avenue home. At this time the defendant proposed to Mrs. Carero that if they would purchase the Fruitvale home she would apply the sum of $275 on the first payment, with the understanding that the Careros should assign to her their interest in the Durant avenue home to enable the defendant to save some of the equity therein, the proceeds thereof to be divided between the defendant and the Careros. These negotiations were carried on between the defendant and the Careros for two or three days until, on about the 2d day of November, the complaining witness notified the defendant that he would not assign his contract in the Durant avenue home, but would stand his loss and would not take up the purchase of the home in Fruitvale. The negotiations for the purchase of the Fruitvale home having been terminated and the relations between the parties having become strained, the defendant assigned to a third party a claim against the Careros in the sum of $298, and suit was immediately commenced to recover the same. Attachment was levied upon application of the assignee and the sum of $275 in the hands of the defendant was thereupon turned over to the court to await the determination of those proceedings. This all occurred about the 6th day of November, 1924. Thereafter, and on November 9th, the complaining witness assigned to his counsel all his right, title, and interest in the sum of $275, and this assignee appeared in the justice's court in the proceeding above mentioned and filed what is known as a third party claim demanding the payment of the money over to him. On the following day, November 10th, the complaint which is the basis of this prosecution was filed and a warrant issued charging the defendant with the embezzlement of the sum mentioned. The civil proceedings mentioned were terminated when, after the arrest of the defendant on the charge of embezzlement, her assignee caused a dismissal of the action to be filed. The money in suit was thereafter received by counsel for the Careros in settlement of claims which he asserted against them. Thereafter the defendant herein appeared before the justice's court and urged a motion to set aside the dismissal on the grounds that the entry thereof by her assignee was without her consent; but this motion was denied upon the ground that she was not a proper party in the proceeding.

The foregoing are really all the essential facts pertinent to the case at issue, but because of the peculiar method in which the case was tried it is necessary to go further and state the transactions in which the parties had been involved prior to the one in which the charge of embezzlement arose. The Careros owned and resided in a small home in San Leandro, and a brother of Mrs. Carero, one Joe King, owned the rear portion of the premises upon which the Careros resided. He persuaded them to exchange their right in the premises for a contract to purchase the premises located on Durant avenue and for this purpose entered into a written agreement with them wherein they recited that the value of their San Leandro property was $2,300, and that the value of the Durant avenue property was $6,500, and that the former should be taken in part payment for the latter, leaving a balance to be paid by them of $4,200 at the rate of $35 a month. As a part of the same transaction King, the agent, agreed to "throw in" his property adjoining the property of the Careros in San Leandro and had the Careros deed to him all their interest in the portion of the San Leandro property. As a part of the same written agreement the Careros covenanted to transfer this entire property free and clear of incumbrances, but when they learned some time later that the defendant was interested in the exchange they refused to perform this part of their agreement. The appellant was not known to the Careros at any stage of the proceedings, the complaining witness testifying:

"He never met her (the defendant) until this deal—until we were in the house. About two months after we were in the house the time I knew she was the one that made that trade, otherwise she would never have got the house."

All these negotiations had been carried on by King, who was Mrs. Carero's brother, and who was also the former husband of the defendant. He had previously been convicted of the crime of embezzlement and served a term in the state penitentiary. It is necessary to bear these facts in mind because of the repeated assertions of counsel for respondent, and of the district attorney who prosecuted the case in the trial court, that the defendant misrepresented various features of this exchange to the Careros or withheld certain information from them, and through her misrepresentations and fraud gained a profit thereby. The undisputed facts show that the Careros dealt with their own agent, King, and that they had never at any time disputed the fairness of the exchange, the complaining witness having testified on numerous occasions that the exchange was fair enough to him; that the full value of the San Leandro property was $2,300; and that he was satisfied with the value of $6,500 placed upon the Durant avenue place.

As a part of this transaction the Careros made their deed of their portion of the San Leandro property to King, the Kinseys, who were the original purchasers of the Durant avenue home, assigned their contract to the defendant, and she arranged with the Panama Pacific Land Company, the original vendor of the Durant avenue place, to turn over this contract directly to the Careros. Thereafter King deeded to the defendant the two pieces of property in San Leandro, the one owned by the Careros and the one owned by himself, after having placed upon the entire tract a mortgage for $1,500 with which the Carero mortgage of $816 was liquidated and taxes and other liens were paid. Thereafter a second mortgage of $650 was placed against the property upon security given by the defendant and the promise that improvements on the premises would be made. For this second loan a bonus of $175 was paid. The sum of $1,975 which was thus received by the defendant on the security of the San Leandro property was expended in clearing the existing mortgages and liens upon the property, used to make the improvements required as a condition of the new mortgages and to pay the Kinseys for their contract upon the Durant avenue property. All this required an outlay by the defendant in excess of the amount which she received in loans upon the San Leandro property.

Subsequent to the consummation of this exchange, the Careros delivered small sums of money to their agent King, with the understanding that he should pay to the Panama Pacific Land Company the monthly installments of $35, supplementing what he had received from them from his own funds in lieu of board and lodging which he received from them. Some of these payments were made by King, and others were neglected, and, finally, notice was given to the Careros by the land company that they were in default and demand was made upon them for payment. When the Careros were three months in default upon their payments, the defendant voluntarily paid to the land company the sum of $223 covering installments, taxes, and other expenses. Two months later, the Careros were notified that they were again in default and borrowed money from their counsel to make payments. These conditions continued for almost the entire period of the occupancy of the premises by the Careros until, in October, 1924, they were notified that no further accommodations would be given them by the land company and suit was thereupon instituted to recover possession of the property. The matter was in this state when, on October 30th, the defendant, at the request of the Careros, went with Mrs. Carero to endeavor to arrange for a dismissal of the proceedings upon the payment of the sum of $275. They were notified, however, that the company would not accept that payment.

[1, 2] To the charge in the information that she had embezzled the sum of $275 while acting as the clerk, agent, and servant of the complaining witness, the defendant interposed the defense that she was entitled to retain the sum because of the indebtedness running to her. This was the real issue before the jury, and it was incumbent upon the appellant to prove that she had appropriated the money openly and avowedly and under a claim made in good faith, but it was not necessary for her to prove that her claim was a valid one upon which she might recover in law. Section 511, Pen. Code; People v. Lapique, 52 P. 40, 120 Cal. 25, 26. At the same time it was necessary for the prosecution to prove under this information that the money had been appropriated by the appellant while the relation of clerk, agent, or servant existed and also that the money was appropriated by the appellant for her own use.

[3] An examination of the entire record discloses that she was not tried upon the issues so framed, but that she was compelled to defend the acts of her former husband, an ex-convict, who was the trusted agent and employee of the complaining witness, and that she was also compelled to defend the reputation of her present husband, as well as her own reputation as a real estate broker in the county in which she was tried. As the trial progressed, the real issue forced upon the appellant by the state was whether she had, by false representations, obtained an unfair advantage over the complaining witness and his wife in the real estate transaction, which had occurred about one year prior to the time of the trial. Whatever may be the true facts regarding the exchange of these properties in January, 1924, the undisputed evidence shows that the complaining witness and his wife entered into the new premises with full knowledge of all the circumstances and with complete satisfaction in their part of the exchange. No complaint was made by them that the exchange was unfair to them until effort was made by the district attorney to put them in this position during the course of the trial. They stipulated in writing that the value of the property which they turned in was $2,300 and that the value of the property which they took on Durant avenue was $6,500. The trouble came when their trusted agent, King, neglected to make the monthly payments and thus caused them to be in default in the installments upon their new home. It was therefore entirely outside the issues of this case as to what, if any, profit the appellant derived out of the San Leandro property after it had been transferred to her by King. Though the evidence is unmistakable that the loans which she had obtained upon this property were based on other security and that the failure of Carero to abide by his contract to transfer the property free from incumbrances cut her profit on the entire transaction to less than what would ordinarily be allowed to a real estate broker, nevertheless, the jury was frequently told by the district attorney in his argument that she had obtained $2,300 in cash from this property and that she was still indebted to the Careros in that amount.

[4, 5] Appellant was charged under section 508, Penal Code, with the fraudulent appropriation of the money to her own use while in the capacity of an agent of the complaining witness. To support the charge it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that the confidential relation continued up to and including the time of the alleged embezzlement. The information charged that the appellant received the money "on or about the 29th day of October" and that she did, "on said 29th day of October," fraudulently and feloniously appropriate it to her own use. In the absence of a special demurrer for indefiniteness, the information was sufficient (People v. Schroeder, 185 P. 507, 43 Cal. App. 623, 625), but the attack is made that the evidence is insufficient to support the charge. Ordinarily, it is not necessary for the prosecution to allege or prove the exact date upon which an offense is alleged to have been committed, but there are, of course, exceptions to this rule. Where, as is the case here, a confidential relation is alleged to have arisen between the parties through which the money was lawfully received and the termination of that confidential relation is in doubt, it is necessary to prove the date of the alleged fraudulent appropriation in order to determine whether such appropriation occurred during the continuance of the confidential relation. Though it is alleged in the information that the money was received and appropriated on October 29th, the undisputed facts demonstrate that this was not the case. It is conceded that the money was not received until October 30th, and the date of the alleged misappropriation is left entirely to conjecture. There is no dispute as to these facts: That the appellant received the money on October 30th, for a special purpose, which she was unable to accomplish; that she returned to the complaining witness and notified him of her unsuccessful efforts; that the complaining witness then asked her for the return of the money and that she persuaded him to allow her to keep it for the time being pending negotiations for the purchase of another piece of property for the benefit of the complaining witness; that he assented to this arrangement and made no further demand upon her for the return of the money; that thereafter she was cited to appear before the district attorney, who demanded of her that she return the money before a certain date under penalty of prosecution for embezzlement. The prosecution failed to establish the time when this latter demand was made. The only testimony on this subject is that of the deputy district attorney as follows:

"I think the first conversation was had some time possibly the first part of November, latter part of October, 1924. * * * Well, we had another conference, I believe; at any rate, it was continued then for a short time."

[6] From the entire record it stands without contradiction that the original agency terminated on the day on which it was created, October 30, 1924; that, upon the termination of that agency, demand was made for the return of the money, and that the complaining witness consented to appellant's request that she retain it for another purpose; that some time thereafter, probably November 2d, the complaining witness notified the appellant that he would not go through with the suggested purchase of another piece of property, but did not demand of her the return of the money; that thereafter and on November 6th, the appellant assigned her claim against the Careros in the sum of $298 for money claimed to have been paid for their benefit and her assignee commenced action against them and attached the sum of $275, which she held in her possession; that from that day forward the money which she was charged to have embezzled was in the possession of the court by virtue of the attachment which was issued in the civil suit; that when demand was finally made by the district attorney that she pay this money to Carero she insisted that the money was due her in satisfaction of her claim against the Careros and upon that ground refused to make restitution. There is, therefore, a failure of proof that the money was fraudulently appropriated during the existence of a confidential relation between the parties, but, on the contrary, the only proof is that the appropriation was made openly and avowedly under a claim of right after the confidential relation had terminated.

[7] It is argued that the prosecution failed to prove a sufficient demand for the return of the money before the information was filed. Ordinarily, it is not necessary to prove a demand for property alleged to have been fraudulently appropriated by an agent (People v. Ward, 66 P. 372, 134 Cal. 301, 304) particularly "where other evidence clearly shows an appropriation by an employee of his employer's funds, with intent to do so fraudulently and feloniously" (People v. Royce, 39 P. 524, 525, 106 Cal. 173, 178). But where money is received by an agent for a special purpose, and after the termination of the agency it is retained by him with the consent of the principal, a demand is necessary in order to establish the essential element of the crime—the fraudulent intent of the agent to appropriate it to his own use. It is said in 10 Cal. Jur. p. 265:

"Where the time for the payment of the money is indefinite or has not expired, evidence of a demand therefor and of a refusal to return it or pay it over may be necessary to establish the fact of conversion. In such case the mere neglect to return, in the absence of a demand, has never been admitted as proof of conversion."

The defense upon which the appellant relied was that she held the money openly and avowedly and in good faith in payment for moneys which she had advanced to the complaining witness. Section 511, Pen. Code. In support of this issue it was shown that she had voluntarily advanced for the benefit of the complaining witness the sum of $223 in payment of installments and other charges upon their contract for the purchase of the Durant avenue home and she endeavored to show that she had satisfied an attachment against an automobile owned by the complaining witness, but was prevented from making this showing by the ruling of the trial judge on objection of the prosecution. This evidence was offered not for the purpose of showing that her claim against the Careros was tenable, as under the section of the Penal Code cited it was not necessary to prove that. It was offered merely to show that she held the money openly and avowedly under her claim against the Careros and that there was, therefore, no intention on her part to fraudulently appropriate the money to her own use. Thus, so far as the evidence is concerned, the appellant held the money in her possession with the full consent of the owner until November 6th, when she deposited it with the officer of the law to await the determination of ownership in the civil suit. Before taking this action she had consulted with two deputies in the district attorney's office of the city and county of San Francisco and one deputy in the office of the Attorney General of the state, and was acting upon their advice. In this respect the case is on a line with People v. Lapique, 52 P. 40, 120 Cal. 25, 26; People v. Moss, 99 N. Y. S. 138, 113 App. Div. 329, 333, 343; People v. Moss, 80 N. E. 383, 187 N. Y. 410, 425, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 10 Ann. Cas. 309. See, also, Lindgren v. United States, 260 F. 772, 777, 171 C. C. A. 498, and State v. Litschke, 40 P. 167, 27 Or. 189. We are unable to conceive what better evidence of good faith could be asked than where a party, openly claiming a right to the money in dispute, deposits it with the duly constituted officers of the court to await the judicial determination of the legal title thereto through the regular mode of legal procedure in a civil suit.

Aside from all the foregoing considerations the outstanding objection made by the appellant is that she was not accorded a fair and impartial trial. As said in People v. Becker, 104 N. E. 396, 409, 210 N. Y. 274, 311:

"The fundamental demand of our law is that the accused shall have a fair trial, and that if that right has been infringed, not in respect to mere technicalities, but in substantial matters, and however undesignedly, he shall have another opportunity to meet his accuser and establish his innocence."

In People v. Wolf, 76 N. E. 592, 594, 183 N. Y. 464, 472:

"A fair trial is a legal trial, or one conducted in all material things in substantial conformity to law."

Throughout the presentation of the people's case the assistant district attorney by leading and grossly improper questions brought before the jury a large mass of irrelevant and incompetent testimony much of which was pure hearsay, having no possible relation to the issues at trial, but all of which was highly prejudicial to the appellant.

Many of these questions were asked in such a way that the witnesses were able to give their answers before counsel for appellant was able to object. Time and again the appellant's counsel protested against this conduct and at his request the trial court would strike out the answer and hear his objection. Though in many cases the objection was sustained and the answer stricken from the record, the objectionable matter was always before the jury. As we have heretofore pointed out, the appellant was being tried on the charge of embezzling a certain sum of money during the early part of November, 1924. The great bulk of the testimony, however, was directed to a real estate transaction in which she was engaged with the complaining witness and his wife and their agent, Joe King, during the month of January of the same year. Over repeated objections of appellant's counsel these witnesses were permitted to testify to ex parte conversations had between the complaining witness and his wife and Joe King regarding matters which did not have the slightest connection with the issue at trial. This hearsay testimony was brought in for the purpose of showing the bad reputation of the appellant growing out of her operations as a real estate broker, as well as to show the bad reputation of King with whom she was charged to have acted in conspiracy to defraud the complaining witness in the transaction of January, 1924. Though some of this testimony was stricken out upon the objection of appellant, it was all employed by the assistant district attorney in his address to the jury, and we find in that address instances of statements of fact which are not supported by any evidence in the record, but are founded solely upon the suspicions of the prosecutor.

Not only this, but the appellant was charged with all the crimes of her former husband, King, with the bad reputation of her present husband, and with her own bad reputation as an operator in the real estate market. The Careros had not rescinded or repudiated the exchange. They testified in this case that their San Leandro property was worth $2,300 and that the exchange had been fair to them. Until this case went to trial the appellant had not been charged with fraud or misrepresentation or unfair dealing in connection with that exchange. Notwithstanding this, the assistant district attorney, in his argument to the jury, and the state as well in its brief on file herein, charged the appellant as having conspired with Joe King to defraud the Careros in that transaction, with having misrepresented to them material facts in relation to the properties exchanged, and having unlawfully withheld information in regard thereto. In addition to this, the district attorney charged Joe King with having forged the deed which the Careros made to him of their San Leandro property, with no evidence of any character to support the charge, and then accused the appellant with having willfully suppressed the deed and refused to offer it in evidence. Again, with all the competent evidence directly contrary, the assistant district attorney deliberately stated to the jury that the appellant was then indebted to the Careros in the sum of $3,000. These statements must necessarily have impressed the jury to the prejudice of appellant, coming as they did from a sworn officer of the court. The jury was told in so many words that the appellant was a real estate shark who had defrauded the Careros out of their poor home in conspiracy with Joe King, and then the prosecutor launched into an attack upon the criminal record of Joe King, and of the present husband of the appellant, who, he stated, was safely "put away."

[8, 9] On this appeal the respondent does not attempt to defend any of these charges of misconduct, but rests solely on the ground that in each particular case the trial judge was not requested to instruct the jury to disregard them. Though, ordinarily, such a request is necessary "where the error is such that its effect would be obviated by an instruction to the jury to disregard it" (People v. Nakis, 193 P. 92, 96, 184 Cal. 105, 116), the rule is not applicable where the misconduct on the part of the state occurs throughout the examination of witnesses and in the arguments to the jury with such frequency that the jury is led to believe that the district attorney, as the sworn officer of the court, has in his possession facts so damaging to the defendant on trial that the defendant must insist on their being withheld. Such was the case before the Supreme Court in People v. Anthony, 196 P. 47, 50, 185 Cal. 152, 159, where the conviction of the defendant was reversed for misconduct of the district attorney in the examination of witnesses. In that case the Supreme Court say:

"Ordinarily, the prompt sustaining of objections to improper questions, coupled with instructions to the jury to disregard the question, will cure an error of this kind. But where the offense has been repeated in various forms, and where the evidence is so evenly balanced, and the district attorney, after being warned by the court, continues in his course, we must hold that the misconduct was so prejudicial as to entitle the defendant to a new trial."

To the same effect are People v. Kizer, 133 P. 516, 521, 134 P. 346, 22 Cal. App. 10, 20, and People v. Tufts, 139 P. 78, 167 Cal. 266, 274. In the case under review counsel for appellant objected to all the remarks of the assistant district attorney which he assigns as misconduct and objected to the improper examination of the witnesses until he found that his objections merely emphasized the error in the minds of the jury. We are not able to say from an examination of this record that there has not been a miscarriage of justice; on the other hand, it is patent that the appellant was not given a fair trial upon the charge laid in the information. People v. Glass, 112 P. 281, 158 Cal. 650, 654; State v. Giudice, 153 N. W. 336, 170 Iowa, 731, 751; Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1160; People v. Fielding, 53 N. E. 497, 158 N. Y. 542, 546, 46 L. R. A. 641, 70 Am. St. Rep. 495.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [10] The petition for a rehearing is denied. The petitioner is in error in assuming that the cause was reversed upon a conflict of evidence. The reason for the reversal was that the court was satisfied that from a review of the entire record the defendant had not been accorded a fair trial before the jury. As the cause was to go back for a new trial, we discussed the evidence at some length merely for the purpose of pointing out some of the well-settled rules of law covering the elements of the crime which must be proved. As the Penal Code provides that an appropriation made openly and avowedly and under a claim in good faith is a sufficient defense to a charge of embezzlement, this was the real issue which the defendant brought before the jury. The evidence was without conflict that the appropriation was made openly and avowedly and under an adverse claim. The question of good faith in the claim was clearly one for the jury to determine. It was because of the misconduct on the part of the prosecution that the defendant was prejudiced on the presentation of that issue. If we were in error in our statement of the evidence, this was due to the failure of the state to point to the portions of the typewritten record which were claimed to support the statement of facts made in the brief. If we had reversed the judgment upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support it, then the matter of a conflict in the evidence would become an important factor. But this is not important when the evidence is merely referred to for other purposes.

76 Cal. App. 723

In re WEBER'S ESTATE.WEBER v. HECKER et al.
(Civ. 5591.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 3, 1926.)

1. Wills ⚭439, 487(1).

In interpretation of will, it is duty of court to determine, if possible, intent of testator, for which purpose parol evidence is admissible in numerous instances.

2. Executors and administrators ⚭314(12) —Appellate court, without having evidence before it, cannot say that a different construction should have been given to will unless it is case where no evidence was admissible, and will affirm.

Where probate court, after hearing, bases its construction of will upon evidence presented, appellate court, without having the evidence before it, cannot say that a different construction should have been given unless it is a case where no evidence was admissible, and failure to file a judgment roll or bill of exceptions requires an affirmance of the order appealed from.

3. Wills ⚭558(1).

Particular words are not requisite to create a legacy or devise, but it is essential that testator's intention to make gift be shown.

4. Wills ⚭441—Intention of testator is determined from words of will, considering circumstances under which it was made, if there is any uncertainty in its language.

The intention of the testator is determined from the words of the will, considering the circumstances under which it was made, if there is any uncertainty in its language.

5. Wills ⚭470—Will and its entire scheme, property disposed of, persons named as devisees and legatees, and words and context, should be considered in arriving at intention of testator.

In arriving at intention of testator, the will and its entire scheme, property disposed of, the persons named as devisees and legatees, and the words and context, should be considered together, and words used in will should be construed according to their surroundings.

6. Wills ⚭478—A devise or bequest may arise by implication, but probability of intention to make gift must be strong.

A devise or bequest may arise by implication, but the probability of the intention to make the gift must be so strong that an intention contrary to that imputed cannot be supposed to have existed in testator's mind.

7. Wills ⚭478—Testator naming seven persons, and specifying specific amounts of money "to" each, held to intend to leave money to persons designated, though will did not contain dispositive or operative words.

Where will named seven persons and specified amounts of money "to" each, held, that probability of intention to make the gifts was so strong that a contrary intention could not be supposed to have existed, though dispositive or operative words were not used.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Emily H. Weber, deceased. From a decree in favor of Alice Hecker and others directing final distribution, Jacob Weber, objector, appeals. Decree affirmed.

Louis F. Laberere and John A. Cronin, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Karl L. Ratzner, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal on behalf of the surviving husband of Emily H. Weber, deceased, from the decree of final distribution of her estate. The appeal is presented on a printed transcript consisting of the executor's first and final account and petition for distribution, the appellant's objections thereto, the order settling the account and decreeing distribution under the will, and the notice of appeal from the decree. These several documents are accompanied by the certificate of the county clerk that they are true copies of the documents on file in his office.

[1, 2] The appeal apparently was taken under the "old" method, but there is no judgment roll and no bill of exceptions. It appears from the copy of the order appealed from that a hearing was had and evidence taken on appellant's objections, which were then overruled. These objections raised two points—that property of the value of $153 listed in the account was community property, and that the will did not make a valid disposition of the property of the estate. We have no information regarding the nature of the evidence taken at the hearing. If addressed to the question of the interpretation of the will, it should have been brought up on this appeal in a bill of exceptions. On the interpretation of a will it is the duty of the court to determine, if possible, the intention of the testator. For this purpose there are numerous instances where parol evidence is admissible. Where, therefore, the probate court, after a hearing, bases its construction of the will upon the evidence presented, the appellate court, without having the evidence before it, cannot say that a different construction should have been given, unless it is a case where no evidence was admissible. The failure to file a judgment roll or a bill of exceptions is sufficient to require an affirmance of the order appealed from.

In addition to this, we are satisfied that appellant's claim that the will fails to make disposition of the property is without merit. The will in part reads as follows:

"I, Emily H. Weber, * * * do make, publish and declare this my last will and testament in the manner following, that is to say:

"First. To Alice Hecker * * * $500. To Sophy Hecker * * * $5,500 (and to seven others in the same language, but in varying sums).

"Secondly. All clothing, linen, etc., to go to sister-in-law Sophy Hecker."

The final clause named an executor to serve without bonds. The point raised by appellant is that the will does not contain any dispositive or operative word covering the bequests of money enumerated in the first paragraph. Respondents' answer is that there is no uncertainty in any portion of the will; that the use of the words, "To Alice Hecker, $500," clearly indicates the intention of the testatrix to bequeath Alice Hecker $500, or that if there be any doubt on this score, the bequest must arise by implication from the context of the will.

[3-6] It would serve no purpose to discuss or analyze the numerous authorities cited by the respective parties. It is sufficient to say that though the cases bear both ways, the final expression of the Supreme Court found in Estate of Franck, 210 P. 417, 418, 190 Cal. 28, 31, is conclusive. In that case the court say:

"Particular words are not requisite to create a legacy or devise. It is essential that the intention of the testator to make the gift be shown. (Estate of Barclay, 93 P. 1012, 152 Cal. 753, 757). The cardinal rule for the construction of wills is to ascertain the intention of the testator, and this is determined from the words of the will, considering the circumstances under which it was made, if there is any uncertainty in its language. (Estate of Budd, 135 P. 1131, 166 Cal. 286, 292; Estate of Henderson, 119 P. 496, 161 Cal. 353, 357; Estate of Mitchell, 117 P. 774, 160 Cal. 618; Estate of Carothers, 119 P. 926, 161 Cal. 588; Estate of Spreckels, 123 P. 371, 162 Cal. 559.) The will and its entire scheme, the property disposed of, the persons named as devisees and legatees, the words and the context should be considered together, and words used in the will should be construed according to their surroundings. (Estate of Koch, 96 P. 100, 8 Cal. App. 90.) It is equally well settled that a devise or bequest may arise by implication. To warrant the court in so declaring there must be something more than conjecture. The probability of an intention to make the gift implied must appear to be so strong that an intention contrary to that imputed to the testator cannot be supposed to have existed in his mind."

[7] In the case at hand there is no need for conjecture as to the intention of the testatrix. When she separately named seven persons and specified specific amounts of money "to" each, she intended to leave the money designated to the persons named. Thus the probability of an intention to make these gifts is so strong that "an intention contrary to that imputed to the testa (trix) cannot be supposed to have existed."

Order affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 672

PALMER et al. v. SHASTA COUNTY.
(Civ. 3053.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 27, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 26, 1926.)

1. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1)—Evidence held conflicting on question whether plans for bridge provided for construction joints, and findings are conclusive on appeal.

In action for balance due on contract to construct bridge, evidence held conflicting on question whether plans provided for construction joints, and hence trial court's findings must be accepted by appellate court as conclusive.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1)—Evidence on question whether expansion joints in bridge were improperly constructed held controverted and findings conclusive.

In action for balance due on bridge contract, evidence on question whether expansion joints were improperly constructed held controverted, rendering trial court's findings conclusive.

3. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1)—Where evidence as to whether quantity of cement used in bridge was deficient was conflicting, finding for plaintiff, supported by substantial testimony, could not be disturbed.

In action for balance due on bridge contract, where evidence on question whether quantity of cement used in construction of bridge was deficient was conflicting, and findings for plaintiff were supported by substantial testimony, they could not be disturbed.

4. Counties $\hookrightarrow$ 198.

Interest against a county on claims for balance due on bridge contract does not begin to run until date of entry of judgment against county.

5. Costs $\hookrightarrow$ 234—Error in allowing interest of \$1,824.66 on judgment for plaintiff held to entitle defendant to costs, though judgment was affirmed in other respects.

Error in allowing interest of $1,824.66 on judgment for contractor in suit against county for balance due on bridge contract held to entitle county to costs, though judgment was in other respects affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action on contract for bridge construction by P. A. Palmer and another, doing business under the firm name and style of Palmer & Petersen, against the County of Shasta, in which the defendant filed a counterclaim. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Jesse W. Carter, Dist. Atty., of Redding, for appellant.

Knight, Boland, Hutchinson & Christin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiffs to recover balance alleged to be due upon a contract for the construction of an approach to Anderson free bridge in the county of Shasta, state of California. The plaintiffs had judgment in the sum of $10,568.04. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

On or about the 10th day of September, 1920, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into a contract for the construction of an approach to the Anderson free bridge in Shasta county. The approach was to consist of a re-enforced concrete bridge 560 feet in length, of fourteen spans. The contract price for the bridge was the sum of $39,000. At a later date a supplemental contract was entered into, which changed the dates of payment provided for in the original contract, but otherwise leaving the original contract in full force and effect. The plans and specifications were prepared by C. R. Wiegel, county surveyor of Shasta county, and the bridge was constructed under the personal inspection of Mr. Wiegel and his deputy. According to the defendant's interpretation, the bridge was designed as a simple span bridge, of spans 40 feet in length resting upon piers, with expansion joints on the even-numbered piers and construction or stop joints on the odd-numbered piers. There is no controversy as to the expansion joints being provided for in the plans and specifications, or as to the piers where the expansion joints were to be placed and were placed. There is controversy as to whether construction joints were provided for in the plans and specifications. After the work had been finished according to plans and specifications, as interpreted by the plaintiffs, there appeared certain defects in the bridge, to remedy which the defendant expended the sum of some $12,955. The defendant also filed a counterclaim in which it alleged the expenditure of this sum of money to complete the bridge according to the plans and specifications; that the plaintiffs had not finished the bridge according to contract and plans and specifications; that there was due the plaintiffs for the work performed by them the sum of $10,464.94; and that by reason of the expenditures made by the defendant, as just alleged, there was a balance due to the county of the sum of $2,490.53. The amount claimed by the plaintiffs was the sum of $18,406.22. Upon trial, the court gave judgment for the plaintiffs in the sum first herein mentioned.

It is alleged by the defendant that construction joints were omitted from the fixed piers; that expansion joints were not properly constructed; that the cement used in the construction of the bridge was deficient in quantity; and that different materials from those provided in the specifications were substituted by the contractors. As to the substitution of materials, it may be here stated that the court found that the specifications called for one-half inch spacing bars and the bars actually used were only three-eighths inch in size; that the difference in value was the sum of $150, or thereabouts, credit for which was given to the county, and that the substitution in the size of the bars did not in anywise affect the strength of the bridge.

It appears from the record that there are two types of construction used in the erection of concrete bridges such as the approach to the Anderson free bridge. One is called the continuous span and the other is a simple span. A simple span bridge in this instance would be the construction of each span independently—that is, 40 feet at a time—with a construction joint over every alternate pier with an expansion joint between the alternate piers. The construction joint consists simply of placing an abutment at the end of alternate spans and pouring the concrete up to the abutment, letting it set, then removing the abutment and proceed with the pouring of the cement of the next following span. A continuous span bridge is one in which expansion joints are placed over the piers or abutments at the end of alternate spans and over the solid or fixed piers the re-enforcing steel is continuous, including reverse bending moment steel. This steel holds the deck of the bridge rigid and prevents it from cracking. In the simple span the reverse bending moment steel and the re-enforcing steel both end at the expansion joint and also at the opposite end of the span at the so-called fixed pier. It would appear from the testimony that cracks are inevitable in concrete bridge construction, and therefore it is necessary to have the cracks occur on the line across the bridge that will not affect its supporting strength. If the crack occurs at the end of the girder which is near the center of the pier, the supporting strength of the girder is not affected, but, if it occurs at the point where the girder reaches the pier, the crack becomes very material. It is also necessary to have expansion joints sufficiently near together to permit the come and go of the bridge as it may be affected by climatic conditions. Controverting the claims of the defendant, the plaintiffs set forth that construction joints were not provided for in the plans and specifications to be placed over alternate piers; that in fact no construction joints were provided for; that the plans and specifications were defective in their reference to expansion joints and called for the use of material not calculated to function properly; that the defects in the bridge were due to the defects in the plans and specifications and not in the work performed by the plaintiffs.

The trial court found that the plaintiffs had substantially complied with their contract; had built the bridge according to the plans and specifications; that expansion joints were constructed according to the plans and specifications; that construction joints were not ordered placed over any of the piers. The court also found that the plaintiffs had done extra work in the sum of $3,149.13, and that the defendant was entitled to credit for materials furnished and for work done in stripping forms and back-filling, etc., in the total sum of $2,339.09, leaving due the plaintiffs the sum for which judgment was entered herein. The court also gave judgment to the plaintiffs for interest on the amount of the judgment from the 3d day of November, 1921, the date on which the plaintiffs alleged completion of their contract.

[1] Practically no questions of law are involved in this case. The appeal is brought to us upon questions of fact and the allegation that certain findings of the court relating to the points which we have herein stated are not supported by the evidence. It is further argued on the part of the appellant that the findings are in conflict with the uncontradicted evidence, and that the finding, in substance, that the plans and specifications did not call for construction joints over the piers, is against uncontradicted evidence. We do not quite see how this claim can be made, in view of the fact that the findings printed in this case and called to our attention show that upon every material point the finding of the court is based upon conflicting testimony. There is also testimony in the record of a substantial nature which, if believed by the trial court, is sufficient to sustain every finding challenged in this case. We might rest our decision upon the statement that our investigation of the record shows the above fact, and then state the familiar rule that an appellate court will not disturb the judgment of the trial court when the findings of the latter are based upon conflicting testimony, even though the appellate court might be of the opinion that the testimony would have supported a contrary finding or judgment, or even though, as printed in the record, the weight of the testimony appears to be against the finding of the trial court. However, we will set forth enough of the testimony to show that the findings challenged are supported.

First, as to whether the contract provided for construction joints: In the cross-complaint filed by the defendant, as well as in its answer, it is set forth that the plans and specifications provide for fourteen construction joints to be placed in the center of the spans on the approach to said bridge, all of which were omitted. This might seem to be an error in the matter of pleading were it not for the fact that on the 5th day of June, 1922, C. R. Wiegel, the engineer who drew the plans, in the certificate or letter written to the board of supervisors of the county of Shasta, rejecting the bridge in question, contained the following:

"The plans and specifications call for fourteen construction joints to be placed in the center of spans on said bridge, all of which have been omitted."

Upon the witness stand, Mr. Wiegel testified as follows:

"Q. Is it your opinion that construction joints were omitted from the center of the spans on the approach to the bridge? A. They were. Q. Are they provided for in the plans and specifications? A. They are. Q. Will you turn to Exhibit 2 and show us where? A. On page 4, under the heading, 'Placing Concrete,' paragraph B. 'Joints in the concrete due to stopping work are to be avoided as far as possible, except where indicated on the plans. Such joints when necessary shall be horizontal in wall and columns, and shall be at the tops and bottoms of columns; such joints in girders and slabs shall be vertical and at the center of the span.' Now the last two lines of page 4, under the heading 'Expansion Joints.' 'Expansion joints must be provided at all points indicated on the plans.' Q. Is that all? A. That is all."

All of the witnesses called by the defendant, to whose testimony our attention has been directed, contradict Mr. Wiegel as to the correct interpretation of the plans, and are emphatic that the construction joints should not be placed in the center of the span except in case of absolute necessity, due to the stoppage of work or other unavoidable cause; that the construction joints should be over piers. It is further claimed by the witness Wiegel that he transferred the point for the construction joint from the center of the span to a point directly over the center of the pier—I, e., over piers in 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, and 11—and that he did this during the course of construction. Upon this question there is a great deal of conflicting testimony, which we do not need here to set forth. There is testimony by engineers called on behalf of the defendant that the plans and specifications called for construction joints over the odd-numbered piers just named. This testimony is not, however, uncontroverted, as claimed by the appellant, as a brief summary will sufficiently show. Mr. Huggard, a witness called on behalf of the plaintiffs, testified as follows:

"Q. As a foreman with experience such as you have described, would you read in any part of this Exhibit 2, that a construction joint was provided for in these plans and specifications over the alternate or solid piers? A. No, sir; absolutely not."

Prof. Derleth of the engineering department of the University of California, testified as follows:

"Q. I will ask you to again look at sheet 1 of the specifications and plans, which give the general design of the bridge, and tell us whether a construction joint is provided for on that sheet? A. I see no place on this sheet where construction joints are indicated. Q. You notice a provision for expansion joints, do you? A. Piers 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, and 13 show provision for expansion joints for one span adjacent and fixed end for the other span adjacent to those piers. Q. Will you look now at sheet 2 of those plans and tell us what—whether a construction joint is there provided for? A. I see no reference on sheet 2 to construction joints anywhere."

Mr. Leonard, an expert witness called by the plaintiffs, testified as follows:

"Q. Will you look at the plans and specifications and tell me whether such a construction joint was provided for in these plans and specifications? A. No, I have looked over them and I cannot find that."

This testimony is sufficient to show that the question as to whether the plans and specifications did or did not provide for construction joints was a controverted question before the trial court, and was decided by that court upon conflicting testimony, and hence we must accept such findings as conclusive.

[2] The second objection urged by appellant is based upon the allegation that the expansion joints were not properly constructed and therefore failed to function. Here we have another controverted question. A number of witnesses testified that the expansion joints were built according to the plans and specifications, but that the plans and specifications for the joints were so deficient that the expansion joints could not be reasonably expected to function properly. The sliding plates for the construction joints consisted of galvanized iron plates 10 inches wide and 18 feet in length, laid across the axis of the bridge. Upon these plates the bridge girders rested. The diaphragm wall also extended down to the top of the pier, making the friction surface coincident for the entire 18-foot width of the bridge. It also appears from the testimony that the specifications were conflicting as to the gauge of the galvanized iron plates in one place calling for 14 gauge, 12 inches by 20 feet long. In another place 20 gauge galvanized plates, 20 inches by 18 feet in length, were specified. According to some of the witnesses, the plates were so thin that they would reflect all the unevenness, if any, of the cement and would also crumple up somewhat like a sheet of wrapping paper. It also appears that the county engineer was upon the ground, either in person or by deputy, and inspected the construction of the expansion joints during the period of their erection, and, so far as we have been able to discover, did not question that the plans and specifications were being followed at the time the expansion joints were being constructed. The testimony of Mr. Leonard, Prof. Derleth, Mr. Huggard, and others was all to the effect that the type of expansion points provided for in the specifications was such that their proper functioning was exceedingly doubtful. These witnesses testified that the galvanized iron plate was too thin; that it should not have extended for the entire 18 feet; that it should have been under the girders only; that expansion joints, such as were called for in this instance would freeze—that is, the friction of the galvanized iron plate would be of such a degree as to prevent the sliding movement of the girders. The testimony also shows that, when the diaphragm wall was removed, the girders began to work; that is, they would come and go with the expansion of the bridge. Considerable testimony was introduced to the effect that phosphor bronze plates should have been used; also roller bearings were better calculated to secure efficiency in expansion joints. Testimony was also introduced to the effect that several other bridges having expansion joints, constructed according to the plans and specifications of the bridge in question, had failed to function properly, and that the use of galvanized iron plates was being discarded.

[3] The final grounds for reversal really urged by appellant is that the quantity of cement used in the construction of the bridge was deficient. Here again we have the same conflict of testimony. A certain number of witnesses, by mathematical calculations and otherwise, testified that the quantity of cement used was deficient to the number of about 1,000 sacks. On the other hand, a number of witnesses testified that the quantity of cement so used was that directed by the county engineer, and was not deficient in quantity. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth this conflicting testimony, and it is sufficient to say that the findings of the court have substantial testimony to support them. The matter of the substitution of steel has been heretofore dealt with.

[4, 5] The objection that the court erred in allowing interest from the 3d day of November, 1921, is well taken. The law is well settled that interest against a county upon claims such as we are here considering does not begin to run until the date of the entry of judgment. Judgment in this case was entered on the 21st day of April, 1924. It thus appears that the court erroneously allowed interest for the period of 2 years 5 months and 18 days, which interest would amount to the sum of $1,824.66. This part of the judgment must be stricken out, and it is so ordered, and it is further ordered that the allowance of interest date from the entry of judgment, to wit, April 21, 1924. This error in the allowance of interest, as shown by the figures above stated, is not a mere trifling item, and therefore the appellant will be and is hereby allowed its costs on appeal. In all other respects, the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PULLEN, Justice pro tem.

76 Cal. App. 688

PEOPLE v. WILSON et al. (Cr. 1196.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California, March 1, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 29, 1926.)

1. Criminal law § 622(2)—Refusal of separate trial was not abuse of discretion, notwithstanding admissions tending to implicate both defendants had been made by codefendant.

Refusal of separate trial in joint prosecution for robbery held not abuse of discretion, notwithstanding affidavits that codefendant had made admissions tending to implicate both defendants, which, if offered against such codefendant, would also injure movant.

2. Criminal law § 1134(2)—Abuse of discretion in denying severance must, on appeal, be determined on showing made on demand.

Whether denial of accused's motion for severance was abuse of discretion must, on appeal, be determined on showing made when demand was presented, and not on what afterwards occurred.

3. Criminal law § 372(1)—Evidence is admissible to prove that robberies charged in indictment were but part of general conspiracy to commit a series of robberies.

In prosecution for robberies, evidence that witness and defendants had entered into a general conspiracy to commit a series of robberies, and that offenses for which defendants were put on trial were but a part of the conspiracy, was properly permitted.

4. Criminal law § 372(1)—History of conspiracy to commit chain of robberies is admissible, though evidence covers transactions extending over long period, and shows commission of crimes other than robberies charged.

In prosecution for robberies, testimony being admissible to prove general conspiracy to commit series of robberies of which offenses charged were a part, its history can be shown, though evidence covers many transactions extending over long period, and shows commission of other crimes.

5. Robbery § 24(1)—Evidence held sufficient to show existence of general conspiracy to rob, of which offenses charged were a part.

Evidence held sufficient to show existence of general conspiracy to rob, in furtherance of which two robberies charged against defendants were perpetrated.

6. Criminal law § 510—Testimony of accomplice must be corroborated by independent evidence connecting defendant with crime to warrant conviction.

To warrant conviction in robbery prosecution on evidence given by an accomplice, his testimony must be corroborated by independent evidence, which tends to connect defendant with commission of the offense.

7. Criminal law § 511(4)—Testimony that defendant resembled robber who rifled witness' pockets was sufficient to connect defendant with robbery, and corroborate accomplice's testimony.

Testimony of witness that he positively recognized defendant's accomplice as robber who pointed gun at him, and that defendant resembled robber who rifled his pockets, whose back and shoulders he had seen, was sufficient to connect defendant with robbery, and to corroborate accomplice's testimony.

8. Criminal law § 339—Identification may be based upon peculiarities other than facial.

Identification of defendant need not be by one who has seen his face, nor be based on facial features, but may be based on other peculiarities.

9. Criminal law § 566—Witnesses' testimony that they believe defendant is person they saw commit the crime is sufficient to sustain conviction.

Testimony of witnesses who decline to positively identify defendant, but testify merely that they believe he is the person whom they saw commit the crime, is sufficient identification to sustain conviction.

10. Criminal law § 1044, 1129(1)—When motion not made to strike out objectionable testimony and asking of question not assigned as error, question of misconduct was not open.

Where defendant made no motion to strike out objectionable testimony given in response to alleged improper questions asked by prosecutor of state's witness, and did not assign his conduct in asking them as error, he could not raise the question of misconduct in appellate court.

11. Robbery § 15—Coconspirator is liable as principal for robbery committed by confederates, in his absence, in furtherance of conspiracy, unless he has previously communicated withdrawal from conspiracy (Pen. Code, § 31, 971).

Where defendant's confederates committed robbery arranged for in furtherance of conspiracy to rob, he is liable as a principal, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 31, 971, notwithstanding his failure to appear at scene of robbery, in absence of communication of his withdrawal from conspiracy prior to commission of the robbery.

12. Robbery ⚡15—In prosecution for robbery, communication of defendant's withdrawal from conspiracy to rob may be by acts or words.

In prosecution for robbery, knowledge of defendant's withdrawal from conspiracy to commit robberies may be brought home to his confederates by acts as well as by words.

13. Robbery ⚡24(1)—Evidence held to warrant finding that defendant's failure to appear at robbery committed by confederates did not indicate withdrawal from conspiracy to rob.

Evidence held to warrant finding that defendant's failure to keep appointment with confederates to commit robbery was not intended by him to be, and was not understood by confederates to be indicative of, withdrawal from enterprise, especially since he participated in subsequent robbery.

14. Criminal law ⚡693, 696(4)—An objection, after question asked and answered, that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and not within issues, was abortive, and properly overruled.

Where, in robbery prosecution, after witness had given conversation he had with defendant after defendant's arrest, objection that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and not within the issues, was not tantamount to motion to strike, and was an abortive objection, and so was properly overruled.

15. Criminal law ⚡696(6)—Motion to strike testimony not made until after cross-examination comes too late to raise question of admissibility.

Where state's witness testified to conversation with defendant after his arrest, motion to strike, not made until close of cross-examination, came too late to raise question of admissibility; it being necessary to make motion at close of direct examination to exclude testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Carey Wilson and Clifford A. McCormick were convicted of robbery, and each appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. J. Clark, of Los Angeles, for appellant Wilson.

Rowen Irwin, of Bakersfield, and Charles A. Barnhart, of Los Angeles, for appellant McCormick.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn and H. H. Linney, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. By an indictment containing two counts, Carey Wilson and Clifford McCormick were jointly charged, in each count, with the crime of robbery, committed in the city of Los Angeles. Count 1 charges that on March 17, 1924, the defendants robbed Ben Albins and Joe Bassett of $45 in money, the property of Albins and Bassett, and of the Sultan Turkish Baths, a corporation. This incident is referred to by the witnesses as the Turkish Baths robbery.

Count 2 charges that on March 25, 1924, the defendants robbed E. C. Fitts of $18 in money, the personal property of Fitts and of the Los Angeles Railway Company, a corporation. This event is referred to by the witnesses as the La Brea bus robbery. Albins and Bassett were, respectively, the night clerk and porter at the establishment of the Sultan Turkish Baths. Fitts was the driver of one of the busses of the Los Angeles Railway Company.

Before the commencement of the trial Wilson demanded that he be tried separately. In support of this motion Wilson presented affidavits to the effect that his defense and that of his codefendant would be inconsistent with, and contradictory to, each other; that his codefendant, after his arrest, had made statements to the officers which tended to implicate both defendants in the robberies; and that, if these statements were offered against his codefendant, as the district attorney contemplated doing, he (Wilson) would be irretrievably injured. The request for a separate trial was denied. The defendants were found guilty on both counts, and a separate judgment of conviction on each count was rendered against each defendant, each of whom has appealed from the judgments of conviction against him, and likewise from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The most damaging evidence against defendants was given by a confessed accomplice, one Godfrey Cowdry, testifying as a witness for the people. It was the theory of the prosecution that Cowdry, Wilson, and McCormick had entered into a general conspiracy to commit robberies in the city of Los Angeles—a conspiracy which included, not only the two crimes charged in the indictment, but a number of other robberies. Cowdry, over defendants' objections, was permitted to give testimony with respect to all of the robberies embraced within the purview of the conspiracy to rob. He was permitted to testify to conversations between the trio respecting the other robberies, and also to testify to acts done by them in furtherance of their common design to rob persons generally in and about the city of Los Angeles. The theory of McCormick's defense was that he was a feigned accomplice—that he was a private detective, who, though seeming to participate in the conspiracy, was but seeking to secure evidence which would lead to the arrest and conviction of his two supposed confederates.

As grounds for reversal, the appellant Wilson urges: (1) That the court abused its discretion in denying him a separate trial; (2) that error was committed in permitting Cowdry to give testimony respecting the plans of the three men to commit other robberies; (3) that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict convicting him of the robbery charged in the second count; and (4) that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. The points presented by McCormick as grounds for reversal are: (1) That he was entitled to a separate trial upon the showing made by his codefendant, and that the court's failure to order a severance was an abuse of discretion amounting to error; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict convicting him of the robbery charged in the first count; and (3) that the court erred in permitting a witness for the people, one Edward T. Dalton, to testify to a certain conversation which the witness had with McCormick in the month of June or July following the robberies.

Appeal of the Defendant Wilson.

[1, 2] The court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant a separate trial. Our determination of whether there was an abuse of discretion must be based upon the showing made when the demand for a severance was presented, and not upon what may have occurred afterwards. People v. Erno, (Cal. Sup.) 232 P. 710. The showing made by appellant in the affidavits which he presented with his motion did not differ substantially from that which was made by the defendant in People v. Perry (Cal. Sup.) 234 P. 890, where the point was disposed of adversely to the contention now made by appellant. See, also, People v. Remington (Cal. App.) 240 P. 526, and People v. Swoape et al. (Cal. App.) 242 P. 1067.

[3] The court did not err in permitting the accomplice Cowdry to give testimony respecting the plans of the three men to commit other robberies. It undoubtedly is the general rule that the evidence must be confined to the issue, and that on a trial for felony the prosecution will not be permitted to give evidence tending to prove the defendant guilty of another distinct and independent crime. There are, however, exceptions to this general rule. Thus the offense of which a defendant stands accused may have been perpetrated in furtherance of a general conspiracy to commit crime. In such cases the character and purpose of the conspiracy may have a tendency to shed light upon the particular offense charged against the accused. As we already have stated, it was the theory of the prosecution that Cowdry and the two appellants, Wilson and McCormick, prior to the commission of either of the robberies for which the latter were tried, had entered into a general conspiracy to commit a series of robberies, and that the two offenses for which appellants were put on trial were but a part of this broad, underlying conspiracy to enter upon a career of crime, having for its object the commission of a chain of robberies. If such conspiracy existed, it was proper to show it. A conspiracy of that character, if it existed, would tend to shed light upon the acts done by appellants in connection with each of the robberies for which they were indicted. Moreover, the defendant McCormick was not present at the scene of the Turkish Baths robbery. To justify his conviction of that crime, it was necessary to establish criminal liability under the general rule that, where several persons conspire or combine together to commit a crime, each is criminally responsible for the acts of his associates or confederates committed in furtherance of the common design.

[4, 5] Since the prosecution had the right to prove the existence of a general conspiracy in furtherance of which the two robberies here in question were perpetrated, it had the right to show the whole history of the conspiracy from its commencement to its conclusion. In such cases it is no objection that the evidence covers a great many transactions and extends over a long period of time, or that it may show the commission of other crimes. When the question is whether the accused was a party to a general conspiracy, distinct overt acts in furtherance of such a design may be given in evidence. People v. Collins, 30 P. 847, 64 Cal. 293; People v. Berry, 215 P. 74, 191 Cal. 109, 122; Commonwealth v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 25 Am. Rep. 81; Hall v. State, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 552. See, also, Comm. v. Stuart, 93 N. E. 825, 207 Mass. 563; State v. Roberts, 147 P. 828, 95 Kan. 280; Jenkins v. Commonwealth, 180 S. W. 961, 167 Ky. 544, 3 A. L. R. 1522; and Worden v. United States, 204 F. 1, 122 C. C. A. 315. In Commonwealth v. Scott, supra, it was held that, on the trial of one charged with breaking into and entering a bank with intent to commit robbery therein, evidence by an accomplice of a general conspiracy previously formed between the defendant, himself, and others to rob banks, in pursuance of which the robbery in question was planned and carried out, as well as evidence of the acts of the conspirators in making preparations to carry out the robbery, is admissible. In that case the court, on page 235, says:

"There being evidence sufficient to be laid before the jury to prove the conspiracy, as to which the presiding justice was in the first instance to determine, it was competent for the government to put in evidence any acts of the several conspirators in furtherance of the common purpose of the conspiracy, either before or after the robbery was committed."

In Hall v. State, supra, the Supreme Court of Tennessee held that under an indictment for the burning of a house evidence was admissible of the organization of a band of conspirators to rob and burn houses generally, if the particular act was done by them in furtherance of the general design, although this particular house was selected by them after the original agreement was entered into.

We think the evidence was sufficient to warrant the inference that there existed a general conspiracy to rob—a broad, underlying conspiracy in furtherance of which the two robberies charged against these appellants were perpetrated. It seems that Pershing Square, in the city of Los Angeles, was the favorite rendezvous of the trio for the concoction of their plans. Cowdry, who had pleaded guilty to the two robberies in question, and who had confessed his part in the alleged conspiracy, gave testimony, which, reduced to narrative form, is substantially as follows:

"I have known Wilson about two years. I have known McCormick since about six weeks before our arrest on April 3, 1924. I was introduced to him by Wilson in the poolroom next to the Sultan Turkish Baths. At that time we got to discussing holdups. We discussed the holding up of the Sultan Turkish Baths. We decided that Saturday night, March 15th, was the best night to do it. There would be more money there that night. We discussed the ways of going in there. McCormick was to drive his father's car, and wait outside for Wilson and I. We agreed to meet in Pershing Square previous to the holdup. We agreed to get weapons—two guns and a blackjack. On the day following my introduction to McCormick we met again, and renewed the discussion of our plans to rob the Sultan Turkish Baths. After our first meeting in the poolroom the three of us met every day. In Pershing Square, the day following our first meeting, we planned to hold up the Eades grocery store. It was McCormick who suggested robbing that place. Then we went out and looked at the store. It was also agreed that we rob the Elite Café. Our agreement to rob that place was entered into prior to the robbery of the Sultan Turkish Baths. We also agreed to rob the Buckingham Apartments. That contemplated robbery was discussed by us in front of the Globe Cafeteria on Olive street. Four or five days later we got in McCormick's car, and went to the Buckingham Apartments. Wilson, armed with one of the guns, and McCormick, armed with the blackjack, went into the apartment house. I remained outside. After a while they came back and told me why they had not robbed the landlady. McCormick said 'that he damn near let her have it (meaning the blackjack) and taking a little brooch off her.' This was before the Sultan Turkish Baths robbery. A few days prior to the holding up of the Sultan Turkish Baths we planned to rob the Provident Loan Company. McCormick suggested it. The three of us were reading in the newspapers where that company had just lost a big sum of money, and McCormick said it would be a cinch to go up and knock them over again—that they wouldn't expect it to happen again so quickly. We talked about it in Pershing Square. The three of us then went to where the loan company had its place of business. I had the two guns and the blackjack wrapped up in a package. Wilson and I stood outside, and McCormick went in and looked around. Right after the holding up of the Turkish Baths, and prior to the bus robbery, we planned to rob division 3 of the Los Angeles Street Railway Company's car barns in Boyle Heights. McCormick said he had worked for the street car company, and knew the best places where to stick them up. He said he had stuck up quite a few of them before. So we got in his father's car, and went to the car barns to look them over. Several days prior to the Turkish Baths holdup, and while the three of us were eating at a table in the Globe Cafeteria, either Wilson or McCormick, I have forgotten which one it was, said he would like to rob the jewelry store next door to the cafeteria. McCormick said the way to do it was to cut a window of the place in the nighttime or early in the morning and take the pieces of jewelry out. It was agreed that McCormick's part in all of these proposed holdups should be to drive his father's automobile. He wanted to drive the car because he said he could get his father's Nash. Neither Wilson nor I had a car. Three or four days previous to the Turkish Baths holdup we discussed plans to rob the Hellman Bank on Tenth street. We discussed it while on our way to Alhambra, where we are going to rob a man of the name of 'Broker Smith.' We found that Smith wasn't home, so we turned around and came back. On the way back McCormick broached the subject of robbing the Hellman Bank. He said it would be an easy place to stick up. A day or two later the three of us went down to the bank. [This visit to the bank doubtless was made for the purpose of looking over the premises preparatory to the robbery.] On the night when we held up the La Brea bus we went to the end of about ten different car lines. We drove in McCormick's father's car. We started out to hold up something."

In detailing the circumstances attending the robbery of the Turkish Baths, Cowdry testified substantially as follows:

"When we first discussed plans to rob the Turkish Baths, we agreed to do it on a Saturday night. I told Wilson and McCormick I did not care to do it on a Saturday night—that I was known there, and that I was afraid I would be recognized. So we agreed to do the job the next night, Sunday night. The three of us agreed to meet in Pershing Square before going to the scene of the proposed robbery. Wilson and I met, as agreed, at 9 o'clock on the Sunday evening when we were to hold up the Turkish Baths. McCormick did not show up, though Wilson and I waited until it was long past his appointment. Then Wilson and I went to the house where McCormick lived. Wilson went to the door and inquired for him. McCormick was not at home. Some one told Wilson that McCormick was at Solomon's dance hall. We went to the dance hall, but did not find him there. Then Wilson and I returned to Pershing Square. There we met a man whom Wilson knew, and who was introduced to me as 'Slim.' We were minus McCormick and the use of his car, so I proposed that Wilson, 'Slim' and I get a taxicab, as it would attract less attention if we went to the Turkish Baths in a taxicab. We remained in the park until about midnight. Then we got a taxicab. On arriving at the baths Wilson and I entered and robbed the place, while 'Slim' waited for us outside."

From the foregoing résumé of Cowdry's testimony it seems clear that the evidence amply justifies the prosecution's theory that there existed a general conspiracy to commit robberies in and about the city of Los Angeles, and not merely a separate and specific conspiracy for each particular "job." It will be recalled that Cowdry testified that on the night when they robbed the driver of the La Brea bus the three men "started out to hold up something." This expression affords a key to the whole situation. It is evident that from the time these three intriguers commenced hatching their nefarious designs they "started out to hold up something"—to rob any one at any place that offered the glittering prospect of success. This general conspiracy to engage in robberies and the plots to rob the Turkish Baths and the La Brea bus were not separate conspiracies. The latter robberies were merely the outgrowth and culmination of the general conspiracy. They were merely a part of the objects and purposes of that broader conspiracy to rob. The specific plans to rob the Turkish Baths and the La Brea bus, as products of the general conspiracy to rob, could be fully understood only by showing the nature and character of the general conspiracy. Therefore it was proper, as we have said, to show the whole history of this general conspiracy from its commencement to its conclusion, even though such proof might tend to show the commission by appellants of other crimes than those for which they were on trial. The general rule is thus stated in People v. Morani (Cal. Sup.) 236 P. 135:

"It is well settled that a defendant in a criminal cause can be tried for no other offense than that charged in the indictment or information, and therefore it is not competent for the prosecution to prove the commission of independent crimes by the defendant, the evidence of which has no tendency to prove some material fact in connection with the particular crime charged. But this rule does not exclude such evidence when it logically tends to prove any fact necessary or pertinent to the proof of the crime for which the defendant is being tried. Such evidence is not to be rejected, because it also tends to prove the commission of other crimes or because it may prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors. Generally speaking, such evidence is admissible when it tends to establish intent, guilty knowledge, motive, a common scheme, plan, or system, or when it tends to connect the defendant with the crime charged, or when the other crimes are part of the res gestæ. 8 Cal. Jur. p. 60 et seq."

[6, 7] The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict convicting Wilson of the robbery charged in the second count. According to the testimony of the accomplice Cowdry, he (Wilson) and McCormick jointly participated in the La Brea bus robbery. If Cowdry's testimony be true, there can be no doubt that Wilson was guilty of that robbery. But to warrant a conviction on the evidence given by Cowdry it is essential that his testimony, being that of an accomplice, be corroborated by other independent evidence which of itself tends to connect Wilson with the commission of the crime. It is not required that such corroborative evidence be sufficient to establish guilt. It will suffice if it tends to connect appellant with the commission of the crime, even though if it stood alone it would be entitled to but little weight. 8 Cal. Jur. p. 179. This quantum of corroborative evidence was furnished by the driver of the bus, Edwin C. Fitts. That witness testified that two of the bandits entered the bus; that, after paying their fare, they took seats in the back of the vehicle; that, after the bus had proceeded for some little distance, the two men came forward; that one of them took a seat by the side of the witness, while the other sat down behind; that the one on the seat forward pointed a gun toward him, and told him that it was a "holdup"; that neither of the highwaymen wore a mask. Though the witness positively identified Cowdry as the robber who pointed the gun at him, he was not sure as to the identity of the other. He did testify, however, that Wilson "resembled" the other man. He testified that the one whom he said resembled Wilson rifled his pockets, and that, though he did not see that robber's face, he did see his back and shoulders, and that from his memory of his back and shoulders he was able to say that Wilson resembled the robber who took the money from his pockets. There may have been some peculiarities about the robber's back and shoulders which enabled the witness to say that he "resembled" appellant. At any rate, we cannot say that such peculiarities did not exist, for, quite naturally, the printed record before us would not show them, although they may have been observable to the jury. Such peculiarities would constitute a sufficient legal foundation for the witness' testimony that Wilson resembled the other robber.

[8, 9] It is not necessary that any of the witnesses called to identify the accused should have seen his face. "Identification," says the court in State v. Mason, 189 N. W. 452, 152 Minn. 306, "may be sufficient, though the person making it cannot remember the face. Identification based upon other peculiarities may be reasonably sure." There the Minnesota Supreme Court held that the identification may be sufficient though the witnesses say that they could not identify the accused from his face, the crime having been committed in the dark, but that they can identify him from his size, his general appearance, his talk and his walk. In Bowlin v. Commonwealth, 242 S. W. 604, 195 Ky. 600, the identification, held to be sufficient, was made from a recognition of the defendant's voice. Nor is it necessary that the identification be made in positive terms by any of the witnesses. A conviction may be sustained, though the witnesses decline to swear positively, and testify merely that they believe the accused is the person whom they saw commit the crime. Thus, in Commonwealth v. Cunningham, 104 Mass. 545, the witnesses would not swear that the prisoner was the man they saw on the stolen wagon, but that "he resembled him." There the court said:

"Upon this question of identity, the evidence offered was all of it competent, and proper for the consideration of the jury. It is impossible to say that it had no tendency to convict the defendant. Its sufficiency was to be estimated and weighed exclusively by them."

To the same effect are People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 541; People v. Franklin, 188 P. 607, 46 Cal. App. 1; State v. Franke, 60 S. W. 1053, 159 Mo. 535.

The final point urged by this appellant is misconduct on the part of the district attorney, claimed to have been committed in the latter's examination of Eugene Case, a witness for the prosecution. At a previous trial of the accused, which, it seems, resulted in a disagreement of the jury, Case testified as a witness for Wilson, who sought to prove an alibi. Upon that trial Case testified that on the night of the Turkish Baths robbery he and Wilson, who were roommates, and a third man, spent the evening in the former's room. Upon the conclusion of the first trial the district attorney accused Case of having perjured himself, and caused him to be arrested and put in jail. No formal charge of perjury was lodged against him. Case remained in jail for about three weeks, when he suddenly remembered that he had made "mistake" when testifying that Wilson was in their room on the night in question. He claimed that his memory had been so refreshed by a certain incident that he realized that it was upon another night when the three men foregathered in the room occupied by himself and Wilson. On the second trial the district attorney, for the purpose, as he claimed, of establishing Wilson's consciousness of guilt, called Case to the stand, and questioned him as to the occurrences already mentioned, i. e., his arrest, imprisonment, change of heart, etc., and also deduced from the witness testimony to the effect that upon several occasions when Case visited Wilson in jail prior to the first trial appellant asked the witness if he did not remember that on the night of the Turkish Baths holdup they and the third man were in the room occupied by appellant and the witness. Counsel for McCormick interposed a number of objections to this line of examination, though it was not aimed at, nor did it affect, their client. In the course of his argument, addressed to the court in opposition to the objections interposed on behalf of McCormick, the district attorney stated that he expected to show that the testimony given by Case at the previous trial with respect to the alibi was suggested by Wilson, and that the evidence was admissible to show a consciousness of guilt on the part of Wilson. Appellant made no objection to any of the questions put to the witness, save that once or twice during the examination, and also during the argument on the objections raised by McCormick's counsel, he interposed with a remark to the effect that the witness' testimony should be confined to what he (Wilson) said and did, and that Case should not be permitted to testify to what occurred to himself, i. e., his arrest, incarceration, and sudden realization while in jail of the mistake which he claimed to have made respecting the date when the three men were together in the witness' room. The misconduct of which appellant chiefly complains is the fact that the prosecutor propounded to the witness the questions whereby it was sought to show that he had been arrested and placed in jail until he remembered that the meeting in the witness' room was not on the night in question. Wilson made no motion in the court below to strike out any of the objectionable testimony.

[10] There is nothing in the record to indicate bad faith on the part of the district attorney, or that any of the questions were asked for the wanton purpose of raising a prejudice against either of the defendants. It frequently happens that in the heat of trial counsel ask improper questions, but inadvertences of that character are not alone sufficient to raise a presumption that the prosecuting officer was willfully endeavoring to prejudice the accused in the eyes of the jury. Moreover, appellant did not assign the alleged misconduct of the district attorney as error. In no way did he invoke any action on the part of the trial court to obviate the effect of any of the questions now assigned by him as misconduct, although any improper effect of the prosecutor's examination of the witness could readily have been avoided had the court's attention been specifically directed to it. As a consequence of appellant's neglect in this regard he is not now in a position to raise the question of misconduct. People v. Wong Toy, 209 P. 543, 189 Cal. 587, 595.

The foregoing covers all of the points urged by the appellant Wilson. We find no merit in any of them. The record shows that he was fairly tried, and that he was lawfully convicted of his crimes.

Appeal of the Defendant McCormick.

McCormick was not entitled to a separate trial. He made no showing in the court below on his own behalf. He claims, however, that he was entitled to a severance on the showing made by his codefendant. Even if he could thus secure vicarious salvation from the effect of his own sin of omission, still the fact remains that the showing made by his codefendant was not such as to render the court's refusal to grant a separate trial an abuse of discretion.

Coming now to appellant's claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict finding him guilty of the Turkish Baths robbery: It is not claimed that the testimony of the accomplice Cowdry was not sufficiently corroborated. Indeed, the record discloses that appellant made several extrajudicial statements wherein he admitted co-operation with Cowdry and Wilson in their general conspiracy to rob. True, it was claimed by appellant, when making these statements, that he was only a feigned accomplice, and that his real motive was to secure evidence which would lead to the arrest and conviction of his two confederates. But the jury was not obliged to accept as true this self-serving and exculpatory part of his statements. What appellant does claim is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict convicting him of the Turkish Baths robbery, for the reason that it shows that prior to the commission of that crime he had abandoned the conspiracy to rob that particular place. It will be recalled that on the night when this robbery was committed Cowdry and Wilson met in Pershing Square pursuant to prearrangement, but that McCormick failed to put in an appearance; that, after waiting at that rendezvous for some time, with the expectation that McCormick would appear ready to carry out his part of the program, Cowdry and Wilson went to the house where McCormick then lived, and, failing to find him there, looked for him at Solomon's dance hall; that, still failing to locate their partner in crime, they met with one who was known to Wilson as "Slim," whom they took into the enterprise which was then on foot. By reason of these facts appellant says that this particular "holdup" was "staged in his absence."

[11-13] As we have seen, there was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that appellant and his two companions, Wilson and Cowdry, were parties to a general conspiracy to rob. If the robbery of the Turkish Baths was committed by Wilson and Cowdry in furtherance of that conspiracy, and while appellant was still a party thereto, then it may properly be said that appellant counseled, advised, and encouraged it. In that case the mere absence of appellant from the scene of the robbery would not make him any the less liable as a principal, subject to indictment, trial, and conviction as such. In this state the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree in cases of felony, has been abrogated (Pen. Code, § 971); and it is provided that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet its commission, "or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission," are principals in any crime so committed. Pen. Code, § 31.

It is true that the plan adopted by the conspirators contemplated the presence of appellant at the scene of the robbery, actively aiding and abetting in its commission. But, though for some reason he failed to put in an appearance at the appointed hour and place, it is apparent that just such a robbery as was committed at the Turkish Baths by his two confederates was contemplated and arranged for by the conspiracy. The robbery as actually carried out was as much accomplished within the scope of the general plan as it would have been had appellant been present, performing his agreed part. The conspiracy was one to commit robbery at the Turkish Baths and at other places. The time and place for committing each of the contemplated robberies were but mere matters of detail. As was said in Spies v. People, 12 N. E. 942, 122 Ill. 158, 3 Am. St. Rep. 385:

"A plan for the perpetration of a crime or for the accomplishment of any action, whether worthy or unworthy, cannot always be executed in exact accordance with the original conception. It must suffer some change or modification in order to meet emergencies and unforeseen contingencies."

The mere fact that appellant failed to keep his appointment with his confederates and did not perform the precise part for which he had been cast does not necessarily evidence a withdrawal by him from the conspiracy, or detract from the force and effect of the counsel, advice, and encouragement previously given by him. A person who, by conspiring with others, advises and encourages the commission of an unlawful act cannot escape responsibility by quietly withdrawing from the scene. The influence and effect of his advice and encouragement continue until he renounces the common purpose and makes it plain to the others that he has done so, and that he does not intend to participate further. 1 R. C. L. p. 139. His withdrawal from the conspiracy must in some way be brought home to the knowledge of his confederates before the commission of the contemplated crime. Karnes v. State, 252 S. W. 1, 159 Ark. 240; State v. Allen, 47 Conn. 121; State v. Kinchen, 32 So. 185, 126 La. 39; 16 C. J. 137. In Karnes v. State, supra, a case having some striking points of resemblance to the instant case, the court says:

"One cannot aid and advise another to commit a crime and, after inducing him to do so by giving advice and encouragement and assurance of support, escape responsibility by saying that the crime was not committed at the time and place or in the exact manner he had advised. He must withdraw the aid and assistance which prompted and induced the commission of the crime, and this withdrawal must not be a mere mental process, of which the actual perpetrator of the crime is unaware, but he must communicate the fact of his withdrawal to the person whom he has inspired to commit the crime, and must do so before its commission."

It is true that such knowledge of a conspirator's withdrawal from the conspiracy may be brought home to his confederates by acts as well as by words (State v. Allen, supra); but it was for the jury to determine whether appellant's failure to appear at the trying place in order to proceed thence to the scene of the contemplated robbery was, or was not, sufficient notice to his coconspirators that he had abandoned the criminal enterprise. The circumstances of the case are sufficient to warrant the finding that appellant's failure to keep his appointment with Wilson and Cowdry on the night of the Turkish Baths robbery was not intended by him to be, and was not understood by Wilson or Cowdry to be, indicative of a withdrawal from the enterprise. Indeed, the circumstances shown by this record, one of which is appellant's subsequent participation in the La Brea bus robbery, warrant the inference that McCormick had no thought of withdrawing from the general conspiracy to rob.

[14, 15] The final point made by this appellant is that the court erred in permitting the witness Dalton to testify to a conversation which he had with appellant some two or three months after the arrest of the three conspirators. Dalton, who is the manager of the protective division of the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank in the city of Los Angeles, testified that about five months prior to the day when he gave his testimony—his testimony was given on October 31, 1924—McCormick called at the bank and had a conversation with him. Dalton was asked by the district attorney to give the conversation. No objection was made to this question, and the witness proceeded to narrate the conversation which he said he had with McCormick. Before concluding his answer, the trial judge interposed with a question asking the witness if he could fix the month when the conversation occurred. Dalton replied that it occurred in the month of June or July. It was after the witness had given this reply to the court's question that McCormick's counsel interposed an objection as follows:

"I object to that on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant, and not within the issues of this case."

This objection, the first and only one made during the witness' direct examination, was overruled. It will be noticed that the objection was not to the question which had previously been propounded to the witness. Indeed, that question—asking the witness to fix the date of the conversation—was not in itself objectionable. Nor was the objection tantamount to a motion to strike out any answer previously given by the witness. The objection, couched in the language in which it was framed and made at the stage at which it was interposed, did not warrant a ruling in favor of appellant. It was an abortive objection, and the court committed no error in overruling it. The witness, without further objection from counsel, concluded his direct examination by giving additional details of the conversation which he said he had with appellant. In legal effect, the situation is precisely what it would have been had appellant's counsel made no attempt to interpose an objection during the direct examination of the witness. At the conclusion of the witness' examination in chief counsel for appellant, without moving to strike out any of the witness' testimony, cross-examined him respecting certain details of the conversation to which he had testified on his direct examination. When he had finished his cross-examination of the witness, appellant's counsel presented the first and only motion to strike. The motion was to strike out all of the witness' "statement" upon the grounds that it was "incompetent and irrelevant; has no relation to the matter involved in the indictment; is foreign to anything under investigation; and was made at a time subsequent to the date on which the matters charged against defendant took place." The motion was denied.

Irrespective of whether the conversation testified to by Dalton did or did not contain inadmissible statements made by appellant, we think the motion to strike came too late. It should have been made as soon as the direct examination was closed. Appellant's counsel could not take the chance of a cross-examination and then move to strike out. Brooks v. Crosby, 22 Cal. 42; King v. Haney, 46 Cal. 560, 13 Am. Rep. 217.

"The practice, whether in civil or criminal cases, of deliberately permitting evidence to be given without objection in the first instance, and then moving to strike it out on grounds which might readily have been availed of to exclude it when offered, is not to be tolerated." People v. Long, 43 Cal. 446.

This appellant seems to have been accorded a fair and impartial trial, free from error, prejudicial or otherwise, and was properly convicted.

The judgments against each appellant and the order denying to each of them a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

77 Cal. App. 57

(245 P.)

HELLMUTH v. BOOS et al. (No. 5360.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 11, 1926.)

Novation § 9 — Acceptance of money under agreement for novation held to waive delay in payment.

Acceptance without objection by plaintiff of money sent as final payment on agreement of novation was waiver of delay in making payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action on a promissory note by Mary M. Hellmuth against David Boos and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank L. Simons and Edward Schary, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Alva E. Snow, of Fresno, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an action on a promissory note. Judgment went for the defendant Marguerite Brandt, and the plaintiff has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the language of the pleadings the trial court found:

"(1) That the promissory note set out in plaintiff's amended complaint was signed by defendant Marguerite Brandt as surety and not otherwise, and the fact that she so signed said promissory note as surety was at the time heretofore, ever since has been, and now is, known to said plaintiff, and said plaintiff at the time of the execution of said promissory note consented to deal and did deal with said defendant Marguerite Brandt in the capacity of surety upon said promissory note. That said Marguerite Brandt never received any consideration for her signature thereto, and that the full consideration for said promissory note was $1,000 and no more.

"(2) That the above-named plaintiff commenced an action against the above-named defendants in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Fresno, on the 28th day of September, 1923, which said action was and is numbered in said court 32447, to obtain judgment against said defendants for the full sum of $1,500 together with interest thereon at 8 per cent. per annum from the 2d day of January, 1923, less the sum of $25 which had been previously paid thereon, together with attorney's fees. That said action was subsequently tried in said superior court, and upon said trial said court found that said promissory note and said loan represented thereby was and is usurious, and judgment was entered accordingly.

"(3) That in said action, numbered 32447, commenced as aforesaid, plaintiff, in due process, caused writ of attachment to be issued and the property of defendants David Boos and August Boos, Jr., was attached thereunder. That prior to said trial of said cause, and while said attachment was in full force and effect, this plaintiff, defendants August Boos, Jr., and Annie Boos, his wife, and David Boos and Katie Boos, his wife, and for the purpose of extinguishing the obligation of each and all of the defendants herein by reason of the execution of said promissory note, agreed that, in the place and stead of and as a substitution for said promissory note sued on therein, and which is the same promissory note set out in plaintiff's amended complaint herein, said defendants August Boos, Jr., and Annie Boos, his wife, would execute to plaintiff a new and different promissory note for $1,500, to become due November 1, 1924, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and as security for the payment of said promissory note due November 1, 1924, would execute a crop mortgage to plaintiff upon the crops to be grown during the season of 1924 on the south half of lots 191 and 192 in Perrin colony, in the county of Fresno, state of California, and that in addition to said promissory note secured by said mortgage plaintiff was to receive, in cash, the sum of $339. That pursuant to said agreement said defendants August Boos, Jr., and Annie Boos, his wife, did execute to plaintiff for and in the place and stead of said promissory note sued upon in said prior action, and set out in plaintiff's amended complaint herein, a new promissory note in the sum of $1,500 due November 1, 1924, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and as security for the payment thereof executed to plaintiff a crop mortgage upon the crops to be grown during the season of 1924 on the said south half of said lots 191 and 192 in said Perrin colony, which said crop mortgage was by plaintiff duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of Fresno, state of California, also prior to said trial and pursuant to said agreement plaintiff was paid, and she also received, the said sum of $339.

"(4) That the execution of the said new promissory note, together with the execution of said crop mortgage to secure the payment of same, and the payment and receipt by plaintiff of the said $339, extinguished the obligation incurred by Marguerite Brandt, one of the defendants herein, by reason of the execution of said promissory note set out in plaintiff's amended complaint herein, and that said defendant Marguerite Brandt was then and there, and she now is, and prior to the commencement of the above-entitled action was, released from any and all obligation thereunder.

"As a conclusion of law from the foregoing facts the court finds that a judgment should be entered herein wherein and whereby it shall be ordered, adjudged, and decreed that plaintiff take nothing by reason of her action herein as against defendant Marguerite Brandt, and that said defendant Marguerite Brandt do have and recover of and from said plaintiff her (defendant's) costs of suit, and that judgment be entered accordingly."

The appellant asserts that the finding that there was a novation is not sustained by the evidence. A reading of her brief discloses the contrary. It is to be unduly liberal to the appellant to say that the evidence is conflicting, for it is not. It is in favor of the respondent. As we understand the appellant, she calls attention to the fact that, according to the agreement as made, the $339 should have been paid immediately, and it was not so paid. When it was paid no objection to the delay was interposed, but it was accepted, and ever since has been retained by the appellant. These facts show a waiver of the delay, and do not square with any other theory. When the $339 was paid it was done in this manner: The respondent placed a banker's check in the hands of Mr. Graves, the attorney for David and Katie Boos, with directions to pay the amount as the final payment on the agreement of novation mentioned in the third finding. In accordance with those directions Mr. Graves sent the check in an envelop inclosed with a letter stating that the check was delivered as the final payment on said agreement.

Of her act in accepting and retaining the $339 the trial judge in ruling said:

"The Court: She couldn't keep it legally and accept it not in accordance with the arrangement by which it was paid. She couldn't do that. She took it and credited it on this other note. She had no right to do that, because it was not paid on that note. The lady who paid it had the right to make the payment, because the whole thing was for her benefit. She could pay it and look to Mr. Boos for its return, possibly, and the plaintiff did take it and did keep it, contrary to the plain intentment of the letter, as I understand it. It does seem to me that that is conclusive, as an allegation, because the letter told her clearly enough what it was for, and, if she chose to take it at all, it was taken pursuant to the letter and not otherwise, as I view it."

We know no comment more pertinent.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

76 Cal. App. 708

WORK et al. v. ASSOCIATED ALMOND GROWERS OF PASO ROBLES.
(Civ. 5127.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 2, 1926.)

1. Corporations ⇨503(3).

Corporation has right to change of venue of transitory action to county of its residence upon proper showing.

2. Venue ⇨4.

Whether action is local or transitory must be determined from averments of complaint and character of judgment which might be rendered on default.

3. Venue ⇨4—To render action local as affecting venue, it must appear that judgment will directly and not merely incidentally or collaterally affect title to land (Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1).

To render action local, as affecting venue, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1, it must appear that title to land will be directly affected by judgment, and it is not sufficient that title be incidentally, collaterally, or even necessarily inquired into, if judgment can be satisfied by payment of money.

4. Venue ⇨5(1)—In action merely for portion of purchase price of land, changing venue to county of defendant's residence held not violative of Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1.

Where action was merely to recover balance of purchase price of land, and no remedy sought against land itself, change of venue to county of defendant's residence from that in which land was located, held not violative of Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1.

5. Venue ⇨5(1).

Action to recover purchase price of land is not local, and may be brought in different county from that in which land is situated.

6. Venue ⇨5(3).

In action for balance of purchase price of land, prayer for specific performance held not to require that action be brought in county where land is situated.

7. Venue ⇨6—Action to recover money is essentially action for debt, and may be properly transferred to county of defendant's residence.

Action merely to recover money is essentially action for debt, and therefore transitory and not local, so that it may be properly transferred to county of defendant's residence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by John Work and others against the Associated Almond Growers of Paso Robles. From an order granting change of venue on application of defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for appellants.

W. G. Griffith, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from an order granting a motion for change of place of trial. The action was brought by plaintiffs as vendors against the defendant as vendee, to recover the balance of the purchase price due under a contract for the sale of certain lands, together with interest and an amount due for taxes paid.

The complaint recites, in substance, that plaintiffs entered into an agreement on July 14, 1919, with one Albert MacRae, by which they gave to him an option to purchase from them certain real property situated in Monterey and San Luis Obispo counties, comprising some 6,028.15 acres. By the terms of the agreement the price of the land was $45 per acre. MacRae assigned his interest in the contract to defendant herein, Associated Almond Growers of Paso Robles, which agreed to perform it. Prior to the commencement of this action, defendant exercised the option and had paid upon the purchase price with interest the sum of $231,388.69, leaving a balance due plaintiffs of $38,404.90. Subsequent to the assignment from MacRae to defendant it was agreed that, in the event of the exercise of the option, the real property should be conveyed to the Santa Barbara Trust Company. Plaintiffs then allege that they have fully kept and performed their part of the agreement and have tendered a deed to the trust company properly executed, and have demanded of the defendant the balance due on the purchase price, together with other sums also due, and that the trust company has refused to accept the deed and defendant has likewise refused to pay the balance due the plaintiffs.

The prayer is for judgment against defendant for the sum of $38,404.90 with interest, that defendant be required to accept or cause the trust company to accept delivery of the conveyance tendered by plaintiffs, and for general relief.

Defendant demurred to the complaint, and it also filed its demand for a change of place of trial to the county of Santa Barbara, where it alleged it had its principal place of business and residence. This motion came on regularly for hearing, and the parties stipulated that the contract which formed the basis of the action was made and executed outside the county of Monterey, and that the principal place of business of Santa Barbara Trust Company was in the county of Santa Barbara. It was likewise conceded that the principal place of business of defendant was also in that county. The court made an order granting defendant's motion for a change of venue, from which order this appeal is taken.

[1-3] It was and is plaintiffs' contention that the action is local in character, and comes within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 392, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that actions for the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form of such right or interest, or for injuries to real property, shall be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure.

Defendant, on the other hand, claims, in support, of the order, that the action is transitory and not local, and that the defendant corporation has the right, the same as an individual, to have the action in the county of its residence.

That a corporation has this right when a proper showing is made there can be no question. Grocers, etc., Union v. Kern Co. Land Co., 89 P. 120, 150 Cal. 466. In determining the nature of an action, resort must be had to the averments of the complaint, and the character of the judgment which might be rendered upon a default. McFarland v. Martin, 78 P. 239, 144 Cal. 771. In order to give a court power under a statute of the character here involved, to change the place of trial, it must appear that title to land will be directly affected by the judgment of the court, and it will not suffice for it to be incidentally, collaterally or even necessarily inquired into, if the judgment can be satisfied by the payment of money. 27 R. C. L. p. 794; section 15, Cyc. 63.

[4] Here it is manifest from the allegations of the complaint and from the prayer that the object of the action and the relief sought is to obtain a money judgment. There is nothing in the complaint which asks for any remedy connected with the property. On the contrary, plaintiffs pray that defendant be required to accept or cause the trust company to accept delivery of the conveyance tendered by the plaintiffs. The title or any interest in the land which was the subject of the sale is therefore in no manner involved, and the judgment sought, if obtained, will not directly operate upon it.

[5, 6] It has been frequently held in this state that an action to recover the purchase price of land is not a local action, and may be brought in a different county from that in which the land is situated. Samuel v. Allen, 33 P. 273, 98 Cal. 406; Terry v. Rivergarden Farms Co., 154 P. 476, 29 Cal. App. 59; North Stockton, etc., v. Fischer, 70 P. 1082, 71 P. 438, 138 Cal. 100; Gallup v. Sac. Drainage Co., 151 P. 1142, 171 Cal. 71; Paramore v. Colby, 188 P. 72, 45 Cal. App. 559. Nor does the fact that the prayer of the complaint asks that defendant be required to specifically perform its obligation in any manner alter the situation. O'Gorman v. Wachter (Cal. App.) 235 P. 57.

[7] It is manifest from a reading of the complaint that the only relief sought is a money judgment. An action which has for its object the mere recovery of money is essentially an action for debt, and therefore transitory and not local. O'Gorman v. Wachter, supra. The instant action not being within the limitation of the section relied upon, the provision cannot be invoked against defendant. The case was therefore properly transferred to the county of the residence of the defendant.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 715

PEOPLE v. SELBY. (Cr. 1246.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 2, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 29, 1926.)

1. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 878(4)—Conviction of assaults with intent to murder and assault with deadly weapon held not inconsistent with acquittal of robbery, where defense was not solely insanity, but also absence of requisite intent for robbery.

Conviction of assaults with intent to murder and assault with a deadly weapon held not inconsistent with acquittal of robbery, where, though defendant relied on insanity, he also relied on absence of the requisite intent for robbery.

2. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1141(2).

Accused must show error to secure reversal.

3. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 865(2)—Where, after jury deliberated 71 hours, court instructed it was for interest of both state and accused that trial be concluded, acquittal on some charges and conviction on others held not to show verdict was coerced.

Where, after the jury had deliberated for 71 hours, court advised the jurors to hold their minds open to the views of their fellow jurors, stating that it was for the interest of both state and accused that the trial be concluded, acquittal on some charges and conviction on others 2½ hours later did not show that the verdict was coerced.

4. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 865(2)—After jury had retired 71 hours, instruction that juror should not make up his mind until he had heard argument of fellow jurors held not objectionable (Code Civ. Proc. § 611).

After jury had retired 71 hours, instruction that juror should not make up his mind until he had heard the arguments of his fellow jurors, as men adhere to opinions to which they have given forcible expression, though advised they are not tenable, which fact is recognized in Code Civ. Proc. § 611, held not objectionable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. S. Crail, Judge.

Norman Selby, also known as Kid McCoy, was convicted in the superior court of assaults with intent to commit murder and assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve and Woolwine & Giesler, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, J. Defendant was charged, by an indictment in seven counts, with seven separate offenses; one being alleged in each count. In four of the counts he was charged with robbery. In the remaining three he was charged with assaults with intent to murder. He was acquitted under each of the counts charging robbery. He was found guilty as charged under two of the three remaining counts and guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon under the third. He appeals from the judgments and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant was concerned in certain transactions which occurred not far from midnight between August 12 and 13, 1924. Out of these transactions a charge of murder was made against him. The events out of which grew the seven charges above mentioned took place early on the morning of the 13th. They commenced with the arrival of appellant at a store in which the woman with whose murder he was charged and her husband had an interest. There is much evidence in the record which tends to prove that appellant went to the store to "get" the husband, against whom he entertained an intense feeling of hatred. Appellant arrived at the store a few minutes before it was opened for business, and when that event occurred he entered the place. He was highly excited at the time. There is evidence which tends to show that he was drunk. There is other evidence which tends to prove that he was insane. After he had gotten into the store, he inaugurated a reign of terror over the people in the establishment, consisting of both men and women. He menaced them with a "gun" which he carried, and made frequent threats to shoot them after he had gotten through with the husband of his alleged victim under the murder charge, and whose arrival on the scene he was awaiting. Under the fear inspired by his pointed weapon, and through blows administered by him in one or two instances, he compelled some of the people in the store to deliver to him their personal belongings. He forced some of the men present to take off their trousers and shoes, but he did not appropriate these articles. While appellant was in the store, he gave money to the porter who was employed there, and also to an individual who answered appellant's command to disgorge with the statement that he had nothing. One of the men ran out of the place in an endeavor to escape, and appellant fired a shot at him as he went through the door. Appellant pursued the fleeing individual, and before he could return one of the occupants of the premises locked the door. This is but a skeleton statement of the events which transpired in the establishment, as they were extended over a period of an hour or two. Out of them arose the four charges of robbery, and one of the charges of assault with intent to murder.

Immediately after appellant was locked out of the store he went to another place of business near at hand, which was kept by a man and his wife. Appellant knew the wife, but not the husband. As he entered the place, he asked that the husband be pointed out to him, and, upon the request being complied with, he fired a shot at that individual. He then turned and fired at the wife, the shot striking her in the hip. He fired another shot at her which did not take effect and left the place. Out of these events arose two of the charges of assault with intent to murder.

[1] Appellant contends that the verdicts of the jury acquitting him under some of the charges contained in the indictment and convicting him under the others were inconsistent. This position is based upon the theory that the only defense made by appellant was that he was insane on the day of his most unusual escapade. It is said that, when the jury acquitted him of a part of the charges, it found that he was insane, but that, when he was convicted under the remaining charges, it was found that he was sane. It is in this sense that it is said that the two sets of verdicts are inconsistent with each other.

Unfortunately for appellant's contention, the record does not bear out the assertion that insanity was the sole defense presented at the trial. Appellant requested the court to instruct the jury as follows:

"To establish the offense of larceny from the person which under the law is grand larceny, and which is an offense included in the offense of robbery as charged in the first four counts of the indictment, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, not only that the defendant at the time of the securing of the property was actuated by a felonious intent to steal and convert said property to his own use, but they must also prove to your satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, at the time of stealing said property, if you find that he did steal it, intended to deprive the owner thereof of the same permanently, and not merely temporarily. The test of law to be applied to the facts and circumstances for the purpose of determining the ultimate facts as to a man's intent in this respect is, Did he intend to permanently deprive the owner of his property? If he did not intend so to do, there is not that felonious intent which is a necessary part of the crime of grand larceny. The intent must in all cases be an intent to deprive permanently the owner of his property."

This proffered instruction was not given as requested, but was read to the jury in the following modified form:

"To establish the offense of larceny from the person, which under the law is grand larceny, and which is an offense included in the offense of robbery, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, at the time of the securing of the property, was actuated by a felonious intent to steal said property, including the intent to deprive the owner thereof of the same permanently, and not merely temporarily."

It is plain from the instruction requested by appellant that he saw in the evidence a possible failure upon the part of the prosecution to prove that he had taken the belongings of the prosecuting witnesses with intent permanently to deprive them of their property, and that he endeavored to procure a verdict of acquittal under the charges of robbery, or under charges included within them, on that ground. In giving the proffered instruction as modified it appears that the trial judge adopted the same theory as to the evidence. We ourselves can perceive in the record an ample support for that view. It is quite probable that the jury held the same view and acquitted appellant under the robbery charges on the ground that the prosecution had not made the requisite proof of intent. The claim that the verdicts were inconsistent therefore falls to the ground. The record provides ample support for the view that the jury rejected the defense of insanity as to each of the seven charges.

[2, 3] The deliberations of the jury over their verdicts were extended over a long period of time. After nearly 71 hours had elapsed without a conclusion of its labors being reached, the jury returned to the courtroom. What then transpired is shown by the minutes of the court:

"Defendant, counsel, and jury present at 2:10 p. m., jurors ask for further information. Additional instruction is given, and indictment is read by the clerk."

The "additional" charge which the trial judge then read to the jury was in the following language:

"It sometimes happens that, when jurors enter the jury room, they make emphatic expressions of the opinions they have in the case and of their firm determination to adhere to them. Such emphatic declarations of opinions are rarely productive of good. By their emphatic expression of opinion, a sense of pride is enlisted, and a juror subsequently, though advised that the position he has announced is not tenable, hesitates from receding from that position, for the reason that he has already expressed his determination to adhere to it. I would advise you, ladies and gentlemen, to hold your minds in a state of abeyance for a while, so you may fully and freely interchange views with each other and each individual juror hold his mind so open that he may receive the suggestions and remarks of his fellow jurors, and that his remarks may be entertained and received in the same spirit. I think that by observing this rule, interchanging fully between yourselves your views upon the evidence, that there is more likelihood you will reach a verdict than if you made an emphatic expression of the position you have assumed. You will remember, ladies and gentlemen, in matters of this character it is advisable, both for the interests of the state and the benefit of the defendant, that a verdict should be returned, that there should be a conclusion of the trial; and you are to remember, too, that you are not partisans in this matter, but you are judges, and that it is not with the opinion with which you retire, but with the verdict with which you return that the correctness of your deliberation is to be estimated; and that, in your deliberations in the jury room, there can be no triumph, excepting the ascertainment and declaration of the truth."

It is contended that, when this supplemental instruction was given, "the jury was misinstructed as a matter of law, and coerced into bringing in a compromise verdict." In support of this claim of error appellant calls attention to the period of 71 hours which had passed when the jury returned into court, and he also points to the further fact that the trial body returned with its verdicts 2½ hours after the additional charge had been given. These circumstances are not evidence that the jury was coerced into a conclusion of its labors. Naturally, there is nothing in the record to show what stage in its performance of duty had been attained when it came in for further instructions. As against the circumstances cited by appellant we may justly indulge any one of several assumptions. These are that, when the jury came into court for additional instruction: (1) It had come to a conclusion under all of the charges except one, and that it had proceeded far in its deliberations as to that one. (2) It had come to a conclusion as to all of the charges under which it later declared that appellant was innocent, and had proceeded far in its deliberations as to the remaining charges. (3) It had come to a conclusion as to all of the charges under which it later declared that appellant was guilty, and had proceeded far in its deliberations as to the remaining charges. As it is incumbent upon an appellant in every appealed cause to show error in order to bring about a reversal, we here may properly make any of these assumptions for the reason that appellant shows us nothing to contradict any of them. The circumstances relied upon by appellant do not therefore avail him to show a coerced verdict either as a matter of fact or as a foundation upon which to discuss, as a matter of law, the alleged error in the giving of the challenged instruction. Under any one of the three possible assumptions stated above it is not surprising that the jury returned its verdict within 2½ hours after the instruction was given, notwithstanding the fact that the instruction was read 71 hours after the jury had first retired to commence its deliberations.

[4] Several cases are cited in support of appellant's contention that the supplemental instruction was an incorrect statement of the law governing the conduct of jurors during their deliberations in the jury room. The first of these is People v. Miles, 77 P. 666, 143 Cal. 636, but there the court upheld the judgment which was sought to be reversed because of the giving of the instruction which was assailed. The portion of the report upon which appellant relies is found in a concurring opinion containing a cautionary statement as to the giving of like instructions to that in question in the future. In People v. Conboy, 113 P. 703, 15 Cal. App. 97, after quoting the instruction to which objection was made, the court said:

"These remarks amounted to a plain intimation that the court thought the evidence in the case warranted a verdict of guilty, and that the jury should so find."

We can see no such objection to the instruction here in question. People v. Carder, 160 P. 686, 31 Cal. App. 355, in the reasons which the court gave for condemning the questioned instruction, was much like People v. Conboy. The court said:

"We think it quite apparent that from the statements of the learned trial judge the jury must have concluded that he was convinced of the defendant's guilt and that as honest men it was their duty to so find."

In Peterson v. United States, 213 F. 920, 130 C. C. A. 398, the questioned instruction was objectionable principally because the trial judge practically told a minority of the members of the jury that they should yield their view of the cause to that of the majority. We can perceive nothing in any of these decisions which aids appellant here.

Upon principle, we think, there is no valid objection which can be made to the instruction which now lies before us. The trial judge did nothing more than tell each member of the jury that he should not finally make up his mind until he had heard the arguments of his fellows upon the questions which they were to decide. We are convinced by the language employed by him that such was his purpose. What the judge said as to the tenacity with which men cling to opinions to which they have given forcible expression was intended to effectuate this purpose, and that portion of the instruction enunciated a truth to which it is difficult to apply even an apparent refutation. Every man who has ever sat upon a court of review, every man who has spent any considerable time in the performance of any species of mental teamwork with other men, knows the danger which lies in the early formation and in the dogmatic expression of views by any member of the team before the other members have been heard. The Legislature has shown that it appreciates the existence of this truth.

"If the jury are permitted to separate, either during the trial or after the case is submitted to them, they shall be admonished by the court * * * that it is their duty not to form or express an opinion thereon until the case is finally submitted to them." Code Civ. Proc. § 611.

We can see no objection to the course taken by the trial judge in conveying the same idea to the jury, to the limited extent to which he did convey it, after the cause had been submitted to its members and in the midst of their deliberations, especially under the circumstances which arose for his consideration. The jury asked for further "information." We must assume that the supplemental instruction responded to this request, which, necessarily, was stated to the judge more circumspectly than it is set forth in the minutes. Suppose—and we may justly assume—that it was stated to the judge that some juror, on entering the jury room the first time, had expressed what he said was his final view upon some particular point in the case, and for 71 hours had refused to hear the views of his fellows upon it. Was not the instruction proper for the purpose of removing such an obstacle to the work of the jury? If it was proper in such an extreme case, it was proper in general, for the language employed by the court shows that it was designed to fit some such situation, although perhaps less extreme in its nature. These views find some support in People v. Rhodes, 121 P. 935, 17 Cal. App. 789, and People v. Cherry, 158 P. 335, 30 Cal. App. 285.

Since the foregoing was prepared and filed, our attention has been called to People v. Valencia, 163 P. 865, 32 Cal. App. 631, in which the instruction which is quoted above was upheld.

Judgments and order affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

76 Cal. App. 680

BEEKHUIS v. PALEN. (Civ. 5124.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 1, 1926.)

1. Action ☞ 62.

Action cannot be maintained unless cause of action existed at time action was commenced.

2. Vendor and purchaser ☞ 339.

One suing to recover money paid for purchase of land must offer to or surrender possession to vendor before suit, offer of possession after commencement of suit being unavailable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action for money had and received by H. A. Beekhuis against B. C. Palen. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. M. Benson, of Fresno, for appellant.

G. L. Aynesworth and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for money had and received.

Defendant on or about the 13th day of February, 1919, was the owner of certain real property situated in the county of Fresno. On said day he entered into a written contract with J. W. Files and Susan M. Files, his wife, whereby he agreed to sell, and the Files agreed to purchase, the land for the sum of $23,500. The contract provided for the payment of the sum of $6,000 upon the execution of the agreement and the further sum of $2,000 on or before November 1, 1919, and $1,000 on the 1st day of November of each succeeding year until November 1, 1929, at which time the balance of the purchase price, amounting to the sum of $6,500, was to be paid. It further provided, among other things, that the vendees should pay all taxes and assessments and not suffer or permit the same to become delinquent. The contract contained a provision that at any time after the sum of $11,750 had been paid upon the purchase price, together with all accrued interest, the vendor should make, execute, and deliver to the vendees a good and sufficient deed to said premises free and clear of all incumbrances, subject to certain exceptions not here involved, at which time the vendees should execute and deliver to the vendor their promissory note for the balance of the purchase price, which promissory note was to be secured by a mortgage on the premises. Time was made of the essence of the contract, and the agreement provided that in the event of the failure on the part of the vendees to comply with any of the terms thereof, such failure would entitle the vendor to the immediate possession of the premises, and all moneys paid thereunder to be considered as rent for use and occupation; the vendor to be released from any obligation to convey. The agreement recited the existence of a mortgage upon the premises which the trial court found to be the sum of $6,500.

By mesne conveyances and assignments, plaintiff herein acquired all rights of the vendees in and to the contract. Upon the execution of the agreement of sale, the vendees and their successor in interest went into possession of the premises. Up to the 26th day of May, 1923, all the covenants and conditions of the contract on their part to be performed in relation to payments were kept and performed; the amount being paid by them aggregating the sum of $11,000. Through inadvertence, however, plaintiff failed to pay the second installment of taxes levied and assessed upon the property for the fiscal year 1922-23.

Shortly after this installment becoming delinquent, defendant sought to invoke the forfeiture clause of the agreement, for on May 26, 1923, he brought an action to quiet title against plaintiff and his predecessors in interest. The vendee thereupon paid the amount of the delinquent tax to the county, with interest and penalty, and on September 27th following, he tendered to defendant the sum of $1,875. This sum included the payment and interest due the following November and which, if accepted, would have entitled the vendee to the deed provided for under the contract. Defendant refused to accept the same, whereupon plaintiff brought this action for the return of the $11,000 paid under the contract. The following day, December 16, 1919, he offered to restore possession to defendant. After trial the court found in substance that plaintiff had performed all the covenants and conditions of the contract to be by him performed except the covenant with reference to the payment of taxes, and it concluded that this omission prevented a recovery of the amount claimed, and judgment was accordingly rendered in favor of defendant for his costs.

Thereafter plaintiff filed a notice of motion to vacate the judgment and to enter one in his favor for the sum demanded, upon the grounds that the findings of fact and the conclusions of law made and entered by the court were erroneous, in this, that from said findings of fact the court should have found as a matter of law that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against defendant for the sum of $11,000. Plaintiff likewise filed his notice of intention to move for a new trial. Both motions were denied.

It is here claimed that as the record shows that plaintiff had fully performed his contract except for the technical default of permitting the last half of the taxes for the fiscal year 1922-23 to become delinquent, there was a substantial performance by him of his contract; that defendant was not justified in refusing the payment of $1,875 tendered him, and plaintiff by reason of such refusal was, upon surrendering possession of the property to defendant, entitled to a return of his money; he being, by reason of such circumstances, under no further duty to perform. It is also claimed that the record shows defendant to have been in default because of the mortgage upon the land which he should have caused to have been released upon the payment by plaintiff of the sum of $11,000.

In support of the contention that plaintiff has substantially complied with all the covenants by him to be performed, we are cited to the case of Collins v. Eksoozian, 214 P. 670, 61 Cal. App. 184. It was there held, under facts similar to those involved in the instant case, that to sanction a forfeiture under such circumstances would be to approve a palpable injustice. Conceding the law to be correctly declared therein, this doctrine may be properly applied in the other action which the record here indicates is pending between the parties. Here, however, we are confronted with the fact that plaintiff did not restore, or even offer to restore, possession of the premises to the defendant or any benefits he may have received by reason of such possession until after he commenced his action. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone, but the record shows that the complaint was filed December 15, 1923, and the findings of the court recite that defendant took possession of the premises under the contract, and that his offer to restore possession was made on December 16, 1925, the day after the complaint was filed.

[1, 2] It is well established in this state that an action cannot be maintained unless the cause of action existed at the time the action was commenced. Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12. This doctrine disposes of the case. An offer to restore is a condition precedent to the maintaining of an action of this character. One suing to recover money paid for the purchase of land must offer to or surrender possession to the vendor before suit. An offer of possession after the commencement of the suit is unavailing. Hill v. Den, 53 P. 642, 121 Cal. 42; Fairchild v. Western Securities Corp., 169 P. 363, 176 Cal. 742. The action therefore was prematurely brought.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

76 Cal. App. 639

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.
(Civ. 5244.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Feb. 25, 1926.
Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 26, 1926.)

1. Motions ⚡66.

Courts having general jurisdiction have power to make effective whatever orders they are expressly authorized to enter.

2. Statutes ⚡194.

General terms in statute must yield to special provisions.

3. Master and servant ⚡388—Industrial Commission held to have had no authority in ordering commutation of award to direct payment of deceased's debts or those of his widow out of award (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act [St. 1917, p. 831] § 14, subd. [e], section 24, subds. [a], [b], section 28, section 63, subd. [a], and section 69, subd. [a]).

Under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act 1917, § 24, subds. (a), (b), and section 69, subd. (a), the Industrial Accident Commission had no authority in ordering commutation of award to direct that out of award certain debts of deceased or of his widow should be paid, notwithstanding general powers given to commission under section 14, subd. (e), section 28, and section 63, subd. (a).

4. Master and servant ⚡417(3¾)—Employer of deceased held entitled to maintain certiorari to review order on commutation of award directing payment of deceased's debts.

County, who was employer of deceased for whose death award was granted, part of its money and property being used in discharging obligation, held party beneficially interested and entitled to maintain certiorari to review an order on commutation of award directing payment of deceased's debts.

Certiorari by the County of Los Angeles to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission for commutation of an award to Jennie C. Lowe, also known as Jennie C. Lowe Setzer. Award annulled.

Edward T. Bishop, County Counsel, and R. C. McAllaster, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

HOUSER, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari for the purpose of reviewing an order of award and commutation thereof, made by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of the widow of an employee, which employee was killed in the course of his employment with the petitioner, county of Los Angeles.

By the order of commutation, in lieu of a direct payment to the widow, the county of Los Angeles was ordered to pay to each of certain general creditors of the deceased, or of the widow, a fixed sum of money in satisfaction of the debt owing to such creditor—the aggregate amount thereof to be deducted from the total award as commuted, and the balance thereof to be paid to the widow. The petitioner herein objects to such order of commutation on the ground that the direction therein to pay a portion of the award to general creditors is in excess of the power conferred by the statute upon the Commission.

It is admitted by the Commission that no express provisions can be found in the statute by which it is given the authority to make that part of the order to which specific objection is made, but it is contended that by reason of certain general provisions contained within the terms of the act, the order by the Commission was impliedly authorized.

By section 28 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831, as variously amended), where, among other things, it appears that a commutation of an award is necessary for the protection of the person entitled thereto, the commission is empowered to commute the compensation payable to such person to a lump sum. Subdivision (c) of the same section places a discretionary power in the commission to pay the award as commuted directly to the person entitled thereto; or, under certain conditions, to deposit the amount for the use and benefit of such person with either a savings bank, a trust company, or the state compensation insurance fund. By section 14 (e) the commission is authorized to pay a death benefit either to the dependents of the deceased, or to a trustee or a commissioner, to be applied in accordance with the findings and direction of the commission. In connection with such provision of the statute, the commission directs attention to the fact that, while lacking in express direction, further language of the act may indicate an implied power to direct that part of the order of which complaint is made. Section 63 (a) is as follows:

"The commission is hereby vested with full power, authority and jurisdiction to do and perform any and all things, whether herein specifically designated, or in addition thereto, which are necessary or convenient in the exercise of any power, authority or jurisdiction conferred upon it under this act."

Section 69 (a) enjoins upon the court a liberal construction of the terms of the statute, "with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment."

On the other hand, the petitioner points to the provisions of section 24 of the act, which it is urged contain all the direct authority bestowed upon the commission for the purpose of enabling it to direct the payment of any part of the award to any person other than the injured employee or his dependents. That part of the section to which reference has been had which is thought to be applicable to the issue, is as follows:

"(a) No claim for compensation shall be assignable before payment, but this provision shall not affect the survival thereof, nor shall any claim for compensation, or compensation awarded, adjudged or paid, be subject to be taken for the debts of the party entitled to such compensation, except as hereinafter provided. No compensation, whether awarded or voluntarily paid, shall be paid to any attorney at law or in fact or other agent, but shall be paid directly to the claimant entitled to the same, unless otherwise ordered by the commission. Any payment made to such attorney at law or in fact or other agent in violation of the provisions of this section shall not be credited to the employer.

"(b) The commission may fix and determine and allow as a lien against any amount to be paid as compensation."

Then follows a list of possible charges against either the injured employee, or if he be deceased, against his dependents, which, under the terms of the act, may be convertible into liens against the award.

[1, 2] As to courts having general jurisdiction, it is a well-recognized rule that they have power to make effective whatever orders they are expressly authorized to enter. The Industrial Accident Commission is a constitutional tribunal, having certain limited powers, which include the making of awards in compensation for injuries sustained by an employee in the course of his employment; and, as provided in the statute hereinbefore referred to, authority exists for commuting an award into a lump sum. The authority to commute an award into a lump sum and to order distribution to the injured employee may carry with it such matters as are purely incidental to the general order of payment. But that part of the order of distribution which in the instant case directs the payment of a portion of the award to general creditors of either the deceased employee or his dependents, which creditors are not within the statutory category of possible lien claimants, would appear to be unnecessary to render effective the payment of the commuted award to the person entitled thereto. While such a division of the commuted award may be advisable and most desirable, or, as appears from the record herein, may even be with the consent and at the suggestion of the dependent, such facts cannot confer jurisdiction in the tribunal. It may be that in all fairness the debts of the deceased or of his dependents should be paid; but, unless they fall within one of the classes enumerated in the statute for which a lien on the award may be lawfully declared, the commission is not officially interested. Neither does the statute contemplate a supervision by the commission of the funds after payment thereof to the persons entitled thereto. Whether the funds made available to the dependents be wisely conserved, or whether they be spent in riotous living, by the terms of the statute, is made of no concern to the tribunal which is to order the payment of the compensation. If the final disposition by the beneficiary of the fund here in question were to be construed as being subject to the order or direction of the commission, with equal propriety could the distribution by the probate court of the estate of a deceased husband to his widow be similarly controlled by such tribunal. Or, if a widow were to bring an action on an insurance policy and were to receive judgment therein, it might as well be contended that because the court was authorized to render the judgment, as incidental thereto, it might also direct that, from the amount to be paid thereon, the insurance company should deduct and pay a stated sum to each of several creditors of the deceased or of the widow. The fact of the matter is that both in such a case, as well as in the instant case, primarily the widow is entitled to have paid to her personally the entire amount of the judgment, or the award, as the case may be. The right of the widow in the case at bar to the award itself is neither controlled nor in any wise influenced or affected by the fact that either she or her husband may be indebted to other persons. The legal relations of such persons to either the deceased husband or to her, whether such relations sound in contract or in tort, have no connection, casual or otherwise, with the statutory obligation existing between the employer and the employee. It may be commendable, highly honorable, and a most efficient method of protection of creditors, but the order of award of compensation for the death of an employee carries with it no such incidents.

The quoted section of the statute which deals with the subjection of the award to liens is definite in its character. Within its first provision is the declaration that the compensation awarded shall not "be subject to be taken for the debts of the party entitled to such compensation. * * *" In the face of such plain language, the more general provisions of the statute, which at least would appear to be not aimed at the particular situation here presented, cannot prevail. To the contrary, the rule of construction of a statute is invariable that general terms must yield to special provisions. Moreover, the opening statement of section 24 (a) is that "no claim for compensation shall be assignable before payment. * * *"

In the case of Pacific Electric Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth Bonding, etc., Co., 204 P. 262, 55 Cal. App. 704, an assignment of an award to the state of California was held invalid. Among other things, the court said:

"The act states that no assignment shall be made 'before payment.' Claims are not paid until they become awards, and it is clear that the only thing payable under the provisions of the act is awards. It is evident that the Legislature intended that there should be no assignment of claimant's rights whatsoever and that the award should be paid by the one against whom it was made directly to the claimant and to no one else."

Casting aside for the moment any question of whether in violation of the terms of the statute the order to which objection is here made in effect constituted a lien on the fund made available to the dependent widow of the deceased, it is apparent that the effect of the order was at least to transfer a portion of the award before its payment to creditors of the deceased or his dependents; which is nothing less than an assignment by whatever name it may be called.

[3] We see no escape from the force of petitioner's contention that the commission exceeded its authority in directing out of the award the payment of those debts of the deceased or of his widow not so provided for in any of either of the classes enumerated in the statute.

[4] Respondent suggests that the petitioner here was not a party beneficially interested in the proceeding before the Industrial Accident Commission, and for that reason is not in a position to maintain certiorari in this court. But if the correct conclusion has been reached with reference to the lack of authority in the commission to make that part of the order of commutation which herein has been considered, it would follow that payment by the county of Los Angeles of the debts of the deceased or of his widow, as directed by such order of commutation, together with the payment to the widow of the remainder of the sum awarded, would not amount to a legal satisfaction of the total award. The county of Los Angeles was the employer, and a part of its money or property would necessarily have been used in discharging the obligation against it which was created by the order of the commission. Its interest in the proceedings is therefore apparent.

It becomes unnecessary to notice the other specific objections to the award interposed by petitioner.

The award is annulled.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

77 Cal. App. 1

WILKINS v. FINNELL et al. (Civ. 5418.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 9, 1926.)

Evidence §417(12)—Evidence of oral guaranty of note, released to buyer of business, held admissible, as instrument did not embrace entire agreement (Civ. Code, § 2794).

Instrument whereby sellers of business released to buyer contract with third party and items appearing in an attached statement, in which note was listed, held not to embrace full contract between parties so as to exclude evidence of oral guaranty of note under Civ. Code, § 2794.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by A. G. Wilkins against Phillip S. Finnell and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Maurice J. Rankin, of San Jose, for appellants.

E. M. Rosenthal, of San Jose, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment against them as guarantors of a promissory note of a third party, which note defendants transferred to plaintiff's assignors in consideration of its full face value and interest.

The facts are: Prior to June 30, 1921, defendants were copartners engaged in the tractor business in San Jose, Cal. On said date they sold their business to Charles O. Dean and A. M. Phillippe for $3,451.19. Among other items of property included in the agreement of sale was a promissory note of Thompson Bros. for $600, which had been given as a part of the purchase price of a tractor. Plaintiff is the assignee of Messrs. Dean & Phillippe, and is claiming under an alleged oral guaranty of payment of said note made at the time the note was indorsed to Dean & Phillippe, or during the negotiations regarding the sale of the business. The trial court found in accordance with said claim "that with said assignment, sale, and delivery of said promissory note defendant did then and there guarantee the payment thereof to said Dean Tractor & Implement Co."

The only question in the case is presented by defendants' objection to the introduction of evidence of an oral guaranty. Respondent relies upon section 2794, subdivision 5, Civil Code. Defendants and appellants reply that the contract of sale was in writing, and did not mention any guaranty of the said note, and that to receive evidence of an oral guaranty under section 2794, Civil Code, would be to violate another rule of evidence; i. e., that the terms of a written agreement may not be varied by parol. The written agreement relied upon as a bar to the parol evidence is as follows:

"For and in consideration of the sum of $3,451.19, thirty-four hundred fifty-one and 19/100 dollars, as itemized on statement hereto attached, we hereby release our contract with the Cleveland Tractor Co., and all claims on any and all of the items which appear on said statement attached hereto.

"Very truly yours,

"Finnell-McEwen Co.,

"By Phillip S. Finnell.

"By Dana M. McEwen."

Said attached statement is as follows:

Itemized account of the Cletrac business being sold to C. O. Dean and A. M. Phillippe, equity in 4 Cletrac tractors stored in San Jose, Co. warehouse.....	$ 978 80
Equity in Chevrolet delivery car.....	203 55
Note of Thompson Bros. secured by 1 model H Cletrac tractor due August 15, 1921.....	600 00
Interest on the above note.....	24 00
Stock of Cletrac parts on hand.....	1,594 84
1 desk	40 00
1 chair	10 00
	$3,451 19

It appears that the foregoing instrument was a release of contract with the tractor company. It also mentions an attached statement in which the note in question is listed, and recites that all claims on any of such items are released; but it, obviously, does not embrace the full contract between the parties, for it does not operate as a transfer of the promissory note. It was necessary that this note be transferred by indorsement. The parties must have had some further transaction with reference to this note, and the court has found, upon substantial evidence, that defendants agreed to guarantee the payment of the note when they assigned it, and received the full face value thereof. The record shows that Dean & Phillippe did not wish to take over the note, and did so only upon receiving this guaranty of payment.

The only point to be considered upon appeal is whether or not the written instrument herein set out expressed the full contract of the parties, and merged all other negotiations and agreements. Because of the peculiar nature of this instrument, and under the facts of this case, we think it was not intended to cover the entire transaction between the parties, and was ineffectual to do so, and that the evidence objected to was admissible not to vary a written instrument, but to establish the portion of the agreement which was not reduced to writing, and which it was not necessary to reduce to writing under the provisions of section 2794, Civil Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

76 Cal. App. 726

TOMLIN et al. v. NEALE et al. (Civ. 5323.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 3, 1926. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 29, 1926.)

1. Trial ⚡397(1)—Court not required to make finding of fact which was admitted in pleadings.

In action on order for payment of money, where it was alleged in complaint, and admitted by answer, that it was the understanding of the parties that instrument was an order for the defendants to pay a sum certain from money to come into their hands from the sale of cotton grown on leased premises, no finding was required as to that allegation.

2. Bills and notes ⚡152—Test in determining character of instrument ordering payment of money is whether it carries personal liability of drawer or only credit of particular fund, and it is nonnegotiable where drawn upon a particular fund (Civ. Code, § 3084, subd. 2).

In determining the character of an instrument ordering the payment of a sum of money, the true test is whether it carries the general personal credit of the drawer or only the credit of a particular fund, which question must be determined according to the circumstances of each case, and such instrument is nonnegotiable under Civ. Code, § 3084, subd. 2, if it is drawn upon a particular fund, since it then does not carry the personal credit of the drawer.

3. Appeal and error ⚡931(4)—Implied finding that order directing payment of money from proceeds of cotton crop was not drawn on personal credit of drawer, but upon fund, held supported by findings made.

In an action on lessee's order directing defendants to pay plaintiff lessor a certain sum from the proceeds of cotton returns from leased premises, implied finding that instrument was not drawn on personal credit of lessees, but on credit of fund, held supported by findings made.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1071(5)—Conclusion of trial court that lien did not exist on crop held harmless, where such conclusion was material only upon question of consideration for acceptance of order directing payment of money, and consideration therefor was supported by original indebtedness.

In action by lessor on order by lessee directing defendant to pay lessor sum from the cotton returns from leased premises, which order was accepted by defendant, court's finding that lien did not exist in plaintiff's favor was harmless, as existence of such lien was material only upon question of consideration for acceptance, and original indebtedness of lessee to lessor was sufficient to support the acceptance.

5. Bills and notes ⚡82—The acceptance of an order drawn upon a particular fund binds drawee to make payment only to amount of fund due or to become due drawer.

The acceptance of an order drawn upon a particular fund binds drawee to make payment only to amount of fund due or to become due drawer.

6. Appeal and error ⚡931(3)—In determining whether findings support judgment in which conclusions of law were merged, it will be presumed that court inferred permissible facts to uphold judgment.

In determining whether findings support judgment in which conclusions of law were merged, findings must receive such construction as will uphold rather than defeat judgment, and, if from facts found other facts may be inferred which will support judgment, it will be assumed that trial court made inference.

7. Bills and notes ⚡82—Order for payment of money from proceeds of cotton crop grown on leased premises held limited to net returns from crop after advance and expenditures were deducted therefrom by drawee.

Where lessee executed an order to defendant directing him to pay money to lessor from fund thereafter to accrue from proceeds from cotton of leased premises, held that lessor's rights were measured by agreement between lessee and defendant under which advances and expenditures made by defendant were deductible.

8. Appeal and error ⚡878(1)—Judgment will not be reversed, where defendant had not appealed, even though appellate court's construction of parties' rights would have required a judgment for defendants.

Though on appeal by plaintiff from judgment deemed insufficient appellate court's construction of rights of parties would require judgment for defendants, judgment will nevertheless be affirmed, where defendants had not appealed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by I. F. Tomlin and others, co-partners, etc., against W. J. Neale and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs for an insufficient amount, they appeal. Judgment affirmed.

A. L. Hubbell, of Calexico, for appellants.
Ault & Anderson, of Calexico, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An action upon an order for the payment of money, which was accepted by respondents.

Judgment was entered for plaintiffs, who appeal therefrom upon the judgment roll, with a bill of exceptions to the conclusions of law and judgment as not being supported by the findings of fact.

The facts found were as follows: On December 20, 1918, appellants leased lands owned by them in Lower California to certain Chinese for the term commencing on that day and ending on December 31, 1922; the rent reserved being payable in installments.

The lease, which was written in the Spanish language, was executed and recorded according to the formalities and requirements of the laws of Mexico, and contained the provision that the lessee should not have power to alienate or incumber in any manner the crops which might be produced upon the premises described while any of the rent should remain unpaid; the crops being considered as security therefore.

On November 24, 1920, there was due and unpaid installments of rent aggregating the sum of $12,000. During the year 1920, and previous to the date last mentioned, the lessees had picked and removed from the land and delivered to respondents, to be sold for the account of the former, 146 bales of cotton, 100 bales of which had been brought within the United States. Respondents had advanced to the lessees during that year the sum of $12,000 "for financing the crop grown on the premises," and on the date mentioned no part of the crop had been sold, and there remained thereof unpicked 214 bales. Appellants, at the suggestion of one of the respondents had procured from the lessees a writing signed by the latter, which was on the above date delivered to respondents; the writing being in words and figures as follows:

"Calexico, California, November 24, 1920.

"Tomlin, Tomlin & Company's Ranch, Consisting of 732 Acres Situated in the Northern District of Lower California, Republic of Mexico—Mr. T. J. West, Agent, Calexico, California: You will please pay to the order of Tomlin, Tomlin & Co. at Calexico, California, out of the Chick Mow Co. and Lee Wing, manager, the sum of twelve thousand dollars ($12,000) to come out of my cotton returns from the above ranch.

"[Signed]

Chick Mow.
"Lee Wing."

Upon the delivery of the instrument it was agreed that appellants should not demand payment thereof for 60 days, at the end of which period payment was demanded and refused, following which a request was made for the return of the writing to appellants, which request was not complied with.

Subsequent to the delivery of the instrument respondents took possession of that portion of the crop which was then unpicked and expended for its picking, ginning, and hauling, and for customs, duties, and expenses of marketing the sum of $13,478.50, and thereafter sold the 100 bales first mentioned for the sum of $6,595.98, and the balance of the crop for $15,757.58.

[1] In addition to the facts expressly found, it was alleged in the complaint and admitted by the answer that it was the understanding of the parties that the instrument mentioned was an order for the defendants to pay the sum of $12,000 from money to come into the hands of respondents from the sale of cotton grown on the leased premises. No finding was required as to this allegation, which may be treated as a part of the findings. San Diego Realty Co. v. Hill, 143 P. 1021, 168 Cal. 637; Sacre v. Chalupnik, 205 P. 449, 183 Cal. 386; First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 55 P. 980, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64; Mondine v. Labaig, 186 P. 1047, 44 Cal. App. 781.

From the foregoing the conclusions were drawn upon which judgment was entered for appellants in the sum of $2,279.99.

As stated, appellants except to the judgment, the conclusions of law as a whole, and in particular to the following conclusions: (1) That the instrument was not a bill of exchange, but an order to pay money; (2) that plaintiffs had no lien upon the 100 bales of cotton first mentioned in the findings after its importation; (3) that defendants were entitled to the proceeds from the sale of these bales of cotton free of claims of plaintiffs; (4) that defendants were entitled to deduct the sums advanced for the production and marketing of the balance of the crops from the proceeds of its sale; (5) that plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment for the full amount of the order.

No exception was taken to the further conclusion that "the defendants by retaining the instrument after the demand for its return accepted it."

[2] In the instant case the amount directed to be paid was, according to the terms of the instrument, "to come out of my cotton returns from the above ranch"; it being the intention of the parties, as found, that this sum should be paid from money to come into the hands of respondents from the cotton grown on the leased premises. As the rule has been stated, in determining the legal effect of instruments of this character, the true test in every case is, Does the instrument carry the general personal credit of the drawer or only the credit of a particular fund? and this question must be determined according to the circumstances of each case, unless the language of the instrument puts the meaning beyond doubt; and an instrument drawn upon a particular fund, whether the fund has already accrued or is to accrue in the future, is not negotiable, since it does not carry the general personal credit of the drawer, and is contingent upon the sufficiency of the fund on which it is drawn. 8 Corp. Jur. 121, 123; Civ. Code, § 3084, subd. 2.

[3, 4] In addition to the finding as to the intention as stated, it was further found that respondents at the time of the delivery of the instrument had advanced for the purpose of financing the crop a sum equal to the amount of the order; that no part of the crop then in their possession had been sold; that the rental payments under the lease were in arrears, and the instrument was not then accepted. These facts fairly support the inference that the lessees were then unable to meet their obligations otherwise than from the proceeds from the sale of the crop, and were sufficient to sustain the implied finding that the instrument was drawn, not upon the personal credit of the lessees, but upon the credit of the fund thereafter to accrue. This conclusion being supported by the findings, no exception having been taken to the conclusion that respondents by retaining the order accepted it, and the action not being one to enforce a lien or to recover the proceeds or value of property subject thereto, but upon an accepted order for the payment of money, whether a lien existed upon the crop or any part of it at the time of the delivery of the instrument was material only on the question as to the consideration for the acceptance, for which the original indebtedness of the lessees to appellant was sufficient (Barlow v. Lande, 147 P. 231, 26 Cal. App. 424); and the conclusion of the trial court that such lien did not exist, if erroneous, was harmless, if the other conclusions support the judgment (Spencer v. Duncan, 40 P. 549, 107 Cal. 423; McCormick v. Sutton, 20 P. 543, 78 Cal. 245, 246).

[5] The acceptance of an order drawn upon a particular fund binds the drawee to make payment only as to the amount of the fund due or to become due to the drawer (5 Corp. Jur. 927, 928; Carboy v. Polstein Realty, etc., Co., 114 N. Y. S. 838, 62 Misc. Rep. 302; Hall v. Jones, 66 S. E. 350, 151 N. C. 419; Comer v. Floore [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 246; 1 Parsons on Bills & Notes, 304); and the question to be determined by the trial court upon such acceptance was the extent of the obligation of respondents under the terms of the order as accepted.

[6] In determining whether the findings support the judgment in which were merged the conclusions of law (Roberts v. Hall, 82 P. 66, 147 Cal. 434; Mentone, etc., Co. v. Redlands, 100 P. 1082, 155 Cal. 323, 22 L. R. A. [N. S.] 382, 17 Ann. Cas. 1222), the findings must receive such construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment; and, if from the facts found other facts may be inferred which support the judgment, it will be assumed that the trial court made the inference (Paine v. San Bernardino, etc., Traction Co., 77 P. 659, 143 Cal. 654; Lomita Land & Water Co. v. Robinson, 97 P. 10, 154 Cal. 36, 18 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1106; Sidney v. Wilson, 227 P. 672, 67 Cal. App. 282, 285; Braun v. Dallin, 228 P. 740, 68 Cal. App. 121, 129).

[7] The instrument being drawn upon a fund to accrue from the sale of cotton from the ranch, and the order not having by its terms limited the fund to the proceeds from a portion of the crop, the only construction reasonably to be placed thereon, in view of the fact that no part of the cotton had then been sold, is that the fund within the meaning of the instrument should include the whole of the proceeds from the sale of the crop produced.

The agreement between respondents and the lessees under which the former made advances for financing the crop, subsequently took possession of the unpicked portion thereof, and made the expenditures in the amounts and for the purposes found, is not directly disclosed by the findings. It may, however, reasonably be inferred from the facts found in connection with the language of the order that the advances and expenditures mentioned were as between these parties to be deducted from the gross returns from the sale of the crop, and that the returns to the lessees within the meaning of the order were to be the net returns therefrom, which constituted the fund from which the order was payable. Such being the agreement, the rights of appellants were measured by the amount of the fund which accrued and upon which the order was drawn. O'Brien v. Garibaldi, 115 P. 249, 15 Cal. App. 518; Newhall v. Clark, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 376, 50 Am. Dec. 741; 5 Corp. Jur. 962.

[8] That our construction of the order is contrary to the conclusion of the trial court as to the rights of appellants in the proceeds from the sale of the 100 bales of cotton first delivered and imported, and that upon such construction judgment should have been entered for respondents, does not affect the judgment rendered, from which the latter have not appealed. Larkin v. Mullen, 60 P. 1091, 128 Cal. 449, 455; Blood v. Munn, 100 P. 694, 155 Cal. 228, 236; Rauer v. Nelson, 200 P. 809, 53 Cal. App. 695, 700. It is our conclusion that the findings were sufficient to support the judgment, which is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

76 Cal. App. 655

(245 P.)

HUNT et al. v. LAWTON et al. (Civ. 5267.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 27, 1926.)

1. Trusts §140(3)—Deed to wife for life, in trust to pay net income to daughter, title to vest in daughter or her children at wife's death, held to create legal estate for life in wife, with beneficial interest in daughter, and contingent remainders to daughter and her children.

Deed to wife, in trust to farm and let property, pay taxes and expenses, and pay net income to daughter until grantee's death, when property should vest in daughter, if living, otherwise in her children, held to create legal estate in wife for life, with beneficial interest in daughter, and contingent remainders to daughter and her children, since trustee takes only estate commensurate with trust.

2. Trusts §112—Granting clause of trust deed conveying to grantee "and her successor or successors" held controlled by provision that property should vest in others at grantee's death.

Granting clause of trust deed, conveying to grantee "and her successor or successors," held controlled by further provision that property should vest in daughter or her children at grantee's death.

3. Trusts §205.

Estate of trustee is not broadened by power to lease, but power to lease is limited by duration of trustee's estate.

4. Bankruptcy §268—Purchaser from trustee in bankruptcy of cestui que trust of all of right, title, and interest of bankrupt held to acquire bankrupt's beneficial interest and interests acquired by bankrupt by deed from contingent remaindermen.

Purchaser from trustee in bankruptcy of cestui que trust of all of right, title, and interest of bankrupt, who also had contingent remainder, held to acquire bankrupt's beneficial interest and interests acquired by bankrupt by deed from other contingent remaindermen, since future interests pass in same manner as present interests in property.

5. Quieting title §17 — Rights of unborn contingent remaindermen cannot be affected by action to quiet title.

Rights of unborn contingent remaindermen cannot be affected by action to quiet title to property which was to vest in daughter's children, if daughter were dead, at death of mother.

6. Trusts §61(3)—Trust held not terminated by transfer of all right, title, and interest by cestui que trust and living contingent remaindermen.

Where land was given to wife for life in trust for daughter, remainder to daughter, if living, otherwise to her children, trust held not terminated during life of wife by transfer of all right, title, and interest by daughter and living children, since it must continue for protection of children that may yet be born.

7. Trusts §61(3)—Trustee held not to rescind and terminate trust by transferring all right, title, and interest in trust property to beneficiary, where other remaindermen may yet be born.

Trustee held not to rescind and terminate trust by executing instrument transferring all right, title, and interest in trust property to beneficiary, to whom living contingent remaindermen had conveyed their interests, where other remaindermen may yet be born.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Frank H. Hunt and another against Emily Lawton and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed with directions.

J. L. Fleming and R. J. Gardner, both of Los Angeles, (C. C. Haskell, and Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, all of San Bernardino, of counsel), for appellants.

S. F. Macfarlane and Roland H. Mulford, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action to quiet title to certain real property in Los Angeles county, Cal.

The facts are undisputed; the evidence consisting mainly of recorded documents in the chain of title to the property, from which it appears: That on June 12, 1897, Gerhardt H. Kallmeyer, being the owner of the real property in controversy, executed a deed to his wife, Sarah Jane Kallmeyer, one of the defendants herein, conveying the same to her and her successor or successors, "to have and to hold all and singular the said premises, together with the appurtenances unto the said party of the second part, in trust, to farm or let the said land, and out of the income derived therefrom to pay all taxes and assessments of every kind and nature and all expenses and other charges which in the judgment of the said party of the second part may be proper or necessary in the care of the said lands, and to pay the residue of the income derived from the said lands to Emily Lawton, the daughter of the grantor and grantee herein, for and during the term of the natural life of the grantee herein, and upon the death of the grantee herein, then the said premises hereby conveyed to her in trust for the benefit of the said Emily Lawton shall vest in and become the property of the said Emily Lawton, if she shall then survive, and, if she shall not survive, the said lands shall vest in and become the property of the children of said Emily Lawton, share and share alike."

At the time of the execution of the aforementioned deed, Emily Lawton had two children, Alfred Homer Lawton and David Edward Lawton, who are defendants in this action, and she has never had any other children.

On January 31, 1914, the two children, Alfred and David, each being over 21 years of age, executed to their mother, Emily Lawton, a quitclaim deed, purporting to release and convey to her all their estate, right, title, and interest, use, benefit, privilege and demand in and to the property described in the trust deed from Gerhardt Kallmeyer to Sarah Jane Kallmeyer.

On January 22, 1914, Sarah Jane Kallmeyer executed an instrument purporting to be a release of said trust, and purporting to remise, release, surrender, assign, and set over to Emily Lawton all of the estate, right, title and interest, use, benefit, privilege, and demand which she, as trustee, had in the premises.

Upon the execution of the quitclaim deed from Alfred and David to their mother, Emily Lawton, and the purported release of trust by the trustee, Sarah Jane Kallmeyer, to her daughter, Emily, the said Emily borrowed $3,500 from R. P. Shields, and secured payment thereof by a mortgage upon the property in controversy.

On or about August 25, 1917, the said Emily Lawton was adjudicated a voluntary bankrupt, and thereafter the property involved was sold by her trustee in bankruptcy to the said R. P. Shields, and a deed was executed to him by said trustee on February 20, 1919, purporting to convey all the right, title, and interest of the said Emily Lawton in the property.

Shields executed a satisfaction of his mortgage, and thereafter executed a deed conveying the property to the plaintiffs. In May, 1920, Sarah Jane Kallmeyer executed to plaintiffs a quitclaim deed of the property.

Some of the defendants were in possession of the property at the time of the commencement of this action, and refused to surrender the possession thereof to plaintiffs, who brought this action to quiet their title and to recover possession of the property. It was resisted by the defendants upon the theory that the trust created by the first instrument mentioned herein was still valid and subsisting, and that the subsequent instruments herein mentioned were without force and effect. The trial court adopted this view, and held that the plaintiffs had no right or title to the property.

The first question presented is as to the nature of the estate of Sarah Jane Kallmeyer under the trust deed. The appellants contend it was a life estate in trust, with remainders over to Emily Lawton or her children. Respondents maintain that it was the legal title to the fee, subject to the beneficial interest of Emily. If their position be correct, the estate to Emily or her children after the death of Sarah Jane Kallmeyer was a limitation upon a fee. It is to be observed that the trust deed provided that--

"Upon the death of the grantee herein, then the said premises hereby conveyed to her in trust for the benefit of the said Emily Lawton shall vest in and become the property of the said Emily Lawton, if she shall then survive, and if she shall not survive, the said lands shall vest in and become the property of the children of said Emily Lawton, share and share alike."

[1] It would seem upon reason and authorities to be hereafter considered that this instrument created a legal estate for life in Sarah Jane Kallmeyer, with beneficial interest in Emily Lawton, and contingent remainders to Emily Lawton and her children, one or the other of which would become vested upon the termination of the life estate.

In Morffew v. S. F. & S. R. R. Co., 40 P. 810, 107 Cal. 587, the court had under consideration the quantum of estate taken under a decree of distribution by a trustee, to whom lands were distributed for the term of her natural life, in trust, to apply the income for the support and education of certain children. The court said:

"But the quantity of interest which passes to the trustee in case of an express trust is commensurate with the necessities of his office; the trustee shall have an estate in fee, if that is necessary to enable him to perform the duties imposed upon him, although it is not in terms given to him by the instrument creating the trust; on this principle a devise of lands in trust to sell clothes the trustee with the fee, because necessary to the execution of the trust. The rule being compendiously stated that the trustee 'will take an estate adequate to the execution of the trust--no more nor less.' Perry on Trusts, § 320; Young v. Bradley, 101 U. S. 787 [25 L. Ed. 1044])."

The opinion from which quotation has just been made states further:

"And the will does not impose upon the widow any other duty which requires for its discharge an estate in the land greater than for her life. So that there is no enlargement of her life estate to be implied from the necessities of the trust. And the life estate in the trustee being created by express words in the will, with limitation over, it is not enlarged to a fee by the power of sale. Kennedy v. Kennedy [28 A. 241] 159 Pa. St. 327; Foos v. Scarf, 55 Md. 310, and numerous authorities cited; Payne v. Johnson [24 S. W. 238] 95 Ky. 183, 184; Hatfield v. Sohler, 114 Mass. 48.

"It is suggested by respondents that the trustee took the fee in virtue of the provision of section 863 of the Civil Code. But, as said of a like statute by the Court of Appeals of New York: 'This section does not prevent a valid limitation of a remainder to the beneficiaries of a trust to take effect upon its termination. The declaration that a valid express trust shall vest the whole estate in the trustees, and that the beneficiaries shall take no estate or interest in the land, clearly refers, as the subsequent sections show, to the trust estate and not to an interest in the land not embraced in the trust.' Stevenson v. Lesley, 70 N. Y. 516, 517. So, here, we think that said section 863 has application only to the particular estate in trust, and not to the remainder in the plaintiffs."

In Keating v. Smith, 97 P. 300, 303, 154 Cal. 186, 192, it is said:

"The estate which a trustee takes by virtue of section 863 is not necessarily a fee, but only such estate as is required for the execution of his trust. Morffew v. San Francisco, etc., R. R. Co. [40 P. 810] 107 Cal. 587. Here the trustees are given an estate expressly limited in duration to the minority of the children."

An examination of the trust instrument in the instant case discloses that the only duties of the trustee were to farm and let the property, pay taxes, expenses, etc., and then pay the net income over to the beneficiary of the trust during the life of the trustee, and, therefore, a legal estate for life was sufficient for the full and free execution of this trust.

In Barnett v. Barnett, 37 P. 1049, 104 Cal. 298, the court had under consideration language in a deed as follows:

"Give, grant, alien, and confirm unto the said party of the second part and to his heirs (and assigns forever) all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land * * * to have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part (heirs and assigns forever) for and during his natural life, and to the issue and heirs of the body of the said party of the second part."

The question arose of whether the grantee took only a life estate or a fee. It was held that he took a life estate; the court saying:

"The intention of the parties to the grant is to be gathered from the instrument itself, and determined by a proper construction of the language used therein, but for the purpose of ascertaining this intention the entire instrument, the habendum as well as the premises, are to be considered, and, if it appear from such consideration that the grantor intended by the habendum clause to restrict or limit or enlarge the estate named in the granting clause the habendum will prevail over the granting clause. Faivre v. Daley [29 P. 256] 93 Cal. 670; Pelissier v. Corker [37 P. 465] 103 Cal. 516. 'It is in such case to be considered as an addendum or proviso to the conveyancing clause, which by a well-settled rule of construction must control the conveyancing clause or premises, even to the extent of destroying the effect of the same.' Bodine v. Arthur [14 S. W. 904] 91 Ky. 53, 34 Am. St. Rep. 162."

[2] This case is interesting upon our problem, because, in the instant case, it will be observed, that, while the granting clause in the trust deed to Sarah Jane Kallmeyer conveys to her "and her successor or successors," the deed further provides that, upon the death of the grantee, the property shall vest in Emily Lawton, and, as stated in the case last cited, this addendum or proviso to the conveyancing clause, by a well-settled rule of construction must control the conveyancing clause or premises even to the extent of destroying the effect of the same.

A case presenting a principle similar to the one presented by the instant case is Estate of Aldersley, 163 P. 206, 174 Cal. 366, where it was provided that, after the death of the cestui que trust, the premises should be conveyed to the trustees themselves, or the survivors. This trust to convey was void under the decision of the Fair Case, 60 P. 442, 64 P. 1000, 132 Cal. 523, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70, and it was held, therefore, that the grantor had merely disposed of an estate for the life of the cestui que trust, and the reversion was in himself. It was recognized by the court that had the trust deed provided for the vesting of the estate in the designated remaindermen, instead of providing for a conveyance to be made to them, the disposition would have been valid, and the trustees would have taken an estate only for the life of the cestui que trust; the court saying:

"But the deeds after employing words of absolute conveyance clearly restrict the fee conveyed to the grantees to and for the purposes of the trusts. The actual title conveyed was therefore commensurate for this purpose and no more."

In other words, the court held that the deed conveyed to the trustees only an estate commensurate with the performance of the trust, which was an estate for the life of the cestui que trust. By analogy, the trustee in the instant case takes only an estate commensurate with the performance of the trust, i. e., an estate for her natural life.

But a most persuasive authority, indeed, a controlling one upon this court, is the decision in the Estate of Fair, 60 P. 442, 64 P. 1000, 132 Cal. 523, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70. That most carefully considered decision involved a trust in which property was given to trustees to hold in trust during the lives of the testator's children and the survivor of them, and, "upon the death of such survivor to transfer and convey," to certain grandchildren, etc. It was held this created a trust to convey after the death of the testator's children which was void under the laws of this state, and hence the whole trust failed; it being one entire scheme. In the various majority and dissenting opinions of record in that case, it was repeatedly and consistently recognized that, had the testator provided that upon the death of the last survivor of his children, the property should go to or vest in the ultimate beneficiaries, it would have been held that the trustees had taken an estate for the lives of the children only, and the trust would have been valid, even though there had been an added direction to the trustees to convey to the ultimate beneficiaries, because such conveyance would have been treated merely as an assurance of title. But because the will in that case did not contain a provision vesting the remainder in the ultimate beneficiaries after the termination of the life estates—a provision found in the trust deed in the instant case—the court held that the trust included a trust to convey to the ultimate beneficiaries, and was void. It seems unnecessary to lengthen this opinion by quotations from this well-known California decision. The decision is lengthy, the facts are complicated, and any quotation, to be intelligible, would occupy much space in this opinion. It is sufficient to say that the Fair Case repeats, emphatically, in several places that a grant to trustees similar in principle to the one under consideration in the instant case would vest a life estate in the trustees, with remainders in the ultimate beneficiaries. It would seem that further citation of authority upon this point is needless.

The case of Fatjo v. Swasey, 44 P. 225, 111 Cal. 628, is relied upon by respondents to overcome the plain effect of the Fair Case and the other authorities cited herein. It is asserted that the Fatjo Case is analogous to the instant case, and that there the cestui que trust was held to have no mortgageable interest. That case seems to us clearly differentiable from the instant case. In the Fatjo Case the devise was to executors of a will "to sell" the real property. It is conceded in the authorities cited herein (Morffew v. S. F. & S. R. R. Co., supra), that a devise of lands in trust to sell clothes the trustee with the fee, because necessary to the execution of the trust. Furthermore, in the Fatjo Case, the cestui que trust executed a mortgage. The contest was between the purchaser at the mortgage foreclosure sale and the trustee. It is apparent that the cestui que trust in that case had nothing but an equitable estate in the mortgaged property, for by the terms of the will she had no interest in remainder until after the property had been sold and the proceeds segregated into different parts, etc. When she gave a mortgage, she could mortgage nothing but her equitable interest—that being all she owned—but she attempted to mortgage the combined legal and equitable interests in the property, and, when the mortgage was foreclosed, it was foreclosed against the full title to the property, and, as the mortgagor never owned this full legal and equitable title, she could not mortgage it, and the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, necessarily, could not maintain his claim to the property. The instant case is entirely different in principle. The appellant here is not claiming under a mortgage foreclosure, but as the purchaser at a sale by the trustee in bankruptcy. As such, he was granted all the right, title, and interest of Emily Lawton. This does not include the legal interest of the trustee for the period of her life, as we shall consider later, but merely what Emily Lawton owned—her equitable estate during the life of the trustee, and her contingent remainders granted to her by the trust deed and the subsequent deeds from her sons. While the distinction between the Fatjo Case and the instant case seems to us to be very definite and clear, regardless of this fact, it is apparent that, if the Fatjo Case contains any language in conflict with the holding in the Fair Case, this court is bound by the latter, which is a later authority and, upon its face, a better considered one.

[3] Respondents advance the argument that, as the trust instrument gives the trustee the power to "let" the land, she had the right to lease it, and this required her to take an estate in fee. We cannot agree with this position. In 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 1008, the rule is stated:

"In the absence of express power from the instrument, the trustees cannot grant a lease or provide for a renewal to extend beyond the life of the trust estate, but such a lease, if made, may be sustained to the extent of the trust estate."

The case of South End Warehouse Co. v. Lavery, 107 P. 1008, 12 Cal. App. 449, is also in point. From these authorities it seems clear that the estate of the trustee is not broadened by the power to lease, but the power to lease is limited by the duration of the trustee's estate.

[4] The title of plaintiff's predecessor in interest, if any, was acquired more than three years after the conveyance of the contingent interests of Alfred and David to their mother, pursuant to proceedings duly and regularly had in the matter of the voluntary bankruptcy of Emily Lawton, in which proceedings he purchased, according to the stipulation of the parties hereto, "all the right, title, interest and estate of said Emily Lawton in and to the property mentioned and described in the complaint." This sale was duly confirmed by the referee in bankruptcy. Emily Lawton's right, title, and interest in the property at the time of this sale consisted of her beneficial interest during the lifetime of Sarah Jane Kallmeyer, the trustee, and the contingent remainders granted to herself and to her sons, Alfred and David, who had conveyed to her. There can be no question that the contingent interests of Alfred and David Lawton passed to their mother, Emily Lawton, by their deeds to her, and such interests, together with the original contingent interest of Emily Lawton, passed to plaintiffs by reason of the conveyance hereinbefore recited. "Future interests pass by succession, will, and transfer, in the same manner as present interests." Section 699, Civ. Code. See, also, Le Breton v. Cook, 40 P. 552, 107 Cal. 410, 420; Gray v. Union Trust Co., 154 P. 306, 171 Cal. 637, 642. "And the interest will pass (to the trustee in bankruptcy) although it may be subject to a contingency such as the contingency that the remainderman, to take, must survive the life tenant." 1 Remington on Bankruptcy, § 972, p. 545.

[5] Conceding that the trust deed granted contingent remainders not only to Alfred and David Lawton, but to any other children of Emily Lawton who might survive her, there were no other children at the time this action was brought, and plaintiffs concede that there is a legal possibility of their interest in the property being defeated, in part, by the birth of other children of Emily Lawton, who might survive her, and whose contingent interests are not involved, and cannot be affected by this proceeding.

We have cited authorities to show that the contingent remainders held by Emily Lawton were alienable and passed to plaintiffs by the successive transfers appearing in the record. Another question presented by the appeal is whether her beneficial interest in the property during the life of her mother also passed through the trustee in bankruptcy to plaintiffs. We think it did.

"Where one for whom property is held in trust becomes a bankrupt, his entire interest in the trust estate passes to the trustee in bankruptcy, and such ownership draws with it the right of possession." 7 Corpus Juris, 118.

"If an equitable tenant for life becomes bankrupt or insolvent, all his interest goes to his assignees, and the trustee must hold it subject to their disposition; unless the property is so given that it goes over upon the bankruptcy of the cestui que trust." 2 Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.) § 555.

"Therefore, when an equitable interest is once vested in the cestui que trust, he may dispose of it, or it may pass to his assignees by operation of law, if he becomes a bankrupt." Id. § 386.

Section 867 of the Civil Code provides:

"The beneficiary of a trust for the receipt of the rents and profits of real property, or for the payment of an annuity out of such rents and profits, may be restrained from disposing of his interest in such trust, during his life or for a term of years, by the instrument creating the trust."

In Fatjo v. Swasey, 44 P. 225, 227, 111 Cal. 628, 637, it is said:

"Up to the time of the amendment this interest in the rents and profits could not be transferred, but now it may be, unless restrained by the instrument creating the trust."

